CWA Installers Smash Teamster Raid

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, January 5, 1963 | No. 1

New 88th Congress Faces First Test in Rules Battle

Blamed for Impasse:

Board Hits Boeing On Security Issue

The Boeing Co.'s "erroneous" and "misguided" views on the union shop issue were scathingly indicted by a special presidentially appointed mediation board as blocking settlement of the months-long dispute with the Machinists.

The three-man board said flatly that if it had been given the power of arbitration, "we would not hesitate to make an award granting the union shop under the circumstances of this case."

Calling on Boeing to "reconsider its position of rigidity" and to show a sense of responsibility comparable to that of the IAM, the board urged the company "to step forward with some contribution to a settlement and abandon its stubborn insistence that its views on union security must take precedence over the views, not only of the union, but also of this board and for that matter of the great majority of large American industrial corporations."

"The Boeing management has no monopoly on either patriotism or wisdom, and some tangible recognition of that fact would be very much in order at this point," it added.

Pay Hike Recommended

The board—Patrick J. Fisher, Lewis M. Gill and Saul Wallen—was created by Pres. Kennedy on Sept. 13, 1962, to head off a strike scheduled by the IAM for Sept. 15. The company and union agreed to continue work and preserve the status quo until the board could complete its report.

In its report the board recommended acceptance of a company wage proposal ranging from 16 to

(Continued on Page 8)

CWA Routs Teamsters By 3-1 Vote

By John Barry

The Communications Workers scored an overwhelming victory in repulsing a raid by the ousted Teamsters on the CWA's Western Electric installers unit. In a nationwide secret-ballot election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board, the installers voted 11,388 to 4,000 to retain the CWA as their collective bargaining representative. The official NLRB tally also recorded 696 votes for no union, 115 challenged ballots and 5 void ballots.

With 17,275 workers eligible to take part in the representation election, the turnout was described by CWA officials as one of the heaviest in the history of the unit, and the 3-1 margin for CWA represented a smashing triumph.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, on learning the outcome, pledged to move immediately into negotiations with the company "to seek the

(Continued on Page 8)

THE CAPITOL moves back into the news spotlight as congressmen and senators gather for the opening of the 88th Congress on Jan. 9.

In Southern Pacific Case:

Automation Benefits Urged for Workers

A presidential emergency board has recommended a form of supplemental unemployment benefits and displacement allowances for Southern Pacific railway clerks who are laid off or downgraded because of automation.

The board's recommendations are designed to reopen negotiations between the railroad and the Railway Clerks, which have been deadlocked on the job elimination issue for more than a year.

Pres. Kennedy appointed the emergency board in August after the union had moved toward a strike in face of a loss of 4,500 jobs in a five-year period.

The recommendations, which are not binding, suggested supplementing railroad unemployment insurance by employer payments to provide up to 70 percent of regular earnings for up to a year, depending on length of service, and 60 percent beyond that for a period to be negotiated.

For workers downgraded but kept in the railroad's employ, the board recommended a displacement allowance providing income protection for five years.

The board also recommended revision of seniority schedules, a guarantee of 40 hours of work a week for extra employes, separation allowances for those preferring to resign, maintenance of health, welfare and insurance benefits for those drawing supplemented pay for the duration of the period, payment of moving expenses and protection against real estate losses for transferred workers, development

(Continued on Page 2)

House Vote Seen Key To Session

By David L. Perlman

Hard-fought battles over rules—with the Administration's legislative program strongly affected by the outcome—will dominate the opening of the 88th Congress on Jan. 9.

The House conflict will be a rematch of 1961, when the Administration narrowly won expansion of the Rules Committee from 12 to 15 members to take control of the legislative machinery from a tight-knit coalition of conservative Republicans and Dixiecrat Democrats. Now the conservatives are trying to drive the membership back to 12, dumping two liberals.

While the House battle is expected to be decided on the opening day, an effort by a group of Senate liberals to make it easier to cut off filibusters may itself be subject to protracted debate.

A similar effort was made unsuccessfully at the opening of the 87th Congress. After nearly two weeks of debate, the Senate referred all proposed rules changes to committee for study. A final proposal to require only a 60 percent vote to curtail debate—instead of two-thirds—was again filibustered later that year.

The strongest statement on the significance of the House Rules Committee fight has come from

(Continued on Page 8)

Meany Dissents on Military Pay Plan

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged higher increases than the Defense Dept. has proposed for servicemen in the lowest grades.

Meany, member of a public advisory commission headed by Clarence B. Randall, took exception to a recommendation that the highest percentage raises be concentrated in the "career" ranks of the armed services. The overall increases would average 14.4 percent, but would vary widely by grades. Meany said:

"I consider it unfair to require the young men of our nation to serve in the armed forces at the very beginning of their useful careers as citizens and not provide pay properly in line with other miltary pay scales."

Closed New York Newspapers Hint Operation Without Striking Printers

New York—Any attempt by New York City's newspapers to resume publication without their striking and locked-out printers will meet with failure, said Bertram A. Powers, president of the Typographical Union's "Big Six" local here.

Power's comment came after Amory H. Bradford of the Times, chairman of the Publishers Association's bargaining committee, hinted that the papers might be considering the use of Vari-Type, trade name for equipment through which typewritten copy may be photographed and made into printing plates, eliminating the usual typesetting procedure.

As the fourth week of the dispute drew to a close, Bradford issued a statement that unless the printers retreated from their position, further talks "will produce no results except to raise false hopes" and that the papers "will continue to explore every possible method of resuming publication."

"If Vari-Type is the publishers' ace card, then we shall trump it," Powers declared. He noted that the Officers Committee for Newspaper Unity, composed of leaders of other craft unions and the Newspaper Guild, had reacted to Bradford's statement by renewing their pledge of "firm support" for the ITU local.

Although the Vari-Type process may serve as a makeshift substitute for typesetting, it does not eliminate the need for newswriters or other production craft workers, such as pressmen. Contracts of seven craft unions, including the ITU, expired Nov. 31.

The printers walked out Dec. 7

(Continued on Page 2)

NEW THREE-YEAR CONTRACT was signed recently for 300 members of the New York Newspaper Guild employed in Munich, Germany, by Radio Free Europe. Shown at the signing are left to right (front) Vice Presidents Tom Brown and Bernard Yarrow and Industrial Relations Dir. Thomas E. Myers of RFE; Sec.-Treas. M. Michael Potoker of the Guild local and Charles Kaufman, RFE's director in New York; (standing) Dr. Paul Korbel and Jan Librach, NYNG unit officers; Jack Schneider, RFE assistant industrial relations director; Unit Chairman Herman Singer and Vice Chairman Romeo Cherot.

Closed New York Newspapers Hint Operation Without Printers

(Continued from Page 1)

at the Times, News, Journal-American and World-Telegram & Sun, whereupon the Mirror, Post, Herald Tribune and Long Island Star-Journal shut down publication and locked out their employes, sending the total number of idled newspaper workers in the city to 20,000.

Publishers Reject Offer

The printers have repeatedly offered to return to work at the four papers enforcing the lockout, papers which have been mentioned in speculation that one or more of the city's dailies may not survive the suspension. The publishers have rejected the offer.

Although the ITU local has offered to "negotiate" on its proposals for wage increases of $18.45, plus fringe benefits, over two years, the publishers have refused to budge from their pre-strike offer of $4.30 plus fringes, over two years.

Meanwhile, the publishers' daily strike insurance benefits, said to offset 30 to 50 percent of their fixed costs, are about to run out, according to an article in Business Week. The magazine reported that all of the papers except the Daily News were receiving benefits up to $11,000 a day, with double indemnity on Sundays, from the American Newspaper Publishers Association's strike insurance plan.

The maximum payment for any one paper is $550,000 and the ceiling for all papers in a single city or under a single labor contract is $2,250,000, Business Week said. This limit, the magazine calculated, will be reached early this month.

Most of the striking and locked-out workers are being aided by strike benefits from their unions, which have different aid formulas.

Meetings in Cleveland

In Cleveland, where both of the city's dailies—the Press and the Plain Dealer—have been closed by a Guild strike since Dec. 1, negotiators for both sides met for "a mutual exchange of ideas" on the key issue of union security, then recessed the talks until Jan. 5.

Local 473 of the ousted Teamsters also is on strike at the papers, and six of the eight craft unions which have refused to cross the picket lines have indicated that they will not return to work without new contract settlements of their own.

Newspaper Unions Push For Strikebreaker Ban

The Presidents' Committee of the Allied Printing & Related Trades has announced it will intensify its campaign for anti-strikebreaking laws as state legislatures convene early in 1963.

Seven states and 17 municipalities have adopted laws restricting the use of professional strikebreakers since the committee began its drive two years ago.

Preparations to get similar legislation on the books in 1963 is now under way in at least 18 other states, the committee's legislative subcommittee said in a statement hailing AFL-CIO Executive Council action contributing $5,000 in support of the drive.

The subcommittee includes Pres. Elmer Brown of the Typographical Union, chairman; Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen and Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson of the Newspaper Guild.

They said the AFL-CIO's financial backing was in keeping with the federation's 1961 convention action urging state and national affiliates to lend full support to the campaign for anti-strikebreaker laws, known as Citizens' Job Protection laws.

The funds, the subcommittee said, will be used to help central bodies conduct accelerated drives for such statutes in their states.

The Presidents' Committee and the legislative campaign grew directly out of the 1959 newspaper strike in Portland, Ore., where professional strikebreakers were imported by the Portland Journal and Oregonian to smash the printing unions' walkout.

Pennsylvania was the only state with an anti-strikebreaking law at that time. Since then similar legislation has been enacted in seven others—Massachusetts, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Washington, Louisiana and Michigan.

Bills currently are being prepared for introduction in Alabama, Alaska, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Illinois, Iowa, Minnesota, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Oregon, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont and West Virginia.

Role of Labor Hailed On Cuban Prisoners

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has praised the "generous contribution" of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. in providing longshoremen for loading the Cuban prisoner exchange ship.

In a letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany thanking the federation and the MTD for its "full cooperation" on the project, Wirtz noted that the "tremendous effort put forth by the gangs of longshoremen helped insure the success of the project."

The MTD raised $15,000 from its affiliates to provide the loading crews. Wirtz' letter thanked Paul Hall and Peter M. McGavin, president and secretary-treasurer of the department, and Lane Kirkland, executive assistant to Meany.

SUB-Type Pay Urged By Rail Board of suitable retraining programs and preferential hiring.

(Continued from Page 1)

In 1961 the Railroad Telegraphers and the SP negotiated an agreement limiting reduction of telegraphers' jobs to natural attrition or 2 percent a year. The Telegraphers have signed agreements recently with the Chicago & North Western Railway and the New York Central more along the lines of the emergency board's recommendations in the Clerks case.

The emergency board turned down the Clerks' demand for a controlled attrition formula and full income protection for five years, but conceded that the company's job-elimination program had worked hardships.

Commenting on the problem, the board said:

"We can see no justification for the full brunt of technological or organizational change falling upon the shoulders of the employes. . . . There is no reason why a portion of the total savings accruing from transferred workers, development technological or organizational change cannot be spread among all employes adversely affected by position abolition. . . ."

Protections Narrowed:

Circuit Court Trims Glidden Rule Scope

New York—A federal appellate court has ruled that workers are not protected by the grievance-processing procedures of an expired union contract even though negotiations are under way for a new contract and such an agreement eventually is signed.

Only under very limited circumstances, the court declared in a case involving the Procter & Gamble Co., does an expired contract provide continuing protection for workers.

The effect of the decision, immediately hitting only an unaffiliated union made up of Procter & Gamble employes, is to narrow further the scope of the "Glidden case" ruling.

The Glidden decision, handed down in 1961 by a different panel of judges from the same 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals, appeared to some to have blazed a new trail in labor law.

It held that a group of workers at a plant which had been closed could exercise seniority rights under their former union contract to claim jobs in the plant to which the company had shifted its work, even though their union had no specific bargaining relationship involving that plant.

Arbitration Ordered

In the Procter & Gamble case, District Judge Jacob Mishler had ordered the company to arbitrate grievances arising out of disciplinary action taken by the company during a five-week interlude between the expiration of one contract and signing of a new, nonretroactive contract. He based his order on the Glidden precedent.

Reversing this decision, the appellate court declared that the Glidden decision cannot be considered a broad precedent and "cannot properly be read to govern situations which are not strictly within the facts there presented."

"More particularly, the case cannot be made to stand in any general way for the survival of contractual obligations during any period beyond the period for which they were expressly undertaken," it stated.

The court said the only continuing provisions of an expired contract are those which are "prospective in character," such as vested pension rights which continue beyond the termination of an agreement.

In the Procter & Gamble case, the appellate judges held, the company was obligated to arbitrate grievances which arose during the term of the contract but was not bound to arbitrate grievances arising thereafter.

The narrowed interpretation of the Glidden precedent paralleled a recent refusal by the U.S. Supreme Court to review a 6th Circuit Court of Appeals decision which rejected the Glidden case as a precedent for members of the Auto Workers, who claimed the right to follow their jobs from Detroit to a Tennessee plant where a "runaway" company had shifted operations.

Luna Heads Trainmen As Kennedy Retires

Cleveland—W. P. Kennedy has retired as president of the Railroad Trainmen after 13 years in the leadership post and 52 years as an active member of the brotherhood.

He was succeeded by Charles Luna, picked for the office by the 1960 convention which elected him assistant to the president and designated him for the presidency itself on Kennedy's planned retirement.

Luna, born in Celeste, Tex., in 1906, has been a member of the brotherhood since 1928, when he began switching in the East Dallas, Tex., yard of the Santa Fe Railroad and joined Lodge 671.

He held various local offices, served on national wage-rules committees in 1949 and 1953, was a deputy president and grand lodge organizer and became an international vice president in 1954. He has worked out of national headquarters since 1961 and since April of last year has been chairman of the wage-rules committee.

Kennedy is a native of Huttonville, Ont. He joined the BRT while working for the Canadian Pacific in Alberta in 1911 and later worked for the Milwaukee Road. He was general chairman on that railroad from 1921 to 1935, then international vice president and international secretary-treasurer before becoming president on July 19, 1949, following the death of A. F. Whitney. He will make his retirement home in Minneapolis.

CORRECTION

Through a typographical error, an article in the AFL-CIO News of Dec. 22 related that the Office Employes had won a National Labor Relations Board election among "electrical" employes of the Mason Rust Co., New Orleans. The election actually was held—and won by the OEIU—among clerical employes.

W. P. KENNEDY

CHARLES LUNA

Work Crew Issue to Be Studied:

Wirtz Presses Negotiations In Longshoremen's Strike

New York—Government mediators led by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz continued to press negotiations between the striking Longshoremen and the New York Shipping Association, but neither side was optimistic over prospects for settlement of the dispute despite a major concession by the union.

Knottiest issue in the bargaining—the shippers' demand for the right to cut the size of dock work crews and shift them from pier to pier during the workday—was removed from the dispute when the ILA agreed to a two-year study of work practices and manpower requirements.

The talks, however, quickly were bogged down over other key issues—wages, hours, pension and welfare contributions.

An ILA spokesman said the suspicion was growing that the management association, which represents about 150 domestic and foreign shipping firms, was stalling the negotiations until the new Congress convenes in the hope that it would quickly enact legislation requiring compulsory arbitration or some other restriction on dock strikes.

The union spokesman noted that even as Wirtz was conferring with bargaining subcommittees, two investigators for Sen. John L. McClellan's Permanent Investigations Subcommittee arrived to question ILA officers on work practices.

The shipping association moved ahead with a $100,000 advertising campaign in major newspapers. A full-page ad in the Wall Street Journal gave the management view of the strike in such phrases as "periling the nation," "strangling the economy," and "threatening our currency."

Dollars for Ads

When the shippers first announced their advertising plans, an ILA official commented:

"It just goes to show the shippers have plenty of money to spend, but they don't want to spend it on the longshoremen. Evidently they feel their position is weak when they have to spend thousands of dollars to dress themselves up."

The strike, involving some 75,000 ILA members on East and Gulf Coast docks, was resumed Dec. 23 on the expiration of an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction which had interrupted the walkout called on Oct. 1.

With the manpower issue sidetracked and the talks directed at other problems, a new fact finder was called into the bargaining at the request of federal mediators. He is Prof. James Healy of Harvard, who has previously worked on disputes in the maritime trades.

Healy's first action was to review conflicting claims of the parties on pension and welfare matters and to schedule additional meetings on the subject.

Meanwhile, Capt. William V. Bradley, ILA president, announced that the union planned to extend picketing Jan. 7 to shipyards, warehouses and any piers not already covered if the strike is not settled by then.

The picket lines, he said, will be informational "so the people can do what they want as far as going to work behind the lines is concerned."

Teacher 'Begging' Seen Replaced by Bargaining

Chicago—Programs of collective bargaining by public school teachers must replace the "era of collective begging," Pres. Carl J. Megal of the Teachers said at a three-day session of the union's executive council here.

He promised support of the international union for locals which have taken preliminary steps toward bargaining following the signing of a contract covering New York City's 40,000 teachers by the United Federation of Teachers, Local 2.

"We will always have a teacher shortage," he commented, "unless the insecurity of year-to-year employment, low salaries and short-term certification are uniformly corrected over the country."

Megel announced that a mail vote had given executive council endorsement to the proposed National Service Corps program, which he said would be of "tremendous aid" in solving the school drop-out problem.

Vice Pres. Sophie Jaffe of New Britain, Conn., chairman of the council's executive committee, blamed criticism of education by "self-appointed experts" for "the shortage of properly qualified teachers."

"Young people are reluctant to go into teaching," she said, "so long as education is the target of uncurbed and unqualified criticism."

Education against fear and insecurity in order to create a happier and more objective people was urged by Vice Pres. Dorothy Matheny of Toledo, O., who is on sabbatical leave for post-graduate work at the University of Michigan.

"We teachers must somehow find a way to demonstrate what constitutes true education," she said. "We must make it important to our students to gain security by an inner self-respect and self-confidence that can come only through true learning, not with reliance upon the outward symbols of it.

"We must, in ourselves first, and then in our students, regenerate elements of passionate devotion to the concept of individual freedom that comes with knowledge . . . We must re-evaluate our goals of education and make them worthwhile, so that learning and teaching can become something more than a game of Scrabble."

Steelworkers Win In 3 Ontario Plants

Toronto, Ont.—The Steelworkers have been certified in three more plants, with nearly 200 employes, in their Ontario organizing drive—the Gair Paper Products Div. of the Continental Can Co. and Hugh Russell & Sons, both of Toronto, and the Electric Reduction Co., Port Maitland.

HISTADRUT'S ROLE in the struggle for world freedom was a major topic at the recent 39th annual conference of the American Trade Union Council for Histadrut, Israel's labor federation. Shown addressing the conference, held in New York, is State AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Louis Hollander. Others on the program included, left to right, front row: Isaiach Avrech, Histadrut representative in the U.S.; Golda Meir, Israeli foreign minister, and Dr. Sol Stein, executive director of Histadrut.

13,000 Jobless Workers Now in Training Schools

More than 13,000 unemployed workers are now taking job training under the Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962, with projects being conducted in more than 200 schools and colleges.

The training programs, authorized by Congress last year, are intended to meet the needs of workers left stranded economically by automation and other technological changes, shifting demands of consumers for new products, the impact of foreign competition and the relocation of industry, the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare pointed out.

More than 50,000 workers, the department estimated, will be trained for new jobs by the middle of this year. The Labor Dept. is responsible for surveys of job opportunities in each state and the selection of trainees, who are paid allowances for their training periods under the law, and the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare administers the schools where projects are operated. Public vocational schools are used as training centers where such facilities are available.

A recent Labor Dept. announcement emphasized that half the trainees thus far have come from the ranks of long-term unemployed, and that about 90 percent of the first group completing training projects had been placed in jobs.

Training is currently available in nearly 100 occupational categories, with stress placed on fields where work opportunities exist.

Workers Gain in Fight With Neckwear Firm

Bethlehem, Pa.—The National Labor Relations Board has ordered the Forte Neckwear Co., which the Clothing Workers have been picketing since Nov. 25, to end discriminating against employes because of union membership and not to close or move the plant because of employe activity on behalf of the union.

The order was issued by the NLRB regional office in Philadelphia after Robert Forte, Sr., owner of the plant, had agreed to a settlement of unfair labor practice charges filed by the union.

After a notice detailing the settlement has been posted in the plant for 60 days, the NLRB will be able to consider Forte's request for a representation election. He has steadfastly refused the ACWA's demand for recognition on the basis of a card check.

The settlement forbids Forte to:

- Question employes about the "union or concerted activities" of themselves or other employes.
- Establish "separate or different" company regulations for employes who are union members.
- Isolate any employe because of union activity.
- Discourage union membership by discharges, layoffs or discrimination in working conditions.
- Restrain or coerce employes in their right to join or retain membership in a labor organization.

A skeleton force is at work inside the plant, where the strikers' picket line has been made effective with the help of other unions in the area. Pres. Thomas Petro of Steelworkers Local 2598, a leader in helping the strikers, called the company's position "an apparent attempt to implement so-called 'right-to-work' ideas in our city."

ACWA spokesmen pointed out that the settlement also applies to a North Carolina plant operated by Forte's son. They were particularly elated at the clause prohibiting the closing or removal of the local plant because of union activities.

$10 Increase Applied To Welfare, Pensions

New York—Workers in New York's sea food industry, whose center is the historic Fulton Fish Market, have voted to apply the entire $10 increase won in a new two-year contract to their welfare-pension program.

The Sea Food Workers—a local of the Meat Cutters—will receive a wide range of improved benefits, including:

- Accident and sickness benefits of $75 a week for up to one year, an improvement over the previous plan paying $40 for a maximum of 20 weeks.
- A $15,000 life insurance policy, with double indemnity for accidental death, compared with the previous $2,000 policy.
- An increase in pensions from $45 to $75 a month at age 65, with a new provision for disability retirement at age 50.
- Expanded hospital and major medical insurance.

Members voted to apply the entire $10 to the pension-welfare fund after rejecting, 139-95, an alternative proposal to divide the package into $7 for wages and $3 to the fund. The benefits are retroactive to Dec. 1.

Salvatore J. La Rocca, financial secretary of the local, hailed the decision as one "reflecting the desire [of the members] to provide for the future of their wives and children."

Backing Seen for Prepayment Plans

Increasing support for the movement to get more adequate medical care "at costs that make sense to the average family" was predicted for 1963 by Dr. Frederick D. Mott, president of the Group Health Association of America.

The "unique advantages of prepaid group practice," he declared, are reflected in "growing recognition" that such programs are "economically and professionally desirable" to both doctor and patient.

"Much can be accomplished through a friendly partnership among government, the medical and dental professions and the medical consumer that will harness government resources and the personal initiative of consumer and professional groups," Mott added.

"Together we can all best serve the interests of better medical care for all our people."

1st Test for the 88th

WHEN THE 88TH CONGRESS convenes Jan. 9 its immediate concern will be the rules of procedure rather than the substance of legislative solutions to the broad problems facing the country. But the stark fact is that critically needed legislation may wither and die unless the rules of both houses are changed.

The major battle is shaping up in the House over the Rules Committee. The limited reform of two years ago has expired and the key House committee is scheduled to return to a 12-member group with the GOP-Dixiecrat coalition holding the whip hand over all liberal legislative proposals.

In 1961 the Kennedy Administration fought to enlarge the committee to 15 members and won by a 217 to 212 vote. During the 87th Congress the Administration had an 8 to 7 margin in the committee which enabled it to get a substantial part—but not all—of its program up for a vote on the floor of the House.

On the key vote, only 22 Republicans broke party lines to loosen the Rules Committee roadblock, while 64 Southern Democrats deserted the Administration to support the conservative coalition.

This year Pres. Kennedy has again made the Rules Committee fight a priority matter for the Administration. In a special broadcast last month, the President warned that if the Administration should lose the fight to keep the committee at its 15-member strength, "our whole program . . . would be emasculated."

The 1963 Rules Committee fight will be an initial test of liberal versus conservative strength in the new Congress. It will be a test also for the Republican Party. If the GOP's conservative congressional leadership persists in making the rules fight a party-line matter, thus lining up its members against allowing legislation to reach the House floor for a vote, it may seriously affect the party's national stance in the 1964 elections.

★ ★ ★

LIBERALS IN THE HOUSE and Senate and many responsible citizens' groups are becoming increasingly concerned about congressional procedures which permit a conservative minority to block action on important legislation. Proposals for reform include:

- Ending the House Rules Committee's absolute power to prevent legislation from reaching the floor for debate and action.
- Guaranteeing that bills passed by both houses will go to conference committees.
- Providing for regular meetings of committees and for limitation of debate in Senate committees.
- Permitting the Senate to vote on a measure after reasonable debate.

The House Rules Committee battle has its parallel in the Senate where the biennial struggle will be renewed to curb minority filibusters used to block floor action on civil rights legislation. Here, too, the issue pits liberals against conservatives with the GOP leadership holding the key to the outcome.

If the American form of government is to function effectively in the 1960s, overhaul and reform of the rules of Congress must be accomplished. Congressional rules have been changed in the past as conditions and abuses dictated.

To allow a minority of a legislative body to thwart the will of the majority by permitting a handful of men from "safe" political districts to control the rules and procedures is to weaken the very fabric of representative government.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, January 5, 1963 No. 1

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'That Paper Is Starting to Carry Weight'

Centennial Observed:

Emancipation Proclamation Started Civil Rights Movement

Abraham Lincoln's Emancipation Proclamation, granting freedom to slaves in the Confederate states and parts of states "then in rebellion," was the beginning of the civil rights movement in the United States. The philosophy of the proclamation produced the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments to the Constitution, the legal basis of civil rights in America. Jan. 1, 1963, marked the effective date of Lincoln's proclamation. To mark the 100th anniversary of this historic document, it is hereby reproduced in full:

THE EMANCIPATION PROCLAMATION, JANUARY 1, 1863

WHEREAS, on the twenty-second day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two, a proclamation was issued by the President of the United States, containing, among other things, the following, to wit:—

"That on the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, all persons held as slaves within any State, or designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then, thenceforward, and forever free; and the Executive Government of the United States, including the military and naval authority thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of such persons, and will do no act or acts to repress such persons, or any of them, in any efforts they may make for their actual freedom.

"That the Executive will, on the first day of January aforesaid, by proclamation, designate the States and parts of States, if any, in which the people thereof respectively shall then be in rebellion against the United States; and the fact that any State, or the people thereof, shall on that day be in good faith represented in the Congress of the United States by members chosen thereto at elections wherein a majority of the qualified voters of such State shall have participated, shall in the absence of strong countervailing testimony be deemed conclusive evidence that such State and the people thereof are not then in rebellion against the United States."

Now, therefore, I, Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, by virtue of the power in me vested as commander-in-chief of the army and navy of the United States, in time of actual armed rebellion against the authority and government of the United States, and as a fit and necessary war measure for suppressing said rebellion, do, on this first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, and in accordance with my purpose so to do, publicly proclaimed for the full period of 100 days from the day first above mentioned, order and designate as the States and parts of States wherein the people thereof, respectively, are this day in rebellion against the United States, the following, to wit:—

Arkansas, Texas, Louisiana (except the parishes of St. Bernard, Plaquemines, Jefferson, St. John, St. Charles, St. James, Ascension, Assumption, Terre Bonne, Lafourche, St. Mary, St. Martin, and Orleans, (including the city of New Orleans), Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, and Virginia (except the forty-eight counties designated as West Virginia, and also the counties of Berkeley, Accomac, Northampton, Elizabeth City, York, Princess Ann, and Norfolk, including the cities of Norfolk and Portsmouth), and which excepted parts are for the present left precisely as if this proclamation were not issued.

AND BY VIRTUE of the power and for the purpose aforesaid, I do order and declare that all persons held as slaves within said designated States and parts of States are, and henceforth shall be, free; and that the executive government of the United States, including the military and naval authorities thereof, will recognize and maintain the freedom of said persons.

And I hereby enjoin upon the people so declared to be free to abstain from all violence, unless in necessary self-defence; and I recommend to them, in all cases when allowed, they labor faithfully for reasonable wages.

And I further declare and make known that such persons of suitable condition will be received into the armed service of the United States to garrison forts, positions, stations, and other places, and to man vessels of all sorts in said service.

And upon this act, sincerely believed to be an act of justice, warranted by the Constitution upon military necessity, I invoke the considerate judgment of mankind and the gracious favor of Almighty God.

Morgan Says:

American Style of Government 'In a Critical State of Disrepair'

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

WALTER LIPPMANN'S column ought to be made must reading not only for every high school and college student in the land but for every thoughtful citizen concerned about the nation's future.

This spread of attention is called for because the younger generation must face responsibilities of the farther future but Americans of voting age are confronted with a crisis that is as imminent as tomorrow. In fact, we're already living with it.

Morgan

We have been facing so many international crises for so long that our throbbing eardrums and our popping eyeballs seemingly can absorb no more, but they must. Our biggest crisis—one we can do something about if we will—is our own.

The fact is that the vaunted American system of government is not working in any encouraging sense of the word on any level in any community. Unlike the one-horse shay it is not likely to collapse, utterly, all at once. But it is already in a critical state of disrepair and the most dangerous aspect of the situation is that we are neglecting or refusing to recognize its condition. Its tax structure is inequitable, its services inefficient and inadequate, its ability to cope with domestic crises—such as labor-management disputes—inept and its planning for the future largely a political game, not a serious exercise of foresightedness.

Let Lippmann, the dean of American pundits, jar us to our senses.

". . . The American form of government," he wrote, "cannot be operated at all in wartime and cannot be operated successfully in peacetime except under presidential leadership. In domestic affairs, which include such external affairs as tariffs, foreign aid and the character of the defense structure, presidential leadership is checked and balanced and is often vetoed and frustrated by the rules of Congress, including particularly the rule of seniority and the entrenched power of standing committees.

"It will be a labor of Hercules to reform the system. But if the American government is to be adequate to the times we live in we have to begin the reform."

Lippmann's judgment was that first efforts should be concentrated on ending the tyranny of the House Rules Committee, which arrogates to itself the right to decide what bills Congress shall vote upon. Nobody knows better than Pres. Kennedy how urgently needed this reform is and how desperately difficult it is going to be to achieve.

In his special broadcast report to the country 10 days ago the President said that if the Administration should lose the fight to keep the Rules Committee membership at its present total of 15, "we can't function . . . We are through if we lose . . . Our whole program . . . would be emasculated."

The bitter irony of this assessment is that the Administration will win very little if it wins and lose devastatingly, as the President indicated, if it loses.

That Virginia country gentleman of the 19th Century, Judge Howard Smith, the chairman of the Rules Committee, has already served notice he intends to lead the fight to shrink the committee back to 12 members. By a cliff-hanging vote of 217 to 212, the Administration succeeded in enlarging it to 15 members in its first crucial battle of the 87th Congress two years ago. But now that enlargement expires if it is not resolved. The White House admits candidly that if that had not been achieved, its legislative programs thus far probably would have been ruined. Indeed the Administration's theoretical 8-7 margin on the committee failed to materialize on a number of important occasions and vital legislation, including aid for education, was thereby strangled.

IT IS POSSIBLE, though not likely, that these measures would have been killed on the floor of the House. The point to remember, however, the point which illustrates the imperiousness of the Rules Committee's conduct, is that in its wisdom and thanks to its peculiar powers, the committee did not even permit key bills to move to the House for a vote. Clearly a retention of 15 members on the Rules Committee is not enough victory. The committee should be a regulator of legislative traffic, not a jail cell for bills that do not strike the fancy of a minority coalition.

The non-partisan Committee for an Effective Congress declared in effect that the President could win if he showed as much courage, imagination and skill in leading Congress and the country to his side on such an issue as he showed in handling the Cuban crisis. It observed that he had not practiced these arts notably in a controversy with Congress.

Without trying to remove him from the hook of executive responsibility, it should be noted however that the President cannot do everything and there is so much to be done on every level of government. We can take some small comfort in the fact that, as Lippmann points out, all the major countries of the western alliance are discovering that their elected governments are inadequate to their needs.

I don't pretend to know what the answer is for us but it would be the wildest defeatism to argue that there isn't one in a nation with such documented ingenuity as ours. The first step surely is to recognize how badly we are governing ourselves from city hall up and then act.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE CONGRESS of the United States enters its 175th year on the opening day of its session Jan. 9, and few representative institutions have so steadfastly endured.

It can scarcely be denied, however, that the legislative machinery shows evidence of strain and wear if not of obsolescence. The archaic seniority system that advances men to power as committee chairmen and keeps them there long after they have lost contact with the spirit of the times is a sign of unmistakable weakness.

Another weakness is the difficulty of changing the status quo—the traditional, the "way we have always done it"—when control is centralized in the hands of men who have spent almost entire lifetimes in legislative service.

Such men almost inevitably develop a love for the institution that transcends other emotions, and it is difficult for them to face what to others seems a plain necessity for reform. The late Speaker Sam Rayburn again and again showed extreme reluctance to sponsor rules changes drastic enough to break the power of committee chairmen, even though he disagreed with the manner in which they used that power. In plain fact, he could never bring himself to do it.

The last big floor battle he waged, to increase the Rules Committee for a two-year period from 12 to 15 members, was the smallest conceivable step that might have been taken to reduce the power of Chairman Howard Smith of Virginia to blockade legislation. And since it was put into effect for only one Congress, the 87th, the battle now must be waged all over again.

* * *

THE RELUCTANCE of Congress to reform its rules implies an anxiety about change that is scarcely justified in experience. When reform has been approved in the past, the institutionalism of the House and Senate has proved exceedingly strong and resilient.

The seniority rule under which committee chairmen hold their jobs automatically was adopted early in the century when the late George Norris, then a House member, led a fight to break the arbitrary power of the speaker to name his favorites as chairmen.

The La Follette-Monroney reorganization act of 1946 reduced the number of committees to manageable proportions, set forth a July 31 annual adjournment date, and sought to improve committee staffs so as to give Congress expert help, allowing it to exert greater control over the budget.

The results? Congress never adjourns by July 31. Subcommittees and special and select committees have proliferated. And the only real control over the budget is still exerted solely through the appropriations committees, which decide who gets how much money on political and personal grounds rather than through expert knowledge of national needs.

* * *

THE TROUBLE is that the archaic structure of Congress has become a luxury the nation can ill afford.

Our life has been so transformed by the burst of population growth—188 million as of the turn of the New Year—and by the complexities of our economic and social systems that new needs have become demanding.

The machinery of Congress puts a premium on the influence of seniors who cannot bear the thought of departing old ways and who consider efforts to devise new programs an assault on the underpinnings of the republic. But this country is not a rural land, nor do we operate through a plantation economy.

Reform will inevitably come in the congressional machinery because it is essential to the national welfare. It may be sought through streamlined procedures, or by such a simple change as adopting a maximum age limit for committee chairmen, or through removal of one or two of the roadblocks that now prevent final action on important bills even when they have the clear support of an overwhelming majority of the people.

There is no reason that the 88th Congress itself should not take the lead by instituting a study of broad-scale changes that can be agreed upon as desirable, regardless of the outcome of the individual reform proposals now seen as issues for the opening days.

"Gentlemen, I'm afraid our factory is haunted . . . Yesterday we found a fingerprint on our product!"

Labor News Conference:

Domestic 'Peace Corps' Seen Aid to Migrants, Indians, Youth

AN AFL-CIO SPOKESMAN has given a strong endorsement to the Kennedy Administration's proposal for a National Service Corps, a home-front version of the highly successful Peace Corps operations abroad.

Community Services Activities Dir. Leo Perlis said a domestic peace corps would stimulate needed volunteer services to help the needy and unfortunate and encourage states and communities to "assume their responsibilities" for meeting the needs of large numbers of people.

Interviewed on Labor News Conference, AFL-CIO public service program carried by the Mutual radio network, Perlis envisioned the proposed corps in these words:

"I can see where you would have some domestic peace corpsmen go along with migratory workers from state to state to help them with their educational problems, their medical problems.

"I should like to see domestic peace corpsmen working with Indians. I should like to see domestic peace corpsmen working with our Puerto Rican fellow-citizens who are trying to integrate themselves into the communities, whether in Lorain as Steelworkers or in New York.

"I should like to see them work with the unfortunate people in our tenement houses, with juvenile gangs. But by and large these domestic peace corpsmen, as I see it, should be catalytic agents; they should inspire and encourage and train others to assume their responsibility."

PERLIS SHARPLY criticized attacks on public assistance programs, declaring that with the present gaps in social insurance programs "public assistance is the last bulwark against hunger and starvation."

Without such welfare programs, he emphasized, "the blind, the aged, the dependent children and other unfortunates would simply be left to starve."

Perlis Urges Public Welfare Advisory Unit

Establishment of a national committee charged with clarifying public welfare problems and encouraging citizen participation in local and state welfare programs has been proposed by Leo Perlis, director of AFL-CIO Community Services Activities.

The committee would be called upon to set up a dynamic program of education and information and to interpret assistance programs to the public, Perlis said in an article in New City, monthly publication of the Catholic Council on Working Life.

A clearing house of data on all programs at the state and local levels also is needed, he added, as is "joint attention by interested individuals and groups directed toward creating a positive image of public welfare and for developing effective and efficient public welfare programs."

Perlis has long urged a better understanding of the problems of the poor.

In the article he also suggested active participation of trained citizen volunteers in various aspects of public welfare, such as the rehabilitation of families; and public understanding of the role and need of professionals, such as social workers, in welfare work.

"Too many welfare administrators, by and large, look upon citizen participation and citizen advisory committees as interlopers rather than as friends and allies," he observed.

Henning Names Howard as Aide

Jack Howard, former San Francisco newspaperman, has been named special assistant to Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning, it was announced by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

Howard, since April 1960 chief investigator of the House Government Information subcommittee, has had broad experience in both government and labor-management fields.

A former labor reporter for the San Francisco Chronicle, he was also a local and international officer of the Newspaper Guild. He worked in 1957-58 as a congressional fellow of the American Political Science Association and served briefly on the staff of Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.).

SENIOR CITIZEN HOUSING ACT passed by Congress this year will mean that C. M. Montgomery, a retired construction worker, will be able to move from his 100-year-old house (above) to the modest but modern type of home pictured below. In front of the old home, near Attalla, Ala., are, left to right: Julian Brown, state director of the Farmers Home Administration; Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery, Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.), and Jeff Morgan, county supervisor of the Farmers Home Administration.

First Senior Citizen Housing Loan Made

Attalla, Ala.—A retired Alabama construction worker, living in a no-longer-repairable century-old home on a five-acre farm near here, is the nation's first beneficiary of the new Senior Citizens Housing Act.

For C. M. Montgomery—"a union man all my life" and a long-time member of Iron Workers Local 92—the law which Pres. Kennedy signed last September meant a new home by Christmas.

The modest repayments on the 20-year, 4 percent interest loan of $6,210 from the Farmers Home Administration are within the means of Montgomery—even though no bank would make such a loan to a 64-year-old couple whose only income is from social security, a small pension and occasional sales of home-grown vegetables.

Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.), House sponsor of the new housing law, noted that "it is the aged in poorest health" who live in the most inadequate housing—in both city and rural areas.

Rains spoke at ceremonies marking the loan to the Montgomery family as did Howard Bertsch, head of the Farmers Home Administration, who noted that nearly one-third of the homes in rural America either need major repairs or are so dilapidated that they should be replaced.

The law which made possible a stepped-up program of low-cost loans for housing for the elderly in both cities and rural areas had been strongly supported by the AFL-CIO during congressional hearings. Boris Shishkin, secretary of the federation's Housing Committee, termed the need of the nation's elderly for decent housing "acute and most urgent."

ILA District Agrees To Hold New Vote

The Great Lakes district of the Longshoremen has agreed to hold a new election of officers superseding a July 1960 vote which the government charges followed procedures violating the Landrum-Griffin Act. The agreement, signed by representatives of the ILA and the Labor Dept., paved the way for discontinuance of court action against the union and set Mar. 1 for a new election in Detroit.

In another case, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has filed a civil suit seeking to void an election last June by Local 1470, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, at Kearney, N. J. The suit charged the vote was held under conditions which violated the election provisions of Landrum-Griffin.

FTC Files Complaint Against 'Racket' Sheet

The Federal Trade Commission has issued a complaint charging the publishers of a bimonthly tabloid calling itself United Labor Management Press with falsely representing itself as having connections with labor in its advertising solicitations.

The complaint grew out of an FTC investigation as a follow-up to information supplied by the Intl. Labor Press Association, the organization composed of publications of the AFL-CIO and its affiliates. The FTC scheduled a hearing Feb. 5 at its offices in Washington, D. C.

The complaint names Brondabrooke Publishers, Inc., of New York City; Joseph Harrow and Harry Brenner, both officers of the firm, and Max Streier, advertising manager. It accuses them of selling advertising by representing that the paper is "endorsed by, affiliated with or an official publication of a labor union," claims which the complaint says are "false, misleading and deceptive."

The complaint further charges the respondents with placing unauthorized ads from various industrial and business concerns in the paper and then seeking to exact payment for them.

In calling the FTC's attention to the "boiler-room" paper, ILPA Pres. Bernard R. Mullady noted that a "Joe Harrow" had appeared in the records as a staff member of the Trade Union Courier. That publication on Mar. 31, 1960, was fined $60,000 by the 3rd Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia for criminal contempt in continuing to misrepresent itself as an official labor paper in violation of a "cease and desist" order.

Christmas Season Tragedy:

Suicide Pact Brings Plea for Medicare

Daytona Beach, Fla.—The grim story of a pre-Christmas tragedy—the suicide pact of an elderly Hallandale couple in despair over the heavy burden of unpaid doctor and hospital bills—gave a newspaper here stark evidence of the need to help the aged with their health care problems.

"Will it be done in 1963?" the Daytona Beach Sunday News-Journal asked in an editorial.

"The question is necessary," the newspaper said, "because just south of Hallandale lives Dr. Edward Annis, president now of the American Medical Association, and the organization's leading spokesman in opposition to such assistance—to any kind of medical help that would not include the purchase of private medical insurance."

The News-Journal acknowledged that the story of the couple was a harsh one to be telling in the Christmas season, "because Christmas is celebrated as a symbol of life, not death."

"But," the newspaper insisted, "it is a story which needs to be told when it can be shocking—told now in order to get its message through before Congress reconvenes. . . .

"That Congress, yet an unknown quantity because it is a new one, could act at least to wipe out the cause for the Hallandale tragedy."

Mass of Bills Found

The man and wife were found dead of overdoses of sleeping pills in their apartment in the suburb north of Miami.

Nearby, the newspaper reported, was a mass of medical and hospital bills, some paid, some unpaid. The major paid ones were for doctors' services; the largest unpaid bill was for the wife's most recent stay at a Fort Lauderdale hospital.

Beside the bills were notes asking their daughter's forgiveness for the act, the News-Journal continued, and indicating that they had taken the step because they simply could not meet the bills now and saw no hope of being able to in the future.

The editorial speculated that the parents had rationalized their suicides because they feared becoming a burden to their daughter and granddaughter, also an adult.

"As you can see," the paper said, "these people are a cause for the Administration's projected medicare program—a plan that would take care of society's neglect of its nearly 17 million elderly people in their last days on earth."

Charging that the AMA had exerted great pressure to block enactment of the social security health program by the last Congress, the News-Journal noted that the organization nevertheless failed in its election campaign to defeat all candidates favorable to the program.

It recalled that Annis had given this explanation of the failure: "The siren songs of the politicians were more appealing than the voices of reason and experience." And: "Although the AMA's public relations reserves were substantial, they were not sufficient."

To this, the News-Journal commented:

"Christians—in fact, all Floridans—can hope Dr. Annis stumbles across the story of the tragedy in Hallandale, and, pondering it, questions whether he is giving the AMA proper leadership. . . .

"On Tuesday [Christmas Day], particularly, we only can hope Dr. Annis may find a new definition of the word 'sufficient' as he thinks of the debt-ridden couple who did not want to be a burden to the young, but whose hopes for future relief had been dashed by pressure on the last Congress by a special interest group.

"Perhaps, then, Dr. Annis would use the word along these lines: 'Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.' And the new Congress would not feel the pressure from money spent on a public relations war to perpetuate a great social evil in America."

Federal Union Council Picks New Director

John A. McCart, veteran legislative representative of the American Federation of Government Employes, has been named operations director of the AFL-CIO Government Employes' Council. He succeeds James K. Langan, who recently retired from the post.

McCart, 47, has been on the AFGE national staff for 13 years and head of the union's legislative department for the past 10 years. In his new post, he will be the full-time director of the council, which is the coordinating body for 23 AFL-CIO unions with members employed by the federal government.

A native of Philadelphia, McCart is a former president of the Philadelphia Metal Trades Council and the AFGE lodge at the Philadelphia Naval Shipyard.

A TRIO OF VETERANS of the AFL-CIO headquarters staff was paid tribute at a luncheon upon their retirement effective Dec. 31. Shown with Pres. George Meany (second from right), who presented them with watches on behalf of the AFL-CIO, they are Rev. Charles C. Webber (left), in charge of religious relations; George D. Riley, legislative representative, and George Richardson (right), special representative.

Labor's Economic Review:

U. S. Spending Rise, Tax Slash Seen Vital

A federal tax cut in 1963 must be accompanied by increased government expenditures to give the American economy "vigorous, forward momentum" and promote full employment, the AFL-CIO has declared in the January issue of its monthly magazine, the American Federationist.

The article, titled "The Positive Role of Fiscal Policy," was prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research as a Labor's Economic Review feature of the magazine.

Asserting that lack of enough demand for goods and services has been the economy's "major deficiency" over the past nine years, the analysis declared that budget-balancing cutbacks in federal spending to compensate for a tax cut would not meet the need "for a rapid rise in sales, production and employment."

On the other hand, government expenditures alone—without a tax cut—cannot be raised high enough and fast enough to do the job, the article said.

"The practical alternative, therefore, is a substantial and immediate tax cut of about $10 billion while federal expenditures continue to increase," the AFL-CIO researchers declared.

They noted that a majority of the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy had adopted this view, pointing out that while such a tax cut might result in "appreciable" deficits in the near future, "over the longer run, it may well generate increased tax revenues."

Concentration Stressed

The Federationist stressed, however, that the proposed $10 billion tax cut must be concentrated among low and middle-income families—which spend almost all their incomes—if it is to result in a "fast and substantial boost of consumer sales."

A tax cut along these lines, the magazine suggested, "could add as much as $20 billion to $25 billion to national production as the increased funds spread through the economy" and could create more than a million jobs.

A follow-up to an immediate tax cut, the Dept. of Research said, should be action in 1963 to reform the entire tax structure through the closing of loopholes which allow special tax privileges. The resulting additional revenues, the economists said, should be offset by across-the-board reduction of tax rates, including those affecting corporations and wealthy families.

Over the next several years, the article continued, the government should further modernize its fiscal operations by adopting a capital budget to separate expenditures which amount to investments—such as public works and self-liquidating loans—from those which are routine and recurrent.

The analysis argued that development of a rational fiscal policy could make the federal budget "a powerful tool" for achieving and maintaining full employment and maximum use of plants and machines, instead of the "braking force" it has been at times in the past.

Important Factor

This is true, the article noted, because government spending has become an important factor in the nation's economy, rising from 4 percent of total national output in the years following World War I to about 20 percent in fiscal 1962.

A "rational fiscal policy," the AFL-CIO economists continued, would vary the amount of budget deficit or surplus with the needs of the economy.

"When unemployment is high, the deficit should be great enough to add to sales, production and jobs as rapidly as possible in order to achieve maximum use of manpower, plants and machines," it declared.

"When the economy is operating at full blast and shortages threaten, the surplus should be great enough to restrain effective demand and reduce the danger of shortages without throwing the economy into a recession."

To opponents of this approach who argue that the national debt already is too high, the researchers pointed out that most of the debt is attributable to high military expenditures for World War II and the Korean War and that the nation is now in a much better position to support the debt.

"While the debt was 132.8 percent of national production in 1946—nearly 33 percent greater than the nation's total production—it was down to 55 percent or about half of the much greater gross national product in 1962," the Dept. of Research observed.

Fear of Inflation 'Needless'

The fear of inflation expressed by critics also is "needless" and "shortsighted," the article asserted, citing the record as showing that deficits are not necessarily inflationary in themselves.

In wartime, when the economy was going "full blast," the accompanying budget deficits were indeed inflationary, it noted, but 1959's record peacetime deficit of $13.1 billion "was not inflationary at all" and kept unemployment from rising still further than the 7.5 percent rate of mid-1958.

The Federal Debt As A Percent Of Total National Production

Source: U. S. Bureau of the Budget

The Federal Debt

Source: U. S. Bureau of the Budget

Administrative Budget Expenditures – Defense And Civilian Spending

Source: U. S. Bureau of the Budget

Administrative Budget Expenditures As A Percent Of Total National Production

Source: U. S. Bureau of the Budget

Denial of Injured Workers' Rights Charged in Compensation Probe

New York—State AFL-CIO Pres. Raymond R. Corbett has called on the State Workmen's Compensation Board to reopen all cases "in which there is the slightest suspicion that workers were denied their full rights" under the law.

Corbett's demand followed issuance of a report by a special committee appointed by Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) to study the operations of the Workmen's Compensation law.

The special committee found that as a result of administrative techniques thousands of injured workers and their families had been deprived of medical and money benefits due them under the law. It recommended action to end these and other injustices and urged the governor to name a "watchdog" committee to see that the recommendations are carried out.

Correction Important

Corbett said the report "pinpointed some serious deficiencies of board administration" but that correction of these defects was "of far greater importance."

The review committee's report provided "overwhelming evidence that the compensation board, in its laudable but misguided efforts to operate more economically, sought such savings to the detriment of workers and their families," he declared.

He called on the board to state "promptly and publicly" that it was moving to correct the injustices. The state labor organization, the State AFL-CIO president said, would comment when the legislature convenes for its 1963 session on proposals for legislative action to implement other recommendations of the special committee.

The review committee, composed of labor, industry, carrier and public members, was named after a two-year barrage of complaints by labor against the operations of the compensation board. Its report was the result of 14 months of study.

Labor members included Pres. Peter Brennan of the State and New York City Building & Construction Trades Councils; Joseph P. Molony, director of Steelworkers Dist. 4, and former State AFL-CIO Pres. Harold C. Hanover.

Deception Charged

The committee found that use of deceptive or misleading office forms "operated to prevent payment" of benefits in 9 percent of cases in one instance, 10 percent in another (labor members said the range was 50 to 68 percent). It found, too, that a procedural change in hearing certain disfigurement cases had cut awards from 10,000 to 3,000 a year and had reduced money payments by $1 million in 1959 and half again as much in the next two years.

The committee also charged that board clerks deciding on whether claims should go to hearings were insufficiently trained for the job.

The board instituted a number of administrative changes during the course of the study, but the review committee recommended additionally that:

- Claimants—80 percent of them without any representation—be made fully aware of their rights and responsibilities.
- Referees be required to penalize insurance companies for law violations.
- The superintendent of insurance be empowered to discipline carriers for violations and to limit the present 17.5 percent cost of writing compensation business and the reserves that inflate premiums.
- Politically-appointed referees—all attorneys—be given higher pay and tenure through seven-year appointments and that they be required to halt all outside practice.
- Deceptive forms and practices that unfairly affect claimants be eliminated.

Illinois Public Advisers Offer Program for Jobs

Springfield, Ill.—A 40-member public advisory committee on unemployment, winding up an 18-month study of joblessness in Illinois, has recommended to Gov. Otto Kerner (D) a broad program to increase work opportunities, improve educational and training facilities, and eliminate racial barriers to jobs.

Kerner hailed the report, representing the joint views of leading educators and union, business and government officials, as "an immense contribution" to the welfare of Illinois.

Labor representation on the committee included Pres. Ralph Helstein of the Packinghouse Workers; Vice Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists; Auto Workers Reg. Dir. Robert Johnston; Lawrence A. Keller, education and community service director of Steelworkers Dist. 31, and Irwin E. Klass, editor of the Federation News, weekly publication of the Chicago AFL-CIO.

Chairman of the group was Frank H. Cassell, Inland Steel Co. executive, whose broad leadership was acknowledged by labor members as having played a major part in producing a creative report.

Among the 66 recommendations were specific proposals for:

- Spurring the state's economic growth through new agencies including a State Advisory Council on Economic Affairs, a Dept. of Commerce, and a financing agency which would help in the establishment of desirable scientific research and development firms.
- A large-scale effort to reduce school drop-outs.
- Constant revision and improvement in vocational courses.
- Extension of unemployment compensation to cover employes of firms with only one worker, employes of state and local governments and those working for nonprofit organizations.
- A substantial increase in the number of junior colleges and other post-high school educational institutions.
- Greater support to groups combating discrimination.

SWEARING-IN CEREMONY at headquarters of the Bookbinders in the AFL-CIO Building found Joseph Denny (right), the retiring president, administering the oath of office to his successor, John Connolly (left), and to Sec.-Treas. Wesley A. Taylor.

New Congress Faces Battles on Rules

Legislative Prospects Pinned to House Vote

(Continued from Page 1)

Pres. Kennedy. Recently he warned publicly that if the committee reverts to conservative domination "we are through . . . our whole program in my opinion would be emasculated."

In 1961, with the late Speaker Sam Rayburn putting his prestige on the line in support of his party's new President, the Administration eked out a five-vote victory in the House rules fight, aided by the votes of 22 Republicans.

GOP Vote Uncertain

Observers expect vote shifts in both directions. Still uncertain is whether the GOP vote in support of the President will be greater or less than in 1961. Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith, field general of the conservative coalition, hopes to pick up some southern votes which he lost two years ago. On the other hand, the Georgia delegation, which is backing Rep. Phil M. Landrum for one of the vacancies on the influential Ways & Means Committee, may give the Administration its votes. Landrum, who voted with Smith in 1961, has already announced that he will support the President on the issue this year.

Before Congress convenes, House liberals are expected to decide on whether to try for a broader reform. Proposals include elimination of the power of the Rules unit to prevent differing House and Senate bills from going to conference and reinstitution of the 21-day rule of the 81st Congress—1949-51—which allowed committee chairmen to call up bills not brought out by the Rules Committee within three weeks.

The legislative outlook in the Senate was clouded by the undetermined effects of the sudden death of the influential Sen. Robert S. Kerr (D-Okla.).

Kerr, ranking member of the Finance Committee, had been expected to be the dominant Senate figure in consideration of Pres. Kennedy's tax program, as he was in the 87th Congress. His death moves Sen. Russell Long (D-La.) up one big step on the Finance Committee, makes Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) senior member of the Public Works Committee, and leaves vacant the chairmanship of the Space Committee.

While often an Administration supporter, Kerr had vigorously fought social security health care legislation and defended the substitute Kerr-Mills Act, of which he was co-sponsor.

Majority Retained

The Democrats will retain their 67-33 margin in the Senate, as Oklahoma's Democratic Gov. J. Howard Edmondson is expected to name a successor before he leaves office Jan. 14.

Kennedy's formal legislative program will be presented in his State of the Union address later this month, but newsmen were given a preview of the President's thinking in top-level briefings.

Reports indicated the President will give priority on domestic legislation to anti-recession measures headed by an economy-stimulating tax cut combined with tax reform.

Kennedy's is expected to renew pressure for issues left hanging by the 87th Congress, including medical care for the aged, federal aid to all levels of education, a mass transit program and a youth opportunities bill.

Disturbed by Unemployment

Newsmen reported the President disturbed by unemployment lingering from earlier recessions, and concerned with the problem of providing jobs for new workers pouring into the labor market and for those displaced by automation.

As in the 87th Congress, much of the President's priority program will fall in the jurisdiction of the House Ways & Means Committee, including tax legislation and social security medical care. The two Democratic vacancies on the committee—replacements for conservatives who retired or were defeated—will be filled later this month.

Customarily new members would be elected at the Democratic House caucus on Jan. 8, on the eve of the convening of Congress, but Speaker John W. McCormack announced that the decision would be put off until a second caucus, to be held after the vote on the size of the Rules Committee.

LABOR PARTICIPATED in dedicating this new home of the Labor & Industrial Relations Institute on the Urbana campus of the University of Illinois. The three-story building was financed by gifts from labor and management and a legislative appropriation. Labor donors included the Illinois State AFL-CIO, Steelworkers, the William Green Memorial Fund, Illinois State Council of Machinists, Champaign-Urbana AFL-CIO, Chicago AFL-CIO, and the Chicago Carpenters' District Council and affiliates. A $5,000 gift to the library was given by the Illinois State Conference of Building & Construction Trades in memory of the late Pres. Patrick F. Sullivan.

Presidential Panel Lashes Boeing For 'Misguided' Union Shop Stand

(Continued from Page 1)

26 cents an hour over a three-year contract and an additional 6 cents over the contract period to narrow wage differentials.

It also proposed a cost-of-living clause similar to those in other aerospace pacts and that the company pay an additional 2 cents an hour into the vacation, sick leave and severance pay fund.

But the report's sharpest impact was on the union security issue. The IAM had asked for a union shop provision to replace the present maintenance-of-membership clause and the company countered with a demand that maintenance of membership be dropped.

To assist the board in determining the views of the Boeing workers, a non-binding National Labor Relations Board vote on the issue was held with 73.8 percent of the workers voting for a union shop.

Despite this "sizeable majority," the board commented, the company . . . remained adamant in its refusal to consider granting the union shop." The company contended, according to the mediators, that the union shop involves "compulsion," and that a union shop would strengthen "the enemy," the union.

The board read the record on the first argument, documenting the fact that from 1937, when the plant was first organized, until 1948, contracts with the IAM provided for a full union shop. That again in 1951, when the IAM regained bargaining status after a two-year period of nonunion operation, the company signed a maintenance of membership contract which has been in effect to the present.

'A Hollow Ring'

This type of provision, the board said, "embodies an important element of compulsion" to which Boeing agreed. But since 1951, the board noted, Boeing has had full union shop contracts with the Teamsters, the Firemen & Oilers and its plant guards.

Against this background, said the board, Boeing's position against "compulsory unionism" has "a hollow ring." The fact is, the report added, "a union shop is justified in this case" because of the IAM's responsibility and the large majority of Boeing workers who joined the union.

The board said it was "especially impressed" with the union's "free-loader" argument and observed that "the enjoyment of the fruits of representation without payment of one's proportionate share of the cost is . . . repugnant."

Boeing's view of the union as the "enemy," said the board, "is counter to the mainstream of thought of American management and labor" that there is a common goal of a prosperous business and good and secure jobs.

The company's "rather cynical argument" about the union as an "enemy," the report continued, "is in our view not only factually unsound but also goes a long way toward explaining why this dispute has been so difficult to settle."

"We are convinced that if the Boeing management would reconsider its basic approach to the relationship, it would find the union more than willing to meet it halfway," the report added.

Under the terms of the board's creation and extensions of its time to make a report by both sides, action on a strike or lockout has been delayed until Jan. 15.

1-5-63

Peter McGuire's Daughter Dead

Mrs. Catherine Caya, daughter of Peter J. McGuire, the founder of Labor Day, died at the age of 75 in her home at Collingswood, N. J.

Mrs. Caya, who lived with a daughter, Mrs. Iris C. Rossell, had participated for many years in the annual Labor Day wreath-laying ceremony at the grave of her father.

"We feel that no one has contributed more to the cause of the working man than Peter J. McGuire, the founder of Labor Day," said AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in a telegram to Mrs. Rossell expressing their regret. "It follows that his family must have played an important part in all the trials and tribulations of this great man. Our heartfelt sympathy is extended in this hour of grief."

CWA Smashes Teamster Raid On Western Electric Installers

(Continued from Page 1)

improved conditions which the Western Electric employes need and deserve."

Beirne said the union was "deeply appreciative of the strong vote of confidence" given the CWA by the Western Electric employes.

"They have clearly repudiated the raiding effort of the Teamsters union under the dubious leadership of James R. Hoffa, and have once again voiced their faith in CWA," he said.

Beirne congratulated the installers for having "stood up to the heavy propaganda and the heavy raiding of the Teamsters machine."

The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements.

CWA officials said the fight against invasion by the Teamsters dated back to early 1962, when Hoffa indicated an objective of taking over bargaining rights in the entire communications industry.

Late last summer, a CWA trial court held public hearings on charges of dual unionism against a small group of the installers. The union court voted to expel 19 members and to suspend two others for plotting to lead the installers' unit into the truckers' union.

Letter Revealed

One of those expelled was Kenneth A. Silvers, former national director of CWA's installation unit. Silvers had gone on the Teamsters payroll.

As the Teamsters brought their raiding efforts into the open, the CWA said its evidence indicated that Hoffa had sent a letter to all IBT officials July 19 advising them that Silvers was "heading up a full-scale campaign" to organize telephone installers.

On Nov. 9, the Teamsters petitioned the NLRB for representation rights among the Western Electric installers already covered by the CWA contract. CWA agreed to waive the board's three-year contract bar rule in order to proceed to an early decision on the issue, and the board designated Dec. 5 to 28 as the period for balloting. The votes were counted at NLRB's regional office in New York Jan. 4.

Following the filing of Teamsters petition, the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its November meeting condemned the action as a raid, pledged the CWA its full support and called upon all affiliates to join in combatting the attack.

At the time, the council declared: "This raid threatens the welfare and security of all telephone workers. It must and will be beaten back."

Alexander Named Chrysler Umpire

Detroit—Gabriel N. Alexander, well-known Detroit arbitrator, has been appointed permanent umpire under the contract between the Auto Workers and the Chrysler Corp.

Jamaica Becomes 105th ILO Member

Geneva—Jamaica has become the 105th member of the Intl. Labor Organization, Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse has announced.

In a letter to Morse, Prime Minister Alexander Bustamente declared Jamaica's formal acceptance of the obligations of the ILO constitution, stated that Jamaica remains bound by 15 conventions accepted on its behalf by the United Kingdom, and announced the nation will ratify four additional conventions immediately.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, January 12, 1963 | No. 2

House Beats Coalition Bid To Recapture Rules Group

FIVE FRESHMEN Democratic senators pose with Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield on the steps of the Capitol as they arrive to take their seats in the 88th Congress. From left are: Senators Thomas J. McIntyre (N. H.), George S. McGovern (S. D.), Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.), Mansfield, Daniel K. Inouye (Hawaii), and Abraham Ribicoff (Conn.).

Drive on Filibuster:

Senate Cloture Fight Set to Open Jan. 14

A new effort to amend Senate rules to make it easier to cut off filibusters was scheduled to get under way Jan. 14 immediately after Pres. Kennedy delivers his State of the Union address to Congress.

A bipartisan group of 12 senators will propose a rule permitting 51 senators—a constitutional majority—to put a limit on debate.

If their move fails, they are prepared to support a more modest proposal to enable a filibuster to be broken by 60 percent of senators present and voting. Under a Senate rule adopted in 1959, a two-thirds vote is required to limit debate.

Deep South senators who have used the filibuster in the past to block civil rights legislation have served warning that they are prepared to use both the filibuster itself and every available parliamentary maneuver to defeat the rules move.

Said Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.), chief tactician for the southern group:

"We will wage an all-out, to-the-last-ditch, to-the-end-of-the-road fight against any strengthening of the rules."

The 60 percent proposal, backed by Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.), is scheduled to

(Continued on Page 8)

Down in December:

Jobless Averaged 5.6 Percent in 1962

By Saul Miller

Persistent, high unemployment dominated the job picture throughout 1962 as an average 56 of every 1,000 persons in the labor force hunted jobs in vain.

The unemployment figures for December showed a slight decrease in the seasonally adjusted rate from 5.8 percent in November to 5.6 percent in December.

The December figure coincided with the average rate for 1962. The year opened with the unemployment rate at 5.8 percent and closed at 5.6 percent. It moved in this general range throughout the year with only one drop to 5.3 percent.

The December figures showing 3.8 million unemployed—no change from November—disclosed however that the unemployment rate for adult men edged up slightly from 4.6 percent to 4.7 percent while the rates for women and teenagers dropped.

The Labor Dept. said in its release of the figures that many of the teenagers hunting holiday jobs in November found them in December, dropping the jobless rate from 15.2 percent to 12.7 percent.

Long-Term Idle Rise

Long-term joblessness of 15 weeks or longer rose seasonally by 100,000 between November and December to 1 million.

Total employment at 67.6 million in December was down by the expected amount — 400,000 — from November and nonagricultural jobs showed a greater-than-seasonal increase to 63.5 million. Most of the rise in nonfarm employment—1.5 million above December 1961—took place during the first part of the year, the department said.

(Continued on Page 7)

Wirtz Sees Tax Slash Aid to Jobs

A solution to the problems of automation coupled with tax reduction and a number of other Administration legislative proposals hold the key to reducing unemployment, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz told a Washington press conference.

Wirtz restated his opposition to proposals for a 35-hour week to cut joblessness but said that in the absence of any better answers they deserve serious consideration.

He noted the coincidence between statistics showing that 7 percent of work in manufacturing was being handled on an overtime basis while the unemployment rate was averaging 5.6 percent. "We must start asking ourselves whether things are right," he said, when such a rate of overtime occurs at a time of high unemployment.

If the nation can start "doing something" about meeting the prob-

(Continued on Page 7)

Kennedy Forces Win 235 to 196

By David L. Perlman

Administration forces kept control of the House Rules Committee by a decisive 235-196 vote on the opening day of Congress, blocking the conservative coalition's bid to regain power to keep Administration bills from reaching the House floor for a vote.

A number of factors other than support of the President's program entered into the vote, but the victory margin exceeded most predictions. Two years ago, the same issue—expansion of the committee from 12 to 15 members so as to give Administration supporters an 8-7 majority—had carried by only five votes.

If the Rules Committee had been cut back this year, two liberal Democrats and one conservative Republican added in 1961 would have been forced off the committee.

Pres. Kennedy, who had warned that "our whole program would be emasculated" if the Rules Committee reverted to conservative control, was reported "most gratified" by the outcome.

On the key vote, Democrats rallied 207-48 behind their leadership. Twenty-eight Republicans voted with the Democratic majority, six more than in 1961, with 148 opposed.

Coalition Splits

While conservative southern Democrats, led by Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith (Va.), were vocal in arguing against the permanent enlargement of the committee, when the showdown came Southerners deserted the coalition in droves. Only one Dixie delegation—from Mississippi—voted sol-

(Continued on Page 8)

Supreme Court Asked to Reverse Decision on Dues Use in Politics

The AFL-CIO has asked the Supreme Court to overrule its 1961 railroad union shop decision restricting the use of dues money for political purposes with which individual members say they disagree.

The request to the court to reconsider and overrule its so-called Street decision came in a brief filed in another rail union shop case arising in North Carolina.

Supporting rail brotherhoods in an appeal from a state court decision enjoining enforcement of a union shop clause against a handful of reluctant dues-payers, the AFL-CIO brief argued that even under the two-year-old Street decision the North Carolina ruling was erroneous.

The Street decision, pointed out the brief filed by AFL-CIO Gen. Counsel J. Albert Woll, Theodore J. St. Antoine and Associate Gen. Counsel Thomas E. Harris, clearly upheld the legality of the union shop under a 1951 amendment to the Railway Labor Act.

Unwilling employes in the bargaining unit represented legitimately by a rail union were held liable to pay their share of union operating expenses, the brief observed, and the court added an exception merely to the extent a member's dues were used over his objection for a political cause he opposed.

Lack of Evidence Cited

In the North Carolina decision, the AFL-CIO argued, the record showed no testimony that any union spent money for any particular legislative or political purpose that individual plaintiffs had objected to. Even the Street decision did not support the state court injunction, federation counsel argued in asking a reversal.

More broadly, the AFL-CIO brief made a direct attack on the logic and reasoning of the Street decision itself and urged the court to concede it had seriously "misconstrued the legislative history" and congressional intent in

(Continued on Page 6)

Minnesota Race Still Undecided

St. Paul, Minn. — Two months after the election, Minnesota voters still did not know the winner of the gubernatorial race.

A recount of the contest between incumbent Gov. Elmer L. Andersen (R) and Lt. Gov. Karl Rolvaag (D) was completed but nearly 100,000 ballots were challenged by representatives of both candidates.

A bipartisan screening committee hopes to reduce the number of contested votes to 10,000—which will be submitted to a panel of judges for ruling.

DROP-IN CENTER at Security Manor, municipal housing project for senior citizens at New Britain, Conn., was equipped through a $1,200 gift from Auto Workers Local 133. Grouped around a stereo record player, TV set and silver service which were included are, standing from left, Herbert S. Everett of the Chamber of Commerce; Mrs. George Washington, president of the Senior Citizens' group at the project; Robert F. Weir, representing the company where the gifts were bought; Mayor Thomas J. Meskill, Jr., of New Britain; Bliss W. Clark of the New Britain Housing Authority, and Pres. Anthony Bracha of Local 133. Members of the local's executive board are standing in the doorway.

'Work' Forces and Farm Bureau Charged with 'Unholy Alliance'

The National Council for Industrial Peace has charged that the American Farm Bureau Federation has entered into an "unholy alliance with ultra-right business monopolists" with the double-barreled purpose of crippling the farmer's rural electric program by hiking REA interest rates and destroying federal collective bargaining policy by enactment of so-called "right-to-work" laws.

The charge was made by John M. Redding, director of the citizens' council headed by former Sen. Herbert H. Lehman (D-N. Y.), of which the late Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt was co-founder.

"After years of attacking free collective bargaining through the vicious so-called 'right-to-work' laws," Redding said, "the Farm Bureau has now bowed to the will of the ultra-right business monopolists who dictate its policies and turned its back on its own farmer membership by demanding a crippling hike in the interest rate on REA loans."

Redding directed his fire at a resolution the federation adopted at its recent annual meeting in Atlanta which called for an interest charge on REA loans for rural electric systems serving farmers nearly double the present 2 percent prescribed by federal law. The farm bureau meeting also adopted a resolution supporting enactment of the deceptive so-called "right-to-work" laws on state and national levels.

"These are the same people who have been trying to destroy the federal labor-management process by sponsoring and financing propaganda campaigns to enact the disreputable so-called 'right-to-work' laws," Redding said. "And now they have turned their venom on their own farmers."

Redding said that the National Rural Electric Cooperative Association and other authorities on REA systems "have repeatedly warned that a sharp hike in the interest rate on REA loans would have a crippling effect on the entire rural electrification program."

"In demanding a higher interest rate on REA loans, the farm bureau has joined forces with the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the Council of State Chambers and the private power trust who are trying to destroy the farmer electric co-op program that has brought rural America out of darkness," Redding said.

"This proposal by the Farm Bureau is identical with the plan of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce and the state chamber of commerce council, in league with private power companies, for 'phasing out' the REA."

Redding said the Farm Bureau "is supposed to work for the welfare and best interests of the farmer but, instead, its reactionary leaders are now trying to cut the farmer's throat."

Referring to the alliance of business monopolists and the farm bureau leaders against the REA, Redding said:

"These are the same people who have been directing high-power propaganda attacks against labor-management collective bargaining through so-called 'right-to-work' laws.

Both Serve the People

"The truth is, of course, that farmer co-ops, including the rural electric systems, and trade unions function only to serve the welfare of their members and the communities in which they live. It is time that farmers and workers in industry understand they are being attacked by a common enemy and stand together to defeat these attacks."

Redding said this double-barreled attack on the farmer and working people is currently under way in many states, including Oklahoma, Maine, Pennsylvania, Wyoming, Idaho and Montana.

The NRECA recently told its farmer membership, he noted, that the Farm Bureau action "came as a surprise."

CofC Wistfully Urges Congress to Turn Back

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, looking hopefully backward, has offered a 10-point program of what it thinks Congress should and shouldn't do in the area of labor legislation. The announcement, from CofC Pres. Ladd Plumley, said the business group's program is to:

- Put unions under anti-trust laws, prohibit industry-wide bargaining and prohibit "restrictive" union work rules.
- Oppose any move towards a shorter workweek and concentrate on improving productivity.
- Keep unemployment compensation programs under "state control."
- "Reform" the National Labor Relations Board by taking away its jurisdiction over unfair labor practices by employers.
- Preserve "the right of states" to prohibit union shop agreements through so-called "right-to-work" laws.
- Oppose any modification of the emergency strike provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act.
- Reject any extension of coverage under the Fair Labor Standards Act to include hotels, restaurants and laundries.
- Defeat equal-pay-for-women legislation as "not a proper subject for federal legislation."
- Repeal the Walsh-Healey and Davis-Bacon prevailing wage laws if possible, and if they can't be eliminated altogether amend them to require judicial review of all wage determinations.
- Curtail the U.S. Employment Service and block "a further attempt to involve the federal government in employment activities."

Second Look in Kansas:

GOP Governor Raps Maine 'Work' Drive

Augusta, Me.—A petition drive for a so-called "right-to-work" law in Maine has been sharply denounced by the state's Republican governor and the commissioner of labor and industry.

Gov. John H. Reed charged that the agitation for a law banning union shop agreements has come "from outside the state" and he warned that such a law would bring about "unrest and disorder" in labor-management relations.

He spelled out his continued opposition to "right-to-work" in a strongly-worded letter to Fred I. Merrill, president of a group called Maine Citizens for Right-to-Work, Inc., which has launched a petition campaign.

'Work' Beaten in Past

If the "work" forces obtain the signatures of 29,300 voters—10 percent of the electorate—the bill they propose will be submitted to the voters in the next general election, unless the legislature passes it unchanged. So-called "right-to-work" bills have been soundly defeated on several occasions in recent sessions.

Reed wrote that Maine has been "very fortunate" in having a pattern of "excellent labor-management relations" and he said the drive for a "right-to-work" law does not come "from the working people of Maine."

Commissioner of Labor & Industry Marion E. Martin also emphasized the state administration's opposition to a "work" law in a recent speech to the Presque Isle Chamber of Commerce.

She told the business group that time lost because of work stoppages in Maine has been much less than the national average and commented:

"This is a commendable and enviable record. We should do nothing that would upset such labor relations.

"Such a record is a more effective inducement to new industry to locate here than any 'right-to-work' bill ever could be."

Second Look in Kansas

In another development in the "right-to-work" area, two Kansas newspapers took second looks at the state's ban on union shop agreements and concluded that it wasn't all it had been cracked up to be.

The Hutchinson News noted editorially that "one of the promises" which led Kansans to approve a "right-to-work" restriction was that "it would lure new industry to the state." The newspaper commented:

"It hasn't worked out that way . . . everyone is crying that Kansas is missing the boat as far as the nation's industrial expansion is concerned."

The "work" law, the paper said, instead of helping "may play its part in a further bypassing of Kansas."

In a similar vein, the Wichita Eagle quoted a spokesman for the Kansas Chamber of Commerce as speculating that Kansas might even lose some defense contracts because it is a "right-to-work" state.

The newspaper noted that the ban on union shop agreements "has not proved to be the open sesame for industrial growth" and commented:

"What an irony if now it should work quite the opposite way."

Streamlining Speeds Up 1962 NLRB Operations

A rise in cases handled and a sharp speedup in operations has followed the streamlined procedures adopted in 1961 by the National Labor Relations Board, a report of the general counsel's office for 1962 reveals.

A record total of $2.5 million in back pay was awarded employes illegally discriminated against in relation to union activities—a jump of 57 percent over the $1.6 million total in 1961. A record also was set in offers of reinstatement to 3,351 employes illegally discharged because of union activities—an increase of 49 percent over 2,248 offered reinstatement in 1961.

The board handled an all-time high number of 25,386 cases during the year, Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman announced, and maintained operations on a current basis, without backlog.

The streamlining procedures approved in 1961 followed Pres. Kennedy's appointment of Frank W. McCulloch as chairman and Gerald A. Brown as a board member, when the board delegated its powers in deciding petitions for union representation elections to its 28 regional offices.

The result was to cut the average time for processing an election petition in 1962 to 44 days, about half that previously required. The NLRB in Washington, freed of the election petition burden, has been able to reduce sharply the time required for handling other cases.

Despite a steady increase in unfair labor practice charges—nearly 1,000 more than in 1961 and 4,000 more than in 1958—complaints were issued in 1962 in an average of 48 days after charges were filed, and the average trial examiner's hearing was completed within 98 days. As recently as 1958, Rothman said, 143 days were required for issuance of a complaint and 192 days for completion of an examiner's hearing.

The average age of unfair labor practice cases pending was cut to 21 days in 1961, the report said, indicating that "the majority are now processed before 30 days elapse."

Court litigation increased in 1961, Rothman noted, "traceable in good part" to the need of establishing "the precise meaning of several major changes" in the Taft-Hartley Act made by the Landrum-Griffin 1959 amendments.

Hoffmann Rejects Soviet Invitation

Philadelphia—Upholsterers Pres. Sal B. Hoffmann has rejected an invitation for an official visit to the Soviet Union because that country denies "the trade union and political freedoms which we enjoy."

In a letter replying to Ilya Novikov, president of the central committee of the Timber, Paper & Woodworkers Union in the USSR, Hoffmann declared that neither UIU officers nor AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and his colleagues, "with whom we agree on the subject," are in any sense "afraid" of contacts or exchanges.

Their refusal to take part in official visits, he said, stems from their conviction that such visits "would constitute a betrayal of our union principles and our brother unionists" and "would seem to give approval" to those who have imprisoned and suppressed trade unionists for exercising their freedoms.

In Newspaper Strike:

Anti-Trust Probe Asked by Printers

New York—Union printers on strike against publishers of four newspapers here have called on Atty.-Gen. Robert F. Kennedy to determine if the Sherman Anti-Trust Act was violated when five other publishers closed their papers and blacked out all metropolitan daily publication.

Pres. Bertram A. Powers of Typographical Local 6 charged that the publishers acted in concert to "coerce a settlement" of the dispute between the ITU and the four papers which ceased operations Dec. 8.

The agreement to shut up shop, Powers told Kennedy, "eliminates competition among the newspapers involved and therefore raises the question of whether the antitrust laws of the U.S. are being violated," specifically Sec. 1 of the Sherman Act.

Powers added that "to our knowledge there is no decision of the courts which holds that an agreement not to compete during the pendency of a strike is exempt from the antitrust laws."

The negotiations between Local 6 and the publishers, stalemated for a time, were resumed Jan. 9 at the request of the U.S. Mediation & Conciliation Service, then halted again.

At a press conference in Washington that day Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said he was encouraged by the developments in the "last 24 hours" and that the situation was becoming more "fluid."

In reply to a question, he said he did not believe that the national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act applied to the New York newspaper dispute.

T-H defines a national emergency as a dispute affecting the health and safety of the nation. Wirtz said that neither previous legislative history, previous applications of the provision or the language of the act indicated that the emergency section is applicable.

Local 6 said the strike was its first in 65 years against the local publishers' association. While other newspaper unions respected the ITU picket lines, these developments took place:

- A three-man fact-finding board prepared a report for Wirtz on the strike and possibilities of settlement. The board, appointed by Wirtz, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller and Mayor Robert Wagner, was headed by U.S. Appeals Court Judge Harold R. Medina.
- Powers declined an invitation to meet with the board until after a meeting of the local and its 13,000 members called for Jan. 13. A secret ballot vote on the question of meeting with an "outside" body has been scheduled, he said.
- A mass demonstration of support for the strikers has been set for Jan. 15 around the New York Times building. All unions affiliated with the Central Labor Council have been asked to send representatives.
- The New York Pressmen's Union sued three papers for $512,000 in lost wage and lockout benefits. Filed in U.S. District Court here, the suit asked $245,000 damages from the Mirror, $152,000 from the Herald Tribune, $115,000 from the Post. All three closed down without being struck.

At the four struck papers the ITU is asking for substantial wage increases, a 35-hour week, paid sick leave up to five days, a fourth week of vacation and other benefits, subject to collective bargaining.

In Cleveland, Mayor Ralph Locher called negotiators for two striking unions to meet in his office with representatives of the Plain Dealer and Press, struck Nov. 29 by a local of the expelled Teamsters and Nov. 30 by the Newspaper Guild. The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 for corrupt domination.

Lausche Crosses Guild Picket Line

Cleveland—Union men picketing the daily Press & News here were not surprised when Sen. Frank J. Lausche (D-O.) walked through their lines recently.

"Lausche has long been against organized labor," said a spokesman for the striking Newspaper Guild Local 1. "Even when he was governor of Ohio, he walked through a union picket line at the Neil House."

The pickets reported that after talking with Press Editor Louis B. Seltzer, the senator said Seltzer was right in opposing a union shop. Lausche, a former judge here, thus made a judgment without hearing labor's point of view—"a most unjudicial act," a Guild spokesman declared.

A $10,000 GIFT to finance a year-long training school for garment workers in Nairobi, Kenya, has been set up by the Philadelphia Dress Joint Board of the Ladies' Garment Workers. Shown at a ceremony at which a check for the fund was turned over to the school are, from left, Harry Goldberg and Maida Springer of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs; Joint Board Manager William Ross, and Valentine Omolo, a Kenyan student at St. Joseph's College, Philadelphia. The AFL-CIO has given Mrs. Springer's services for two to three months to help start the school.

IAM Chalks Up a First In Naval Ordnance Pact

Louisville, Ky.—The first agreement in the nation covering civilian employes of a U.S. Naval Ordnance plant has been won by the Machinists, that union has announced.

IAM Rep. Charles F. West, national coordinator of a campaign to organize 180,000 federal workers in industrial establishments, said members of Lodge 830 have voted unanimous approval of an 18-point pact covering 1,700 workers at the Naval Ordnance plant here.

The negotiations ran into a blockade when the Navy Bureau of Weapons refused to approve five key bread-and-butter issues. An IAM team headed by Pres. William Ryan of District 44, representing government employes, carried the union's protest to the Dept. of Defense and won reversals on these protective measures:

- Guarantee of a standard Monday through Friday workweek, with overtime for Saturday and Sunday work instead of the previous straight time for overtime.
- Equal representation with the Navy on area wage boards and wage data collection boards.
- A new promotion and job protection plan with job bidding rights provided at layoff time.
- The right to take birthdays and religious holy days as part of annual leave.
- Access to the plant by the lodge president, vice president, chief steward and IAM representatives for grievance handling.

Another major gain, the union said, was an agreement for a strong grievance procedure. It provides union representation for members at each step, full appeal procedures, and arbitration of unsettled grievances.

Negotiators for the union were headed by Lodge 830 Pres. Tom Baldwin, Business Rep. Leo Sammon of IAM Dist. 44 and IAM Rep. Martin P. Leahy.

Other negotiations are under way at the naval ordnance plant in York, Pa., and an auxiliary naval air station near Jacksonville, Fla., Ryan said.

Strikers in 1962 At Postwar Low

Strikes during 1962 affected the smallest number of workers since the end of World War II, and total strike idleness—16 one-hundredths of 1 percent of working time—was at the third lowest annual level since 1944.

In making this report, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics said the number of stoppages and man-days of strike time, though higher in 1962 than in 1961, were below the levels of most postwar years.

Approximately 3,550 stoppages involving 1.25 million workers began in 1962, the BLS reported. Total time lost because of them was 19 million man-days in 1962 against 16.3 million the preceding year and 19.1 million in 1960.

The report listed 16 major stoppages, each involving 10,000 or more workers.

5-Day Strike Wins Pay Gains For Hatters

New York—Employer resistance to Hatters' Union contract proposals collapsed here after a five-day strike of almost 10,000 millinery workers. The walkout ended in a three-year agreement with wage increases retroactive to Jan. 1.

The settlement, after the first strike in the industry since 1919, was announced at the annual fashion show sponsored jointly by employers and the union for 1,300 buyers here to see the new line of spring hats for women.

The union's chief objective in the walkout was to win a sizeable boost in the wage of those at the bottom of the pay scale—those whose weekly rate was $55. Under the settlement, these workers will get no less than $62.50 in the third year of the contract after three raises of $2.50 a week per year.

These major improvements have been agreed to by the Hatters and members of the Eastern Women's Headware Association, representing major hatmakers:

- A raise for piece workers of 2.5 percent on Jan. 1, 1963, and Jan. 1, 1964, plus 5 percent on Jan. 1, 1965.
- Raises of $2.50 each year for three years for salaried employes.
- An increase of 1 percent in employer payments into the employe retirement fund.
- A management guarantee of $100,000 a year for promotion of union label hatwear.

The union said its proposal, tailored to the needs of the workers and the ability of the industry to pay, was rejected by an element of "Young Turks" in the employers' association—sons, grandsons and in-laws of industry "old timers" who had dealt peacefully with the union for years.

Beirne Thanks Meany For Aid Against Raid

Communications Workers Pres. Joseph A. Beirne has expressed warm appreciation of the "wholehearted support" given by the AFL-CIO and its affiliates to the CWA in beating off an attempted raid by the ousted Teamsters on the 17,000-member unit of Western Electric Co. telephone installers.

In a secret-ballot vote conducted by the National Labor Relations Board, the CWA smashed the Teamsters' bid when the installers voted 11,398 to remain with the AFL-CIO union and only 4,000 to jump to the Teamsters headed by Pres. James R. Hoffa.

The Teamsters were expelled by the federation in 1957 shortly after Hoffa's election as president, the convention ousting the union on findings of domination by corrupt elements. Hoffa mounted a major drive in his attempted raid on the CWA's big installers' unit but lost by approximately a 3-1 margin.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz commented at a press conference that the significance of the result was in the "destroying of any myth that might be developing about the organizing power of the Teamsters."

He termed the balloting a "very real compliment to the representational function that the CWA has exercised" in terms of the serious consideration by the installers of the questions raised by Teamsters' representatives.

Beirne's expression of thanks came in a letter to Pres. George Meany and voiced appreciation "for the wholehearted support which came from you personally and from the entire AFL-CIO."

The CWA was "always confident" that it would beat back the raiding effort of the Teamsters' leadership, Beirne declared, but "it was most encouraging to know that we had the full moral support of the AFL-CIO, its affiliates and its state and central bodies."

The Communications Workers "are now moving" to secure "needed improvements" in the installers' unit contract with Western Electric, Beirne told Meany. He has notified the company that the union wants swift negotiations under a wage reopener clause for the third year of its current three-year contract.

SAG Approves Bargaining Policy

Hollywood, Calif.—A collective bargaining policy under which the Screen Actors Guild "will not seek increases in existing wage rates or changes in working conditions which would substantially increase the cost of hiring actors in films made in the United States" has been approved by a 96 percent margin in a referendum.

The actual tally was 5,279 for the policy, which was recommended by the union's directors in a move to create jobs, to 188 against it. The current contract covering acting work in film features expires Jan. 31. The television film contract expires in June 1964.

"It is the intention of the board," members were advised when the policy recommendation was submitted to them, "to insist on the right to reopen the new contract when direct production for pay television becomes imminent, and thus to alter the present contractual provision that pay television is merely an extension of the theatrical box-office."

Shoe Workers Strike Wins Contract Gains

The Shoe Workers have signed new two-year contracts covering 10,000 workers in 45 shoe factories in Massachusetts following a short strike in the Haverhill area.

Shoe Workers' Pres. George Fecteau said the 45 firms approved the contract after workers voted to strike. In Haverhill, 15 firms signed the agreements following a two-day walkout.

A 10 cent package increase in the contract includes a 3-cent-an-hour wage raise this year and another in 1964. Fringe benefits include $1,000 company-paid insurance and another paid holiday.

Minimum rates on day work, piece work or makeup were increased from $1.26 to $1.29 as of Jan. 1, 1963, from $1.29 to $1.32 on Sept. 1, 1963, and from $1.32 to $1.35 on Jan. 1, 1964. Packers, repairers and boot trimmers earning $1.48 per hour received raises as of Jan. 1, 1963, with more hikes due Sept. 1, 1963, and Jan. 1, 1964.

Hospitalization benefits were increased from $12 to $18 a day, and sickness and accident benefits from $15 to $20 per week. In 1964, life insurance benefits will be increased from $500 to $1,000.

The contracts grant the union the right to strike any company which may become delinquent in pension fund payments.

They also provide that displaced machinery operators will be given first opportunity to work on new or improved machinery.

The Shoe Workers' president said that negotiations were at a standstill until workers voted to strike, and "then we started making progress."

A Promise in Congress

THE PERMANENT ENLARGEMENT of the House Rules Committee to 15 members and the election of Rep. Gerald Ford as chairman of the House Republican Conference constitute an initial defeat for the GOP-southern Democratic coalition at the outset of the 88th Congress.

At best the setback to the coalition is a limited one. But it can be further exploited as the session gets under way and the controversial issues that brought it into existence in the first place reach the stage of consideration.

Strong and continuing Administration leadership can help increase southern Democratic support in the House. And the leaders of the moderate wing of the Republican Party can continue to exert the pressures that contributed to the upset in the House GOP caucus.

The rules vote and the GOP contest were undoubted defeats for Rep. Howard Smith (D-Va.), the Dixiecrat half of the coalition leadership, and Rep. Charles Halleck (R-Ind.), his GOP counterpart. They had fought vigorously to defeat the move to enlarge the Rules Committee permanently and Halleck was opposed to Ford's bid for the party post.

But Halleck and Smith are veteran and experienced party leaders and legislators who have bounced back before from seeming coalition defeats. They will intensify efforts to re-form ranks for battles on tax reduction and reform, medicare, aid to education and other issues.

But granting the recuperative powers of the coalition the initial setbacks hold the promise that the 88th Congress can put together a more liberal record than its predecessor and give final approval to the important measures left high and dry by the conservative coalition in the 87th Congress.

End of a Myth

THE DECISIVE three to one defeat handed the raiding Teamsters by Communication Workers installers proves conclusively that American union members, given a free choice, will not support a union dominated by corrupt elements.

The CWA elections should destroy for all time the mythology that has grown up around James R. Hoffa—the mythology of invincibility and growing strength. The mass communications media—newspapers, radio, television and magazines—have aided and abetted the growth of this myth in the face of hard figures that Teamsters' raids on AFL-CIO unions have by and large been unsuccessful and that under Hoffa's leadership the union has slipped in membership strength.

The smashing CWA victory was accomplished despite a lavishly financed, all-out propaganda attack. The Hoffa leadership pulled out all the stops and ended up with only 4,000 of the 16,204 votes tallied.

The defeat came amid reports of increasing opposition to the Hoffa-style leadership. One large Teamsters local has elected an anti-Hoffa president; another local came within a handful of votes of unseating a close Hoffa henchman.

The members of the Teamsters deserve clean, honest, democratic leadership rather than the corrupt rule of the Hoffa organization. Given a completely free choice, CWA members in the installers unit overwhelmingly rejected the Hoffa taint. There is new hope that Teamsters' members will move in the same direction.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, January 12, 1963 No. 2

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Presidential Aerospace Board Says:

'Free Loaders' Reap Benefits, Union Members 'Foot the Bill'

The following is excerpted from a report of the President's Boeing Aerospace Board, a three-man mediation board appointed by Pres. Kennedy in the dispute involving the Boeing Co. and the Machinists. It is composed of Patrick J. Fisher, Lewis M. Gill and Saul Wallen.

IT IS SCARCELY necessary to review the arguments in support of the inclusion of a union shop clause in a contract between these parties.

We shall note only that we are especially impressed with the "free loader" argument. The union by law is the bargaining agent for all the employes in the unit. The benefits it negotiates must be granted to all employes, members and nonmembers alike. Neither it nor the company can discriminate by limiting the benefits to union members alone. Hence nonmembers automatically benefit from the union's negotiating efforts. But only the union members foot the bill.

This condition inevitably rankles the nearly three-fourths of the Boeing employes who carry the full cost. The resentments engendered must be a divisive influence in the work force, a morale depressant with concommitant effects on efficiency.

It is axiomatic that taxation without representation is tyranny. The reverse is equally true. The enjoyment of the fruits of representation without payment of one's proportionate share of the cost is similarly repugnant.

The inequity inherent in an arrangement under which a minority enjoys the benefits of collective bargaining, while paying none of the cost, is especially acute in the case of future employes. We do not agree that a requirement that all present employes join a union as a condition of continued employment violates any basic or inherent rights. However, we can understand that an employer might be reluctant to impose such a requirement on employes previously hired with the understanding, expressed or implied, that union membership would be a matter solely of their choice. But we discern no logic in the assertion that a requirement of union membership after 30 days deprives a person not yet hired of anything.

We turn next to the contention that the union shop or some other form of union security stronger than the present maintenance of membership provision "strengthens the enemy" and thus represents a "beefing up" of an antimanagement force.

This argument is based on the assumption that management and labor in this age have antagonistic aims and goals and are in fact enemies seeking their opponent's destruction.

We think this assumption is counter to the mainstream of thought of American management and labor. With a few regrettable exceptions, the prevailing view—and our own—is that management and labor share a common goal of promoting an efficient and profitable enterprise, which affords good returns to the stockholders and at the same time provides good and secure jobs for the members of the union.

The Boeing Co.'s rather cynical argument that the union is an "enemy," bent on mortal combat with the company, is in our view not only factually unsound but also goes a long way toward explaining why this dispute has been so difficult to settle. We are convinced that if the Boeing management would reconsider its basic approach to the relationship, it would find the union more than willing to meet it halfway.

It is for the foregoing reasons that we see positive benefits in the union shop for these parties. If we had been given the powers of arbitrators, we would not hesitate to make an award granting the union shop under the circumstances.

WE THINK the national interest in settling this dispute urgently calls for the company to reconsider its position of rigidity on the union security issue. The union has views on the union shop which are just as strong as those of the company, but the union has shown a sense of responsibility by stating its willingness to accept some modified form of union security if necessary to avoid a strike. We think the nation has a right to expect the company to show a comparable sense of responsibility, rather than rebuffing all proposals, no matter how moderate and reasonable.

That, as we see it, is the single most important key to the settlement of this issue and indeed of the whole dispute. The precise formula which is adopted is perhaps of secondary importance; what is important is for the company to step forward with some contribution to a settlement and abandon its stubborn insistence that its views on union security must take total precedence over the views, not only of the union, but also of this board and for that matter of the great majority of large American industrial corporations.

Boeing management has no monopoly on either patriotism or wisdom, and some tangible recognition of that fact would be very much in order at this point.

Morgan Says:

Solution of U.S. and UN in Congo Fits Facts Better than Any Other

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

IT WOULD BE A much more wonderful world if men propelled events from a base of logic and common sense instead of emotion and prejudice. But the wild, dangerous, human mess that the Congo is, for instance, cannot be tidied up simply by wishing everybody to be reasonable.

Even if the United Nations operation against the slippery, Machiavellian Moise Tshombe turns out to be successful, it will be a long time before the tribal passions, the powerful pressures of self-seeking economic interests and even governments are contained enough to allow the Congo any kind of promising future.

Morgan

In such a situation of utter turmoil where millions of dollars are at stake to mining and other companies, where colonial policies are colliding with the reality of changing times, where ideologies of East and West could collide explosively and where the historic animosites between white men and black men are surfaced in the worst possible atmosphere, it is no wonder that the true facts are elusive, it is no wonder that bad judgments are made or that excesses are committed on almost every side.

But on the basis of available evidence—though history could reverse this assessment—it does seem now that the UN objective, which has the full support of the U.S. government, is the least undesirable, the least difficult for thoughtful persons to accept.

Washington's official policy remains, in general, what it was when Under Sec. of State George Ball enunciated it publicly in a speech in Los Angeles nearly 13 months ago, on Dec. 19, 1961. What Ball said then, in essence, was that the peaceful development of central Africa depended on a stable Congo, and a stable Congo depended on the integration of Tshombe's rich, secessionist province of Katanga into a federated central government at Leopoldville.

Why, one asks, shouldn't Katanga be independent? After all Americans are committed to a policy of self-determination. Why, Ball has already replied, shouldn't every tribe in Central Africa that wishes to declare its independence have a right to do so? Anarchy and chaos would be the result. If the Congo were split into separate states with popoulations equivalent to Katanga's, the area, Ball argued, would be fragmentized into more than 20 governments. Indeed, he said:

"Katanga itself would be split in two if the concept of tribal separatism were given full play. There simply is no legal case, no political case, no economic case, and no moral case for Balkanizing the heart of Africa."

FOR THOSE PERSUADED that Tshombe is a great bulwark against Communism, there is the record of months of collaboration between the Katanga delegation to the parliament in Leopoldville and pro-Communist deputies in efforts to topple the government of the moderate but admittedly weak and vacillating premier, Cyrille Adoula.

Some people forget that the United Nations originally intervened in the Congo with the aggressive support of the Eisenhower Administration, which concluded that the UN forces provided an authentic device to avoid a direct power confrontation in the heart of Africa between East and West. If the UN fails, if Adoula falls, the Communists undoubtedly will do their utmost to fill the vacuum.

They may do so ultimately anyway, though their heavy-handed and clumsy-footed record in Africa so far does not make their prospects so bright as once was feared. Indeed there is some indication that administration-inspired stories emerging from Washington in recent weeks to the effect that the Soviets were "hovering in the wings" ready to pounce, were exaggerated. But there are plenty of good and valid reasons to unify or federate the Congo beyond any Communist threat.

Undoubtedly Tshombe is not the only villain in this piece. Undoubtedly there have been provocations from the UN side as well as from his. There is no built-in guarantee either that the Congo will flourish if Tshombe is finally brought to terms and fulfills them.

But if there is a better, more promising and equitable solution than the one the UN and the U.S. have been pursuing, the critics of the operation, including those two self-appointed experts on foreign policy, Senators Dodd and Goldwater, have not come up with any that fits the available facts.

Vandercook Death Mourned by Morgan

There died in Delhi, N. Y., a friend and colleague of mine (of) . . . warm, human outlook. His name was John W. Vandercook, actor, traveler, editor, lecturer, novelist, historian and commentator. For more than five years we proudly shared the sponsorship of organized labor on our respective programs of news and comment as ABC correspondents. Then in 1960 he was felled by a stroke which attacked, of all things, his vocal chords. His voice has now been finally stilled and yet in a way it has not, because the trenchant expressions of a liberal mind are still heard and will be remembered.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE REPUBLICAN MONOLITH cracked in the House with such decisiveness that Charlie Halleck of Indiana, the dour-faced Republican leader who has fought the New Deal, Fair Deal and New Frontier with unflagging faithfulness, looked more glum than ever. An uprising of Young Turks had upset the leadership "team" Halleck himself set up just four years ago in consigning old Rep. Joseph Martin of Massachusetts to the ash heap of history and the back benches on the House chamber and taking over control of the GOP.

Eastern Republicans and a gaggle of rising influentials from the upper Midwest and scattered points all across the country whipped up a secret-ballot majority in the House GOP caucus. They hurled out the Republican Conference chairman, Rep. Charles Hoeven of Iowa, and elevated 49-year-old Rep. Gerald R. Ford, Jr., of Michigan, to replace him.

They forced through a provision expanding the GOP Policy Committee so as to give more seats to members who have piled up several terms of seniority—but no recognition from their elders.

* * *

TO GIVE THE LABEL "Young Turks" to Ford and his colleagues in this sudden maneuver is to strain the meaning of words somewhat. On domestic affairs Ford himself votes as a conservative. His Michigan colleague, Rep. Robert P. Griffin, was cosponsor of the 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act. Rep. William Ayres of Ohio was cosponsor of the Ayres-Kitchin minimum wage bill—a restrictive measure—that passed the House as a substitute for the 1961 Administration bill actually approved in substance in the end.

There are, however, some distinctive differences between Ford and Halleck, and the differences are in approach as well as in degree.

A Democratic colleague, appraising the reasons for the "Turk" revolt, said the younger GOP stalwarts are weary of Halleck's lack of creativity as opposition leader to the Kennedy Administration. The Halleck posture is one of fierce opposition to a school-aid bill, for example: the "Turks" would prefer to concede the need of federal aid and shape its financing and scope to a Republican cast. They point the way in which Rep. Charles E. Goodell of New York devised significant changes in what became the Manpower Development Act of 1962.

The "Turks" think Halleck's lack of imagination concedes practically permanent majority status to the House Democrats so that even the ablest of the young Republicans can scarcely imagine becoming a committee chairman. They were not restive enough to throw out Halleck himself this year—but another GOP failure in the House elections in 1964 might well make them pull the stopper.

Ford himself commands wide respect for capability, hard work and a sense of responsbility in foreign affairs and defense issues. Generally Democrat rivals of Ford's own generation rate him this way: "We'd have a lot harder time handling Ford as Republican leader than we have with Halleck, but he would be good for his party and good for the country."

* * *

REP. HALE BOGGS of Louisiana, the Democratic House whip who handled some of the debate on the Rules Committee fight, twitted those who had warned two years ago that southerners supporting the Kennedy Administration would suffer the vengeance of the voters.

"I look over here," he remarked, and see a new freshman Democrat who "defeated a very dear friend of mine, the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. Harold McSween," who voted against the late Speaker Rayburn's "packing" of the Rules Committee.

"I look the other way" and see another new member from Georgia, who defeated Rep. James C. Davis of Atlanta, continued Boggs piously. "I was devoted to Judge Davis," he mourned, but he pointed out that Davis himself had predicted "dire things" for supporters of the President and Rayburn. "Well, there sits this young man" who now represents Atlanta, and "I am sorry Judge Davis is not here," quoth Boggs.

He also pointed out to the Republicans that not a single one of the 22 GOP representatives who voted two years ago with Rayburn was defeated for reelection.

Washington Reports:

Senate Foes of Filibusters See Better Chance of Revising Rules

SENATE OPPONENTS of the filibuster see a greater chance of success now in their fight to change the rules than was the case two years ago, according to Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), one of the bipartisan group pressing for a vote to end extended debates.

"Two years ago, with the incoming Kennedy Administration having lined up a great many important legislative measures, there did begin to develop pressure to set aside the rules issue and get to the legislative proposals," the Michigan senator recalled in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Since then, he said, "many of the major Kennedy legislative proposals have been put on the books so that there is not the same backlog."

Sen. Hugh Scott (R-Pa.), interviewed on the same program, said that the voting of cloture last year in debate over the satellite communications bill enables supporters of the present rule to argue that it works.

The Senate rule as it now stands requires a vote of two-thirds of the senators present and voting to apply cloture.

A NEW PROPOSAL by Senators Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.), the majority whip, and Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.), minority whip, would permit debate to be shut off by a vote of 51 senators.

As Hart explained the proposal, no attempt to vote cloture would be permitted until after 14 days of debate, and even then, each senator would be given an hour for further argument.

Both senators were optimistic that a majority would vote to change the rules. Scott said the hope was to get 54 to 57 senators behind the proposal. He expected the filibuster against the change to continue for two weeks before "senators who wish the change will call up their big guns."

SUCCESS IN 1963 ATTEMPT to end filibusters is expected by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), left, and Sen. Hugh Scott (R-Pa.). Both were interviewed on the opening program in the Washington Reports to the People series, AFL-CIO public service program now in its sixth year.

Winner of Scholarship Thanks AFL-CIO for Aid

American labor will increase the number of college scholarships it gives "as union resources permit," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in acknowledging Christmas greetings from John Ferrell, Walnut Ridge, Ark., a Harvard University freshman on an AFL-CIO scholarship.

"For the labor movement is united," Meany added, "in the determination that this country will indeed become a land of equal opportunity."

Ferrell, majoring in mathematics in anticipation of a teaching career, sent his wishes for a Merry Christmas to Meany and added his thanks for "all you have done for me through the AFL-CIO National Merit Scholarship awarded me last March."

"If it were not for this scholarship, I could not afford to go to Harvard," he wrote. "Harvard is a wonderful place, and is making available many opportunities which I would otherwise be denied. My only regret this Christmas is that there are so many students here in the United States that cannot afford to go to college. I sincerely hope that the AFL-CIO will continue helping young people go to college, so that our country will truly be a land of equal opportunity."

In his reply Meany called it "extremely thoughtful" of Ferrell to write, saying that reception of the youth's letter "was among the high points of my holiday season."

"I am glad to learn that Harvard is living up to your expectations," he went on. "But you do not owe me or the AFL-CIO any personal thanks; the AFL-CIO made the scholarships available, but you won yours on a merit basis in a wide-open competition.

"You deserve credit for thinking of the less fortunate young people who are barred from college by lack of funds. We in the AFL-CIO certainly will continue to do what we can to help."

Ferrell is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Wyatt Ferrell of Walnut Ridge. His mother is a member of Ladies' Garment Workers Local 579.

Higher Social Security Income Ceiling Urged

The present social security tax base should be raised to increase benefits without increasing the rate, Nelson Cruikshank, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security, declared on Labor News Conference.

Questioned on the weekly public affairs program presented by the federation on the Mutual Broadcasting System network, Cruikshank said that the present $4,800 earnings ceiling does not cover as high a percentage of wages as the $3,000 limit did in 1939.

"Then the total earnings of about 93 percent of all full-time workers were covered," the social security expert noted. "Today the total earnings of only about 60 percent are covered. If we raised the base to cover the same proportion of earnings that we covered back in 1939, we could go up to say a $9,000 wage base and substantially improve the benefits without increasing the rate."

The new rate of contribution is 3.625 percent of all covered earnings up to a maximum of $4,800, with the employer matching this contribution.

Not a Pay Cut

The one-half of 1 percent increase in social security contributions, Cruikshank asserted, "isn't any more of a pay cut than if the man and wife in the family decided to put a few cents more each payday into savings or into their own privately purchased insurance."

Cruikshank also observed that social security has benefitted insurance companies, because "the more security minded people get, it seems, the more insurance they want."

Pointing out that medical care for the aged is another form of social security, he said that if the older person is relieved of the anxiety and the burden of high hospital costs, he will have a more secure old age.

He predicted passage of the medicare program if it is brought to a vote in the new Congress.

Stressing the need for improved benefits, Cruikshank said that any system financed on a payroll tax should keep benefits pretty closely related to the payrolls.

"We are willing to weigh the benefit formula in favor of the very low income worker but we think the benefits should represent a percentage of the worker's former wage," he said, noting that the present ceiling of $4,800 is not as high as the average wage in manufacturing.

"We think that he should be able to raise the amount on which he pays the tax . . . and then get a higher benefit."

9 Presidents Attend Council Installation

New York—Nine international union presidents, four of them members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, attended the New York City Central Labor Council's installation of Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., Sec. Morris Iushewitz and other officers for new terms.

The oath of office was administered by Stanton Smith, AFL-CIO coordinator of state and city central bodies, at a meeting of CLC delegates.

Taking part in the ceremonies were Presidents Paul Hall of the Seafarers, Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers, A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters and Richard F. Walsh of the Theatrical Stage Employes—all AFL-CIO vice presidents—and Presidents Herman Kenin of the Musicians, Conrad Nagel of the Actors & Artistes, Morris Pizer of the Furniture Workers, Harry Spodick of the Jewelry Workers, David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes.

RLEA Makes Public Plea:

Congress Asked to Investigate Railroads' Financial Structure

Rail unions have opened a counter-offensive against management job-eliminating moves on two fronts—mergers and work rules.

In a public plea to Congress to investigate the financial structure of railroads "before further railroad mergers and liquidations are permitted," the Railway Labor Executives' Association charged that management pleas of "poverty" aren't supported by the facts.

The RLEA declared in an advertisement in leading newspapers throughout the nation:

"The railroads promote their 'poverty' myth in an attempt to produce a legislative and collective bargaining climate in which they can escape regulation, pave the way for monopolistic mergers, slash jobs and wreck work rules agreements."

In a follow-up letter to each member of Congress, RLEA Chairman G. E. Leighty said railroad dividend reports to the Interstate Commerce Commission "belie their poverty claims." Dividends have increased in each five-year period since 1940, he said, and totaled $2.27 billion between 1956 and 1960.

A "thorough" congressional investigation, Leighty said, "is the only way the ills, real and imaginery, of the railroads can be intelligently diagnosed and the proper cure prescribed."

High Court Review Sought

On another front, five rail operating unions formally asked the Supreme Court to review the action of lower courts in refusing to enjoin railroad management from unilaterally scrapping existing work rules and abolishing tens of thousands of jobs.

Attorneys for the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, Railroad Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors & Brakemen presented a joint brief arguing that management's unilateral action violates the Railway Labor Act.

Challenging the lower court assertion that management has the right to go ahead with its work rules changes because it bargained "in good faith" with the unions and the unions rejected the recommendations of a special study commission, the unions said the case presents "what is probably the most important issue that has yet arisen as to the interpretation of the Railway Labor Act."

If management can proceed without agreement by the unions, the effect is that "of repealing those provisions of the Railway Labor Act imposing the duty to make and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, rules and working conditions," the unions said.

The brief charged that any agreement dealing with pay, rules and working conditions "becomes meaningless" if the employer retains "the uncontrolled discretion to determine the nature, extent, type, place and manner of work."

"A bargain defining wages and hours but not job assignment," the unions declared, "is like a bargain to buy 100 acres of real estate for $1,000 with the buyer having the right to take whatever kind of land he wished—wooded, mineral, fertile, industrial . . . orchard or desert."

Until the Supreme Court acts on the petition for review, the railroads are barred from putting into effect their rules changes.

High Court Reversal Urged on Dues Curbs

(Continued from Page 1)

the railroad union shop amendment.

The court held that the intent of Congress was to allow rail employes to be compelled to "share the cost of negotiating and administering collective agreements," but did not contemplate "forced payment" of dues used "for political causes over the objections of employes opposed to those causes."

"Rarely has the court so flagrantly twisted legislative history," the AFL-CIO brief argued.

The court's review, the federation pointed out, discussed the Railway Labor Act of 1934 and then "skipped" to the 1951 union-shop amendment, completely ignoring the fact that in 1935 Congress passed the Wagner Act authorizing a closed shop and that in 1947 it passed the Taft-Hartley amendments outlawing the closed shop but specifically authorizing the union shop for all interstate commerce except the rails and airlines.

The intent of Congress in amending the Railway Labor Act four years later was simply to give employers and employes in rails and airlines the same freedom to negotiate union shop agreements that all employers and workers covered by Taft-Hartley already possessed, the brief stated.

It cited both House and Senate committee reports and debate to buttress this argument. Sen. Lister Hill (D-Ala.) and the late Sen. Robert A. Taft (R-O.) were quoted as specifying that the union shop amendment was intended to extend the "same rights" to rail unions that Taft-Hartley gave others, which Taft stated had "worked satisfactorily."

Ruling Called 'Shallow'

The ruling opinion of the court in the Street decision "has not evoked the admiration of legal scholars," the brief observed, citing a paper from Prof. Wellington that describes it as "a slick but shallow performance."

The AFL-CIO additionally argued that no constitutional issue is involved because the Taft-Hartley and Railway Labor Acts do not compel a union shop, but merely give permission for such a contract to be voluntarily adopted by management and labor.

Whatever government action is involved is "remote and tenuous," the brief declared, and Congress has never enacted any statute outlawing use of union dues for legislative and educational purposes.

The AFL-CIO urged the court in overruling the Street decision to adopt the dissenting opinion filed at the time by now retired Justice Felix Frankfurter, who said that if Congress had intended to restrict rail unions "from expending their funds in the traditional manner," it certainly would have said so.

Rights Group Weighs Gains In South

"Substantial progress" has been chalked up in labor's drives against race discrimination in the South, according to state-by-state reports to a meeting of the AFL-CIO Southern Advisory Committee on Civil Rights in Washington.

It was emphasized, however, that "much still remains" to be done in the continuing campaign to eliminate racial bias in certain types of employment and in apprenticeship training programs.

The committee consists of the chief executive officers of the AFL-CIO state central bodies in 13 southern states. Pres. Harold B. Boyd of the Virginia AFL-CIO is chairman.

Participating in the program in addition to the committee members were AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, who also is chairman of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee, and Boris Shishkin, Donald Slaiman and Walter Davis of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights. The southern regional directors of several national and international unions attended as consultants.

600 Credit Unions Chartered in 1962

More than 600 new credit unions received charters in 1962, according to a report by Dir. J. Deane Gannon of the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions.

At the end of the year 10,700 credit unions were operating under federal charters. They had 7 million members in the 50 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Panama Canal Zone, the Virgin Islands and Guam, where charters were awarded for the first time during the year, Gannon said.

High Jobless Areas Rise In December

The number of major job areas with unemployment in excess of 6 percent of the labor force edged upward in December to 41, the Labor Dept. reported.

Spokane, Wash., and Atlantic City, N. J., moved into higher unemployment classifications during the month, Spokane from moderate to substantial joblessness and Atlantic City from the 6 to 9 percent range to the 9 to 12 percent group.

In November the number of major job areas with substantial unemployment dropped to 40 from 43 in October. In December 1961 the figure was 60.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced also that 31 additional labor market areas have been designated as eligible for assistance under the new Public Works Acceleration Act while five other areas have been removed from the list.

The total in this category now stands at 198 areas, large and small, all designated on the basis of substantial unemployment. An additional 975 areas eligible for assistance under the Area Redevelopment Act are eligible also for public works aid.

Label Rules Revised For Meat Products

Consumer information on labels of federally inspected meat and meat food products must be left intact after leaving the plant to meet newly clarified label requirements of the Dept. of Agriculture.

Under the new ruling, it also is illegal to remove, mask or tamper with a label so that information is concealed or the product misrepresented.

Secretary of Labor Says:

Kennedy's Program Needed for Job Rise

(Continued from Page 1)

lem of automation, he added, it will approach "the heart of the unemployment problem."

Wirtz noted that unemployment was scattered through the nation in many pockets and that unemployment compensation "stills the outcry" somewhat. He commented also that there is a trend toward "more acute stalemates in labor disputes" as unemployment increases, the work force grows, management policies change and competition increases.

Queried on the intervention by the secretary of labor in a growing number of disputes, Wirtz said they have lessened the influence of the office, that "the repeated use of any extraordinary procedure dulls the instrument."

On the longshore dispute in New York, Wirtz said that the national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act require the President to report to Congress if the strike is resumed after the 80-day cooling-off period.

He noted that in the history of the act no previous report had been made, but that it was mandatory and the White House was now giving consideration to such a report. The President is not required to make recommendations in the report, but Wirtz indicated that if a report were made it might contain such recommendations, possibly in the legislative area.

The secretary declared that it was his personal belief that if recommendations for a settlement in the dock dispute had been made public by a special board in advance of the deadline "we would not have had this strike."

The Administration is reported considering changes in T-H to give the President a wider range of powers and formulas for handling national emergency disputes.

Pamphlet Explains Social Security Cost

A new booklet that tells where the social security tax payroll deduction goes—where the money will come from to finance benefit payments in the future—has just been published by the Social Security Administration.

The pamphlet is called "Financing Your Social Security Benefits." It may be had without charge by asking at any local Social Security Administration office for a copy of Booklet 36.

LEADERSHIP CONFERENCE on Civil Rights, bringing together delegates from all sections of the nation, hears AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller report on developments in the congressional rules fight. The conference stressed need for rules reform to prevent anticivil rights filibusters in Senate and Rules Committee bottlenecks in House.

Joblessness Averaged 5.6 Percent in 1962

(Continued from Page 1)

Included among the employed in December were 2.2 million nonfarm workers on part time for economic reasons, about the same as a year ago.

A day prior to the release of the job figures, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz announced a revision of the department's unemployment releases along lines recommended by a special presidential committee which appraised job and jobless statistics.

Wirtz said that beginning with the December figures "a panel of technicians who are responsible for collecting and analyzing employment statistics will be given the added responsibility of presenting employment data to the press and the public." Over the past few years, Seymour Wolfbein, the department's manpower expert, had presented the figures and answered reporters' queries.

Wirtz said that beginning with the March release on unemployment figures for February the material will be expanded to include additional characteristics of the employed and unemployed, will report both actual and seasonally adjusted figures and will contain other breakdowns to make the figures more understandable and useful.

Drug Testing Perils Cut By New FDA Controls

The Food & Drug Administration has issued new regulations aimed at better protecting the nation against potentially dangerous or inadequately tested drugs such as the baby-deforming thalidomide.

FDA Commissioner George P. Larrick said the new regulations "provide strong and necessary controls over the investigational use of new drugs" and comply with legislation sponsored by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) which was enacted last year.

Earlier the agency took another move to tighten its supervision of new drugs by appointing Dr. Frances O. Kelsey, heroine of the thalidomide episode, as head of a new investigational drug branch.

Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Anthony J. Celebrezze said the branch will evaluate tests on animals and other reports on new drugs which manufacturers propose to test on humans.

Under the new regulations, which go into effect Feb. 7, the government may order a drug company to hold off human tests until the FDA is satisfied with the thoroughness and results of tests on animals.

The regulations also enable the agency to halt clinical trials if there is evidence that the drug is ineffective for the purposes for which it is being developed.

Manufacturers testing new drugs will be required to furnish full details about their distribution for investigational use, with comprehensive record-keeping and immediate reports both to the FDA and all investigators if any significant side effects or other hazards are found.

The regulations also bar manufacturers from issuing any promotional material on drugs under investigation which represent the new drug as being safe or effective.

Aide to CLC and JLC Joins Planning Body

Toronto, Ont.—Sid Blum, associate secretary of the Canadian Labor Congress' Committee on Human Rights and director of the Jewish Labor Committee for Canada, has resigned both posts to join the staff of the Hamilton (Ont.) Social Planning Council. He also will lecture in sociology at McMaster University, Hamilton.

Broadcaster Vandercook Dead at 60

John W. Vandercook, a leading radio commentator who broadcast nightly for seven years under labor sponsorship, died Jan. 5 of a heart attack in Delhi, N. Y. He was 60.

Vandercook, an explorer and writer, served as a National Broadcasting Co. war correspondent starting in 1940. Beginning on Labor Day 1953, he was sponsored by the old CIO in the 7 p. m. time slot on the American Broadcasting Co. radio network. After the merger in 1955, he moved to a late evening commentary on ABC under AFL-CIO auspices.

His voice badly impaired by a stroke almost two years ago, Vandercook retired and moved to Delhi, where his family home was located. His wife, the former Iris Flynn, died in 1961. Two children, Christopher and Audrey, survive.

Tribute was paid to him in the AFL-CIO closing commercial on the ABC network program, Edward P. Morgan and the News, on Jan. 7.

"Tonight we want to take a moment to express our sadness at the death of John W. Vandercook," it said.

"From 1953 until illness forced his retirement, Mr. Vandercook broadcast over this network, sponsored first by the CIO and, after merger, by the AFL-CIO. He won fame as an author, correspondent and commentator. He spoke his mind crisply, forcefully—in a voice that was unmistakable. He chronicled wars and suffering without ever becoming 'used' to inhumanity, for John Vandercook had both a reporter's eye and a gentle heart. All of us who worked with him have lost a friend."

In his earlier years, Vandercook had conducted research expeditions in the Caribbean, equatorial Africa and the South Pacific. His book, "Black Majesty"—written about the legendary Henri Christophe of Haiti—was a best seller when he was in his early twenties. He wrote numerous other books, including three popular mystery stories.

A speaker of outstanding quality, Vandercook in his broadcasts did much to interpret the attitudes of America's working people to the public.

Mental Health Post Goes to Sullivan

New York—Pres. David Sullivan, of the Building Service Employes, has been named to the board of directors of the National Association of Mental Health.

Beirne Sees Expanded Union Community Role

Rapid expansion of trade union activity into the fields of health, consumer services and community activity is the next logical step for American unions, Joseph A. Beirne, president of the Communications Workers, declares in a new book, New Horizons for American Labor.

The changing character of the American labor force will require unions to develop new methods and operating techniques as well as new means of strengthening the tie that exists between the union and the union member, Beirne says.

"Today's union member," he writes, "is loyal to his union, without doubt, but it is apt to be evident only in times of crisis. Unless we engage in some sober reflection and affirmative action, tomorrow's union member may be a slot machine unionist who drops his dues money in the chute, pulls the handle and expects to walk off with the jackpot."

He urges both government action and collective bargaining as methods to provide safeguards for people affected by automation, and calls for a wide sharing of the benefits of automation among all groups in the national population. Automation will "increase the value of . . . union-management cooperation," he says.

American labor, in Beirne's opinion, faces a challenge to "rise above structural limitations, bargaining procedures too often obsolescent, and attitudes shaped a generation or more ago.

"Successful adjustment to change will permit American labor in the years that lie ahead to fulfill its responsibility not only to its members but to the whole nation," he adds.

Beirne makes a number of suggestions as to the course unions should follow in the coming years.

He sees the international unions developing significant changes in form and structure. State and city bodies, he believes, will become more and more concerned with legislative and political activity while local union leaders will become more prominent in community affairs and will take their place "in the community leadership along with the college president, the local banker, the prominent lawyer, the leading merchant."

"These changes—and many, many others of an equally dynamic character," Beirne writes, "are ones which today's trade union leadership must face, and promptly."

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), in an introduction to the volume, notes that Beirne "seeks to visualize the new forms and the new procedures that unions might employ on behalf of their members in the America of the years ahead." He describes Beirne as "at once hard-headed and idealistic" and comments that "he has lived through most of the changes" in technology and unionism which his book discusses.

New Horizons for American Labor is published by Public Affairs Press, Washington, D. C., at $3.25.

Union Finds Panel Reduces Medical Costs

Palm Beach, Fla.—Members of the Upholsterers in the Los Angeles area saved $100,000 in medical and hospital costs and avoided an average of three unnecessary operations per month during the first year of operation of the Health Plan Consultants Service, according to a report to the trustees of the UIU Health & Welfare Fund at their recent meeting here.

The consultants service was inaugurated by the union a year ago. It now operates nationally, seeking to control medical costs, for various health and welfare funds.

The report showed that members of UIU Locals 15 and 500 in Los Angeles had a panel of 100 doctors in 20 communities offered them from which they could choose their own physician; they also had the choice of any doctor they wanted.

Benefits in addition to the savings accrued to members who used panel physicians, the report showed—payments for the first office visit were instituted and in most cases there was no out-of-pocket payment by the UIU member.

The consultants program is now being introduced in the Chicago area, where it is expected to result in savings for members of 8 UIU locals.

Maritime Union Wins Rights in MSTS Unit

New York—The National Maritime Union has been recognized as exclusive bargaining representative for nonofficer seamen of the Pacific Northwest unit of the Military Sea Transport Service, NMU Pres. Joseph Curran announced.

Lineup in the 88th Congress:

Conservative House Less So, . . . Liberal Senate More So

The new 88th Congress bears a strong family resemblance to its predecessor, but is far from being an identical twin.

Its party division is similar to that of the 87th Congress. Its party leaders—with one significant shift on the GOP side—are the same. Death and retirements have taken a toll, but most committee chairmanships are unchanged.

The Senate, with a Democratic majority of 67-33, remains the more liberal of the legislative bodies—an important three votes more so than in the last Congress.

The House, where Democrats hold 258-176 control with one vacancy to be filled Jan. 22 in a special California election, is again the conservative body. Consistent Administration supporters remain a minority.

Despite a paper gain for Republicans in the House, however, most observers evaluate last November's election as having whittled away a few votes from the conservative coalition. Republican inroads in the South cost the Administration few votes, while an influx of Democratic liberals from California means more votes for the President's legislative program.

Pre-session party caucuses brought the expected re-election of the top-level leadership.

House Democrats again designated Rep. John W. McCormack (Mass.) for the speakership—to which he was formally elected when the House convened—and Rep. Carl Albert (Okla.) was re-elected majority leader. The appointive post of assistant leader again went to Rep. Hale Boggs (La.)

Senate Democrats returned their leadership team of the 87th Congress—Sen. Mike Mansfield (Mont.) as majority leader and Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) as his assistant. Sen. George A. Smathers (Fla.) was re-elected secretary of the Senate Democratic Conference. Smathers, who earlier had said he did not want the post for another term, told newsmen he agreed to run again at the urging of fellow Southerners.

More of Ev and Charlie

On the Republican side, the line-up will again be Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) and Rep. Charles A. Halleck (Ind.) as Senate and House minority leaders. Renamed assistant leaders were Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.) and Rep. Leslie C. Arends (Ill.)

In the House Republican caucus, a surprise revolt by a moderate-conservative group of younger Republicans moved Rep. Gerald R. Ford, Jr. (Mich.), on to the rungs of the leadership ladder. It also won representation for Republicans elected since 1954 on the GOP Policy Committee.

Ford, 49, defeated 67-year-old Rep. Charles B. Hoeven (La.), who had sought re-election as chairman of the House Republican caucus. Hoeven told newsmen later that he considered his defeat a "power play" aimed at eventually unseating Halleck.

The death of Democratic Senators Dennis Chavez (N. M.) and Robert S. Kerr (Okla.) opened up two committee chairmanships—Public Works, which Michigan's Pat McNamara will now head, and the Aeronautical & Space Sciences Committee.

The three ranking members of the latter committee all head other Senate committees. However, Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (N. M.) has said he is considering giving up his Interior Committee chairmanship to head the space unit. If he does, Sen. Henry M. Jackson (Wash.) would move into the Interior Committee chairmanship.

In the House, the retirement of Kentucky's Brent Spence passes the chairmanship of the Banking & Currency Committee to Rep. Wright Patman (Tex.), a long-time champion of small business.

Long Moves Up

Kerr's death also moved Louisiana's Sen. Russell B. Long next in line to the Finance Committee's 75-year-old chairman, Sen. Harry F. Byrd (Va.), whose conservative views have made greater headway in Republican than in Democratic administrations. Long has been an Administration supporter on many issues.

A behind-the-scenes battle is brewing in the House over filling two Democratic vacancies on the Ways & Means Committee, now dominated by conservatives. Social security medical care for the aged, tax legislation, unemployment compensation standards and other major issues come before this group, whose Democratic members also serve as their party's "committee on committees"—making assignments to other House committees.

Rep. Ross Bass (Tenn.), counted as an Administration supporter, is expected to be elected to one of the vacancies at a forthcoming House Democratic caucus. Leading candidates for the second spot are Rep. Phil M. Landrum, Georgia conservative, and Rep. W. Pat Jennings (Va.), a moderate with liberal backing.

While newcomers to the seniority-conscious Congress traditionally attract little attention, this year's crop of 12 freshmen senators has been newsworthy both individually and collectively.

As a group, they are far younger than the incumbent members. Five of the 12 are under 40 and only two—Abraham A. Ribicoff (D-Conn.), 53, and Milward L. Simpson (R-Wyo.), 65, are more than 50.

The youngest member is 30-year-old Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), who was elected to the seat his brother once held. Kennedy and New Hampshire's Thomas J. McIntyre (D) will outrank other newcomers since their seniority dates to their election in November to fill unexpired terms.

SUCCESSFUL REVOLT by younger GOP congressmen resulted in election of Rep. Gerald R. Ford, Jr. (Mich.), right, as chairman of the House Republican caucus. The man he defeated for re-election, Rep. Charles B. Hoeven (Ia.), charged that his loss was a "power play," aimed at eventual unseating of House Republican Leader Charles A. Halleck, left.

Senate Filibuster Foes To Renew Fight Jan. 14

(Continued from Page 1)

be introduced by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) and Sen. Thruston B. Morton (R-Ky.).

Bipartisan Plan

The majority rule proposal will be made by a group including both the Democratic and Republican assistant leaders—Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.). Other co-sponsors are Democrats Joseph S. Clark (Pa.), Paul H. Douglas (Ill.), Philip A. Hart (Mich.), Clair Engle (Calif.) and Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (N.J.), and Republicans Clifford P. Case (N.J.), Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.), Kenneth B. Keating (N.Y.), Hugh Scott (Pa.) and J. Glenn Beall (Md.).

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) has announced he will sponsor still a third proposal—to cut off debate by a simple majority of senators voting.

In an effort to break the expected filibuster against an anti-filibuster rule, the liberal bloc will seek to make the point that the Senate has the power to write its rules afresh at the start of each new Congress.

Restrictions imposed by rules adopted by a previous Congress cannot be used to prevent the cutting off of debate on adoption of rules at the start of a new Congress, they contend in a 39-page memorandum outlining their goals and strategy. The Southerners argue that the Senate is a "continuing body" with continuing rules.

The 12 sponsors of the 51-member cloture rule also said they were encouraged by the growth of support for a rules change in each of the five attempts made during the past decade. The "success or failure" of the effort this year, they said, "may very well determine the outcome of much of the important legislation that will be presented to the new Congress."

Kennedy Forces Win Rules Unit Showdown

(Continued from Page 1)

idly against the Administration.

Before the vote, Louisiana's Rep. Hale Boggs, assistant House Democratic leader, appealed to his fellow Southerners:

"Don't be afraid. Vote for democracy. The Democratic Party is being rebuilt in the South."

He reminded them that Southerners who had voted for the Rules Committee enlargement in the 87th Congress had not suffered at the polls, while several who opposed the measure had been defeated.

Helping in the southern switch—although it turned out not to be the decisive factor—was the bid by Georgia's conservative Rep. Phil M. Landrum for one of the Democratic vacancies on the Ways & Means Committee. A Democratic caucus Jan. 14 is scheduled to elect two new members to the influential committee.

Landrum, who had opposed the enlargement two years ago as did seven others of the 10 Georgia congressmen, switched to support the Administration this year and the entire delegation joined him.

On the Republican side, 19 of the 22 congressmen who voted with the Administration in 1961 are also serving in the 88th Congress. All but Thomas B. Curtis (Mo.) and James G. Fulton (Pa.) voted with the Democratic majority again. John B. Bennett (Mich.), who did not vote in 1961, backed the Administration this year.

Republicans Switch

The following Republicans who had voted against the rules change in 1961 switched to support it this time: William S. Broomfield (Mich.), Robert F. Ellsworth (Kas.), Milton W. Glenn (N. J.), John P. Saylor (Pa.), Robert T. Stafford (Vt.) and Stanley R. Tupper (Me.).

Freshmen Republicans supporting a larger Rules Committee were James B. Grover, Jr., Frank J. Horton and Ogden R. Reid, all of New York, and Joseph M. McDade (Pa.).

All House Republicans voted in a solid block, however, to seek to open the rules to amendments so as to bring up the plan advanced by the GOP caucus—a 15-member Rules Committee divided 9-6 in favor of the Democrats in place of the present 10-5 ratio. If adopted, the effect would have been to eliminate one liberal Democrat from the committee, returning control to the coalition.

Only five Democrats voted with the Republicans on this move, which was defeated 249-183.

Democratic liberals, who had earlier talked of seeking more far-reaching rules reform, refrained from making their bid on the opening day in deference to Speaker John W. McCormack's judgment that it might endanger the success of the vote on the size of the committee. Several resolutions were introduced, however, for a study of the House rules with a view towards major overhaul.

Boost for McCormack

The size of the victory margin boosted the prestige of McCormack. The 1961 victory had been credited to the ability of the late Speaker Sam Rayburn to win southern votes on the basis of personal loyalty and friendship. Some fears had been expressed that many of these votes, including a number from Texas, would be lost.

As it turned out, 50 of the 96 Democrats from the old Confederacy voted with the leadership, a sharp rise from 1961, and Texas again gave 14 of its votes to the Administration.

REP. JOHN W. McCORMACK

SEN. MIKE MANSFIELD

SEN. HUBERT HUMPHREY

REP. CARL ALBERT

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, January 19, 1963 | No. 3

Kennedy Tax, Budget Plans Short of Needs, Labor Says

AFL-CIO ORGANIZING DRIVE in Los Angeles area was pledged support of the Clothing Workers at a rally at which speakers included, from left on platform, Griselda Kuhlman, director of manufacturing organizing; Chairman Robert Aubry of the Southern California Joint Board Organizing Committee; Franz Daniel, AFL-CIO director of the campaign; ACWA Vice Pres. Leonard Levy; Manager Harry Block and Pres. Anthony De Chiazza of the ACWA Joint Board. (See story Page 3)

Impact Too Little To End Jobs Lag

Pres. Kennedy has presented the Administration's program for the next two years to the 88th Congress. In his State of the Union message he gave top priority to a "substantial" tax cut for low and middle-income families. In his Budget message he called for increased defense and space expenditures coupled with tax reduction to spur the lagging economy.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared that the "economic goals of the President are precisely those of the AFL-CIO," but that "we must set our sights higher if we are going to put America back to work." The President's budget, he said, is based on a growth rate that "would insure 6 percent and more unemployment in 1963."

Meany urged "an expanded program of job-creating legislation" in later presidential messages and declared that until a substantial dent is made in unemployment, "we must and will continue to press for the 35-hour week."

The Budget

By John M. Barry

Pres. Kennedy has sent to Congress a $98.8 billion administrative budget keyed to his proposals for tax reduction and reform and a $4.5 billion increase for defense, space programs and higher interest payments.

Total spending for all other programs would be reduced $300 million below the level for the current fiscal year.

Designed to "help speed the economy toward full employment and a higher rate of growth with price stability," the President's budget anticipated a deficit of $11.9 billion stemming from tax reduction and increased expenditures.

The economic basis of the budget was an anticipated 3.5 percent real growth rate reflecting an increase of $1.4 billion in budget receipts and a $2.1 billion increase in profits before taxes.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared that the 3.5 percent growth rate on which the President's budget is based "is not good enough."

"It leaves our economy stalled on the side of the mountain just

(Continued on Page 4)

State of Union

By Willard Shelton

Pres. Kennedy set the stage for a major drive for tax cuts by telling the 88th Congress that a "substantial reduction and revision" in the tax system is "the one step above all" needed to spur the lagging U.S. economy to a faster growth rate and "end the persistent slack" that keeps the rate of joblessness above 5 percent while business activity is booming.

Without spelling out details of his proposals, the President indicated that his goal was a "permanent reduction" in tax liabilities of $13.5 billion a year, with $11 billion concentrated in individual tax rates and $2.5 billion in corporation taxes.

Major relief would go to low-income and middle-income individual taxpayers through his proposal for a split in the first $2,000 bracket of taxable income and a reduction in the rate on the lowest bracket from 20 percent to 14 percent. The top rate would be dropped from 91 percent to 61 percent.

Such a tax cut, Kennedy told Congress in his State of the Union message, "would mean tens of billions . . . more each year in pro-

(Continued on Page 12)

Kennedy Programs Boosted:

Administration Backers Fill House Committee Vacancies

By David L. Perlman

House Democrats gave a big boost to two of Pres. Kennedy's top priority programs—a tax cut and social security health care for the aged—by electing Administration supporters to fill both of the party's vacancies on the powerful Ways & Means Committee.

The committee, which handles all revenue-related legislation, is the only one whose Democratic members are elected at a party caucus. The Ways & Means Democrats, in turn, name the party's members on all other House committees.

Representatives Ross Bass (Tenn.) and W. Pat Jennings (Va.), the candidates considered most friendly to Kennedy proposals, topped the party-caucus ballot with 169 and 161 votes, respectively. Rep. Phil M. Landrum (Ga.), co-author of the 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act, trailed with 126 votes in the secret-ballot election.

While Bass had been expected to win handily, the margin by which Jennings defeated Landrum came as a surprise to most observers.

Jennings, a Southern moderate with a better-than-average record of supporting the President's programs, was backed by most House liberals. Landrum had important backing from the House Democratic leadership, including Speaker John W. McCormack.

Landrum had "earned a reward," his backers argued, by breaking with the conservative bloc to support the Administration in the opening-day battle over control of the Rules Committee. He and Rep. Carl Vinson carried the entire 10-member Georgia delegation with them on the issue.

This won Landrum some northern support, but apparently also alienated some southern anti-Kennedy members. Other factors were involved, including a tradition that vacancies on the committee be filled from the same state as that of the previous member—which helped both Bass and Jennings.

The net effect was a splintering

(Continued on Page 11)

House rules rollcall on Page 10

IAM Again Extends Contract at Boeing

Another extension of the Machinists' contract with the Boeing Co.—the third since negotiations started in July—kept union-management negotiators at the bargaining table seeking contract agreement.

The new deadline was midnight Jan. 18. A three-man board named by Pres. Kennedy has recommended a settlement for 45,000 employes including a union shop, wage increases of 5 to 8 cents for 1962, of 5.5 to 9 cents for 1963 and again in 1964, plus improvements in vacation, sick leave, severance pay, pensions, insurance and other benefits.

Morse to Mediate Dock Strike, President Sets Deadline for Pact

By Eugene A. Kelly

Pres. Kennedy has named a three-man board headed by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) to mediate the dockers' strike and set a deadline of Jan. 21 to report back to the White House.

"If this case cannot be settled by private action, then further public action is required," Kennedy said in a statement.

The President said that if the board can help the parties reach an agreement "consistent with their mutual interests and the public interest, this will constitute the most satisfactory disposition" of the dispute.

"If such an agreement is not reached," he said, "I am asking the board to recommend a procedure which will assure an immediate resumption of operations . . . and a settlement of this dispute on a basis and by a procedure limited to the circumstances of this particular situation."

In announcing the naming of Morse, Harvard University Prof. James J. Healy and Theodore W. Kheel, New York arbiter, Kennedy called on both sides in the strike by East and Gulf Coast longshoremen to "exercise their responsibilities, not only as representatives of private interests involved in this controversy, but also as stewards of the

(Continued on Page 2)

KAISER STEEL EMPLOYES, coming off the night shift at the big Fontana, Calif., plant, cast their ballots on ratification of the "fruits of progress" plan protecting them against technological unemployment and giving them a share of productivity gains. The Steelworkers termed the agreement "a great step forward toward industrial peace."

Ratification Overwhelming:

USWA Approves Kaiser Steel Plan

Fontana, Calif.—Kaiser Steel Corp. employes voted overwhelmingly to accept the revolutionary new "long-range sharing" plan designed to protect them from layoffs resulting from automation and to give them a share of future savings in production costs.

Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald said the nearly 3 to 1 vote reflected the "good judgment" of Kaiser's 7,000 employes in ratifying the plan, which he called "a new idea, bold in its concept and potentially far-reaching in its consequences."

McDonald predicted that the sharing plan, which will become effective Mar. 1 for a four-year period, "will stand the test of time" and conceivably could "open the way to elimination of industrial strife without sacrifice of free collective bargaining prerogatives."

"It is significant," he continued, "that this pioneering venture has been accomplished without government pressures of any kind. We think that this offers incontrovertible evidence that no punitive laws or restrictive control are required to resolve the common problems of labor and management in the best interests of the principals, the public and the nation."

Major elements of the sharing plan are:

- A guarantee against discharges because of technological advances.
- Establishment of an employment pool for workers displaced by new machines or processes who will continue to be paid at least at the rate for their old jobs for up to a year.
- A workers' share of 32.5 percent of all labor, material and supply savings, to be distributed monthly.
- A guarantee that Kaiser workers will receive at least as much in wages and fringe benefits as employes of other steel firms.

Details Spelled Out

By sharing in cost savings and setting industry wage and benefit levels as the floor, the plan effectively does away with contract deadlines on economic matters and removes the total amounts of money allotted to such benefits from the area of bargaining dispute.

Normal collective bargaining procedures will be followed on all other issues, however.

Additional details spelled out in the full, 40-page plan insure that an employe who misses a promotion because of technological advances will be paid for up to a full year at the rate he would have received if promoted. And if automation cuts a worker's workweek below 40 hours, he will receive pay for the full 40 hours.

The plan is the product of three years of study and negotiations by the tri-partite "Long Range Committee" set up in 1959, when Kaiser broke with other steel companies and settled with the union to end a 104-day strike.

The public members of that committee—Dr. George W. Taylor of the University of Pennsylvania, Dr. John T. Dunlop of Harvard University and David Cole, arbitrator—are given a continuing role under the plan. If Kaiser and the USWA are unable to agree on extension of the agreement, the public members will have the power to mediate the dispute and recommend settlement terms.

Kaiser workers approved the plan just three days before USWA and steel industry representatives opened meetings of their joint Human Relations Committee in Pittsburgh to "plan and oversee studies" and "recommend solutions of mutual problems" relating to the current contract.

As the sessions opened, McDonald and R. Conrad Cooper of U.S. Steel Corp., co-chairman of the committee, stressed that the meetings were not bargaining as such. They noted, however, that the committee was meeting "closer to the time when the parties must reach some conclusions with respect to bargaining."

The contract is reopenable next May, but the union so far has declined to comment on whether it will seek such a reopening.

Mississippi Cities Lure Industries From Each Other, Mayors Charge

Jackson, Miss.—Mississippi's Agriculture & Industry Board, set up to lure runaway factories from the North, has been engaging in the same sort of thing within the state and at least one victimized city doesn't like it.

The A&I board authorizes Mississippi cities to issue tax-free municipal bonds to finance new plants for migrating companies. Recently, however, it began to approve such bonds to entice firms from one city in the state to another.

"For the second time in a few years we are losing a local industry to another Mississippi city thanks to the board," Mayor Granville Williams of Picayune told a meeting of the Gulf Coast Municipal Association.

In the latest case, he said, the A&I board granted Yazoo City an enabling certificate for a bond issue to finance the transfer of the Alexander Manufacturing Co. from Picayune. The farm implement firm, which employs about 75 workers, was established in Picayune with local capital in 1947.

"We recognize the right of any industry to do anything it wants on its own, but we do not think a state agency should encourage municipalities raiding each other within the state," Williams said.

Mayor Ben L. Briggs of Pascagoula added:

"We do not believe this is right in principle. If it persists and grows, every city in the state would be vulnerable and industries, after using up their [tax] exemptions, could transfer to another city at will. This would create an intolerable factionalism and sectionalism."

Neither mayor said anything about the possibly harmful effects of interstate industrial piracy, however.

State AFL-CIO Pres. Claude Ramsay, commenting on the incident, said that it "establishes the fact that the A&I board's primary interest is in maintaining an anti-union atmosphere."

Ramsay charged that the Alexander company was moving largely in an attempt to avoid organization of its employes, some of whom had expressed a desire for a union. There is a good concentration of union membership in the Picayune area, he noted, whereas anti-union sentiment is heavy in Yazoo City.

Beirne Assails Hoffa As Personal Feudist

Pres. Joseph Beirne of the Communications Workers, fresh from a resounding victory over Teamsters in a representation election covering 17,000 Western Electric installers, charged that Teamsters' Pres. James R. Hoffa "wantonly uses the money of the Teamsters membership in carrying on his personal vendettas and feuds."

Beirne predicted that Hoffa will "strike out in vengeance again . . . in order to stay in the public eye, in order to justify why he is still the president of the Teamsters." Nevertheless, he added, "the influence of that (CWA) vote will leave its mark on the thinking of the other leaders in the American labor movement." Hoffa, he said, is a "paper tiger."

Interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service program, Labor News Conference, aired by the Mutual Broadcasting System network, Beirne noted that the installer members of the CWA voted 3-1 in an NLRB election for continued representation by the CWA. The Teamsters have asked the NLRB to set aside the election results.

Charging that Hoffa has taken dictatorial control of the Teamsters, Beirne said, "my long-standing position has been that James Riddle Hoffa does not belong to the American labor movement."

Declaring that Hoffa should quit the Teamsters' presidency, Beirne also said he does not think that Hoffa will resign but will continue to attack other unions. Beirne said he hoped the Teamsters would ultimately decide that Hoffa ought to stop his vendetta within the American labor movement, and step down so the union can elect a leader to guide the union back into the family of labor.

Hoffa is bad not only for the Teamsters but for labor as a whole, he added.

The CWA victory proved that American men and women will back a clean union, he said, and also that a small union can fight the powerful Teamsters and win.

Morse to Mediate Longshoremen's Dispute

(Continued from Page 1)

essential institution of free collective bargaining."

The President, acting after a report by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz that negotiations between the Longshoremen and ship operators had collapsed, said the dockers' strike, which was resumed Dec. 23 after the expiration of an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction, has blocked "vital foreign aid and relief shipments" and that commerce "imperative to the economic well being of the free world is disrupted."

Morse accepted his appointment by telling reporters "I have never seen a labor case that could not be settled by good faith negotiation" between the parties. Later he met in New York with the other board members and then with representatives of the ILA and the New York Shipping Association.

The strike and Kennedy's action made history. It was the first time since Congress enacted Taft-Hartley amendments in 1947 that a President has been confronted with the T-H proviso authorizing a report back to Congress after an 80-day "cooling off" period has been followed by a lengthy resumed walkout.

The strike started, according to ILA spokesmen, when employers insisted on reducing the size of dock crews and declined in lengthy negotiations to make an offer the union could take to its members.

Morse was a Pacific Coast arbitrator for the Labor Dept. from 1938 to 1942, chairman of the Railway Labor Emergency Board in 1941, a member of the National Defense Mediation Board and a public member of the National War Labor Board from 1942 to 1944.

Assistant Labor Sec. James J. Reynolds made a final attempt to settle the dock dispute after Wirtz had previously given up his own personal efforts and returned to Washington. Reynolds reported to Wirtz, who then told the President.

Reynolds Critical

Reynolds criticized both sides, saying "in view of all the meetings we have held and all the effort we have put into developing some accommodation between the parties, the fact that both sides adhere to these positions in unrealistic and a complete negation of any real concept of collective bargaining."

Reynolds reported that the shipping companies offered wage increases totaling 22 cents over the term of the contract. The ILA is asking, he said, wage hikes of 26 cents an hour, a guaranteed eight-hour work day, pension increases from $85 to $100 a month, four additional paid holidays and a fourth vacation week after 10 years of service.

Earlier, Wirtz had won agreement of the parties to refer the dispute over crew sizes and work rules for further study.

U.S. Service Finds Jobs For 6.8 Million

An estimated 6.8 million nonagricultural job placements, a record high for a peacetime year, were made by federal-state employment offices during 1962, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Employment Security announced in a year-end statement.

However, agricultural placements dropped 3.4 percent from 8.8 million in 1961 to 8.5 million in 1962, a decline the bureau said "was largely attributed to the increase in mechanization and intensive farming."

The number of non-agricultural jobs filled through the public employment offices was 15 percent more than in the previous year, when the figure reached 5.9 million, the bureau reported.

Increases were registered in all occupational groups with the largest jumps shown in the semi-skilled group, up 21.9 percent; the professional and managerial, up 20.5 percent, and unskilled, up 18.2 percent.

Indian Student Scholarship Set

St. Paul—The Minnesota State AFL-CIO is sponsoring two scholarships, one for descendants of the first citizens of the state. They are:

A $600 maintenance scholarship for an Indian student at the Morris Branch of the University of Minnesota which is tuition-free to Indian students. Applicants must be 25 percent or more of Indian blood to be eligible.

A $1,000 George W. Lawsen Scholarship for use at any accredited college in Minnesota.

Members Pledge Aid:

LA Organizing Drive Kicked Off by Rallies

Los Angeles—Enthusiastic membership rallies have marked the kickoff of the combined AFL-CIO organizing drive in Los Angeles and Orange Counties.

Hundreds of key union members have pledged their time during off-hours to help organize some 750,000 unorganized workers who compose about half the work force of the area.

In a speech punctuated by cheers, Franz Daniel, director of the campaign, told members of the Clothing Workers that "we must return to first principles on which our unions were founded."

"The spirit of brotherhood motivated those who have gone before us and we must work together to make this campaign a success," he said, "because we believe that what is good for us is good for our fellow workers and what is injustice for our brothers is injustice for ouselves as well."

ACWA Vice-Pres. Leonard Levy told the rally that "organized workers in our union enjoy good wages, decent working conditions, paid vacations, insurance and retirement."

"These are the benefits we must bring to the unorganized and in doing so we will be helping ourselves as well," he added.

A similar rally of the Ladies' Garment Workers heard Vice-Pres. Samuel G. Otto pledge full support of the Los Angeles drive.

"I call on each of you to become organizers in your plants, in your neighborhoods and in your own homes," he said.

Daniel predicted victory for the drive, declaring he has received unprecedented cooperation from all participating unions in allocating initial target plants.

"Also," he added, "many have added organizers to their staffs, they have contributed funds and they have contributed the most important ingredient for victory —enthusiasm."

The combined AFL-CIO campaign has been broken down into four divisions with about 400 plants as initial targets. AFL-CIO Field Rep. William Gilbert is coordinator for the hard goods manufacturing section, Ed Lingo is in charge of government employes organizing, Irvan Cary heads the hotel and restaurant workers division, and Daniel will spearhead the soft goods drive.

WIDESPREAD ENTHUSIASM for the AFL-CIO combined organizing drive in the Los Angeles area was expressed by these members of the Ladies Garment Workers after a rally at which the drive's goals were outlined by Franz Daniel (standing), director of the push for new members. Seated at his left are (left to right), Samuel Schwartz, organizing director for the ILGWU Joint Board; ILGWU Vice Pres. Samuel G. Otto, and John Uline, Joint Board president.

AFGE Wins Rights In 3 More U.S. Units

The Government Employes have won exclusive bargaining rights by big majorities in elections held at Social Security payment centers in Philadelphia and Chicago, and at a Marine Corps base in California.

Units totaling 2,500 employes gave the AFGE a 4-1 margin in elections authorized under Pres. Kennedy's Executive Order on union recognition in the federal civil service. Contract negotiations are scheduled to get under way promptly.

At the Chicago social security center, the AFGE piled up a victory margin of 911-125 after a two-month campaign in which every employe was personally contacted. All but 11 of the employes at work on the day of the election voted and 17 unable to be present sent in absentee ballots.

Pres. Walter Mitchum of AFGE Lodge 1395 said half the employes were members of the union at the time of Kennedy's order directing government agencies to bargain with unions representing a majority of workers. An intensive membership campaign paved the way for a petition for an election signed by 75 percent, he said.

In Philadelphia, in a white collar unit of similar size, AFGE Lodge 2006 won exclusive recognition by a 797-264 vote. Sixty percent of the employes had signed the election petition and the AFGE won 75 percent of the vote in the secret ballot election.

In an election among civilian employes at the Marine Corps base in Twentynine Palms, Calif., near San Bernardino, Lodge 2018 won by 166-63 to become the first Marine Corps employe group to be accorded exclusive recognition.

Another big Social Security center—in New York City—is scheduled to vote Jan. 29. AFGE Pres. John F. Griner said the union anticipates a decisive victory.

3 Heroes at Sea Win Furuseth Citations

New York—Willard K. Baker, of the Sailor's Union of the Pacific; Leo Medlin of the National Maritime Union and Alexander Paleogos, of the American Radio Association, have received Andrew Furuseth citations for heroic action at sea. The awards were given during the 20th anniversary dinner of United Seamen's Service.

5-Month Strike Wins For Climax Oil Union

Climax, Colo.—A five-month strike caused by "management rights" demands of the American Metals-Climax Co. has produced a contract that the union—Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers Local 2-24410—says is "the best we ever had."

The local voted 668-65 by secret ballot to ratify a two-year pact for 1,500 workers at the Climax Molybdenum plant here. On strike since July 18, OCAW members ended their walkout with an important proviso—they would walk out again if other plant unions were compelled to resort to strike action to preserve contract standards.

The contract "package" will give Oil Workers additional benefits estimated by the company at 38.5 cents an hour. Members of an Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers local accepted a similar pact but a local of the Office Employes rejected a company offer, later accepted another.

The OCAW strike was forced, the union said, by the same type of "management rights" demands that have kept more than 7,500 members of oil industry unions on the picket lines at other companies since last summer.

Two points insisted on by Climax Molybdenum management were typical—a free hand for the company in contracting-out work normally performed in the plant and the right to carry arbitration decisions to court for further proceedings.

The new contract is free of these provisions. Instead the strikers won wage increases of 10 cents an hour in each of two years; improved health insurance provisions; increased shift premiums, and premium pay for weekend work among other benefits.

Oil company drives for contract language depriving union members of hard-won protection have forced locals to the picket lines in many areas. The management campaign is patterned, the AFL-CIO Executive Council was told, after a U.S. Chamber of Commerce booklet advising employers to "demand" the return of "rights" won by unions over the years.

Last September the Council voted $5,000 to aid refinery strikers on the "management rights" issue and called on the labor movement to send further contributions. Union members also were urged to stop buying products of the struck companies, chiefly Shell and Mobil Oil, for the duration of the strikes.

'Dangerous' Apprentice Shortage Facing Nation, Haggerty Warns

The nation is faced with a "dangerous" shortage of apprentices and must marshal all its resources to train up to 2 million more skilled workers by 1970, Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. has warned.

To assure continuing national prosperity and security, the country must have an adequate supply of skilled workers—and these can come only from apprentice training programs, Haggerty told the fourth annual conference of the National Association of State Apprenticeship Directors, meeting in Washington, D. C.

Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning called for the establishment of a committee representing state agencies to work with the Labor Dept. on all phases of apprenticeship activities, including those authorized by the new Manpower Development & Training Act.

The act, Henning said, is one of three Kennedy-sponsored programs enacted by Congress to help skilled workers. Others are the Area Redevelopment Act and the Trade Expansion Act.

Listing the various programs authorized in the manpower development law, Henning urged a "revitalization of our state-federal relations" to further all types of training projects and proposed that state apprenticeship agencies establish a committee to advise with the Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training on matters of mutual concern."

It is imperative, he said, that "we work more closely together in the area of apprenticeship and training."

Training Projects Approved

The conference also heard a report from John P. Walsh, deputy director of the Office of Manpower, Automation & Training, that approval has been given to about 500 training projects under the new manpower act.

Training chiefs from 28 states, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and the District of Columbia joined manpower training experts from federal agencies for the sessions.

The theme of the conference, called to coordinate state and federal manpower training programs, was "The U.S. Needs 1 Million Apprentices." Haggerty told the delegates that the figure is "probably an understatement, rather than an exaggeration, of the need."

Quoting from a conference report, the building trades leader said the number of apprentices in training continues to decline in every state except California.

"Labor wants to wipe out this danger quickly and effectively," the speaker said, but labor "cannot train more apprentices than industry is willing to absorb."

Apprentice training today involves "considerable school work as well as training on the job," Haggerty asserted, "but there is no substitute for on-the-job training, no adequate alternative to our effective system of letting young men earn while they learn."

Warning that industry must bestir itself to positive action or find itself "trapped by a serious shortage of skilled workers" which will increase costs and result in delays in construction work, Haggerty recommended that industry commit itself to hire more apprentices for on-the-job training and that the government promote their recruitment.

The government should require successful bidders on public works projects to employ a specified ratio of apprentices to journeymen, he urged, and permit contractors to charge off justifiable extra costs.

The record of unions in admitting Negroes to membership will continue to improve, especially in the field of apprentices, Haggerty said.

Shell Co. Stand Blocks Wood River Settlement

Wood River, Ill.—Negotiations have been resumed here between the Shell Oil Co. and a committee representing 13 unions on strike since Aug. 18, but two company demands have been rejected by the unions—firing of three strikers without grievance or arbitration procedings, and a seniority "break" back to Sept. 18 for all the 2,100 strikers.

Agreement has been reached on five basic issues, a union spokesman said, but management stubbornness on two side issues is preventing a settlement of the longest dispute in the history of the Shell refinery here.

"I guess they don't want to settle," said a unionist. "We're willing to compromise, but we can't surrender."

It's not true, he said, that the unions here will not settle until Shell reaches agreement with two other unions representing 2,400 Oil Workers on strike at Pasadena, Tex., and 1,000 members of an unaffiliated union at Norco, La., near New Orleans.

The 13 unions seek a local settlement, said the spokesman for the Operating Engineers, Boilermakers, Pipe Fitters, Machinists, Teamsters, and eight other unions.

The Oil Workers meanwhile reported no change in strikes against the Mobil Oil Co. except at St. Louis, where a settlement has been reached at the Mobil bulk plant for the 48 strikers.

3.5% Growth Rate Seen in New Budget

3 Budget Approaches Defined

In his budget message, Pres. Kennedy took three approaches to federal receipts and expenditures—the consolidated cash budget, the administrative budget and the national income accounts budget—with special emphasis on the first. The following excerpt from the January 1963 issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO's monthly publication, explains the three budget approaches:

ADMINISTRATIVE BUDGET—This is the federal budget usually discussed in the newspapers and over radio and television. It includes the expenditures for which yearly appropriations by Congress are needed and the tax receipts that are paid into the government's general fund. The administrative budget deals with the general operations of the government. It includes federal expenditures for national defense, the operation of government agencies, veterans and farm programs, housing and natural resources programs and interest payments on the federal debt. Federal receipts, under this budget, essentially come from individual income and corporate profit taxes, excise taxes and customs duties.

This budget, however, does not include operations of the federal government's various trust funds—neither the specially earmarked payroll taxes for the social security trust fund nor expenditures to those who receive old-age, survivors' and disability insurance payments; neither the special gasoline taxes for the highway trust fund nor expenditures for the federal highway program.

The administrative budget includes the bulk of the government's financial operations but not all of them. Since the trust funds are excluded from this budget, it is an incomplete presentation of the government's fiscal operations.

CASH BUDGET—This is the budget that shows the flow of federal receipts from the public and payments to the public. It includes the operation of the various trust funds—tax receipts and expenditures of the social security and highway trust funds, deposits and withdrawals by states for the unemployment insurance system, payments into and out of the veterans' life insurance program.

The difference between the administrative budget and the cash budget can be seen this way: In the fiscal year that ended June 30, 1962, the administrative budget showed receipts of $81.4 billion and expenditures of $87.7 billion. With the addition of trust fund operations, the cash budget's receipts from the public were $101.9 billion and payments to the public were $107.6 billion.

The cash budget measures all federal government cash transactions with the public.

NATIONAL INCOME ACCOUNTS BUDGET—This budget measures the impact of federal taxing and spending on the economy—on the flow of the nation's income and production. It includes the operation of the trust funds and records federal receipts and expenditures that directly affect the income and production of the nation.

The national income accounts budget records taxes and spending on an accrual basis at the time they affect economic activities rather than when taxes are actually paid or government checks are issued. Corporations, for example, set aside funds for tax payments about six months before they are actually paid; the economic impact occurs when the funds are put aside for future tax payments. Expenditures are recorded in the national income accounts budget when goods are delivered or services performed rather than when the federal government's check is issued.

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1962, the national income accounts budget indicates that receipts were $104.8 billion while expenditures were $105.7 billion—thus the federal government placed $900 million more funds into the economy's spending stream than it took out.

Administration Urged To 'Set Sights Higher'

(Continued from Page 1)

where the President said we stood last Monday," he said.

"Such a growth rate would insure 6 percent and more unemployment in 1963. Idle men and idle plants mean an idling economy. That is the deficit that should alarm us—the deficit in unused resources.

'Set Sights Higher'

"We must set our sights higher if we are going to put America back to work. I trust the President will in later messages present an expanded program of job-creating legislation. We certainly need it."

Within the spending total of $29.4 billion for activities unrelated to defense or space, however, are new programs or increases in present programs for education and health, manpower retraining, youth opportunities, depressed areas redevelopment, urban transportation and housing development, natural resources, science and technology.

These would be more than offset, the President's message stated, by lower expenditures for the postal service and agricultural price supports and by substituting public for private credit in a number of government lending programs.

On the basis of the administrative budget, the anticipated deficit for the year will total $11.9 billion, compared with $8.8 billion now estimated for fiscal 1963.

Cash Budget Favored

The President said, however, that he was giving "major emphasis" to a consolidated cash presentation. He pointed out that the administrative budget reflects only government-owned funds while the cash budget covers these plus other federal activities—chiefly social security, highway and other trust funds.

The cash approach, Kennedy said, gives "a much more complete picture of governmental activities and finances" and is in line with recommendations of outside groups and independent scholars "that a more meaningful and comprehensive budgetary concept be used."

On this basis the deficit for the year is estimated at $10.3 billion, the differences between $112.2 billions expected in total receipts from the public and $122.5 billion estimated as total cash expenditures.

Under a third concept, the national income accounts budget, fiscal data are estimated on an accrual basis rather than a cash basis, including the trust funds but not transactions which have no bearing on the nation's income and production. These data, the message said, indicate a deficit of $7.6 billion in fiscal 1964.

Tax Evils Hidden

The choice, Kennedy said, "is not between a deficit and a budgetary surplus. It is instead between two kinds of deficits: a chronic deficit of inertia due to inadequate economic growth—or a temporary deficit resulting from a tax and expenditure program designed to provide for our national security, boost the economy, increase tax revenue, and achieve future budget surpluses.

"The first type of deficit is a sign of waste and weakness. The second is an investment in the future."

The President said he was proposing tax reduction and reform because "the sluggish rate of economic growth in recent years had not produced the revenues required to obtain budget surpluses under our present tax system." He added that "it is now clear that the restraining effects of the tax system on the economy were not adequately recognized."

Income anticipated in the budget is based on the assumption that the first step of the proposed tax cuts will become effective "sometime in the summer of 1963," Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon told newsmen at a briefing on the budget.

The President's message to Congress said that that part of the rate reduction which becomes effective in calendar 1963 would, by itself, reduce revenues in fiscal 1964 by about $5.3 billion. But that loss will be cut to a net of $2.7 billion as the tax cut spurs higher income and greater industrial production and by putting corporate income taxes on a more current basis, he said.

Even with this revenue loss taken into account, however, total administrative budget receipts are expected to reach $86.9 billion, an increase of $1.4 billion, as a result of anticipated expansion in the economy.

The revenue estimates in the budget are based on assumption of a gross national product of $578 billion in calendar 1963, up 4.3 percent from the $554 billion GNP in calendar 1962.

National Debt Up

The President noted that his budget proposals will increase the national debt to about $316 billion as of June 30, 1964, and said he would propose, first, that the current temporary debt limit of $308 billion be extended and later that it be increased when a more accurate estimate of needs can be made.

He called for continuation of excise taxes due to expire next July 1 and for a six-month extension of the corporation income tax rate of 52 percent, scheduled under present law to revert to 47 percent at the start of the new fiscal year.

Although details of most of the President's legislative program will not be available until he sends specific messages to Congress dealing with each area, his budget message did announce much of the program in broad outlines. Among the major items were:

- Creation of a Dept. of Urban Affairs & Housing.
- A new $1.2 billion program designed "to obtain improved quality in all levels and types of education." Only $144 million is earmarked for fiscal 1964 spending.
- Establishment of a National Service Corps "to help by example to strengthen the volunteer spirit in our local communities."
- Health insurance for the aged financed under the social security system, with benefits for those not covered by social security to be paid from regular appropriations.
- A program of youth employment and training opportunities.
- An expanded program of federal aid for hospital construction under the Hill-Burton Act.
- Federal aid for medical school construction.
- A national transportation policy along the lines proposed in 1962.
- Expansion of the Peace Corps by 4,000 persons and an increase in grants and loans to Latin American countries

Administration Sees Unemployment Above 4 Percent Until Mid-1965

Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon indicated to newsmen at a budget briefing that the Administration does not expect unemployment to fall below the 4 percent level before July 1, 1965, the start of the 1966 fiscal year. The December 1962 seasonally-adjusted rate was 5.6 percent.

Asked when he expected the budget to be balanced, Dillon replied:

"As far as the revenues are concerned, we expect to get more revenues out of this budget, with the tax cut, in—I would say—beginning in fiscal 1966, and certainly in fiscal 1967, than we would have had without a tax cut.

"We think we will be reaching full employment at that time, and that would be the time that we would be expecting or hoping we could achieve a balanced budget.

Dillon made it clear that by "full" employment he was referring to a rate of joblessness around 4 percent. He said he was not suggesting that as "a satisfactory goal," adding that to bring the rate lower required measures aimed at specific unemployment problems, such as manpower retraining and redevelopment of depressed areas, rather than broad fiscal policies designed to stimulate economic growth.

A 4 percent rate of joblessness, he said, "has generally been accepted as the rate beyond which reductions in unemployment cannot be made by general fiscal stimulation measures" without promoting inflation," and that sort of medicine won't work."

He forecast a continued unbalanced budget "certainly for fiscal 1965" and possibly for fiscal 1966, because some parts of the Kennedy tax reduction program would be just coming into effect in those years.

The proposed tax cuts are expected to stimulate the economy to the point that, by fiscal 1967, "we would be getting more income under the new system, with lower rates, than we would otherwise, if we had maintained our present rates."

Pamphlet Studies Mid-East Labor

The AFL-CIO has published in pamphlet form a series of five articles on trade union problems in the Middle East by Arnold Beichman, special correspondent for the Christian Science Monitor.

The articles, which appeared in the Monitor last year, deal with unionism and socio-economic developments in Egypt, Lebanon, Syria, Iraq and Iran.

In a preface to the pamphlet, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany describes Beichman as "probably the best-informed professional newspaperman in the field of international trade unionism." The pamphlet, he writes, is designed to "enlighten trade unionists, government officials, university scholars and others about an area of the world which merits our sympathy, cooperation and our ever-increasing study."

"Trade Union Problems in The Middle East" was prepared by the federation's Dept. of Intl. Affairs. Single copies are free from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Div. Up to 100 copies the price is 30 cents each; in larger quantities the cost is $25 per 100.

Fire Fighters Form Three Airport Locals

The Fire Fighters have formed local unions of firemen at three airports in the Washington-Baltimore area and have requested the aid of AFL-CIO members in helping organize a local at Fort Meade, Md., just outside the District of Columbia.

In Oklahoma:

Fight Against 'Work' Vote Taken to Court

Oklahoma City—A challenge to an initiative petition to put a so-called "right-to-work" constitutional amendment on the Oklahoma ballot has been carried to the State Supreme Court.

Citizen groups fighting the effort to outlaw union shop agreements have asked the court to name a referee to supervise completion of the examination of signatures of the "right-to-work" initiative. Some 78,000 of the 213,000 signatures must be invalidated in order to disqualify the petition.

Opponents had challenged more than 50,000 signatures at hearings conducted by former Sec. of State William N. Christian. However Christian's term of office expired with the change of Administration on Jan. 14, before the scrutiny could be completed. At a final hearing, he said he could not disqualify the petition on the basis of the evidence presented up to that time.

William C. Kessler, attorney for opponents of the "right-to-work" move, said he hoped the court "will grant us sufficient time to prove that fraud and coercion were commonly used in obtaining a high percentage of the signatures to this petition." He added:

"The checking we have done to date indicates that there are enough illegal signatures to invalidate the petition."

Kessler charged that the "right-to-work" backers "knowingly" padded their petition with "illegal signatures" and used "unfair pressures and coercion" to get names.

"When the boss circulates such a petition, for example, only the most daring among his employes fail to sign," Kessler declared.

"When the Oklahoma public sees the complete picture, I am convinced that most petition signers will turn against the extremists, many from outside Oklahoma, who are the real promoters of this falsely-named legislation."

Brandwein Takes Labor Dept. Post

Appointment of Seymour Brandwein, AFL-CIO economist, as a special assistant to Dir. Seymour Wolfbein of the Office of Manpower, Automation & Training has been announced by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

Brandwein, a specialist in collective bargaining and wages, joined the staff of the former AFL in 1953. During the Korean War he handled technical petitions for the Wage Stabilization Board and later was named assistant to the labor members. Earlier, in 1944 and 1955, he was employed in the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics and between 1945 and 1951 was labor editor for the Bureau of National Affairs.

Born in New York in 1924, Brandwein was graduated with a bachelor of arts degree from Brooklyn College in 1944.

IAM to Mark Diamond Anniversary

The 75th anniversary of the founding of the Machinists will be celebrated in May with a banquet in Washington, with Pres. Kennedy invited to speak May 5 and a two-day general staff conference to focus attention on the IAM's plans for the future.

In addition, a diamond anniversary dinner or meeting has been urged for every lodge in the U.S., Canada, Puerto Rico and the Canal Zone.

The Washington dinner will be held at the Sheraton Park Hotel, with the staff conference following.

In a message to all IAM lodges, Pres. Al J. Hayes said few organizations in any field have survived for 75 years and that for a union to be growing and developing at 75 "is a living testimony to the courage, the determination, the wisdom and the idealism of our members."

USWA Wins 3 From Mine-Mill

Sudbury, Ont.—The Steelworkers routed the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers in three representation elections held within a few days.

In Sudbury, the USWA took two plants from Mine-Mill, which was expelled from the former Canadian Congress of Labor—defeating Mine-Mill Local 902 at Noront Steel Construction, Ltd., and Mine-Mill Local 598 at Canadian Industries, Ltd.

In Calgary, Alta., the USWA turned back a Mine-Mill effort to wrest from it bargaining rights at the Calgary branch of Dominion Bridge, Ltd. The steel union represents workers at Dominion Bridge plants throughout Canada.

THOUSANDS OF UNION MEMBERS in New York City packed the Times Square area to demonstrate support of striking and locked-out printers on the city's newspapers. Here, in a section of the huge demonstration, newsmen interview Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of the city's Central Labor Council, which sponsored the demonstration, and Sec. Morris Iushewitz.

Scales Up 14 Cents In Trades

Building trades wage scales rose an average of 14 cents an hour in the year ending July 1, 1962—one cent less than in the preceding 12-month period—the Labor Dept's Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

These facts among others were reported by the BLS in its 56th annual building trades survey:

- Wage scales averaged $3.95 for all the trades combined—$4.15 for journeymen, $3.15 for helpers and laborers.
- Electricians, whose average hourly scale went up 21 cents, showed the greatest increase. Others in the top group included rodmen, structural iron workers and terrazzo workers' helpers, 18 cents; asbestos workers 17 cents; machinists, pipe fitters, plumbers, sheet metal workers and bricklayers' tenders 16 cents; composition roofers and tile layers' helpers 15 cents.
- Union hourly scales for journeymen averaged $4.15. By trade, the averages varied from $3.77 for paper hangers and glaziers to $4.46 for bricklayers. For all helpers and laborers the average was $3.15, with a range of $2.56 to $3.50.

The BLS defined union scales as the basic minimum wage rates agreed upon through collective bargaining. Overtime above the established maximum hours is excluded. The scales do not reflect rates for apprentices or premium rates, and thus do not represent total hourly earnings of organized building trades workers, the agency said.

Albert Johnstone Of IATSE Dies

New Orleans—Albert S. Johnstone, fourth vice president of the Theatrical Stage Employes, died here following surgery.

A native of New Orleans, he had been a member of Moving Picture Machine Operators Local 293 since 1914 and was its president almost continuously from 1919 until his death. He became an IATSE international representative in 1943 and a vice president in 1954.

As a volunteer organizer for the former AFL, he helped expose peonage in southern lumber camps. He was once a member of the National Recovery Administration's enforcement board for Louisiana.

New York Teachers Assail School Board

New York—The United Federation of Teachers, balked in two months of trying to get the New York City Board of Education to open negotiations on a new contract, has filed charges of unfair labor practices with Mayor Robert F. Wagner and asked him to intervene.

The union, which won bargaining rights and a first contract for 40,000 teaching employes last year, said it has been trying unsuccessfully since Nov. 13 to get negotiations started on a contract replacing the present one, which expires June 30.

"The board's present intention," UFT Pres. Charles Cogen said, "seems to be to wait until after the city acts on its budget proposals."

These proposals omit salaries and many other important items, he said, adding that the board's tactics put the union in the position of suggesting budget items that can be dropped to make way for raises.

"If an employer in private industry indulged in these tactics," Cogen said, "he would be subjected to severe penalties by any labor relations agency."

Teachers are "disturbed and angered" by this technique, he asserted.

To call public attention to its charge of bad faith, the union has set Jan. 23 as the date of a mass protest and has urged union members to join the picket line starting at 4 p.m. in front of school headquarters.

Meanwhile the union won 400 new members who work as school attendance officers. The vote in an election conducted by the American Arbitration Association was UFT 242, State, County & Municipal Employes 114, an unaffiliated group 30, no union 2.

Teachers Score Win In Long Island Town

Plainview, N. Y.—Long Island's first union-representation election among suburban school teachers has been won by a local of the AFL-CIO-affiliated Teachers.

By a vote of 235 to 196 the Plainview Federation of Teachers won from the long-established Classroom Teachers Association in a consent election agreed to by the Plainview-Old Bethpage School District and the union.

Sighting a new trend in collective bargaining in New York City suburban areas, the union will now seek elections in other nearby school districts. The Teachers have organized seven locals in the past two years on Long Island.

In Plainview the union has presented a proposal to the Board of Education and expects negotiations to begin soon on wages and working conditions, including these:

A new salary schedule ranging from $5,600 to start to $12,000 in 13 steps, replacing the present schedule of $5,200 to $10,650 in 15 steps; a duty-free 45-minute lunch period for elementary school teachers; additional pay for teachers with credits toward advanced degrees.

Daniel Sanders is regional director for the union here. The school district has 549 teaching employes.

Guild Reporter Editor Retires

Charles E. Crissey, 68, has retired as editor of the Guild Reporter, becoming the first Newspaper Guild employe to benefit under the ANG's pension agreement with its staff.

A founder and first president of the Elizabeth, N. J., Guild local, Crissey joined the ANG staff as an international representative in 1944 and became editor of the union's twice-monthly publication in 1951.

He has been active in the Intl. Labor Press Association, heading its postal services committee in recent years. Under his editorship, the Guild Reporter won a number of ILPA awards for journalistic excellence.

Selection of a successor will be made at the ANG executive board, which meets in February.

Newspaper 'Work' Backer Now Calls for Its Repeal

South Bend, Ind.—The South Bend Tribune, which thought a "right-to-work" law should be "given a chance" when the act banning union shops was adopted by the legislature six years ago, now says the legislature should repeal it.

Said the Tribune in an editorial:

"Indiana's six-year-old law banning union shops has failed to right any wrongs and, worse, has increased labor tensions in Indiana's industry. We favor its repeal.

"When this law was passed back in 1957, passions ran high, Our attitude then was: Let's give the law a chance to prove itself.

"Six years, we believe, is ample chance. But we haven't seen much evidence that the law has proved itself."

The newspaper commented that "the only thing the 'right-to-work' law has really done in six years has been to perpetuate a source of hostility on both sides of the labor-management relationship. There is no reason to think it will ever do more than that." The editorial added:

"Unnecessary irritants only make it harder for the two groups [labor and management] to work toward the point where their interests mesh. The 'right-to-work' law is one of the most unnecessary of such irritants."

Bold Tax Concept

A NEW AND COURAGEOUS concept of the role of government in shaping tax and fiscal policy has emerged from Pres. Kennedy's State of the Union and budget messages, an attack on the economic mythology that the balanced budget is sacred whatever the cost in unemployment, idle resources and economic growth.

The choice, the President has told Congress and the country, "is not between a tax cut and a balanced budget." It is rather "between chronic deficits arising out of a slow rate of economic growth, and temporary deficits stemming from a tax program designed to promote fuller use of our resources and more rapid economic growth."

Both presidential messages outline the still-to-be-submitted detailed tax program for permanent reduction in personal and corporate levies and reform of the existing tax system. But both messages lay down the general goals—a net $10 billion tax cut over a three-year period with major emphasis on low-income and middle-income brackets.

The President makes it clear in his budget message that the tax reduction coupled with higher expenditures for defense, space and interest will result in a $10.3 billion deficit in the consolidated cash budget at the end of the 1964 fiscal year, June 30, 1964. In terms of the administrative budget, a much less precise measurement, the deficit would be $11.9 billion. In terms of national income accounts, a purely economic measurement of the budget's impact, the deficit would be $7.6 billion.

Regardless of the yardstick used, the President's economic approach is clear: the economy must be stimulated to a higher rate of growth if persistent high unemployment is to be reduced and idle capacity put into operation.

★ ★ ★

THERE IS SOME CONCERN, however, that while the President's approach to the state of the nation's lagging economy is grounded in sound principles and strips away the pretense of "conventional wisdom" in economic thinking, his program may fall short of the goals he has set forth.

His proposed budget is based on a gross national product—the value of all goods and services produced—of $578 billion for the calendar year 1963, an increase of $24 billion over the estimated GNP of $554 billion for calendar 1962. This indicates a real growth rate of about 3.5 percent in the next 12 months, a rate that will have no real effect in reducing unemployment from its present 5.6 percent rate.

The President's tax comments, promising exact proposals in a special message, indicate a cut in personal income taxes effective July 1, 1963, if Congress goes along. According to his figures of an estimated $6 billion tax cut for the first stage, this would mean that only about half, or $3 billion, would take effect this year. If, as the President writes, "the check rein of taxes" must be loosened if the economy is to "perform at maximum efficiency," then a greater immediate stimulus is necessary.

The fiscal policies as laid out in the two messages hold great promise for economic progress. But to make a real dent in unemployment and provide jobs for the millions entering the labor force, a more timely and larger approach is needed at once.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton

Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, January 19, 1963 No. 3

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'You Can Turn It on With This'

On the State of the Union:

'We Cannot Afford to Postpone' New Measures, Kennedy Holds

In his State of the Union message, Pres. Kennedy declared that despite budget limitations "it is possible and imperative to adopt other new measures that we cannot afford to postpone." The following excerpts from the message deal with the "fundamental premises" on which the proposed measures are based.

FIRST, we need to strengthen our nation by investing in our youth:

The future of any country which is dependent on the will and wisdom of its citizens is damaged, and irreparably damaged, whenever any of its children is not educated to the fullest extent of his capacity, from grade school through graduate school. Today, an estimated 4 out of every 10 students in the 5th grade will not even finish high school—and that is a waste we cannot afford.

In addition, there is no reason why 1 million young Americans, out of school and out of work, should all remain unwanted and often untrained on our city streets when their energies can be put to good use.

Finally, the overseas success of our Peace Corps volunteers, most of them young men and women carrying skills and ideals to needy people, suggests the merit of a similar corps serving our own community needs: in mental hospitals, on Indian reservations, in centers for the aged or for young delinquents, in schools for the illiterate or the handicapped. As the idealism of our youth has served world peace, so can it serve the domestic tranquility.

Second, we need to strengthen our nation by safeguarding its health:

Our working men and women—instead of being forced to beg for help from public charity once they are old and ill—should start contributing now to their own retirement health program through the Social Security system.

Moreover, all our miracles of medical research will count for little if we cannot reverse the growing nationwide shortage of doctors, dentists and nurses, and the widespread shortages of nursing homes and modern urban hospital facilities. Merely to keep the present ratio of doctors and dentists from declining any further, we must over the next 10 years increase the capacity of our medical schools by 50 percent and our dental schools by 100 percent.

Finally, and of deep concern, I believe that the abandonment of the mentally ill and the mentally retarded to the grim mercy of custodial institutions too often inflicts on them and on their families a needless cruelty which this nation should not endure. The incidence of mental retardation in this country is three times as high as that of Sweden, for example—and that figure can and must be reduced.

Third, we need to strengthen our nation by protecting the basic rights of its citizens:

The right to competent counsel must be assured to every man accused of crime in federal court, regardless of his means.

And the most precious and powerful right in the world, the right to vote in a free American election, must not be denied to any citizen on grounds of his race or color. I wish that all qualified Americans permitted to vote were willing to vote—but surely, in this centennial year of Emancipation, all those who are willing to vote should always be permitted.

Fourth, we need to strengthen our nation by making the best and the most economical use of its resources and facilities:

Our economic health depends on healthy transportation arteries; and I believe the way to a more modern, economical choice of national transportation service is through increased competition and decreased regulation. Local mass transit, faring even worse, is as essential a community service as hospitals and highways. Nearly three-fourths of our citizens live in urban areas, which occupy only 2 percent of our land—and if local transit is to survive and relieve the congestion of these cities, it needs federal stimulation and assistance.

Next, this government is in the storage and stockpile business to the melancholy tune of more than $16 billion. We must continue to support farm income, but we should not pile more farm surpluses on top of the $7.5 billion we already own. We must maintain a stockpile of strategic materials, but the $8.5 billion we have acquired —for reasons both good and bad—is much more than we need; and we should be empowered to dispose of the excess.

Finally, our already overcrowded national parks and recreation areas will have twice as many visitors 10 years from now. If we do not plan today for the future growth of these and other great natural assets—not only parks and forests but wildlife and wilderness preserves, and water projects of all kinds—our children and their children will be poorer in every sense of the word.

Morgan Says:

The Lessons History Teaches Often Too Quickly Forgotten

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

I WAS MOVED by a movie the other evening, an epic film called The Longest Day, from a book by a friend of mine, Cornelius Ryan, about the landings on the beaches of Normandy in World War II.

There were some inexcusably corny lines of dialogue but the re-creation of the greatest invasion in history is a spectacle at once staggeringly vast and penetratingly intimate. The endless dimensions of the armada, the towering totals in manpower, guns, planes, supplies and money involved were almost too much to comprehend and became meaningful only in the connected vignettes of one partisan sabotaging a bridge, an infantryman stumbling ashore from a landing craft, a lone assault soldier scaling a cliff under withering fire. Yet all this lethal living and dying added up to the supreme effort that brought Hitler down.

Morgan

I left the theatre in a mood which was a curious mixture of uplift and depression. My pulse pounded with pride and my nerves were still taut with anger. Behind me had sat two snuffling schoolboys who, I realized later with some shock, could not have been born until years after VJ day and, therefore, their lack of engagement with the picture had to be understood in terms of their utter unfamiliarity with even such recent history.

Still, there seemed something almost sinful in their lack of comprehension since, without hoking up my own scenario too much, it was in a real sense for their sakes that this Armageddon had been fought. More maddening was the realization of how quickly we, who lived through the war to remember, forget.

It is one of the constant ironies of human life that we are capable of rising to the pinnacles of heroism and sacrifice in a cataclysm and then lapse into the valleys of carelessness and irresponsibility —whence the crisis came.

There is no use, I suppose, in beating our fists in protest against this cycle. It is a fact of life and human behavior that has rolled down through history like a hoop. Once in a while an intelligent flashback, a sensitive remembrance of things past can make the hoop waver and pause, kindling a little hope that if only there were enough recollection of yesterday there might be less regret ahead for tomorrow, there might be a little more learning from experience. The hope is still feeble. But a spark of it was struck dramatically in Washington.

THE SCENE WAS the unveiling of the Mona Lisa—and we'll not dwell on the fiasco of the party at the National Gallery which froze elevators, fogged up the public address system and wedged unsmiling crowds of dignitaries into corridors out of sight of Leonardo's masterpiece. We'll move quickly to the little speech of France's famed writer and Minister of Cultural Affairs, Andre Malraux. Himself a hero of the French resistance, he had some intimate knowledge of the long days, and he obviously had the longest one in mind at his conclusion.

"There has been talk," Malraux said, "of the risks this painting took by leaving the Louvre. They are real, though exaggerated. But the risks taken by the boys who landed one day at Arromanches—to say nothing of those who had preceded them 25 years before—were much more certain. To the humblest among them, who may be listening to me now, I want to say, without raising my voice, that the masterpiece to which you pay homage this evening . . . is a painting which he (that humblest liberating soldier) has saved."

A more graceful, gracious tribute from one ally to another would be difficult to find. Coming, as it does, in the midst of painfully complicated relations between Washington and Paris, it is a meaningful pinprick at the pompous rigidity of Pres. de Gaulle, who is almost arrogantly impatient with those upstarts, the uncouth Americans. It is at the same time a delicately pointed prod to remind us of some of the intangible values we fought for, as well as to jog our memories on the risks and the costs of the fighting.

The terrible realization that should be emerging from all this is that next time the longest day will be the shortest, over in a lethal nuclear twinkle, without time for the inducement of adrenalin additives by the strains of martial music. And yet, even as I make that statement, it seems as remote and meaningless and impossible as the two schoolboys found the battle scenes of The Longest Day.

The man who invents an awareness machine to galvanize us to corrective action in the wake of one holocaust could conceivably save us from another and there would be sunnier if not longer days in which to honor him properly for it. Does anybody feel so inspired?

Washington Reports:

Leaders See Tax Cut, Reform, Senate's 'Most Important' Bills

SEN. MIKE MANSFIELD (Mont.), Senate majority leader and Sen. Everett Dirksen (Ill.), Senate minority leader, have joined in calling tax reduction and tax reform the most important issues to come before the 88th Congress.

Both predicted a tax cut although they differed on the fate of other major issues to be proposed by the Administration.

Interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 500 radio stations, Mansfield said tax reduction would "speed up the economy of the nation so there would be more jobs, more business, more money rolling in and out. . . . The Administration thinks the growth rate can be lifted from a rate of 2.5 percent a year to a rate of 4 percent."

Dirksen said he expected "action of some kind on a tax bill" simply because "it has top billing in the Administration's program." But he said health insurance for the aged under social security would "run into the same difficulties as before," and he declared "the feeling of the country is more hostile" toward federal school aid than it was heretofore." He served notice that "modifications" may be filed to amend the trade expansion act passed last year.

ON THE OTHER hand, Mansfield asserted that Congress will act on health insurance for the aged under social security and federal aid to education.

The Senate majority leader stressed, in addition, the need of a cabinet post representing the urban population, a measure that failed in the last session, and the need of giving federal aid in the relief of urban transportation problems.

The urban population, which comprises 70 percent of the population of the United States, is "certainly entitled to representation in the Cabinet," he maintained.

Many problems having to do with crowded areas, lack of open spaces, and transportation should be considered, he said. He favored a special committee to study the situation.

Dirksen said the Kerr-Mills Act, increasing relief grants to the indigent aged with health problems, is a better approach. The Kerr-Mills program is administered from the states, not Washington, he said.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE ORATORY of newly elected southern governors as they moved into office this month was generally fresh and realistic. If there were echoes of campaign exaggerations in some cases, this is understandable. The more meaningful declarations were those that spoke of better schools, higher taxes to finance them, the necessity of raising the level of southern life.

Not all the newly inaugurated governors ran as avowed liberals. Not all would be so labeled. But labels are tricky things and it is the direction of movement that counts.

Gov. John Connally of Texas laid great stress on an acceptance of responsibility by the state—a campaign theme—but most specifically he urged greater state support of education at all levels.

Gov. Frank Clement of Tennessee said he would seek higher taxes, because the state government had become "stagnant" and larger revenues were needed to finance the services the people lacked.

In South Carolina, Gov. Donald S. Russell took the oath of office with a promise of better schools and a pledge to "give all our people the opportunity they truly deserve." He did not specifically mention school desegregation but acknowledges there might be "difficulties."

A day later a U.S. appellate court ordered immediate enrollment of a Negro applicant in all-white Clemson University and the state moved to take it to the Supreme Court. But Russell had already said, "We shall work out our problems peaceably, according to our standards of justice and decency."

Gov. Carl E. Sanders of Georgia said the "test of progress" for his state was to "provide larger opportunities to those who have little" rather than adding benefits to those who have much. And without mentioning racial issues directly he remarked:

"We believe in law and order and in the principle that all laws apply equally to all citizens."

* * *

THERE WAS A FALSE NOTE struck in Alabama, where newly inaugurated Gov. George C. Wallace vowed unremitting resistance to desegregation. It is a desolate and futile doctrine, but Wallace's concept can be considered matched and overmatched by the remarkable farewell speech of just-retired Gov. Ernest F. Hollings in South Carolina and by the reaction of the legislature.

Hollings bluntly told South Carolina that so far as he was concerned there would be no repetition of the tragedy of the bitter-enders who a century ago helped plunge this republic into fratricidal sectional war.

He had argued on the losing side in the Supreme Court's original desegregation case in 1954. He said that many still did not accept the court's decision as "the law of the land" but said "everybody must agree that it is the fact of the land" and that the South "is running out of courts" in which to argue about it.

"If and when" all legal appeals were exhausted and the "fact" of required desegregation was indisputably established, "this General Assembly must make clear South Carolina's choice—a government of laws rather than a government of men," declared the 41-year-old Hollings.

* * *

HOLLINGS HIT even harder when he told the legislators that they had more important things to worry about than the desegregation issue, such as the quality of life in which the political system had left the South's people stranded. Said he:

"This very day, any ranking of regions or states for any purpose finds the South and her states wearily clinging to the bottom rung." He could have spelled it out for per capita income, for literacy, for health, for educational levels, for the standing of universities and research institutions, for economic opportunity.

And what was the response of the South Carolina Assembly to this remarkable speech, so free of bigotry and demagoguery? "The legislators stood and applauded the governor for a full minute," United Press-Intl. reported, and the response like the speech would have been a credit to any governor and any legislature in the nation.

TAX REDUCTION AND TAX REFORM head the agenda for the 88th Congress, according to Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.), left, and Minority Leader Everett Dirksen (R-Ill.). They listed major measures to come up in the current session as they were interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

The Facts of Life for Children Include How, When to Spend

By Sidney Margolius

ONE OF OUR READERS says he is worried that his soon-to-marry son and future daughter-in-law have little understanding or even much concern about how to manage money.

He's not the only one who's worried. Young couples are the backbone of our bankruptcy courts today. Again in 1962, wage-earner bankruptcies reached another new peak, and several bankruptcy referees have reported that young people comprise the majority of their cases.

The fact is, children today are more demanding and expect more than our generation did. Increasingly, parents are asking for guidance in teaching even younger children the value of money. For their part teen-agers tend to complain that parents fail to tell them about money matters.

Here are methods family experts recommend for teaching children the value of money. Success is surer if you use all these tools rather than rely on just one:

● Let children participate in budget talks. This will help them understand why the family must pick its goals when funds are limited—and win their cooperation in achieving these goals. When a child sees his family making choices among a number of needs and goals, and discussing what is most important, he himself begins to develop a sense of values.

At least one survey found that teen-agers themselves want their parents to let them join in family money discussions, especially those concerned with planning furniture purchases and vacations.

Ironically, not many parents do explain money matters to their children, this survey of ninth-graders, by Cornell University home economists, found.

The survey showed that at least this group of teen-agers did handle money quite wisely. Over 90 percent saved. None expected parents to hand over money whenever they needed it, but felt they should provide their share of expenses.

The boys were found to spend more than the girls—$2 a week compared with less than $1. But the boys also got larger allowances and did more outside work for pay.

● Give regular allowances. Even a small allowance gives children a sense of responsibility, family experts advise. For pre-teens the allowance may be from 50 cents to $1 a week, not including lunch money, and for high-school students, $1 to $2. By the mid-teens, a clothing allowance can be added (except for the more expensive items).

But you make little headway in teaching the value of money if you hand it out simply on request, or because a child complains that some of his friends receive larger allowances.

The recommended way to determine the amount of allowance is to work out with your child how much he actually needs for school and other expenses, and the amount he can spend as he chooses.

HOW WELL A CHILD does extra household chores is another frequently used measure of the amount of allowance, although some parents feel that some duties should not be paid but should be done as a matter of family cooperation.

● Encourage them to earn money. Psychologists feel that the money a child earns is the money he values most. Too, part-time work for others is a useful experience which gives a child an understanding of different kinds of jobs.

● Show them how. Children are genuinely interested in learning efficient ways to handle money, sometimes more so than grownups. Counselors advise teaching these actual methods: (1) how to plan a budget (how much they will spend for what, how much they will save out of their combined allowance and earnings); (2) how to keep a continuing record of their spending in a notebook so they know where their money goes.

In a new paperback book "How To Get Along With Your Child" Shirley Camper, consultant of the Family Service Association tells how one mother teaches her small daughter money management. At the beginning of the school year the mother figures out with the child what her school expenses will be, what money she would like to spend as she pleases, how much can be saved toward gifts. The child uses regular budget envelopes to divide her money at the beginning of each week.

But avoid laying down the law on how the child is to use his money. Let him share in the decision.

● Practice money planning yourself. The way you handle money is a big factor in teaching children the value of money, Mrs. Camper advises.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

AWARD-WINNING AFL-CIO sponsored newscaster and commentator Edward P. Morgan presents a copy of his book, "Clearing the Air," a collection of 120 of his commentaries, to Federation Pres. George Meany. In the foreword, Morgan urges other networks and sponsors to give their newscasters the freedom to report and comment granted him by ABC and the AFL-CIO.

Gives Thanks for Freedom:

120 Morgan 'Essays' Printed in New Book

IN THE FOREWORD to his book, Clearing the Air, Edward P. Morgan says "the only unenviable thing" about his broadcasts over the American Broadcasting Co. network under the sponsorship of the AFL-CIO "is its uniqueness."

"I wish other networks and other sponsors would give more of my colleagues equal freedom," he added in the foreword, which is entitled The Opening Commercial.

The book, a collection of 120 of his five-minute commentaries—or more appropriately essays—covering the spectrum of human activity, is an excellent documentation of the uniqueness of Edward P. Morgan.

"I do believe," he writes in a foreword, "that everybody would feel better if we adopted as a national calisthenic the practice of deflating stuffiness with good humor, of penetrating pretense with honest fact, and curling back prejudice with the patient strength of reason."

The freedom granted Morgan by the network and the AFL-CIO "allow me to report and comment on the news—even to the extent of biting the hands that feed me if an unfavorable opinion of the company or broadcasting or organized labor seems necessary."

★ ★ ★

BUT THIS FREEDOM, he continues, "carries a heavy responsibility" involving "constant alertness against the ever-present danger of becoming enchanted with the sound of one's own voice."

The 267-page collection of Morgan's radio essays is an admixture of serious and pungent commentary on national and international affairs and the whimsey, wit and irony with which he treats topics ranging from psychiatry to women's fashions.

And because his news and commentaries have won such wide praise and many coveted awards, his views on the role of radio in mass communications are particularly pertinent:

"It seems downright criminal to me that it (radio) is not more meaningfully exploited. Instead, the air waves are saturated with musical junk, the flotsam and jetsám of jellied love songs, deadening drum beats and wailing horns, punctuated every hour on the hour with capsuled headlines wrapped in the tone of doom, and sliced with impassioned sales pitches for nostrums to control body odor and regularize the bowels."

Among readers of the AFL-CIO News who find weekly one of Morgan's commentaries in its pages and the hundreds of labor papers serviced with this same column, Morgan's book is sure to receive a warm reception.—SM

Clearing the Air, Edward P. Morgan, Robert B. Luce Inc., Washington, D. C. $4.95.

From Soups to Nuts:

For Sweet Oblivion from Tumult, Nothing's Like a Hair Dryer

WITH MENTAL HEALTH getting more exclusive all the time, I feel duty bound to share my little secret with those of you who don't know whether you're coming or going. I have a plan for salvation of the human race.

I believe that every adult human being (including bald-headed men) should spend 30 minutes a day under a hair dryer. (Not the modern, noiseless kind that enable you to wander around and carry on telephone conversations, but the noisy old-fashioned kind that not only immobilize you but drown out all sounds of the outside world.)

That's the sort I have, and I consider it one of science's greatest inventions. Not because it does a superb job of drying my hair (which it doesn't) but because it's a sanctuary into which I can retreat when the world becomes too much for me. My hair dryer is an escape hatch by way of which I can grope my way back to sanity.

Now, mind you, I'm an average, normally-adjusted person. Just like everybody else, I gasp my way through life, doing six things at once while trying to remember where I put the car keys. I scarcely have time to take a deep breath—much less to ponder the eternal verities of love, truth and beauty. Or even the more fleeting perplexities of who to vote for for sheriff, and how to cut neat grapefruit sections.

HOW CAN I THINK about anything when all around me are noises clamoring for attention: shouts, buzzes, bangs, gurgles, squeaks, shrieks, squeals, crashes; little voices calling "Mommy!"; television announcers bleating about nasal drips and acid digestive juices; the dishwasher making that awful racket which means that a fork has slipped into its innards again and broken something.

But when I slip the hood of the dryer over my head and turn on the switch, all of these sounds fade away, smothered by the whoosh of the motor. Lulled by the roaring in my ears, detached from the world's distractions as if in a cocoon, I think long thoughts: what to do about Berlin, what to have for dinner, what "Last Year in Marienbad" was really about.

This, then, is what my hair dryer gives me: sweet oblivion from the tumult and shouting, time to collect my thoughts in peace and solitude, a place to hide.

Justice Delayed Is Justice Denied:

Court Again Orders Backpay For 54 Illegally Fired in 1948

A court has ruled, for the umpteenth time in 12 years, that 54 illegally fired union members are entitled to backpay totaling $55,000 from their former employers, Ozark Dam Constructors.

The latest ruling, and possibly the final one in the long-drawn-out litigation, was by the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis. In its third decision on the subject, the court:

- Gave the 54 victims one year to file their claim for back pay, after which the money will be returned to the employer who withheld it from them.
- Approved a National Labor Relations Board formula under which the backpay was figured.
- Rejected the claim of Brown & Root, Inc., and eight other companies which as Ozark Dam built the Bull Shoals Dam, in Arkansas, that the board's formula was illegal, that the companies were improperly given the burden of proving facts about the formula, and that the board's findings were not supported by substantial evidence.

Approved also was an NLRB order that awards to the former employes be placed in escrow with the regional director, not to be paid until the director and the dam builders have had a chance to investigate all claimants and find out how much money, if any, they have earned since the builders illegally refused to rehire them in 1950.

The case has kept lawyers hopping since building tradesmen walked off the Bull Shoals Dam project near Mountain Home, Ark., on Dec. 3, 1948. Later the men offered to return to work but were refused rehiring. The Fort Smith, Little Rock & Springfield AFL Joint Council filed a refusal-to-bargain charge against the contractors in 1950 and the litigation began its 12-year-plus course.

Workers Long Gone

The dam project was completed, the workers moved to other jobs, and the former AFL and former CIO have been merged. But the fired workers have not yet gotten their backpay. Meanwhile they have been free to recall a saying that some lawyers are fond of quoting: Justice delayed is justice denied.

In another NLRB case, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia sent back for rehearing an order directing the Northern Virginia Sun, Arlington, Va., to reinstate 24 members of Typographical Local 101.

The rehearing was ordered by a 2-1 court decision, the majority ruling that the trial examiner erred in refusing to allow the company to cross-examine some witnesses on the history of collective bargaining between the union and the company.

Four Kennedy Administration appointees owned and operated the suburban daily in 1959 when, the board ruled, the Sun's effort to oust the ITU came to a head. The four are George W. Ball and Philip M. Stern of the State Dept., Clayton Fritchey of the U.S. mission to the United Nations; and Arnold Sagalyn, Treasury Dept. Stern has since left the government.

First Suit Filed Under City Wage Floor Law

New York—The first lawsuit to collect wages due a worker under the city's new minimum wage law has been filed here in Civil Court.

The Citizen's Committee for a $1.50 Minimum Hourly Wage in New York hailed it as a test of the right of nearly 200,000 low-paid workers to benefit from the raise, due Nov. 21, and called for the legislature to establish a statewide minimum wage of $1.50 an hour to rescue 1.3 million workers from "oppressive poverty."

The committee also called a rally in support of the proposed legislation for Feb. 12 in Albany, the state capital.

The suit, filed for Maria Melendez against the Luxury Braid Co., asserts that she is being paid 10 cents an hour less than the $1.25 called for by the city minimum wage law, enacted in October but stymied by a court injunction.

Lawyers Join Fight

The test case was filed for Miss Melendez by Robert Mozer, a partner in the law firm of Harold, Luca, Persky & Mozer.

One of a group of lawyers who volunteered to take similar cases without fee, Mozer said he will argue that his client's employer is in interstate commerce and thus affected by the federal wage-hour law. The federal law allows a municipality to require higher minimum wages than those prescribed as a national standard, he said.

Mayor Robert Wagner has announced the city will appeal the injunctions blocking enforcement of its minimum wage law. The Citizens Committee, and other groups, will file "friend of the court" briefs supporting the city's fight for wage minimums of $1.25 this year, $1.50 after one year.

A lower court denied the first employer petition for an injunction but the Appellate Division of the State Supreme Court reversed that ruling Dec. 11. On Dec. 24 another Supreme Court tribunal said it was bound by the appellate ruling declaring the city wage law invalid, but did not settle the question of the constitutionality of the law.

Randolph Heads Committee

Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters heads the Citizens Committee for a $1.50 Minimum Hourly Wage, whose sponsors include clergymen, civic and other union officials.

The case is not merely one between two groups of employers and the city, Randolph said, but one "between these employer's groups and the people of this city" on behalf of low-paid, exploited workers.

"It is of vital importance," he said, "that the governor and the legislature accept their responsibility" and take "concrete and meaningful action . . . to correct the low-wage problem that exists in the state." Underpaid workers need help urgently "to relieve the oppressive poverty that is their unfortunate lot," he asserted.

Randolph's committee has called for a state minimum wage law of $1.50 an hour.

HELP FOR LABOR MOVEMENTS in developing nations was discussed at a meeting in AFL-CIO headquarters of the Intl. Confederation of Free Labor's Solidarity Committee. Shown from right are Fred Strauss, ICFTU financial officer; Stefan Nedzynski, ICFTU assistant secretary; ICFTU Gen. Sec. Omer Becu; AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, chairman of the committee; Gen. Sec. George Woodcock of the British Trades Union Congress; Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress; Pres. Ludwig Rosenberg of the German Trade Union Federation (DGB); H. A. Tulatz, ICFTU assistant secretary; Gen. Sec. Juul Poulsen of the Intl. Union of Food & Allied Workers; Charles Levinson of the Intl. Metalworkers Federation; Sec. Guptil Mapara of the ICFTU Asian Regional Organization and Gen. Sec. Arturo Jauregui H. of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers. Mapara and Jauregui attended as observers. ICFTU Pres. Arne Geijer, also a member of the committee, attended the session but was absent because of a minor illness when the photo was taken.

For 1963:

Scheduled List of Labor Conventions

Herewith is a list of conventions scheduled for 1963 for AFL-CIO national and international affiliates and by state central bodies. Changes and additions will be reported:

Date	Organization	Place
Apr. 1-4	Louisiana	Baton Rouge, La.
Apr. 2-4	Pennsylvania	Philadelphia, Pa.
Apr. 22-23	Master Mechanics	Washington, D. C.
May 6-8	Coopers	Washington, D. C.
May 7-9	Arizona	Phoenix, Ariz.
May 13	Aluminum Workers	Corpus Christi, Tex.
May 13-18	Railway Clerks	Los Angeles, Calif.
May 20-23	Insurance Workers	St. Louis, Mo.
May 20-24	Marine Engineers	Montreal, Que.
May 25	Grain Millers	Chicago, Ill.
May (No date set)	Hosiery Workers	Milwaukee, Wis.
May (No date set)	Printers, Die Stampers & Engravers	Philadelphia, Pa.
June 3	Glass Workers	Chicago, Ill.
June 10-11	New Jersey	Atlantic City, N. J.
June 10-12	Idaho	Lewiston, Ida.
June 10-13	Musicians	Miami Beach, Fla.
June 10-14	Communications Workers	Kansas City, Mo.
June 10-14	Leather, Plastics & Novelty Workers	Atlantic City, N. J.
June 13-16	Montana	Billings, Mont.
June 24	Retail Clerks	Chicago, Ill.
July 8	Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen	St. Louis, Mo.
July 8-12	Newspaper Guild	Philadelphia, Pa.
July 15-19	Potters	Las Vegas, Nev.
July 15-20	Switchmen	Buffalo, N. Y.
Aug. 3-9	Typographical Union	Long Beach, Calif.
Aug. 4-8	Maryland-D. C.	Washington, D. C.
Aug. 12-14	Virginia	Richmond, Va.
Aug. 12-16	Brewery Workers	Cincinnati, O.
Aug. 19-22	Texas	Houston, Tex.
Aug. 19-23	Marble, Slate & Stone Polishers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Aug. 19-23	Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers	Chicago, Ill.
Aug. 19-23	Teachers	New York, N. Y.
Aug. 19-24	Photo Engravers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Aug. (No date set)	Utah	(No place set)
Sept. 3	Railway Carmen	Kansas City, Mo.
Sept. 4-6	Connecticut	Hartford, Conn.
Sept. 9	Papermakers & Paperworkers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Sept. 9-13	Barbers, Hairdressers & Cosmetologists	Indianapolis, Ind.
Sept. 9-13	Stereotypers & Electrotypers	Cincinnati, O.
Sept. 9-13	Street & Electric Railway	Minneapolis, Minn.
Sept. 16-18	Minnesota	Minneapolis, Minn.
Sept. 16-20	Allied Industrial Workers	Chicago, Ill.
Sept. 16-20	Oregon	Eugene, Ore.
Sept. 16-20	Woodworkers	Vancouver, B. C.
Sept. 17-19	Iowa	Cedar Rapids, Ia.
Sept. 23-25	Nebraska	Hastings, Neb.
Sept. 26-28	Wyoming	Cheyenne, Wyo.
Sept. 30-Oct. 4	Illinois	Chicago, Ill.
(No date set)	Nevada	Lake Tahoe, Nev.
Sept. or Oct.	Delaware	Wilmington, Del.
Oct. 8-10	Air Line Dispatchers	St. Louis, Mo.
Oct. 14-16	Train Dispatchers	Chicago, Ill.
Oct. 14-18	Commercial Telegraphers	Miami Beach, Fla.
Oct. 21	Brick & Clay Workers	(No place set)
Oct. 21-25	Roofers	New York, N. Y.
Oct. 23-25	New York	Kiamesha Lake, N. Y.
Oct. 24-26	Utility Workers	Chicago, Ill.
Oct. or Nov.	Florida	Coca Beach, Fla.
Oct. (No date set)	Kentucky	Louisville, Ky.
Oct. (No date set)	National Maritime Union	New York, N. Y.
Oct. (No date set)	Massachusetts	(No place set)
Oct. (No date set)	New Hampshire	Manchester, N. H.
Nov. 4-7	Horse Shoers	Houston, Tex.
Nov. 6-8	Building & Construction Trades Dept.	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 12-14	Flight Engineers	(No place set)
Nov. 14	Metal Trades Dept.	New York, N. Y.
Nov. 14-21	AFL-CIO Auxiliaries	New York, N. Y.
Nov. (No date set)	Food & Beverage Trades Dept.	New York, N. Y.
Nov. (No date set)	Maritime Trades Dept.	New York, N. Y.

Key Vote on House Rules Committee

Here is the key rollcall vote by which the House made permanent the 1961 enlargement of the Rules Committee which gave Administration supporters a majority on that powerful committee. The vote was 235-196. Democrats voted 207-48 in support of the Administration motion; Republicans voted 148-28 against.

On labor's scoreboard, a vote for the motion was a right vote (R), while a vote against was a wrong vote (W). Other symbols: A—absent; NV—not voting. Numerals denote districts; AL—at large.

ALABAMA
AL Andrews (D) W
AL Elliott (D) R
AL Grant (D) W
AL Huddleston (D) W
AL Jones (D) R
AL Rains (D) R
AL Roberts (D) R
AL Selden (D) W

ALASKA
AL Rivers (D) R

ARIZONA
1. Rhodes (R) W
2. Udall (D) R
3. Senner (D) R

ARKANSAS
1. Gathings (D) W
2. Mills (D) R
3. Trimble (D) R
4. Harris (D) R

CALIFORNIA
1. Vacancy
2. Johnson (D) R
3. Moss (D) R
4. Leggett (D) R
5. Shelley (D) R
6. Mailliard (R) W
7. Cohelan (D) R
8. Miller (D) R
9. Edwards (D) R
10. Gubser (R) W
11. Younger (R) W
12. Talcott (R) W
13. Teague (R) W
14. Baldwin (R) R
15. McFall (D) R
16. Sisk (D) R
18. Hagen (D) R
33. Sheppard (D) R
34. Hanna (D) R
35. Utt (R) W
36. Wilson, Bob (R) W
37. Van Deerlin (D) R
38. Martin (R) W

Los Angeles County
17. King (D) R
19. Holifield (D) R
20. Smith (R) W
21. Hawkins (D) R
22. Corman (D) R
23. Doyle (D) R
24. Lipscomb (R) W
25. Cameron (D) R
26. Roosevelt (D) R
27. Burkhalter (D) R
28. Bell (R) W
29. Brown, Jr. (D) R
30. Roybal (D) R
31. Wilson, Charles (D) R
32. Hosmer (R) W

COLORADO
1. Rogers (D) R
2. Brotzman (R) W
3. Chenoweth (R) W
4. Aspinall (D) R

CONNECTICUT
AL Grabowski (D) R
1. Daddario (D) R
2. St. Onge (D) R
3. Giaimo (D) R
4. Sibal (R) R
5. Monagan (D) R

DELAWARE
AL McDowell (D) R

FLORIDA
1. Sikes (D) R
2. Bennett (D) R
3. Pepper (D) R
4. Fascell (D) R
5. Herlong (D) W
6. Rogers (D) W
7. Haley (D) W
8. Matthews (D) W
9. Fuqua (D) W
10. Gibbons (D) R
11. Gurney (R) W
12. Cramer (R) W

GEORGIA
1. Hagan (D) R
2. Pilcher (D) R
3. Forrester (D) R
4. Flynt (D) R
5. Weltner (D) R
6. Vinson (D) R
7. Davis (D) R
8. Tuten (D) R
9. Landrum (D) R
10. Stephens (D) R

HAWAII
AL Gill (D) R
AL Matsunaga (D) R

IDAHO
1. White (D) A
2. Harding (D) R

ILLINOIS
12. McClory (R) W
14. Hoffman (R) W
15. Reid (R) W
16. Anderson (R) W
17. Arends (R) W
18. Michel (R) W
19. McLoskey (R) W
20. Findley (R) W
21. Gray (D) R
22. Springer (R) W
23. Shipley (D) R
24. Price (D) R

Chicago-Cook County
1. Dawson (D) R
2. O'Hara (D) R
3. Murphy (D) R
4. Derwinski (R) W
5. Kluczynski (D) R
6. O'Brien (D) R
7. Libonati (D) R
8. Rostenkowski (D) R
9. Finnegan (D) R
10. Collier (R) W
11. Pucinski (D) R
13. Rumsfeld (R) W

INDIANA
1. Madden (D) R
2. Halleck (R) W
3. Brademas (D) R
4. Adair (R) W
5. Roush (D) R
6. Roudebush (R) W
7. Bray (R) W
8. Denton (D) R
9. Wilson (R) W
10. Harvey (R) W
11. Bruce (R) W

IOWA
1. Schwengel (R) W
2. Bromwell (R) W
3. Gross (R) W
4. Kyl (R) W
5. Smith (D) R
6. Hoeven (R) W
7. Jensen (R) W

KANSAS
1. Dole (R) W
2. Avery (R) W
3. Ellsworth (R) R
4. Shriver (R) W
5. Skubitz (R) W

KENTUCKY
1. Stubblefield (D) R
2. Natcher (D) R
3. Snyder (R) W
4. Chelf (D) R
5. Siler (R) W
6. Watts (D) R
7. Perkins (D) R

LOUISIANA
1. Hebert (D) W
2. Boggs (D) R
3. Willis (D) R
4. Waggonner (D) W
5. Passman (D) W
6. Morrison (D) R
7. Thompson (D) R
8. Long (D) R

MAINE
1. Tupper (R) R
2. McIntire (R) W

MARYLAND
AL Sickles (D) R
1. Morton (R) W
2. Long (D) R
3. Garmatz (D) R
4. Fallon (D) R
5. Lankford (D) R
6. Mathias (R) R
7. Friedel (D) R

MASSACHUSETTS
1. Conte (R) R
2. Boland (D) R
3. Philbin (D) R
4. Donohue (D) R
5. Morse (R) R
6. Bates (R) R
7. MacDonald (D) R
8. O'Neill (D) R
9. McCormack (D) (Speaker) NV
10. Martin (R) R
11. Burke (D) R
12. Keith (R) W

MICHIGAN
AL Staebler (D) R
2. Meader (R) W
3. Johansen (R) W
4. Hutchinson (R) W
5. Ford (R) W
6. Chamberlain (R) W
7. O'Hara (D) R
8. Harvey (R) W
9. Griffin (R) W
10. Cederberg (R) W
11. Knox (R) W
12. Bennett (R) R
18. Broomfield (R) R

Metropolitan Detroit
1. Nedzi (D) R
13. Diggs (D) R
14. Ryan (D) R
15. Dingell (D) R
16. Lesinski (D) R
17. Griffiths (D) R

MINNESOTA
1. Quie (R) W
2. Nelsen (R) W
3. MacGregor (R) W
4. Karth (D) R
5. Fraser (D) R
6. Olson (D) R
7. Langen (R) W
8. Blatnik (D) R

MISSISSIPPI
1. Abernethy (D) W
2. Whitten (D) W
3. Williams (D) W
4. Winstead (D) W
5. Colmer (D) W

MISSOURI
1. Karsten (D) R
2. Curtis (R) W
3. Sullivan (D) R
4. Randall (D) R
5. Bolling (D) R
6. Hull (D) R
7. Hall (R) W
8. Ichord (D) R
9. Cannon (D) W
10. Jones (D) W

MONTANA
1. Olsen (D) R
2. Battin (R) W

NEBRASKA
1. Beermann (R) W
2. Cunningham (R) W
3. Martin (R) W

NEVADA
AL Baring (D) W

NEW HAMPSHIRE
1. Wyman (R) W
2. Cleveland (R) W

NEW JERSEY
1. Cahill (R) R
2. Glenn (R) R
3. Auchincloss (R) W
4. Thompson (D) R
5. Frelinghuysen (R) W
6. Dwyer (R) R
7. Widnall (R) W
8. Joelson (D) R
9. Osmers (R) R
10. Rodino (D) R
11. Minish (D) R
12. Wallhauser (R) R
13. Gallagher (D) R
14. Daniels (D) R
15. Patten (D) R

NEW MEXICO
AL Montoya (D) R
AL Morris (D) R

NEW YORK
1. Pike (D) R
2. Grover (R) R
3. Derounian (R) W
4. Wydler (R) W
5. Becker (R) W
25. Barry (R) W
26. Reid (R) R
27. St. George (R) W
28. Wharton (R) W
29. O'Brien (D) R
30. King (R) W
31. Kilburn (R) W
32. Pirnie (R) W
33. Robison (R) W
34. Riehlman (R) W
35. Stratton (D) R
36. Horton (R) R
37. Ostertag (R) W
38. Goodell (R) W
39. Pillion (R) W
40. Miller (R) W
41. Dulski (D) R

New York City
6. Halpern (R) R
7. Addabbo (D) R
8. Rosenthal (D) R
9. Delaney (D) R
10. Celler (D) R
11. Keogh (D) R
12. Kelly (D) R
13. Multer (D) R
14. Rooney (D) R
15. Carey (D) R
16. Murphy (D) R
17. Lindsay (R) R
18. Powell (D) R
19. Farbstein (D) R
20. Ryan (D) R
21. Healey (D) R
22. Gilbert (D) R
23. Buckley (D) R
24. Fino (R) R

NORTH CAROLINA
1. Bonner (D) R
2. Fountain (D) W
3. Henderson (D) R
4. Cooley (D) R
5. Scott (D) W
6. Kornegay (D) W
7. Lennon (D) W
8. Jonas (R) W
9. Broyhill (R) W
10. Whitener (D) W
11. Taylor (D) R

NORTH DAKOTA
1. Nygaard (R) W
2. Short (R) W

OHIO
AL Taft (R) W
1. Rich (R) W
2. Clancy (R) W
3. Schenck (R) W
4. McCulloch (R) W
5. Latta (R) W
6. Harsha (R) W
7. Brown (R) W
8. Betts (R) W
9. Ashley (D) R
10. Abele (R) W
11. Bolton, Oliver (R) W
12. Devine (R) W
13. Mosher (R) W
14. Ayres (R) R
15. Secrest (D) R
16. Bow (R) W
17. Ashbrook (R) W
18. Hays (D) R
19. Kirwan (D) R
20. Feighan (D) R
21. Vanik (D) R
22. Bolton, Frances (R) W
23. Minshall (R) W

OKLAHOMA
1. Belcher (R) W
2. Edmondson (D) R
3. Albert (D) R
4. Steed (D) R
5. Jarman (D) W
6. Wickersham (D) R

OREGON
1. Norblad (R) W
2. Ullman (D) R
3. Green (D) R
4. Duncan (D) R

PENNSYLVANIA
6. Rhodes (D) R
7. Milliken (R) W
8. Curtin (R) W
9. Dague (R) W
10. McDade (R) R
11. Flood (D) R
12. Whalley (R) W
13. Schweiker (R) W
14. Moorhead (D) R
15. Walter (D) R
16. Kunkel (R) W
17. Schneebeli (R) W
18. Corbett (R) R
19. Goodling (R) W
20. Holland (D) R
21. Dent (D) R
22. Saylor (R) R
23. Gavin (R) W
24. Weaver (R) W
25. Clark (D) R
26. Morgan (D) R
27. Fulton (R) W

Philadelphia
1. Barrett (D) R
2. Nix (D) R
3. Byrne (D) R
4. Toll (D) R
5. Green (D) R

RHODE ISLAND
1. St. Germain (D) R
2. Fogarty (D) R

SOUTH CAROLINA
1. Rivers (D) W
2. Watson (D) W
3. Dorn (D) W
4. Ashmore (D) W
5. Hemphill (D) R
6. McMillan (D) W

SOUTH DAKOTA
1. Reifel (R) W
2. Berry (R) W

TENNESSEE
1. Quillen (R) W
2. Baker (R) W
3. Brock (R) W
4. Evins (D) R
5. Fulton (D) R
6. Bass (D) R
7. Murray (D) A
8. Everett (D) W
9. Davis (D) W

TEXAS
AL Pool (D) R
1. Patman (D) R
2. Brooks (D) R
3. Beckworth (D) W
4. Roberts (D) R
5. Alger (R) W
6. Teague (D) R
7. Dowdy (D) W
8. Thomas (D) R
9. Thompson (D) R
10. Thornberry (D) R
11. Poage (D) R
12. Wright (D) R
13. Purcell (D) R
14. Young (D) R
15. Kilgore (D) W
16. Foreman (R) W
17. Burleson (D) W
18. Rogers (D) W
19. Mahon (D) R
20. Gonzalez (D) R
21. Fisher (D) W
22. Casey (D) W

UTAH
1. Burton (R) W
2. Lloyd (R) W

VERMONT
AL Stafford (R) R

VIRGINIA
1. Downing (D) W
2. Hardy (D) W
3. Gary (D) W
4. Abbitt (D) W
5. Tuck (D) W
6. Poff (R) W
7. Marsh (D) W
8. Smith (D) W
9. Jennings (D) R
10. Broyhill (R) W

WASHINGTON
1. Pelly (R) W
2. Westland (R) W
3. Hansen (D) R
4. May (R) W
5. Horan (R) W
6. Tollefson (R) W
7. Stinson (R) W

WEST VIRGINIA
1. Moore (R) W
2. Staggers (D) R
3. Slack (D) R
4. Hechler (D) R
5. Kee (D) R

WISCONSIN
1. Schadeberg (R) W
2. Kastenmeier (D) R
3. Thomson (R) W
4. Zablocki (D) R
5. Reuss (D) R
6. Van Pelt (R) W
7. Laird (R) W
8. Byrnes (R) W
9. Johnson (D) R
10. O'Konski (R) R

WYOMING
AL Harrison (R) W

Senate Rules Reform Drive:

Dirksen, Southerners Join To Battle Filibuster Curbs

A familiar Senate coalition of right-wing Republicans and southern Democrats moved rapidly to crush in its infancy a bipartisan liberal drive to amend the Senate rules so as to make it easier to cut off debate.

On the third day of what had been expected to be a long, grueling fight to break a southern filibuster against an anti-filibuster rule, Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) served notice that he will seek to table the rules change proposals. The effect, if his motion is passed, would be to kill rules reform for the next two years and make it unlikely that any meaningful civil rights legislation will be adopted by the 88th Congress.

Dirksen declared he is "quite willing" to retain the existing rule —which requires two-thirds of senators present and voting to limit debate.

Rules reform, he opined, "isn't going anywhere. There's no steam in it."

Spokesmen for senators leading the anti-filibuster fight voiced confidence that the tabling motion would be defeated, at least against the moderate proposal that would enable three-fifths of senators present and voting to limit debate.

This is the motion, backed by Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.), which has been introduced by Senators Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. M.) and Thruston B. Morton (R-Ky.).

A nosecount by supporters has indicated that a majority of the Senate would presently favor such a rule.

Before falling back on a three-fifths compromise, however, another bipartisan group, including both Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) and GOP Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.), have served notice they will seek a vote on a rule permitting a majority of the full Senate—51 members—to limit debate.

Battle at Outposts

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, the engagement was still being fought at the outposts of the southerners' line of defense.

Before the Senate was a motion to bring to the floor the resolution calling for a rules change—and that motion itself was subject to debate.

If the tabling motions are defeated, the rules reform advocates plan to bring into play their reserve weapon—the argument that each Senate has the right to draw up its rules at the beginning of a new Congress by majority vote—without being blocked by rules adopted in a preceding Congress.

The rules reformers contend this is a "constitutional right" of the Senate.

Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, who presides over the Senate, made it clear on the opening day of debate that he will refer any constitutional question raised to the Senate itself for determination. He will not, he emphasized, give an "advisory opinion" on the merits of the issue, as former Vice Pres. Richard Nixon had on several occasions. Nixon's views had supported the position that the Senate could change its rules at the start of a new Congress by majority vote.

Clarification by Douglas

While most of the early debate dealt with broad principles—rights of minorities as contrasted with rights of majorities—Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) brought bluntly into focus the core of the issue for most participants.

The "main purpose" of a rules change, he declared, is to facilitate passage of civil rights legislation.

He pointed out that cloture was invoked against him and other liberal senators last year to pass the Telstar bill, but has never been successfully applied to pass a civil rights bill.

Church Unit Supports Equal Pay for Women

The executive board of the Division of Christian Life & Work of the National Council of the Churches of Christ has adopted a resolution calling for equal pay for women.

The resolution was earlier adopted by the general committee of the Dept. of the Church & Economic Life. It was presented by the Rev. Charles C. Webber, who recently retired as representative for religious relations for the AFL-CIO.

It will now be submitted for final action to the general board of the National Council during a meeting in Denver, Feb. 25-Mar. 1.

Equal pay for equal work is a matter of economic justice, the resolution said, adding that there is "a clear case of unjust discrimination against women as a group of workers. . . ."

"The justice of this principle as a matter of national and international concern," it declared, "has been widely recognized through the acceptance by 38 countries of the convention on the subject adopted by the United Nations' Int. Labor Organization. . . .

"The General Board calls to the attention of member communions of the National Council the special opportunity which is theirs to support this principle in their own employment practices, and to encourage a climate of acceptance of the principle by their churches and church members."

The AFL-CIO has repeatedly urged congressional action to establish equal pay for women. A bill requiring that employers pay women the same scale as men for equal work passed the House last year, but died in the Senate Labor Committee.

JIMMY BOGGESS, the 25th anniversary March of Dimes boy, is shown discussing the upcoming March of Dimes campaign with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. Jimmy, who is 5, is from Panama City, Fla. Money from the campaign will go to fight two cripplers—birth defects and arthritis. Labor contributions, to be properly credited, should go to National Labor Division, March of Dimes, 800 Second Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

W. PAT JENNINGS

ROSS BASS

TWO KENNEDY SUPPORTERS, Rep. W. Pat Jennings (Va.) and Rep. Ross Bass (Tenn.) were elected by the House Democratic caucus to the Ways & Means Committee, which will handle such major legislation as tax revision and social security health care.

Bass, Jennings Elected To Ways & Means Unit

(Continued from Page 1)

of normal alliances and the election of the two Kennedy supporters as replacements for conservatives—Rep. Burr P. Harrison (D-Va.), who retired from Congress, and Rep. James B. Frazier, Jr. (D-Tenn.), defeated in his party's primary largely because of his opposition to medicare.

The Ways & Means Committee, headed by Rep. Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), has long been considered a conservative bulwark, but the addition of two liberals comes close to giving supporters of social security health care a majority. In the last Congress, an unofficial count showed medicare backers only three short of the 13 votes needed to bring out a bill. All were Democrats; the 10 Republican members were solidly hostile.

Tax cuts and reform, however, will be the first major issue before the committee. Other Administration and labor-supported legislation will presumably wait until a tax bill is reported.

Mansfield, Dirksen to Shift

With an influx of new congressmen and senators from both parties to be assigned to committees and widespread jockeying by returning members for more prestigious assignments, it will probably be at least the end of January before the musical-chair shuffling has been completed and committees can begin to consider some of the hundreds of bills which have been introduced.

In some of the shifts already indicated, Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) is scheduled to claim a seat on the Finance Committee, which will give him a greater role in shaping tax policy.

Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.), has indicated he will move to the Appropriations Committee. He may give up his chairmanship of the Senate Rules Committee—a minor post compared with its House counterpart—to make the shift.

Sen. Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) is in line for chairmanship of the Interior Committee, whose present chairman, Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.), has indicated he will take the chairmanship of the Space Committee.

A Senate Republican conference chose Sen. Thruston B. Morton (Ky.), a former GOP National Committee chairman, to replace Sen. Barry M. Goldwater (Ariz.), as head of the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee. Goldwater's term expires in 1964 and the campaign committee post is customarily assigned to a senator who is not up for re-election.

Strikebreaking Work Factor in OEIU Win

New York—Office Employes Local 153 by a 2-1 margin has won a National Labor Relations Board representation election among office and clerical employes of the Home Lines.

The union said the overwhelming vote reflected "increasing dissatisfaction" of clerical workers with the steamship line's requirement that they handle passenger baggage during the Longshoremen's strike.

Industry Aide Urges Apprentices Never to Forget Union Heritage

Los Angeles—A group of apprentice electricians graduating to full-fledged journeyman status here was given a fervent plea never to forget their trade union heritage and to make of their lives "living monuments to the tradition of organized labor."

The appeal was all the more striking because it came from an unusual source—a spokesman for management.

Charles Scholibo, director of the National Electrical Contractors Association, told the new journeymen —members of Local 11 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers —to remember that "the organizational rights, privileges and responsibilities you enjoy today were bequeathed to you by workers of an earlier generation."

Those workers, Scholibo continued, "gave unselfishly of their time, talents and even their lives to the cause of freedom from oppression and justice for the exploited."

This is "your heritage, and you have a solemn obligation to preserve and extend it to those less fortunate," he declared in an address to the graduating class, which included Thomas L. Pitts, Jr., son of the California AFL-CIO's executive secretary-treasurer.

Unions, Scholibo said, "are not business enterprises, but are living, dynamic organisms that enable workers to express their desires and aspirations. They are dedicated unselfishly to the service of others."

Through the "years of struggle for the right to exist, a genuine sense of brotherhood and fraternity among organized workers has developed that should always be preserved," the employer representative declared.

Referring to news stories playing up exposures of wrongdoing in a few unions, Scholibo observed that "the overwhelming majority of unions are decent and honest, but this is not newsworthy; only sin and corruption make news."

"Labor," he said, "is in the forefront of the fight for a decent education for every American child. It is a champion of fair play in promoting civil rights and legislation against formidable opposition.

"Labor believes in the principles of freedom and democracy, which means economic, social and political justice for all."

Kennedy Puts Top Priority on Tax Cut

Meany Sees Impact Inadequate for Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

duction, profits, wages and public revenues."

"It would mean an end to the persistent slack which has kept unemployment at or above 5 percent for 61 out of 62 months—and an end to the growing pressures for such restrictive measures as the 35-hour week," which he said "could increase hourly labor costs by as much as 14 percent, start a new wage-price inflation, and undercut our efforts to compete with other nations."

'Want Jobs,' Meany Says

"What we want is jobs," said AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in a comment on the President's message.

"The economic goals of the President are precisely those of the AFL-CIO. Achievement of the continued economic growth which America needs and of which it is capable will eliminate the scourge of persistent mass unemployment," Meany declared.

"That is what we want. If we can achieve a full-employment economy at 40 hours a week, there will be no happier Americans than the workers who are members of AFL-CIO unions.

"But what we want is jobs. Aspirations are not a substitute for action. Unless and until this nation makes a substantial dent in its long-standing unemployment, we must and will continue to press for the 35-hour week."

Presenting his program for the upcoming year to the Congress elected last November, Kennedy said that "the state of this old but youthful Union, in the 175th year of its life, is good," but warned that "we cannot be satisfied to rest" where we are.

The recession in business is "behind us," he said, as a million more people are employed than were working a year ago and factories that lay idle two years ago are "humming with activity."

But "the absence of recession is not growth" and the "absence of war is not peace," he observed.

Phrasing his recommendations to Congress largely in general terms, the President said we must "strengthen the nation" by investing in new programs for youth, by safeguarding the health of citizens, by protecting basic civil rights and by "making the best and most economical use" of natural resources and facilities.

'Not To Be Postponed'

The measures sought, he indicated, would include "new measures that we cannot afford to postpone" in such areas as mental health and a domestic peace corps, health care for the aged under social security, the protection of the voting rights of all citizens and the right to counsel of all citizens accused under federal law of crimes.

Such programs can be achieved without increased total non-defense expenditures, he said, "by holding down the budgetary cost of existing programs."

Investments in improving "the quality of American life" and in stimulating economic growth "are not domestic concerns alone," he emphasized.

"Nothing we could do to help the developing countries would help them half as much as a booming U.S. economy," he said.

The time is past, the President told Congress, when world communism could successfully convey the image of "a unified, confident and expanding empire closing in on a sluggish America and a Free World in disarray."

In the past few months "we have reaffirmed the scientific and military superiority of freedom," he declared, and strengthened freedom's frontiers "from Viet Nam to West Berlin."

He cited the Atlantic Alliance, the developing nations, the new difficulties between the Soviet Union and Communist China and leadership in the worldwide search for peace as offering "special avenues of opportunity" for the immediate future.

The President acknowledged "honest differences of opinion among honorable associates" within the Atlantic Alliance, where Britain is seeking entrance into the Common Market and French Pres. Charles De Gaulle desires independent nuclear strength. The first task of the alliance, Kennedy said nevertheless, "remains the common defense," and he cited his recent agreement with Great Britain on the Polaris missile as opening the door "for nuclear defense to become a source of confidence instead of a cause of contention."

Success of Aid Cited

On foreign aid he declared that this progress, "evolved with bipartisan support in three administrations," has helped keep more than 50 new nations from surrendering to Communist control.

The Soviet-Chinese rift, the President observed, is "a strain, not a fracture." But "the disarray of the Communist empire has been heightened" by the "formidable forces" of nationalism and freedom and by the "gross inefficiency" of Communist economies.

If our adversaries choose peaceful competition hereafter, Kennedy said, then "areas of agreement can be very wide indeed: a clear understanding about Berlin, stability in Southeast Asia, an end to nuclear testing, new checks of surprise or accidental attack, and ultimately disarmament."

"The winds of change appear to be blowing more strongly than ever," he said in closing on what he called a note of hope. "We welcome these winds of change—and we have every reaseon to believe that our tide is running strong."

Kennedy's statements on proposed tax cuts indicated a strong stress on increased purchasing power and higher business investment even at the cost of temporary budget deficits.

To keep the deficits "manageable," he said, he proposed phasing tax cuts over the three-year period from now through 1965. A reduction in rates for 1963, he said, could be partly offset next year by selected reforms to broaden the tax base, remove hardships, and "end unfair or unnecesary preferences."

There should also be a gradual shift of corporation tax payments to a current time schedule. The ultimate results would be a "net reduction in tax liabilities of $10 billion" on an annual basis and would achieve in time "a balanced budget full-employment economy"

THE STATE OF THE UNION was analyzed by Pres. Kennedy in his appearance before a joint session of Congress on Jan. 14. He is shown as he delivered his address to the representatives and senators.

Southern Railway Strike Halted by Court Order

A scheduled strike by the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen against the Southern Railway was blocked temporarily by a federal court order, but the three and one-half year dispute remain unsettled.

The union has accused the company of violating national work rules by operating both freight and passenger trains without qualified firemen on duty and by refusing to hire enough firemen to meet its needs.

By not filling vacancies, the union said, employes have been required to work "unreasonably long miles or hours" and scheduled vacations have been cancelled.

The BFFE declared that "a crtical labor relations situation exists on the Southern Railroad due to a deliberate three and one-half year effort by the railroad's officers to unilaterally change the legal contract" and "to nullify the working agreement through arbitrary violations of its provisions."

Twelve hours before the Jan. 13 strike deadline, U.S. District Judge Leonard P. Walsh. in Washington, D. C., issued a temporary restraining order halting the walkout and set a hearing for Jan. 22.

Earlier the same judge had denied the union's request for a preliminary injuction barring the railroad from violations of its agreement.

"It appears," he said, "that Southern is changing the conditions of work with respect to firemen on its locomotives, and in doing so is evading the provisions of Sec. 6 of the Railway Labor Act. This, however, can be more fully developed and disposed of upon a full hearing of the complaint."

Factory Hirings Drop, Labor Dept. Reports

Factory hirings in November dropped from 39 per 1,000 to 29 per 1,000—slightly more than the average change from October to November in recent years—and the layoff rate remained at its October level of 22 per 1,000, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Labor Dept.

Johnson Stresses Duty To Aid World Hungry

Detroit—Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, meeting with labor leaders in this city's Sheraton-Cadillac Hotel recently, said that regardless of what the trade union movement has accomplished "You can't be satisfied to stop where you are."

The Vice President said that America is "fortunate and blessed" by its high standards of living, high income and good community relations which are due to the leadership of labor.

He pointed out that more than half of the people of the world live on per capita incomes of less than $5 a week—not as a matter of choice, but "because they lack our leadership and resources, and most of all, our system of government."

Calling these the most challenging and exciting times in history, Johnson said we must fulfill our responsibility to the rest of the world.

"We can't let up as long as there are hungry people in the world," he said.

Discussing the present session of Congress, Johnson said there must be rules changes in order to allow the majority their voice in government, and he compared the issue of medical care for the aged to that of Social Security in the 30's.

The Vice President said that under the health care plan people spend $13 a year to provide for medical needs in later years.

As to opposition from doctors, Johnson said the medicare plan was good business, as "the doctor is in better shape if the patient has the money with which to pay him."

Johnson was in Detroit to open Wayne State University's Emancipation Centennial observance and interrupted a busy schedule to meet with local labor leaders. The meeting was arranged by Pres. Al Barbour of the Wayne County AFL-CIO. The Vice President was accompanied by Hobart Taylor, vice chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunities.

Screen Actors Guild Names 3 Directors

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Actor Guild has announced the appointment of Claude Akins, Benjie Bancroft and Dolly Jarvis to the union's board of directors, to serve until the annual election next November. They replace Marshall Thompson, James Gonzales and Louise Lareau.

Howard Smith NamedHillman Award Judge

New York—Howard K. Smith, radio and television commentator, has been named a judge of the Sidney Hillman prize awards, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers has announced.

He succeeds Lewis Gannett, who retired after 11 years as a judge of the awards, which honor the memory of the late Sidney Hillman, founding president of the ACWA.

The awards of $500 each, are given to the writers or producers of outstanding fiction and nonfiction books, magazine and newspaper articles, and radio and TV programs, on subjects in which Hillman was interested such as civil liberties, race relations, social welfare, economic security and greater international understanding. The deadline for filing entries of work produced in 1962 is Feb. 1.

Smith joins on the board of judges William L. Shirer, author of Berlin Diary and The Rise and Fall of the Third Reich, who has served since the program was inaugurated 12 years ago, and Alan Barth, editorial writer for the Washington Post.

Born in Louisiana in 1914, Smith was graduated from Tulane University and won a Rhodes scholarship to Oxford University. He joined the American Broadcasting Co. staff in 1961 after 20 years of covering major stories in all parts of the world for the Columbia Broadcasting Co.

1-19-63

Unions to Ask C&O-B&O Merger Ban

The Railway Labor Executives' Association has announced it will seek federal court action to prevent the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad from acquiring control of the rival Baltimore & Ohio line.

RLEA Chairman G. E. Leighty charged that the Interstate Commerce Commission, which approved the stock control move, had not given "adequate consideration to the public interest."

Declaring that the B&O's financial plight has been "vastly exaggerated," Leighty said the stock control would be the first step towards a merger which would cost the jobs of between 4,000 and 8,000 workers on the two railroads.

Leighty denounced "merger mania" in the railroad industry and charged that the ICC has made "no coordinated effort to find out what the effect is going to be on the whole transportation picture."

The law, the union spokesman said, requires the ICC to take the public interest into account in acting on mergers. But, he asserted, "nobody on the commission gets out and really checks into the public interest."

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, January 26, 1963 | No. 4

Kennedy Asks Tax Reform To Aid Low-Income Group

Panel Proposals Accepted:

Dockers, Shippers Vote on New Pact

By Eugene A. Kelly

The way was cleared for settlement of the eastern dockers' strike when negotiators for the New York Shipping Association and the Longshoremen agreed on basic terms of a new two-year agreement.

The terms, proposed by a special panel named by Pres. Kennedy, were expected to end a strike that started Dec. 23, subject to ratification by union members in ports between Searsport, Me., and Norfolk, Va., who started voting Jan. 23; and providing also that similar pacts are agreed to by ILA locals and shipping companies in other Atlantic and Gulf ports.

A three-man panel headed by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) recommended a contract "package" with these benefits:

- Wage increases of 15 cents an hour retroactive to last Oct. 1, and an additional 9 cents next Oct. 1.
- Pension fund increases of 4 cents the first contract year and another 5 cents the second year.
- An additional employer payment of 2.5 cents an hour into the health and welfare fund as of the date the contract is signed.
- An increase of 2 cents an hour into the labor-management fund for medical clinics, to be paid for one year only.
- One additional paid holiday during the second contract year, a cost increase estimated by Morse at 1.5 cents.

The settlement, if ratified in North Atlantic ports, will apply to general cargo handlers. Morse said Kennedy asked the panel to stay in existence until all other groups settle also.

Those groups include employers in South Atlantic and Gulf Coast ports, and ILA local unions comprising cargo handlers, cargo repairmen, checkers, clerks, and two groups listed in the panel's report as general maintenance, mechanical and miscellaneous; horse and cattle fitters, grain ceilers and marine carpenters.

A union spokesman in New York told reporters, "The union won't go back to work until every port gets the same package."

Other Panel Members

Other members of the panel Morse headed are Prof. James J. Healy of Harvard University and Theodore Kheel, New York attorney-arbiter. They tackled the tieup after a strike that started last summer; an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction; resumption of the strike Dec. 23 after the ILA rejected the shippers' so-called "final offer"; and failure of management and the ILA to agree on settlement terms thereafter.

The negotiators had agreed earlier, at the suggestion of Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, that the demand of management for changes in work rules be referred for study during the first year of the new agreement.

Morse said his panel proposed that after Wirtz completes his study of manpower use, labor and management should try to agree on work rules and that if they cannot, an impartial panel should hear arguments and make recommendations.

Employers and dock unions in South Atlantic and Gulf ports, Morse told a news conference, "have the clear public duty" to proceed promptly to "adjust their contracts in line with the New York settlement."

Morse described the panel's pro-

(Continued on Page 2)

PRES. KENNEDY and the special panel he named to settle the strike of East Coast longshoremen are shown in the White House after the panel's report was submitted. Left to right, Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.); Kennedy; Prof. James J. Healy of Harvard University, and Theodore Kheel, New York attorney and arbitrator.

The Economy in 1963:

President Predicts 'Moderate' Growth

By Saul Miller

Pres. Kennedy has predicted a "moderate expansion" of the nation's economy in 1963 but acknowledged it would leave the country "well below" the standards of full employment and full production.

Even if Congress were to adopt the Administration's tax reduction program as submitted, the President and his Council of Economic Advisers candidly state that there would be no appreciable drop in unemployment over the year or increased use of idle plant and capacity.

The President's Economic Report stresses that the lagging economic growth of the past five years is a factor in the 1963 outlook and gives overriding priority to Kennedy's three-year program for tax reduction and reform as the key tool to producing a full-employment economy and a balanced budget—possibly in 1965.

The council, headed by Dr. Walter W. Heller, sketched this picture for 1963 in its annual report, transmitted with the President's message to Congress:

"Neither the average unemployment rate nor excess industrial capacity in 1963 could be expected to decline appreciably (given a real increase in gross national product of about 3.5 percent). Apart from the effects of reduced taxes, real disposable income per capita and corporate profits could grow slowly at best. The prospects for 1963 reflect the same insufficiency of demand that has slowed our growth in the past several years."

GNP Must Grow

The council noted that the gross national product—the total value of all goods and services—must grow nearly $20 billion in 1963 merely to keep the average unemployment rate at the 1962 level of 5.6 percent. The estimated GNP growth in 1963 is about $24 billion.

To have the unemployment rate fall by one percentage point during 1963, the council said, the GNP in constant prices would have to increase by about 6.5 percent rather than the anticipated 3.5 percent.

An 8 to 9 percent increase in

(Continued on Page 11)

Warns Cut In Spending Dangerous

By John M. Barry

Pres. Kennedy has coupled his promised program of $13.6 billion in individual and corporate tax reduction with reform measures he said would reduce hardships for low-income families and cut back special treatment enjoyed by upper-bracket taxpayers under capital gains treatment and stock option plans.

The President submitted his proposals to Congress with the plea that they be enacted promptly as "a single integrated program."

Declaring that the nation's economy is "checkreined" by current tax rates at a time "when it is far more in need of the spur than the bit," Kennedy said that major tax revision along the lines he proposed is needed to expand "both consumer demand and investment" and thereby "raise production and income, provide jobs for the unemployed, and take up the slack in the economy."

Kennedy warned it would be "a grave mistake" to require that a tax cut be offset by a corresponding cut in spending.

Spending at 'Minimum'

He said he had proposed the "minimum level of federal expenditures needed for the security of the nation" and "the challenge facing us in space, and for the well-being of our people."

"Moreover," he added, "the gains in demand from tax reduction would then be offset—or more than offset—by the loss of demand due to the reduction in government spending."

He warned, too, against cutting back the amount of his proposed tax cuts, declaring that "too small a tax cut would be a waste, gaining us little but further deficits."

The President called for rate reductions over three years that would reduce tax liabilities by $11 billion for individuals and $2.6 billion for corporations. His proposed structural reforms, some of which would lose and some of which

(Continued on Page 12)

Liberals to Try for Showdown Vote In Fight to Reform Senate Rules

By David L. Perlman

Senators leading an anti-filibuster rules reform drive set Jan. 28 for their first move to force a showdown vote in the face of a two-week-old southern filibuster.

Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N. M.) said he will ask the Senate to uphold the contention that rules adopted in a preceding Congress are not binding at the start of a new Congress until the Senate has either adopted or "acquiesced" in them. Speaking for both wings of a bipartisan coalition backing a rules change, Anderson's argument is that operating solely under the Constitution, a majority of the Senate can close debate over adoption of rules.

The rules reform supporters, however, were still seeking a means of bringing their constitutional claim to a vote. Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson said that he will refer any issue of constitutional interpretation to the full Senate for decision.

But, he added, the constitutional issue is itself debatable. And he declined to "hypothesize" as to how the Senate can vote on the interpretation if the southerners continue their filibuster.

Anderson and Sen. Thruston B. Morton (R-Ky.) are co-sponsors of a proposed rule to permit three-fifths of senators present and voting to limit debate. The Senate's rules, adopted in 1959, require two-thirds of those present and voting to invoke cloture.

(Continued on Page 12)

OCAW Local Again Heads COPE Parade

Oil Workers Local 2-653 of Riverside, Wyo., for the second successive year is the first local union in the United States to reach 100 percent in its 1963 Dollar Drive for the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education. This year it waited only until Jan. 8 before chalking up its perfect record.

CUBAN REFUGEES Emilio Ham, right, and his sister Magdalena, left, have found a haven—and jobs—through the aid of Knitgood Workers Local 155 of the Ladies' Garment Workers, New York, and its Cuban Trade Union Committee. The picture shows Emilio, one of the 1,113 prisoners recently liberated from a Castro jail, with his sister and their brother, Jorge, the latter on furlough from the U.S. Army.

Knitgoods Local Helps Cubans Find Jobs and a Brighter Future

New York—Several hundred refugees from Castroism in Cuba have found jobs and hope of a brighter future with the help of resourceful trade unionists here.

As the problems of both recent refugees and those who had migrated here earlier became known, a job-training program was set up by members of Knitgoods Local 155, Ladies' Garment Workers, with the aid of employers in the United Knitwear Manufacturers League.

Men and women who had been cooks, teachers, engineers and sales people were trained for new jobs where needed. A Cuban Trade Union Committee was established to ease the transition from Castroism to freedom in other ways, including advances of money for food, clothing and transportation; general adult education and housing.

One of the recent beneficiaries of the program is Emilio Ham, who was among the 1,113 prisoners liberated from a Cuban prison camp last Christmas. The union found a job for Emilio, who had a reunion at Local 155 headquarters with his sister, Magdalena, and brother, Jorge, furloughed from a U.S. Army post for the occasion. Emilio has now joined his brother and sister as a member of the union.

Other survivors of the Bay of Pigs invasion and relatives of the captured men have been assisted. Many have said that except for the help of Local 155, they might still be jobless and destitute.

The aid program was set up when members of the local, many of them born in Cuba, voted on their own initiative to establish an assistance fund. The Knitgoods Union's offices promptly began to fill with eager applicants for aid, and the operation moved into high gear.

Members of the union staff and of the volunteer committee donated their services before and after working hours to process applications and visit the refugee families in their homes.

The work day was established on a three-shift basis so that the union office would be open at all hours of the day and night. A steady flow of applicants was stimulated by radio and press here and in Miami and by the Intl. Rescue Committee.

ILGWU Vice Pres. Louis Nelson, manager of Local 155, recalled that the union had a long tradition of assistance to victims of Nazism, communism and other tyrannical regimes. He hopes that "those we help today will become the future leaders of a free Cuba," he said.

Typical of Cuban families aided by the assistance program are these:

- A mother of four young children, three months behind in her rent and facing eviction, was aided in getting a job, money for rent, and food until the first pay check arrived.
- The wife of a 20-year-old refugee, who fled together from Cuba, was taken to a hospital to bear their first child. The local and the employers' association, got him a job as an apprentice knitter and helped him set up a home.

Woods Workers Win Pattern Pact

Port Arthur, Ont.—Wage increases and shorter hours were gained for 2,000 members in three locals of the Lumber & Sawmill Workers in a new two-year contract with the Abitibi Power & Paper Co.

The agreement, regarded as a pattern-setter in Northern Ontario, calls for wage increases of 6 cents an hour retroactive to Sept. 1, 1962, and a cut from 44 to 40 hours a week effective Sept. 1, 1963, with no reduction in pay. Piece rates were increased 2 percent on both dates.

The union, a unit of the Carpenters, also won a "poor bush bonus" of 75 cents a cord on cut wood running under 10 cords per acre.

Panel Proposals Clear Way to Peace on Docks

(Continued from Page 1)

posal as "well within federal wage guidelines," not inflationary, and "inside the framework of living costs and wage inequities."

"We told the employers," he said, "that if they claim they cannot pay the price, they open themselves to a demand that they open their books."

On the pension issue, Morse reported to Kennedy that the two-step increase in pension payments proposed by his panel will have this result by next Oct. 1:

- An increase of pension benefits to $100 a month from the present $85 average.
- Extension of the improved benefits to persons now retired or about to be retired.
- An increase in the death benefit to $500.
- Establishment of vested pension rights after 25 years of service.

The board recommended that the parties make a study of the medical care program, covering dockworkers and their families, before the end of the first contract year.

It is the board's belief, Morse said, that medical service for workers and their families could be more comprehensive if the plan were adjusted to make more effective use of present employer payments—15 cents an hour for health and welfare benefits, plus 6 cents an hour for clinic services.

The Labor Dept. study of manpower utilization and job security should be comprehensive, the panel advised Kennedy, as to gang size, work force flexibility, severance pay, register closing, automation and other problems. A similar study should be made in all ports, it was agreed.

Morse Calls Dock Terms 'Fair, Just'

The contract settlement recommended by a special presidential panel in the dock strike was "fair and just" to both sides, Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.), panel chairman, said in Washington.

Commenting on criticism by editorialists and others, he said that if the board is called on to defend its "package" in public, "we will have to open up all the windows of this dispute—all the economic facets, including some close and dear to American shipowners as well as workers."

Shipowners could not in the national interest justify a refusal to accept the proposal, said Morse.

Expanding Role Reflected:

Budget Requests Up For Labor, Agencies

The expanding role of federal labor agencies in combatting persistent high unemployment and striving for industrial peace is reflected in sharp budget increases proposed by Pres. Kennedy.

The President's budget message anticipates total Labor Dept. budget needs of $433 million in fiscal 1964, up about $195 million from the latest estimates for the current year ending next June 30. The bulk of the increase would go into stepped-up activities in the area of manpower development and training, including a proposed new program for youth employment opportunities.

Among the independent labor agencies, the National Labor Relations Board would get the biggest hike, some $2 million more than the $21 million estimate for this fiscal year, to take care of expected increases of 9 percent in unfair practice cases and 8 percent in representation cases.

The budget for the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service calls for an increase of $753,000 over this year's $5.2 million to permit greater use of outside consultants, individually or in panels, in the mediation of complex collective bargaining disputes.

Key Labor Dept. Items

Key items in the Labor Dept. budget for 1964 are $165 million for manpower development and training activities, up $195 million, and $60 million to cover future legislative proposals to provide employment and training opportunities for youth.

The department anticipates that about 140,000 unemployed workers will avail themselves of services under the Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962, double the number for the current year.

The budget message to Congress laid particular stress on the need for a youth opportunities program because unemployment among youth currently is running about 2.5 times higher than the rate for adults. A similar program was approved by the House Education & Labor Committee last year, but was blocked by the Rules Committee.

Other highlights of the Labor Dept. budget:

- An increase of nearly 20 percent—from $14.6 million to $18.6 million—for the Bureau of Labor Statistics to undertake new programs based on recommendations by a Presidential study committee for improvement of the bureau's services. Among these will be extension and improvement of household sampling, a breakdown of job statistics by occupation, development of an occupational outlook program, and initiation of studies to pinpoint job vacancies.
- An increase of $18 million in spending by the U.S. Employment Service, bringing its total budget to $169 million, most of which is provided by trust funds and not congressional appropriations. The President's message noted that improvements in the service last year had resulted in a record level of job placements.
- $935,000 for the Bureau of Intl. Labor Affairs, up $160,000, to expand technical assistance and exchange programs for students and labor personnel.
- $1.7 million for the new Office of Welfare & Pension Plans, an increase of $420,000 over expenditures in the same area this year reflecting full-scale operations under the Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act.
- An extra $1.2 million for the Wage-Hour Div., to bring the total to $19.3 million. This takes into account the scheduled rise in the minimum wage to $1.25 and the reduction in the workweek to 44 hours for newly covered employes in retail and other establishments.

Schnitzler Asks Support For Free Latin Unions

New York—A report on activities of the American Institute for Free Labor Development was given by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler to the executive committee of the Union Labor Life Insurance Co. at a luncheon during its January meeting here.

Outlining some of the problems involved in training Latin-American labor leaders to combat Communist penetration of their unions, he said:

"If labor and management could only cooperate against our common enemy, we could be sure that our western hemisphere would continue to carry along with a free trade union movement and a spirit of free enterprise that has been responsible for the growth, productivity and high standards of living which we enjoy.

"We of the AFL-CIO issue the invitation, the plea and the challenge to our friends in the business and industrial community to develop to the fullest degree the friendly 'person-to-person' nongovernmental program of training assistance and education for our South American neighbors."

The Institute for Free Labor Development is financed jointly by labor and industry to help Latin American unions meet the Reds by training their leaders. The institute is under the direction of AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Serafino Romualdi.

Elected to the board of directors of the insurance company during the meeting was Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers. He filled the vacancy created by the death of his predecessor in the union post, Joseph J. Delaney.

Green Life Drama On Radio Mar. 3

On March 3, the 90th anniversary of his birth, the life of William Green, president of the former AFL from 1924 until his death in 1952, will be dramatized on the National Broadcasting Co. radio network on a program sponsored by the George Meany Foundation. It is entitled, "Never Ask What Country."

The presentation, to be broadcast at 12:30 p.m., was produced by the Jewish Theological Seminary as part of its Eternal Light series and was written by Morton Wishengrad. A television version was telecast by NBC in November. The program will be made available in tape or script to unions and other outlets by the foundation, which was established by friends of the AFL-CIO president.

NLRB Sees 'Special Case':

Back Pay Awarded Workers Though Firm 'Quits Business'

Employers cannot escape their legal obligations under the labor laws by going out of business, the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

In a 3-2 decision the board ordered two former partners in the Star Baby Co., infants' wear manufacturers in New York City, to give back pay to 18 laid-off employes from the time the firm went out of business—Jan. 15, 1962—to the date they got other jobs, despite the fact the former employes never have asked for rehiring—or even had the opportunity of doing so.

Upholding a charge by Ladies' Garment Workers Local 105, the four-man majority agreed that Mrs. Esti Neiderman and Mrs. Gizela Eisner dissolved their partnership to avoid dealing with the union. It cited these conclusions:

- The business was dissolved not because the firm could not pay the union wage scale but because it "did not wish to bargain with the union under any circumstances."
- Just before the union asked for a meeting to negotiate a contract, the company had "had one of its most successful seasons."
- A week before the strike the company granted a pay increase to one employe. While picketing was in progress on Nov. 29, 1961, two other employes were offered raises if they would return to work.

Trial Examiner Sidney D. Goldberg had ruled previously that the law was not violated when the partners went out of business. Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members Boyd Leedom, John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown reversed him.

The majority said "the conclusion is inescapable that the decision to go out of business was not predicated on valid economic considerations" but was in furtherance of the firm's "determination to avoid bargaining" with the union. Leedom dissented from the back pay finding.

Ordinarily the board does not grant backpay to strikers until they make unconditional application for reinstatement, the majority said.

"While no such application was made," the board orders reads, "we find that . . . any application for reinstatement . . . would have been futile and was therefore unnecessary," because no employer remained in existence. The board therefore ordered back pay for the employes for their loss of earnings from the date on which the partners completed disposing of their equipment until each employe secures "substantially equivalent employment" elsewhere.

The NLRB said it based its decision on this reasoning:

"We have found that the respondents shut down their business and discharged employes for discriminatory reasons. It is clear, therefore, that but for the respondents' unfair labor practices, their plant would still be in operation and employes would still have jobs.

Prejudice of 'Own Doing'

Any prejudice deriving from the fact that the partners are not still in business, and therefore cannot offer to take back their employes, is solely of their own doing and therefore the NLRB must use the only other remedy open in the situation, the payment of lost pay, the majority ruled.

NLRB Member Philip Ray Rodgers, dissenting in part, said there is nothing in the law which limits an employer's "right to go out of business at such time and under such circumstances as he chooses."

New NLRB Booklet Describes Elections

The National Labor Relations Board, which conducted more than 7,000 employe elections in 1962, has issued an informational pamphlet for voters in union representation elections.

The booklet, stressing the secrecy of the ballot, describes where and how the voting is done, and how the votes are counted. Copies are available on request in NLRB field offices.

NLRB Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman said most such elections are conducted in units of less than 40 employes.

ANOTHER GOMPERS patrols the printers' picket line at the New York Times. Saul Gompers, left, nephew of Samuel Gompers, founder of the American Federation of Labor, is shown with Peter Fanning, uncle of New York's Mayor Robert Wagner. Both are long-time members of the "Big Six" local of the Typographical Union.

'True Bargaining' Asked In Newspaper Impasse

New York—A call for "true give and take bargaining" to settle the newspaper strike and lockout here has been issued by the Officers' Committee for Newspaper Unity, representing 20,000 newspaper employes.

The committee, headed by Pres. Bertram Powers of the striking Typographical Local 6, voiced its unanimous opinion that Local 6 has not had the opportunity to "engage in true collective bargaining" with the publishers and urged federal, state and city negotiators to induce newspaper managements to engage in continuous negotiations.

After a week's lapse, negotiations were resumed with White House Press Sec. Pierre Salinger sitting in. Salinger said he came here at the request of Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and with the consent of Pres. Kennedy to see if he could be useful.

The union Unity Committee has announced its members will continue full support of the striking ITU local. The latter local, at the largest meeting in its 113-year history, previously had upheld the actions of Powers and other officers.

In Albany, Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R) said he plans to name a 12-member "State Commisison of Concern" to investigate disputes such as the newspaper stalemate and to recommend means of settlement.

No New York dailies affiliated in the Publishers Association have been issued since the printers on Dec. 8 struck four papers and publishers shut down five others.

In Cleveland, a 12-page daily called the Record was started Jan. 21 with a 120,000 press-run. It is sponsored by nine unions, idled since drivers went on strike Nov. 29 and the Newspaper Guild followed suit Nov. 30 in a contract dispute.

Teamsters Defeated In New Raid Attempt

The ousted Teamsters union has suffered another sharp setback in an attempted raid on an AFL-CIO affiliate—the Railway Clerks—but is now attempting to organize strikebreakers working behind picket lines of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers in Memphis, Tenn.

In the Railway Clerks case, employes of the Santa Fe Trail Transportation Co. voted more than two to one to reject the Teamsters and continue the brotherhood as their bargaining agent. The actual tally in the election conducted by the National Labor Relations Board was 113 for the Railway Clerks, 55 for the Teamsters, 3 ballots challenged and 9 workers not voting.

Earlier this month, Western Electric installers represented by the Communications Workers dealt the Teamsters a crushing defeat in repulsing an attempted raid by a vote of 11,388 to 4,000.

As a result of the Railway Clerks election, about $65,000 in backpay will go to the employes of the bus company, a subsidiary of the Santa Fe Railroad.

The Teamsters, who were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements, timed the filing of their representation petition to coincide with the signing of a contract renewal between the Railway Clerks and the company.

Although the AFL-CIO affiliate opposed the Teamsters' move as "not timely," the NLRB ordered a vote, and payment of negotiated wage increases was held up during the proceedings.

Back Pay of $360

The back-pay, amounting to about $360 per employe, consists of a 10-cents-an-hour hike retroactive to July 1, 1961, and 5 cents an hour retroactive to July 1, 1962. A further increase of 5 cents is due next July.

In Memphis, where ABC Local 149 has been on strike at the Hart's Bakery Co. plant for 31 weeks, the Teamsters have petitioned the NLRB for the right to represent strikebreakers.

An ABC spokesman described the move as "a vulgar attempt to destroy the effectiveness of the strike," which has received wide public support evidenced in a consumer boycott of Hart's products.

He noted, too, that even the unorganized workers at the Hart's plant in Jackson, Miss., had spontaneously walked off their jobs in support of ABC when the strike started last June 21. Also involved in the walkout are ABC members employed at Hart's Greenville, Miss., plant and members of the unaffiliated Bakery & Confectionery Workers Intl. Union at the Hart bakery in Sikeston, Mo. In all, 120 workers are on strike, 75 of them in the Memphis unit.

Denounced as Strikebreaking

The Teamsters so far have sought bargaining rights only for the Memphis strikebreakers. The petition itself was denounced as strikebreaking by the Memphis Trades & Labor Council.

In the course of the NLRB hearing on the petition, Pres. R. A. Farrell of Teamsters Local 984 talked of signing up "scabs" but hastily changed the reference to "the people employed in the plant."

Farrell, who also heads the Memphis Joint Council of Teamsters, acknowledged under cross examination that he had consulted the company attorney before filing the NLRB petition and, in fact, that his first knowledge of any "interest" in Teamsters organization of the strikebreakers had come to him in a telephone call from the same company attorney.

The Teamsters local already represents drivers, garage mechanics and helpers at the Memphis bakery.

ABC has asked the board for an extension of time to file briefs opposing the Teamsters' petition. ABC is still the legally established bargaining representative of the production unit, the union pointed out in arguing against the Teamster petition as untimely.

IAM Takes Strike Vote at Boeing, Kennedy Sets Up T-H Inquiry Board

Members of the Machininsts employed by the Boeing Co. rejected the company's "final" contract offer and though facing presidential use of a Taft-Hartley injunction, authorized strike action as of midnight Jan. 25.

Union members, frustrated after months of collective bargaining by management's refusal either to arbitrate or to accept the recommendations of a special panel named by the President, voted 16,864 to 3,590 to turn down Boeing's "last offer."

Strike action was voted Jan. 23 at a meeting of 15,000 IAM members in Seattle and at similar meetings in Wichita, Kan., Michoud, La., Great Falls and Lewiston, Mont., Ogden, Utah, Minot, N. D., Cape Canaveral, Fla., and at Vandenberg, Whiteman and Ellsworth Air Force bases.

Pres. Kennedy promptly set up a Taft-Hartley Act board of inquiry to investigate the dispute and report to him by Jan. 26. Such an order usually is a prelude to application for an 80-day T-H injunction.

Kennedy named Benjamin Aaron, director of the University of California's Institute of Industrial Relations, as panel chairman. Other members are Prof. J. B. Gillingham, of the University of Washington, Seattle, and Prof. Lloyd Ulman of the University of California.

IAM Vice Presidents P. L. Siemiller and Harold J. Gibson said the union has been trying to negotiate in good faith with Boeing for many months. They added:

"For the welfare of the nation, and for the well-being of Boeing and its employes, we believe the company should feel a deep sense of responsibility to settle this dispute by the simple process of granting" the employes' "just and reasonable" requests.

Before the vote on the so-called last offer, the IAM offered to submit all unresolved issues to final and binding arbitration. Management refused.

Basic points at issue are a union shop, which Boeing workers approved by a 73.8 percent vote in December; wage increases to match pay rates in other aerospace plants; a change in the employe rating system; a cost of living clause, and other contract improvements.

Elsewhere on the aerospace front, IAM lodges at Burbank, Calif., and five other locations prepared to report to members Jan. 27 that no significant progress has been made in negotiations with Lockheed Aircraft Corp. Another presidential panel will meet Jan. 28 and must report to Kennedy by Feb. 1.

The major issue in dispute here also is a union request that members be permitted to vote on whether they want a union shop or not.

Educational TV Airs Problems of Unions

Educational television stations in six cities have scheduled a special panel discussion on problems of the trade union movement for Monday, Jan. 28.

A. H. Raskin, member of the New York Times editorial board, is host to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Harvard University Prof. John T. Dunlop, and Solomon Barkin, until recently research director of the Textile Workers Union of America.

Television Stations WGBH, Boston; WENH, Durham, N. H.; WCBB, Augusta, Me.; WMHT, Schenectady, N. Y., and WNDT, New York City, have scheduled it for 9 p. m. EST showing. Washington, D. C., Station WETA will show it at 8:30 p. m.

JAPANESE TRADE UNION leaders at a meeting in Washington expressed thanks for the help of the AFL-CIO and the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in their effort to build free world relationships. Pictured at a luncheon where AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler was host are, left to right: Henry Rutz, AFL-CIO Dept. of Intl. Affairs; Masaichi Motoi, chairman of Sodomei (Japanese Federation of Trade Unions); Schnitzler; Takeo Katayama, delegation leader; Shoichi Maruhashi, State Dept. interpreter; Seiichi Kawanabe of Zenro, the Japanese Trade Union Congress; Eietsu Sugawara, chairman, Railway Workers' Federation.

Japanese Unionists See Democracy Expanding

Better days for democracy are ahead in Asia, the leaders of a Japanese trade union delegation predicted at a meeting in Washington with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Here to establish closer contacts with unions of the free world, seven officers of unions affiliated with Domei Kaigi, the Japanese Confederation of Labor, met with Meany and were guests at a luncheon addressed by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

The unionists, representing more than 1.4 million workers on Japan's railways and in mines, local post offices, electric power plants and other industries told Meany they hoped to maintain friendly relations with another Japanese federation — Sohyo — but did not intend to be "swallowed up" by it.

Takeo Katayama of the National Federation of Electric Power Workers Unions and vice chairman of Domei Kaigi, was chief spokesman for the delegation. He said Domei Kaigi represents many of the democratic elements in Japanese unionism, has consistently backed the AFL-CIO, and in general favors the international policies of the Kennedy Administration.

Expressing thanks to AFL-CIO leaders for their past advice and assistance, he predicted that Japan's unions will grow stronger and more effective with the aid of free world unions.

Others in the visiting union team were Masaichi Motoi, chairman of Sodomei, the Japan Federation of Trade Unions; Seiichi Kawanabe, vice chairman of Zenro, the Japanese Trade Union Congress; Eietsu Sugawara, chairman, Japanese Federation of National Railway Workers Unions; Tsutomu Nakamura, executive committee chairman, National Federation of Local Post Office Workers' Unions; Chu Sato, secretary general, National Federation of Electric Power Workers Unions, delegation secretary; and Masao Igari, central committee member, National Federation of Coal Mine Workers Unions and president, Joban Coal Mine Workers.

Schnitzler, greeting members of the delegation as friends who are "as dedicated to a free world as we are," stressed the increasingly important role of trade unionists in the world.

As these meetings continue, he said, "we'll be learning from you as you learn from us" and observed that both sides are helping to develop leaders of the free world.

AFTRA Board Votes Intensified Fight on Bias

New York—The national board of the Television & Radio Artists has voted to make a "special effort" to assure the inclusion of nondiscrimination clauses in the union's next negotiations.

The action was taken in accordance with a request from the AFL-CIO.

The board proposed to include in AFTRA Code rules and enforcement machinery language prohibiting all employers from practicing discrimination against any AFTRA members because of race, creed, color or national origin "or because of any alleged economic consequences thereof, in the publicizing of auditions and interviews, in calling or requesting the appearance of performers for auditions or interviews, in the hiring of performers, in the discharge or replacement of performers, in the staging of a production, or in any other dealings with or treatment of performers."

The union in addition will seek to pledge employers not to discriminate against employed performers because of race, creed, color or national origin; to word casting notices so as "not to discourage minority group members" from applying for jobs; to instruct casting agents and performers' representatives to make all referrals without regard to race, creed or color; and to cast minority group members "in all types of roles."

Pending the inclusion of the proposed language in codes and contracts, the board voted to notify all employers under contract that it will pursue violations of present anti-discrimination clauses. In addition it will propose to all employers, signatories and agents the formation of an industrywide committee "to study discrimination against Negro and other ethnic minority group members of AFTRA.

Show Unions Set Course On Telstar

Toronto, Ont. — The problems posed for unions of entertainers by the development of Telstar and other new international communications facilities were discussed by representatives of radio, television and motion picture performers of five countries at a three-day meeting here which agreed on recommendations in six areas.

The fruits of the discussions will not be disclosed until they have been reported back to the governing bodies of the respective organizations. However, an announcement said they related to:

- Programs broadcast by means of Telstar or any other satellite communicator.
- Television programs relayed to another country.
- TV movies and recorded programs distributed both domestically and internationally.
- Runaway productions.
- Recognition of the principle of separate and distinct rights in the use of performers' services in different media.
- The right of all persons exercising professional skills in the production of programs for broadcasting to the protection of bargaining agreements.

The Association of Canadian Television & Radio Artists acted as hosts. Performers from the U.S. were represented by the Television & Radio Artists (AFTRA) and the Screen Actors Guild. Delegations also were present from Great Britain, Ireland and Australia.

Unions and Zanuck Seek More Jobs

New York—The possibilities of increased feature motion picture production in the United States were explored at a meeting here between film unions and guilds and Darryl F. Zanuck, film magnate.

The parley was arranged by the Hollywood AFL Film Council. Union representatives included H. O'Neil Shanks of the Screen Extras Guild, chairman of the Film Council's Foreign Film Production Committee; George Chandler and Dana Andrews of the Screen Actors Guild; and Robert W. Gilbert, union attorney.

Job opportunities in feature length films have been reduced in recent years by heavy scheduling of U.S. films in foreign countries.

Biemiller on Economic Growth:

Faster Action Urged To Spur Recovery

The AFL-CIO has called for more rapid progress in cutting taxes, boosting purchasing power, creating jobs and meeting the nation's social needs than indicated by the Administration's timetable.

"We certainly don't intend, if we can avoid it, to wait until 1966 or 1967 to get America back to work," Federation Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller declared in a network radio interview.

Biemiller said the 3.5 percent economic growth rate spelled out in Pres. Kennedy's budget message "is not nearly a high enough growth rate to tackle unemployment."

Appearing on the public affairs program, Labor News Conference, Biemiller said the "first step in a reform of our tax system" should be "a $9 billion tax cut in 1963, with the entire cut coming in the lowest personal income tax bracket." The indicated effect of the President's program, he said, would be a tax reduction of only $3 billion for the 1963 calendar year.

The Labor News Conference program is broadcast over the Mutual Radio network.

The AFL-CIO, Biemiller said, generally supports the President's program as outlined in his State of the Union message.

"Our only criticism," he added, "was on the basis of what was left unsaid, rather than what was said."

Committees Cited

He said the AFL-CIO "was encouraged" by the House vote on retention of the 15-member Rules Committee and added:

"We welcome the action of the House Democratic caucus in selecting two liberal southerners for the Ways & Means Committee . . . which is probably the most important committee of Congress."

On specific areas of legislation, Biemiller made these points:

- He is "absolutely convinced" there will be a medicare bill passed by the 88th Congress, although it may not pass both houses during the first session because it comes out of the same committee that handles tax legislation.
- The Youth Employment bill —numbered H.R. 1 in the House and S. 1 in the Senate—may very well be "the first piece of major legislation passed in this Congress."
- The American labor movement "is unified against any attempt to bring trade unions under the anti-trust laws" and "we intend to mount a campaign ourselves for the repeal of Sec. 14b of Taft-Hartley," which allows states to pass so-called "right-to-work" laws.
- Despite the Administration's opposition, "we still intend to maintain the struggle for a 35-hour week" and double-time premium pay for overtime work. These measures are "necessary" to meet the "persistent unemployment problem."
- On school construction, "we are under no illusions about all the problems . . . but we still believe that it is possible to get this type of legislation through Congress." This would both "meet a needed social void" and "create work."

Referring to "very modest" Administration proposals for expenditures to develop natural resources, the AFL-CIO spokesman said much more could be done in this area.

He also urged Congress to extend coverage under the Wage-Hour Act to hotel and restaurant workers, laundry workers and hospital employes, and to improve federal standards for unemployment compensation.

High Court to Review Temporary Injunctions

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled that it will review appeals from temporary injunctions issued by state courts where such injunctions are outside the jurisdiction of the state court and would hamper appeal to the National Labor Relations Board.

In the past the high court has refused to review appeals from temporary injunctions on the grounds that the cases were not finally decided until a permanent injunction had been issued.

The reversal came in a case involving Laborers' Local 438 in Atlanta, Ga., and a construction company on a city project. The union picketed the site on the grounds that the contractors were not paying wages conforming to those paid for similar work in the Atlanta area.

The contractors sought a temporary injunction in Fulton County (Atlanta) Court and were denied. On appeal to the Georgia Supreme Court, however, they won a temporary ban on picketing.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruled first that the Georgia court lacked the power to issue the injunction because the case "is within the exclusive domain" of the NLRB.

Justice Byron White, writing for the U.S. high court, declared further, however, that unless the temporary injunction is reviewable the union inevitably remains subject to the issuance of a temporary injunction at the request of the respondents [contractors] and must face further proceedings in the state courts which the state courts have no power to conduct."

White continued:

"The truth is that authorizing the issuance of a temporary injunction, as is frequently true of temporary injunctions in labor disputes, may effectively dispose of petitioner's rights and render entirely illusory his right to review here as well as his right to a hearing before the labor board."

As to previous court history on reviewing temporary injunctions, White wrote, "to the extent that [previous decisions] may be said to prohibit our review of a final and erroneous assertion of jurisdiction by a state court to issue a temporary injunction in a labor dispute, when a substantial claim is made that the jurisdiction of the state court is preempted by federal law and by the exclusive power of the National Labor Relations Board, we decline to follow it."

Retail Clerks Local Sponsors Broadcast

Newark, N. J.—Retail Clerks Local 1262 is now sponsoring a 7 a.m. news broadcast on Radio Station WJRZ and will concentrate on public service messages and promotion of the union store card.

The local, made up of 10,000 retail store employes in Northern and Central New Jersey and adjacent New York, undertook sponsorship of the program as part of "the continued interest of Retail Clerks in community service," according to Sec.-Treas. William McLaughlin.

Kennedy Outlines Administration's Legislative Goals

Pres. Kennedy has outlined his goals for the 88th Congress in three major messages which will be amplified by a series of specific legislative requests in the weeks to come.

Here, in skeleton form, are the main points of the President's program based on his State of the Union address, the Budget message and the Economic report:

TAXES: Kennedy gave the highest priority to the need for tax cuts and reform in all three messages. His proposed three-stage slash in individual federal income taxes would bring the rate down from the present 20 to 91 percent to "a more reasonable range" of 14 to 65 percent. Corporate taxes would drop from 52 to 47 percent. A portion of the revenue loss, the President said, should be recouped by closing of tax loopholes.

HEALTH: The President reiterated his call for a "retirement health program through the social security system." He said the Administration will also urge benefits "paid from regular appropriations" for those not under social security.

Warning that "miracles of medical research will count for little if we cannot reverse the growing nationwide shortage of doctors, dentists and nurses," Kennedy asked federal grants for construction of medical schools, coupled with financial aid to students in these fields. He also urged a step-up in Hill-Burton Act grants for construction of hospital facilities.

The President asked a new program to improve services for the mentally retarded and mentally ill, declaring their "abandonment . . . to the grim mercy of custodial institutions too often inflicts on them and their families a needless cruelty which the nation should not endure."

EDUCATION: "Additional federal support and assistance" to all levels of education, including vocational training, were urged. The budget includes a proposed new $1.2 billion federal aid program, of which $144 million would actually be spent during the 1964 fiscal year. Kennedy said he will spell out the details in an early special education message to Congress, which Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) said would include the draft of a single-package education bill.

WELFARE: The President declared his support of new federal standards to raise the amount and duration of unemployment compensation and to extend coverage of the program.

Noting that "a large number of workers" still are not covered by the federal wage-hour law, Kennedy said: "I will urge extension of coverage to further groups."

He asked legislation to create a national service corps—a domestic parallel to the Peace Corps—to help furnish social service volunteers for work in city slums, migrant labor camps and other areas of need.

JOBS: Kennedy announced he will ask increased funds for the manpower training program enacted last year. He included in his budget proposed funds to enable the Dept. of Labor to develop "an early warning system" of forthcoming job dislocations due to automation and help in long-range planning of vocational training. For the job-creating emergency public works program started last year, the budget asked an additional appropriation of $500 million in fiscal 1963.

Deploring "the persistently high rates of unemployment suffered by young workers," Kennedy said he will again ask Congress to pass a Youth Employment Opportunities bill.

URBAN PROBLEMS: The President repeated his request to Congress to create a Cabinet-level Dept. of Urban Affairs and to pass mass transportation legislation to help traffic-clogged cities.

NATIONAL SECURITY: Kennedy proposed stepped-up military and space expenditures, declaring "there is no discount price on defense."

He recommended "a civil defense fallout shelter program to improve the chances that a large portion of our population would survive a possible nuclear attack." This is an area where Congress has disregarded his recommendations in the past.

GOVERNMENT PAY: Kennedy will ask "catch-up" pay raises for the armed services and additional "moderate" adjustments in salaries of upper-level career civil servants to bring them to "comparability" with private industry.

He announced that he will name an advisory panel to make recommendations on salary levels "for top positions in the executive, legislative and judicial branches."

CIVIL RIGHTS: Kennedy, presumably referring to failure of the 87th Congress to enact legislation barring discriminatory literacy tests for voting, declared: "The right to vote in a free American election must not be denied to any citizen on grounds of his race or his color." He also asked extension of the life of the Civil Rights Commission.

In the general area of civil liberties, he called for a guarantee that every person on trial in a federal court be assured "the right to competent counsel . . . regardless of his means."

NATURAL RESOURCES: The President asked enactment of a wilderness bill along the lines passed by the Senate last year to protect areas "of great natural beauty" from exploitation. Funds were asked to initiate 43 new water resources projects and to enable the Tennessee Valley Authority to continue construction of steam-generated units to meet growing electric power needs.

AGRICULTURE: Kennedy served notice that the Administration will continue its efforts for a farm program which will do a better job of gearing production to need and cut government expenditures for subsidies and storage of surplus commodities.

He asked authority to continue the food stamp plan at present levels. He also proposed that funds received from repayments of loans by rural electric co-op be used to finance new loans.

FOREIGN AID: Included in the President's program is an increase in the annual authorization for the Alliance for Progress program in Latin America from $600 million to $700 million. He also asked authorization for early establishment of a National Academy of Foreign Affairs to train Americans for overseas assignments.

House Democrats Get Committee Assignments

House Democrats received their committee assignments and the Republican committee list was expected to be announced momentarily as the AFL-CIO News went to press, paving the way for the start of legislative action in the 88th Congress.

Senate committees were operating with holdover members, but Southern senators conducting a filibuster against new rules proposals blocked assignment of new senators to committees and changes of committees for incumbents.

New Democratic members of the House Education & Labor Committee are Representatives Hugh L. Carey (N. Y.), Augustus F. Hawkins (Calif.), Carlton R. Sickles (Md.), Sam M. Gibbons (Fla.), and Thomas P. Gill (Hawaii). One vacancy is still to be filled.

Of the Democrats who served on the committee in the last Congress, Cleveland M. Bailey (W. Va.) and Herbert Zelenko (N. Y.) are no longer in Congress, and Robert N. Giaimo (Conn.), Neal Smith (Ia.), Charles S. Joelson (N. J.), and Julia Butler Hansen (Wash.) transferred to the Appropriations Committee.

The six new Democrats on the powerful Appropriations unit—all from the North — add to liberal strength on this traditionally conservative-dominated committee. The new members, in addition to the four shifted from the Labor Committee, are Edward R. Finnegan (Ill.) and Joseph P. Addabbo (N. Y.).

On other committees of special interest to labor, the following new Democrats were named:

Banking & Currency — Claude Pepper (Fla.), Joseph G. Minish (N. J.), Charles L. Weltner (Ga.), Richard T. Hanna (Calif.), Bernard F. Grabowski (Conn.), and Charles H. Wilson (Calif.).

Foreign Affairs — Donald M. Fraser (Minn.) and Ronald B. Cameron (Calif.).

Interstate & Foreign Commerce— W. R. Hull, Jr. (Mo.), Gillis W. Long (La.), and Lionel Van Deerlin (Calif).

Judiciary — James C. Corman (Calif.), William L. St. Onge (Conn.), and George F. Senner, Jr. (Ariz.).

Merchant Marine & Fisheries— Edith Green (Ore.), Paul G. Rogers (Fla.), Frank A. Stubblefield (Ky.), and John M. Murphy (N. Y.).

Post Office & Civil Service — Harley O. Staggers (W. Va.), Robert N. C. Nix (Pa.), Everett G. Burkhalter (Calif.), W. Donlon Edwards (Calif.), Joe R. Pool (Tex.), and Albert W. Watson (S. C.).

Public Works—W. J. Bryan Dorn (S. C.), David N. Henderson (N. C.), Arnold Olsen (Mont.), Harold M. Ryan (Mich.), J. Russell Tuten (Ga.), and John M. Murphy (N. Y.).

Elected earlier to the House Ways & Means Committee were Ross Bass (Tenn.), and W. Pat Jennings (Va.).

NMU Recognized In 4th MSTS Area

New York—The National Maritime Union has been recognized as exclusive bargaining agent in a fourth major fleet of the U.S. Military Sea Transportation Service, the Pacific Far East Area Command.

The union had previously won recognition in the MSTS Atlantic, Gulf and Seattle commands and now represents 3,500 nonofficers seamen serving on 53 vessels.

Death of Gaitskell Mourned by Meany

Free labor throughout the world joins in mourning the death of Hugh Gaitskell, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a statement noting the demise of the British Labor Party leader.

"The workers of Great Britain will sorely miss his untiring efforts in their behalf," Meany added. "His national popularity and solid authority on matters concerning the workingman placed him high in the ranks of world labor leaders.

"We in the AFL-CIO greatly mourn his passing and our heartfelt condolences go to his countless friends in the labor movement here and abroad."

Turner, Goins Get Apprentice Posts

Sec.-Treas. David S. Turner of the Sheet Metal Workers and Joseph J. Goins of the Steelworkers' wage division have been appointed to the Federal Committee on Apprenticeship, Sec. of Labor W. Williard Wirtz has announced.

They fill vacancies caused by the resignations of James A. Brownlow, former president of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept., and George E. Vogt of the USWA.

The committee advises the secretary of labor on matters affecting apprenticeship and training and is made up of five representatives each from labor and from management, and one from the U.S. Office of Education. The other labor members are R. J. Thomas, assistant to the AFL-CIO president; Pres. Michael Fox of the AFL-CIO Railroad Employes' Dept. and Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Friendly 'Swap' of Local Carried Out by 2 Unions

Bethlehem, Pa.—Nearly 325 workers at the Schobel Brothers neckwear plant here have voted to leave the Ladies' Garment Workers and join the Clothing Workers in a friendly transfer arranged by the two unions.

The ILGWU organized the plant almost two years ago but helped arrange a transfer when the ACWA claimed jurisdiction. The employes voted unanimously to approve the transfer and a new contract was negotiated.

The contract, running through Aug. 31, 1965, provides a 5 to 25-cent hourly increase for piecework and hourly-rated employes in a scale ranging from $1.30 to $2.30 an hour, and a wage reopener in 1964. It was agreed that for the pact's duration the hourly wage minimum will be 15 cents above the federal wage-hour law minimum for interstate industries; that time and a half shall be paid for overtime; and that four hours of pay is guaranteed to all employes reporting for work.

Also included are standard provisions calling for life insurance, weekly benefits for sickness and disability, and hospitalization insurance. A clause states the intention of the parties to negotiate a retirement program before the contract expires.

The contract was negotiated for management by Pres. Jack Schobel and for the union by Vice Pres. Peter Swoboda, assistant manager of the Pennsylvania Joint Board.

During transfer negotiations the ACWA was represented by Assistant Gen. Pres. Howard D. Samuel; Vice Pres. David Monas, manager of the Pennsylvania Joint Board; Sec. Mary Marshak of the board's Allentown district; and by Swoboda. Representing ILGWU were Sol Chaikin, assistant director, Northeast Dept.; Grace Birkel, Bethlehem manager, and Earl Laub, Bethlehem business agent.

TV 'Jingle' Musicians Voting on Pact

New York—The Musicians who make "jingles" and commercial spot announcements for radio and television are voting on a new three-year contract which provides extra pay for the man who "doubles" on more than one instrument.

Also included in the proposed new pact, announced by AFM Pres. Herman Kenin, are these improvements for the men who help make those catchy commercials for the air waves:

- A guarantee that all "live" music for jingles will be provided by AFM members in the U.S. and Canada.
- A 5 percent basic wage increase in the first two years of the contract and, for the third year, a 2.5 percent hike, and elimination of rehearsal time.
- Re-use payments after 13 weeks.

Kenin said he was gratified at the agreement prohibiting use of "runaway" foreign music and extending the principle of pay for "doubling" in scoring jingles and spot announcements. Music copyists will share in the increases.

Kenin expressed confidence that the pact will win speedy ratification in the dozen U.S. and Canadian cities where such commercials are made.

Action Now on Jobs

A YEAR AGO the President's Council of Economic Advisers held out the prospect of a drop in the unemployment rate to "5 percent or somewhat lower" by the end of 1962 and a temporary target of 4 percent by mid-1963.

Twelve months later the President's economic advisers have come up with a candid forecast of little if any change in the present 5.6 percent jobless rate in 1963 and hold out the hope of a drop to 4 percent by mid-1965 or early 1966.

This fairly drastic revision of unemployment rate estimates and the length of time needed to achieve the temporary target of 4 percent—which cannot be accepted as a measure of full employment—indicates the severity of the problem facing the country.

The CEA maintains that the failure of the economy to grow at a faster rate over the past five years and the restraining influence of present tax rates on greater expansion are major factors in the nation's inability to reduce the high, persistent rate of unemployment.

The council's analysis is sound, its economic thinking in tune with the necessities of the American economy in the second half of the Twentieth Century. What is lacking, however, is a program of sufficient scope and impact to step up the growth rate and achieve full employment.

A 5.6 percent unemployment rate in 1963 with 4 million jobless workers is intolerable. Additional programs must be initiated and the tax reduction program given more immediate impact so that the temporary goal of 4 percent joblessness can become a reality this year rather than an objective two and one-half years away.

Lag in Buying Power

A BASIC FACTOR in the creeping pace of economic growth in the past five years has been the lag in purchasing power, a fact underscored in the Council of Economic Advisers report to Congress.

The CEA declared that the rate of annual increases in average hourly earnings in all manufacturing "has been considerably reduced in the past five years." Average hourly earnings rose 5.5 percent a year between 1947 and 1958 and only 2.9 percent a year between 1958 and 1962.

This is reflected in the purchasing power of the average factory worker. A worker with three dependents has had an increase in take-home-pay—what's left after deduction for taxes—of 1 percent a year for the past six years.

In 1956 the average factory worker took home $80.46 in 1962 dollars. In 1962 his after-tax paycheck was $85.55, or an increase of 6 percent over the six-year period.

The Labor Dept. reports that from December 1961 to December 1962 there has been no increase in purchasing power, with a slight rise in wage rates wiped out by the also slight increase in prices.

If the economy is to expand toward the goals set out by the Administration, greater purchasing power beyond a tax reduction must be placed in workers' hands. A gain of 1 percent a year is not enough.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, January 26, 1963 No. 4

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Kennedy Tells Nation:

Citizen Can Serve U.S. Interest By Supporting Income Tax Cuts

The following is excerpted from Pres. Kennedy's Economic Message to Congress dealing with tax reduction and reform in 1963:

WE APPROACH THE ISSUE of tax revision, not in an atmosphere of haste and panic brought on by recession or depression, but in a period of comparative calm. Yet if we are to restore the healthy glow of dynamic prosperity to the U.S. economy and avoid a lengthening of the 5-year period of unrealized promise, we have no time to lose.

In this situation, the citizen serves his country's interests by supporting income tax reductions. For through the normal processes of the market economy, tax reduction can be the constructive instrument for harmonizing public and private interests:

The taxpayer as consumer, pursuing his own best interest and that of his family, can turn his tax savings into a higher standard of living, and simultaneously into stronger markets for the producer. The taxpayer as producer—businessman or farmer—responding to the profit opportunities he finds in fuller markets and lower tax rates, for the products of other factories, farms, and mines.

Tax reduction thus sets off a process that can bring gains for everyone, gains won by marshalling resources that would otherwise stand idle—workers without jobs and farm and factory capacity without markets. Yet many taxpayers seem prepared to deny the nation the fruits of tax reduction because they question the financial soundness of reducing taxes when the federal budget is already in deficit. Let me make clear why, in today's economy, fiscal prudence and responsibility call for tax reduction even if it temporarily enlarges the federal deficit.

OUR CHOICE IS NOT the oversimplified one sometimes posed between tax reduction and a deficit on one hand and a budget easily balanced by prudent management on the other. If the projected 1964 federal cash deficit of $10.3 billion did not allow for a $2.7 billion loss in receipts owing to the new tax program, the projected deficit would be $7.6 billion. We have been sliding into one deficit after another through repeated recessions and persistent slack in our economy. A planned cash surplus of $0.6 billion for the fiscal year 1959 became a record cash deficit of $13.1 billion, largely as the result of economic recession. A planned cash surplus of $1.8 billion for the current fiscal year is turning into a cash deficit of $8.3 billion, largely as the result of economic slack.

If we were to slide into recession through failure to act on taxes, the cash deficit for next year would be larger without the tax reduction than the estimated deficit with tax reduction. Indeed, a new recession could break all peace-time deficit records.

So until we restore full prosperity and the budget-balancing revenues it generates, our practical choice is not between deficit and surplus but between two kinds of deficits: between deficit born of waste and weakness and deficits incurred as we build our future strength.

If any individual spends frivolously beyond his means today and borrows beyond his prospects for earning tomorrow, this is a sign of weakness. But if he borrows prudently to invest in a machine that boosts his business profits, or to pay for education and training that boost his earning power, this can be a source of strength, a deficit through which he builds a better future for himself and his family.

As long as we have large numbers of workers without jobs, and producers without markets, we will as a nation fall into repeated deficits of inertia and weakness. But, by comparison, if we enlarge the deficit temporarily as the by-product of our positive tax policy to expand our economy this will serve as a source of strength.

It will yield rich private dividends in higher output, faster growth, more jobs, higher profits and incomes; and, by the same token, a large public gain in expanded budget revenues. As the economy returns to full employment, the budget will return to constructive balance.

This would not be true, of course, if we were currently straining the limits of our productive capacity, when the dollars released by tax reduction would push against unyielding bottlenecks in industrial plant and skilled manpower. Then, tax reduction would be an open invitation to inflation, to a renewed price-wage spiral, and would threaten our hard-won balance of payments improvement.

Our need today then, is —to provide markets to bring back into production underutilized plant and equipment.

—to provide incentives to invest, in the form both of wider markets and larger profits, investment that will expand and modernize, innovate, cut costs.

—most important, by means of stronger markets and enlarged investment, to provide jobs for the unemployed and for the new workers streaming into the labor force during the Sixties—and, closing the circle, the new jobholders will generate still larger markets and further investment.

Morgan Says:

Collegians' Lobby Opens Drive For Student Income Tax Slash

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

IF I WANTED to improve my journalistic mind, which is not a bad idea, I could enroll in a course on, say, Greek civilization and then deduct the cost of it from my income tax as a legitimate business expense. Splendid. An improved mind improves earning power which improves economic growth, my own and the country's, which in turn improves the gross national product which is what all the experts say we are supposed to be improving.

Morgan

But if I were a full-time student putting myself through school on my own earnings I could not claim the cost of my education as a tax deduction. There is weird inconsistency if not gross injustice here, for a student is denied help at the very time he may need it most and if he doesn't get it not only he but society loses. It's a vicious circle that dizzies the thoughtful citizen with its lack of sense. How can we expect the college generation to contribute its maximum talents to the general welfare if the system bars the development of those talents in the first place?

The answer was so obvious to three undergraduates at the Milwaukee Institute of Technology that they have formed a lobby to try to beat or rather change the system. They have drawn up a plan for students' tax relief. It would help full-time students supporting themselves by giving a tax exemption of at least $2,400 to unmarried students, at least $3,000 to married ones and at least $3,600 to the latter if they have one or more children.

The lobby calls itself the Committee for Student Aid. Its chairman, Joseph LaMarche, a 23-year-old Milwaukee Tech sophomore majoring in foreign languages, is being helped through school by his wife who works full time as a hospital laboratory technician. LaMarche reported that the committee has written students in 100 colleges urging support for its plan. Student councils at Milwaukee Tech, Marquette, Carroll College and the University of Wisconsin have already passed resolutions supporting it.

Pointing out that students in most other countries get government support, LaMarche and his fellow lobbyists, Jay Watson and Gene Bruggink, argue that their proposal would provide incentives to high school graduates to go on to college, allow married students to continue their studies and increase student purchasing power.

Whether or not great minds run in the same channels, the interesting fact is that a number of U.S. senators and representatives have already introduced bills at this new session of Congress aimed at tax relief for families financing education of college students. Pres. Kennedy will send his 1963 education program to Congress [soon]. Presumably it will be a package concentrating on a college building program which was torn to shreds last year.

Sen. Hubert Humphrey of Minnesota introduced legislation for a generous pattern of scholarships and loan insurance in effort to tap the talents of young people of top scholastic ability. He estimated more than 150,000 excellent scholars a year fail to go on to college or university due to lack of funds.

"We are living today on the resources of yesterday," Humphrey said, pointedly implying that we are wasting some of the best resources of tomorrow. Every year we go to the well for aid to education and every year we haul up a teacup's worth of improvement.

At the Fund for the Republic convocation in New York, Admiral Rickover, the Navy's nuclear expert who advocates a disciplined, rugged-individualist school of education without frills, scored the nation's neglect of the teaching profession.

Teachers, he said, should be paid more than senators or admirals even if the money has to come out of the defense budget. Perhaps they should be paid as much as ball players even if it means a modest curb on the national budget for race track betting, martinis and bubble gum.

RICKOVER TOUCHED another aspect of education about which there is, and should be, growing concern—the curriculum and the danger that in trying to assess and perhaps demand improving changes in its quality the public is being held at arm's length by a powerful clique of educational "promoters and administrators." Too many liberals in and out of the field of education have tried in the past to smother such criticism with shrill cries that it all comes from reactionaries. Some of it does and some of it does not. It should not be too difficult to distinguish between the two.

Educators are supposed to know more than the rest of us about how and what our children should be taught and undoubtedly the majority do. But they are not so responsive as they should be to sincere questions about so-called "baloney courses," emphasis on what Rickover calls "saleable skills" and a packet of other items reflecting on the quality of American education.

We've got to enlarge and improve our educational plant physically to accommodate the demands of a mushrooming population but if we don't improve the quality of our education along with it we are wasting our time and money. In fact, the quality always should come first.

Washington Reports:

McCormack Gives Tax Cut Bill 'Good Chance' in This Session

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE John W. McCormack (D-Mass.) said there "is a good chance of a tax reduction bill getting through this session" as he was interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 500 radio stations.

McCormack said he understood that after Pres. Kennedy presents his message on tax reduction to Congress, the Ways & Means Committee will promptly begin hearings on the proposal. Taxes and other measures are being pressed because of unemployment which is still high, he added.

Minority Leader Charles Halleck (R-Ind.) on the same program indicated he would insist that tax reductions be accompanied by a commensurate cut in federal spending.

"If the deficit runs too big, and we set off another spiral of inflation," he put it, "what you do is give a man a dollar with one hand and let a picketpocket called inflation take it out of his other pocket."

McCormack foresaw action on health insurance for the aged under social security, federal aid for education, a youth opportunities bill, unemployment compensation improvement, and other measures to help reduce unemployment.

HALLECK SAID, on the other hand, "It looks to me as if they [the Democrats] have given up on general federal aid to education."

He said the addition of two liberal Democrats to the Ways & Means Committee "might create a more favorable climate" for social security health care for the aged, but "from what I have seen reported there still may not be a majority in the committee to report the bill out."

On the budget Halleck said that "if past experience means anything, the estimates of revenues are too high and the estimates of expenditures are too optimistic." He said he expected an "unmanageable" deficit "as far as fiscal responsibility and the cost of living is concerned."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

CHARLES DE GAULLE has come close to doing what Soviet diplomacy has never yet been able to do—drive a wedge between groups in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. The mystical French President, still aflame with dreams of restoring French "glory," has temporarily blocked Great Britain from the European Common Market and is placing emphasis on a French and West German military and political alliance instead of NATO to ensure the liberty of Europe.

The notion that France and Germany alone can guarantee the security and liberty of the western European peoples, without assistance from Britain and the U.S., has an element of the grotesque. DeGaulle's insistence on pushing through his plans has already split the Common Market countries, which almost totally disagree with him about the desirability of Britain's admission to the trading group.

De Gaulle has moved to isolate France from British and American influence, to limit her association in NATO, at a time when the winds of change are blowing in a quite different direction.

He is driving to set up the illusion of a separate French nuclear deterrent, on which West Germany too would depend, when the jet planes he would use are already obsolescent and when Thor and Jupiter missile bases are being dismantled by the U.S. because they are outmoded by the submarine-based Polaris and by the swiftly-rising deterrent of the Minuteman.

The saving factor in all this is that De Gaulle almost certainly will be compelled by the force of events to modify his arrangements.

The real architect of the European Economic Community, the brilliant and bold-thinking Jean Monnet, said bluntly in New York that Britain's entry into the Common Market is "essential" for the unity of Europe, and that only a truly united western Europe in close cooperation with the U.S. can force a fundamental change in the Soviet Union's approach to world events.

De Gaulle's services to France are numerous and recognized, but there is an obsolescence to his concepts. He harks back 150 years, back to the Napoleonic era when Britain was "insular" and separate from Europe, and France dominated the continent as a land power. He will not live to see that time again nor will any other in our generations, for the era is past.

"As long as Russia believes the West can be divided," Jean Monnet warned, "it will be tempted to upset the balance of power in its favor." Stalin pushed in his lifetime and Khrushchev has pushed as his successor to weaken the NATO alliance, to break down its common objectives and its common purposes. The safety of the West and the future of democracy as we have known it nevertheless rest on these purposes and objectives.

* * *

ATTY. GEN. ROBERT F. KENNEDY'S statement that U.S. air cover was "never" planned for the Bay of Pigs invasion was met swiftly by Republican demands for a full-scale investigation of what actually did happen before and during that disastrous incident. It was also followed quickly by an Eisenhower interview saying that his Administration had planned only a raiding operation, with Cubans in exile landed at most to engage in guerrilla operations.

The GOP chorus for another Senate investigation seemed unlikely to produce much action. A great deal of information already has been supplied the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services Committees in a responsible way by responsible sources.

There has since been a recovery of the Cuban prisoners, and U.S. citizens are being retrieved from Castro's grasp. There has been a direct confrontation with the Soviet Union on the planting of Soviet missiles and warplanes, and those weapons have been withdrawn.

Castro as a source of Communist penetration of Latin America represents a continuing menace. It is not one that can be removed, however, by a public rehashing of policy blunders by either the late Eisenhower or early Kennedy Administrations. And it is difficult to think of any other legitimate purpose that would be served, including that of party interest for either the Administration or the GOP.

TAX REDUCTION, health care for the aged, aid for education and nearly every other issue before the 88th Congress are points of disagreement between Speaker of the House John W. McCormack (D-Mass.), left, and Minority Leader Charles A. Halleck (R-Ind.), in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

February Sales Offer Bargains In Furniture, Rugs, Mattresses

By Sidney Margolius

THE ANNUAL FEBRUARY homefurnishings sales offer a good opportunity to shop for furniture, rugs and mattresses. This February in particular is a favorable month to find low prices on home goods because of the sharp competition. Too, some manufacturers are planning price increases which will make furniture cost more this spring.

Several mills have just announced price cuts on filament-nylon carpeting. Carpeting that up to now sold for $9.95 to $10.95 a square yard has been reduced to $8.95. The lower price will enable more families to buy this more-serviceable grade and avoid the cheaper filament nylon sold for $5.95 or less. The low-price rugs are not suitable for heavy-traffic rooms.

HANGING FURNITURE: Wall shelf and cabinet systems, and room dividers incorporating shelves and cabinets are a potentially useful trend. These systems use wall strips and brackets to hold shelves and drawers. For use as a room divider, various shelves and cabinets can be supported by expansion poles or assembled in free-standing units.

In these hanging systems you select the components you want from a wide variety ranging from shelves, magazine racks and small drawers to hanging desks and even buffets.

Wall-system components are not necessarily less expensive than conventional standing furniture, but are more space-saving, and cost only about half the price of built-ins, according to one estimate.

Besides saving space, another advantage is flexibility. You can buy several components as a start and add to them. Too, the wall strips or standards are slotted so that the brackets can be moved to change the components around.

UPHOLSTERED FURNITURE: Two increasingly-used upholstery coverings are expanded vinyl and filament nylon. Expanded vinyl is a plastic fabric with impregnated foam backing. It is superior to and costs a little more than the early plastic film or even the cloth-backed "supported vinyl."

Expanded vinyl is especially desirable for deep-spring upholstery, but also is preferable for flat surfaces such as dinette chairs although a heavy grade of supported vinyl can serve here. However, there are different qualities even in expanded vinyl. The thicker qualities are better able to withstand gouges, abrasion and flexing.

Filament nylon is a thicker nylon which resists soil better than the older "staple" nylon, and won't fuzz. It comes in both frieze and flat weaves. In the same quality, the frieze wears better but the flat weaves are more soil resistant and easier to clean.

Don't assume that all coverings sold as "100 percent nylon" are the same quality, any more than all nylon stockings are the same. You also need to ask about the denier or thickness, and observe the closeness of weave.

Whether the covering is woven fabric or plastic, also observe how well it is tailored on the chair or sofa. The covering should fit smoothly and evenly, and patterned fabrics should be carefully matched. Check for straight seams, especially on nylon-covered upholstery.

MATTRESSES: Do not be guided solely by a salesclerk's recommendation. One of the hidden scandals in the mattress business (also in cosmetics and several other lines) is the use of "PM's" (push money) to get salespeople to recommend certain brands or the more-expensive numbers. Many of the best-known manufacturers use this practice. It is accepted in the trade, but the public is kept in the dark.

For example, this month you will see many stores advertising mattress specials at $39. But you then often find the salespeople suggesting more expensive mattresses. The costlier ones often are priced disproportionately higher for the sake of fancier ticking or a few more innerspring coils.

One widespread consumer misunderstanding, sometimes stemming from loose remarks by sellers, is that a moderate-price mattress will only last a few years; that a "good" one (which is confused with an expensive one) will more than pay for its extra cost in longer life. The fact is, well-made medium-price mattresses in the $39-$49 range are quite sturdy.

At least 180 innerspring coils are considered basic. A 220-coil unit is more serviceable for heavy use. Vertically-stitched "prebuilt" sides, and stabilizing units at the edges, are important to prevent sag. Observe whether a mattress is firm at the edges as well as the center. An eight-ounce striped ticking, if firmly woven, gives good service and prevents sag without requiring a premium price.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

NEW 5-CENT STAMP DEDICATION was marked by presentation of an album of the stamps by Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day (right) to E. C. Hallbeck, president of the Postal Clerks and chairman of the AFL-CIO Government Employes Council, which co-sponsored the program.

Consumer Survey Shows:

Car Sales Prospects Better Than in 1962

PROSPECTS FOR CAR and home sales are better than last year, but a general tax reduction may be necessary to stimulate the economy beyond the next few months, University of Michigan Survey Research Center economists reported following their latest quarterly survey of consumer attitudes and inclinations to buy.

The SRC Index of Consumer Sentiment improved from September's mark of 95 to 98.9 in December, regaining the level of early 1962. The index is geared to consumer attitudes of the fall of 1956.

A study of the latest data revealed three major factors responsible for the improvement in willingness to buy, the center said:

1—Consumers are favorably impressed by recent changes in their incomes. Some 39 percent of all families said they were making more than a year ago, compared to only 33 percent in August-September.

2—Consumers have heard more favorable economic news during the last few months than they did earlier in 1962.

3—Relaxation of international tensions following the Cuban crisis has reassured people. Heightened international tensions tend to create uneasiness during which consumers are apt to postpone some of their discretionary purchases.

During the next few months demand for automobiles will continue to support the economy, the SRC report indicated. About one family in 10 intends to buy a new car in 1963, while a similar number hope to purchase used cars. Both proportions are somewhat higher than a year ago.

If the outlook for the second half of 1963 remains cloudy, it is largely because consumers do not see any important factors which could sustain lasting prosperity, the SRC analysts say.

"In this respect, a tax cut may be of great importance," they pointed out, "as a psychological stimulus on the American consumer."

Two-thirds of American families remain in favor of a tax reduction, which many of them feel is needed to raise purchasing power.

The latest survey offered evidence that durable goods, home additions and repairs, travel and leisure-time expenditures would benefit promptly from reduction of personal income taxes paid by middle income people.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Hardly Anybody Looks Right, Hardly Anybody Acts Right

By Jane Goodsell

I HATE TO SOUND suspicious, but I think there are a lot of imposters running around these days. Hardly anybody looks right to me and hardly anybody acts right.

For instance, take the man who comes to my house every week to sell vegetables. He looks like a poet. He has dark, brooding eyes, a sensitive face and delicate hands. What's more, he talks like a poet. He likes to discuss life in philosophic terms, he reads books I can't understand, and he knows the names of just about every flower in the world.

I met a real poet once, and guess what he talked about? The traffic problem!

At a party a couple of weeks ago I met a man dressed in a loud plaid shirt, loggers' boots and beat-up old pants. He chewed on a corncob pipe. He turned out to be a university professor.

Another guest was clad in faultless tweeds, and he smoked the cigarette of the discriminating minority. Who was he? A farmer.

THERE ARE A LOT of women tootling around these days, pretending to be grandmothers. Well, they can't kid me. I know what grandmother looks like. She has snowy white hair, and she has basting pins in her mouth and an apple pie cooling on her windowsill. She does not have a deep suntan, nails lacquered with Scarlet Poppy and a firm grip on a no-trump hand.

Or take movie actresses. I've never actually met one, but I read about them. And all of these glamorous creatures, according to the movie magazines are homebodies at heart. They'd rather spend their evenings baking cookies or playing parcheesi than dressing up and trotting off to Romanoff's.

The only way I can figure it is that they are really my good old-fashioned grandma in disguise.

Even criminals aren't genuine anymore. Instead of looking like Jack the Ripper or Dangerous Dan McGrew, they simply look worried and uncertain. They might as well be dentists or opticians.

It is all most upsetting. Morticians act jolly, doctors act flippant and burlesque queens brag about reading the Dialogues of Plato.

"Must you file your nails now?"

'Glaring' Frauds Revealed:

Quacks and Unscrupulous Continue to Prey on Elderly

Quacks, swindlers and an army of unscrupulous promoters continue to prey on the nation's 17 million senior citizens despite the best efforts of government and private agencies to put them out of business, the Senate's special Committee on Aging was told.

After three days of public hearings on frauds perpetrated against the elderly, Committee Chairman Pat McNamara (D-Mich.) reported that the problem "is much larger than we had really expected." He said an additional round of hearings will be scheduled "to determine what can be done at the federal level to protect our citizens from further exploitation."

Committee sources estimated that more than $1 billion a year is spent, much of it by the elderly, on "unnecessary and dangerous medications."

A poignant illustration of the market which quacks tap with completely worthless remedies and devices came in the testimony of Jerry Walsh, an official of the Arthristis & Rheumatism Foundation, who told the committee that in desperation born of pain:

"I wore bronze bracelets. I carried buckeyes in my pocket. I tried vibrating machines and other useless gadgets. Continually I went back and spent two or three thousand dollars more.

Not a Funny Thing

"Quackery is not a funny thing . . . If you are in this bed of pain, you will do anything to stop the pain at any cost."

From the foundation's medical director, Dr. Ronald Lamont-Havers, came a strong denounciation of book and magazine publishers who promote demonstrably worthless cures out of "a desire to profit from the gullibility of the arthritic in pain."

Another type of exploitation hitting hardest at the elderly was described by J. Arthur Talley, Arizona state real estate commissioner, who said lack of federal regulation of interstate real estate promotions has victimized thousands of persons seeking retirement homes in the West.

"One of the most glaring examples of misrepresentation," Talley said, has been "the mail order sale of lots in the Mohave Desert in a subdivision known as Lake Mead Rancheros."

These alleged homesites, he said, are "over 100 miles away from the lake" for which the subdivision is named.

A nationwide advertising campaign promises "complete utility service . . . livable now," Talley told the committee. He added:

"Actually there are absolutely no utilities available . . . Six miles from the nearest lot is a tank where one can deposit a quarter and water runs out of an old innertube.

"The pitiful fact about it all is that numerous senior citizens are moving out West to retire to this 'haven of retreat' . . . and find only an open desert. They are too poor or too proud to go back home. Many become welfare cases."

60,000 Lots Sold

Declaring that in most cases "the damage is done before any corrective measures can become effective," the Arizona official said "the more than 60,000 subdivision lots sold during the last 18 months in Mohave County alone were sold almost exclusively to out-of-state prospects."

He urged that Congress amend the Securities & Exchange Act "to require the same investigation and prospectus for interstate real estate promotions as for securities and stocks."

Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.), a member of the committee, backed up Talley's account of the land scandals and said the promoters involved should be hauled before the committee as part of "a full-scale investigation of these organizations."

An American Medical Association official also recommended an increased federal role in protection of consumers against fraud, particularly in the health field.

Dr. Gerald D. Dorman, AMA trustee, praised the "dedicated, competent and devoted" federal government agencies which try to keep quack remedies off the market.

Declaring that the Food & Drug Administration, the Federal Trade Commission and other regulatory bodies "operate in a manner for which the American people can be proud and grateful," he said they should be given more money and manpower to do their job.

The president of the National Better Business Bureau, Kenneth B. Wilson, said his organization's records show that "elderly citizens are mulcted of hundreds of millions of dollars annually by a relatively small group in business which uses advertising to deceive and defraud, and by a similarly small group of confidence men which employs a variety of tricks and schemes to victimize the aged."

Other Tricks Used

In addition to health frauds and misleading real estate promotions, the elderly have been victimized, Wilson said, by:

- Savings and loan associations in states with inadequate regulation, which solicit mail accounts in advertisments holding out the promise of "extremely high dividend rates" and expensive gifts for new savers.

In Maryland, thousands of elderly people who had deposited their life savings as a result of these ads—which gave the impression that their accounts were adequately insured—are now destitute, he indicated.

He noted that while Maryland has tightened its banking regulations in the wake of the scandals, "recently a number of state-chartered savings and loan associations in Mississippi have begun to advertise for save-by-mail accounts."

"They, too, are offering high dividend rates and claim that their accounts are 'insured' by a private company in Mississippi," he said.

- "'Con' men, who have invaded the dance studio business and have developed a sales program designed especially to exploit lonely old ladies."

In one case, a 71-year-old woman mortgaged her home to make the final payment to a dance studio on 'lifetime' memberships totaling $32,600.

- An unscrupulous minority of door-to-door salesmen, some of whom make sales by pretending to be city inspectors, who tell homeowners they need new furnaces, roofs and other repairs for which they charge exorbitant prices.

Wilson also described one swindle worked by a fake "health insurance" agent in Idaho. After he had sold a policy promising health and accident coverage for elderly people for $100 or $200, an accomplice would call on the victims, say he was investigating the salesman, and ask for the receipt for the money to be used in the "investigation."

This left the victim with no policy and no proof of money paid.

McNamara noted during the hearings that the aged are not the only victims of many of these frauds. He emphasized, however, that "the results of fraud upon the elderly are particularly tragic.

"The young have time to recoup from financial folly. But the lifetime savings of the aged—lost to the swindler or the quack—are seldom replaced."

Labor's Public Affairs Radio Program Lauded

Radio stations in all parts of the country which broadcast Washington Reports, the AFL-CIO public affairs program recorded in the capital, are warm in their praise, word received at AFL-CIO headquarters show.

The program each week presents a Democratic and a Republican member of Congress discussing legislation pending or planned, with Harry Flannery, AFL-CIO radio co-ordinator, serving as moderator. It is heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Samples of comment from some of the stations follows:

"Timely, well-produced and well received by our audience . . . Wide area of subject matter covered, the inside glimpse of the way our government is operated, and the expert job of interviewing done by Mr. Flannery make for a very excellent program." WUOA-FM, University, Ala.

". . . an exceptionally fine program . . . objective . . . informative . . . well done." KFIF, Tuscon, Ariz.

"Excellent. We have had many, many comments." KDTA, Delta, Colo.

"A highly educational program!" WRTC-FM, Hartford, Conn.

"Very interesting and up-to-date discussions." WNUR-FM, Evanston, Ill.

"Responsible in-depth reports dealing with important topics needing more than 'headline' treatment on radio." WCHC, Worcester, Mass.

"Excellent—we use each tape at least twice, some three times." WQRS, Detroit.

"Excellent program—informative, with high listener interest." WWBZ, Vineland, N. J.

"One of the best programs we carry. We get consistently high audience response (favorable)." WOSU, Columbus, Ohio.

"Informative program giving the listener a viewpoint he may otherwise not be aware of." KWYR, Winner, S. D.

"An unbiased report of Washington activity." WBNT, Oneida, Tenn.

"Interesting and well-planned discussions." WFOS-FM, South Norfolk, Va.

"One of the better news shows on the air." KULE, Ephrata, Wash.

"It is not only well-received in our area, but it also fills the bill for sustaining public service time, which is sometimes hard to find. KIML, Gillette, Wyo.

SOURCE: U.S. DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Economic Trends:

Trade Bargaining Seen Leading to Job Growth

One of the most significant news stories of 1962 was the battle in Congress over passage of the trade expansion bill sought by the Administration. It ended with Pres. Kennedy's greatest legislative victory—and the widest grant of power ever given to a President of the United States in international negotiations over tariffs.

An article in the January issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist analyzes the Trade Expansion Act, not as a political battle which crossed party lines but as the charting of a new trade course.

The analysis, prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, emphasizes that the new law of itself "cannot lower tariffs, export more goods or create new jobs." It "can and does," however, "provide the power for bargaining to reach these goals."

For the first time, the analysis notes, Congress—which under the Constitution has power over tariffs—has delegated most of its power to the President, subject only to general guide lines and a statement of purpose.

The United States is the world's largest buyer and seller of goods in international markets, and for years has sold more than it has imported. Sales abroad represent $20 billion a year of production and some 3 million jobs for American workers.

The analysis, an Economic Trends & Outlook feature of the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine, points out the new direction in America's trade policies was necessary because economic and political conditions "would not stand still."

Give-and-Take Needed

A new economic entity — the European Economic Community—had arisen and the expiring tariff legislation was too restrictive and limited to enable the United States to engage in the across-the-board give-and-take of tariff negotiations necessary to maintain and expand its traditional markets.

In addition, there was the undeniable fact that the old legislation forced the United States to make a flat choice between expanded trade and "protection" of U.S. industries which might be hurt by increased imports.

One of the landmarks of the new trade policy was the principle of trade adjustment, long supported by labor. Its benefits—including payments of up to 65 percent of normal wages for workers displaced by increased imports—are "designed to help meet problems of change, not to 'protect' an unchanging situation," the AFL-CIO analysis points out.

Effects of the new trade act will not be immediately apparent, the article notes.

"As much as a year of preparations may precede the next round of bargaining," it observed.

Still uncertain are such crucial issues as whether Great Britain will join the Common Market, whether complex farm problems will be resolved and whether Europe's economic boom will continue.

If conditions are favorable, however, the President has new negotiating power. And, the AFL-CIO analysis emphasizes:

"If the American people support the President's use of the new power, the United States may achieve the law's stated aims—more exports, freer trade, more jobs and a stronger free world."

Tom Kennedy Dies; Boyle Heads UMW

The death of the Mine Workers' president, Thomas Kennedy, is a "great loss" to the entire trade union movement, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a telegram to Kennedy's widow in Hazleton, Pa.

Kennedy served the UMW "ably for many years," the federation president observed, and was "a most highly respected citizen" whose presence will be "missed by all who knew him."

Kennedy, longtime UAW official, succeeded John L. Lewis as president when Lewis resigned Jan. 14, 1960, to become president emeritus. At the same time the executive board named W. A. (Tony) Boyle, a Lewis assistant, as vice president.

Boyle now succeeds to the presidency. He has been in charge of administrative affairs for about a year because of Kennedy's illness, and two months ago he was named by Kennedy as acting president.

The funeral mass was sung Jan. 23 at St. Gabriel's Roman Catholic Church in Hazleton, the family's lifetime home, with burial in the parish cemetery. He was 75 years old. Survivors include his widow and a daughter, Mrs. Thomas Noonan. A son, Thomas, Jr., died in 1961.

Kennedy in 1961 was named as one of the seven spokesmen of labor unions serving on the President's Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy, of which Meany and other AFL-CIO officials are members.

Labor Council Head Elected to 21st Term

Toronto, Ont.—William Jenovese at the age of 74 has been re-elected to his 21st term as president of the Toronto & District Labor Council, representing 110,000 union members. He also is secretary-treasurer of Bricklayers Local 2, a vice president of the Canadian Labor Congress and a member of the Toronto Harbor Commissioners.

Brotherhood Week Hailed By McDonald

The concept of Brotherhood Week, to be marked Feb. 17-24, has been endorsed in statements by labor and management representatives who are serving as national chairmen of the observance.

Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers, national chairman for labor, recalled that the trade union movement, "founded as it was on the principle that all men are brothers," has always worked to eliminate discrimination based "on the accidents of race, color, religion or national origin."

"National Brotherhood Week gives us all the opportunity to rededicate ourselves each year to the attainment of this goal and to the principles upon which our democratic society was founded," he added.

Donald W. Douglas, Jr., president of the Douglas Aircraft Co. and national chairman for industry, asserted that the "spirit of brotherhood is something not so easily achieved as our easy lip service would indicate."

"We must strive actively," he said, "to reach genuine understanding of the many diverse religions, races, cultures and philosophies that inhabit our globe and learn to live among them in harmony. Otherwise we may perish, for the world has grown too small to support for much longer the vicious conflicts and hatreds that have marked so much of its history."

Pilots, ALEA Agree on New Relationship

Chicago — The Air Line Pilots and the Air Line Employes Association have reached agreement on a new charter of affiliation providing for complete independence and autonomy for ALEA but continuing a close working relationship between the two organizations.

ALPA withdrew its older charter of affiliation about five months ago on the ground that the ALEA had reached the point where it could assume full administration of its own affairs. Under the old charter ALPA had assumed responsibility for a number of ALEA's financial obligations.

The new charter, which can be cancelled at any time by either party, provides for AFL-CIO affiliation of ALEA through ALPA, with specific assurances that the jurisdictional provisions of the federation's constitution will be adhered to.

ALEA represents some 5,000 employes in a number of non-flight classifications on 16 airlines. Its home offices are in Chicago.

E. B. Webb Named To California Post

Sacramento—California Gov. Edmund G. Brown (D) has appointed Ernest B. Webb director of the State Dept. of Industrial Relations —a post he filled for three years under a previous administration.

Webb, a former secretary-treasurer of the Long Beach Central Labor Council, succeeds John F. Henning, who was recently named Under Sec. of Labor by Pres. Kennedy. Webb headed the state department during the last three years of the administration of Gov. Goodwin Knight (R).

In another shift in the state cabinet, Irving H. Perluss, director of the California Dept. of Employment, was appointed by Brown to the Sacramento County Superior Court.

80TH ANNIVERSARY of Civil Service Act was marked by Government Employes with dinners in principal cities throughout the nation. One of the speakers at the Washington, D. C., observance was Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, right, shown here with AFGE Pres. John F. Griner.

AFGE Hails 80 Years Of U. S. Merit System

Eighty years of the civil service merit system and the first year of collective bargaining in the federal service were celebrated by the Government Employes at the union's annual Civil Service Anniversary banquet in Washington, D. C.

More than 900 members heard Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Civil Service Commission Chairman John W. Macy, Jr., and Rep. Arnold Olsen (D-Mont.) cite Pres. Kennedy's executive order on employe-management relations as having opened a new era in the civil service.

Wirtz termed union recognition in the government a "success" and said it should be followed this year by legislation permitting a voluntary dues checkoff in federal agencies. Speaking for the Administration, he said, "we wholeheartedly endorse it."

Macy praised the AFGE for having, "since its founding in 1932, contributed to all significant improvements in federal personnel administration."

Pay Reform Cited

These gains during the past year included, Macy said, both a pay raise and establishment of the principle of an annual review of federal salaries, equal appeal rights, equality of opportunity for women in government and adjustment of pensions to changes in the cost of living, as well as union recognition.

Olsen told the group that government unions have served the nation by promoting high standards of service at the same time they represent employe interests in seeking pay raises and better working conditions.

"Contrary to the stereotype of the federal bureaucracy getting bigger and less efficient all the time, productivity has in fact been rising in the federal government," he declared.

Proportion Down

"Federal employment has actually dropped in proportion to the nation's population. Nineteen out of every 1,000 people were federal employes in 1945; 15 out of every 1,000 in 1954, and only 13 of 1,000 in 1961."

Olsen noted that the 1960 census was 20 percent larger than the 1950 census "but was completed 18 months sooner and cost less." He said that a 40 percent increase in the volume of mail over 10 years has been handled with less than a 20 percent increase in postal employes.

In addition to the anniversary observance in the nation's capital, AFGE units throughout the nation sponsored special events and secured proclamations of Civil Service Week by governors and mayors.

Report on 1962:

Job Shrinkage Bars Labor Force Growth

By Robert B. Cooney

The labor force failed to grow as expected during 1962 because job opportunities were lacking, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The strong job recovery in the early part of last year ran out of steam midway through 1962, with increases scored after that only in the education and service fields, the department's report showed.

The total labor force averaged 700,000 higher in 1962 than in 1961, the Labor Dept. said, with the increase between the fourth quarters of 1961 and 1962 totaling 800,000.

The department had projected an increase of 1.1 million in the labor force, however, and there was thus a failure in expected growth by about 300,000.

Harold Goldstein, assistant commissioner for manpower and employment statistics in the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics who presented the report, was bluntly asked at a news conference if the labor force failed to grow because of the lack of work opportunities.

"This I would suspect is a major factor," Goldstein replied. "It may not be the only one."

The review of the employment situation during 1962 was presented with the Labor Dept.'s detailed job report for December 1962. The monthly report said the job picture "remained basically unchanged" between November and December, with only seasonal changes recorded.

Non-farm payrolls rose by 281,000 to a total of 56.5 million. Retail trade jumped by 563,000 and 150,000 temporary postal employes were added with the onset of the holiday season. Extremely cold weather cut construction jobs by 266,000 and soft-goods jobs dropped seasonally by 140,000.

Total Jobless Unchanged

The total unemployed remained unchanged at 3.8 million, and the total of the longterm jobless—those out of work 15 weeks or longer—rose by 100,000 to 1 million. The key seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment was 5.6 percent in December, down slightly from November's 5.8 percent.

In looking at "The Year in Review," the Labor Dept. said the 1962 job picture developed "in a setting of moderate economic expansion." Total output of goods and services rose by 2.5 percent between the fourth quarters of 1961 and 1962, compared to nearly 6 percent in the previous year, the report noted.

Initial Jobless Pay Claims Up by 55,000

Initial claims for jobless pay — reflecting experienced workers newly out of jobs—swung upward by 55,000 in the week ended Jan. 12 to a total of 537,674, the Labor Dept. has reported.

A year ago, they totaled 492,620.

Workers drawing unemployment compensation numbered 2.8 million for the week ended Jan. 5, the Labor Dept. said. This was up by 300,000 from the preceding week and compared to a total of 2.6 million a year ago.

The total job rise amounted to about 1.2 million, but most of it occurred in the first half of 1962. Factory employment declined in the second half and, the report said, "failed to regain its prerecession peak."

The early job comeback from the recession failed to dent unemployment totals. The key seasonally-adjusted jobless rate hung at about 5.5 percent throughout the year. The jobless total was about 500,000 above the levels prevailing just before the 1960 recession, the report said.

The report said that labor force participation rates continued to decline in 1962 among teenage boys and older men, with lengthening school attendance and earlier retirement. The long-term uptrend among women leveled off at least temporarily, the report added.

Work Force Makeup Shifts

Within the labor force, there was a continuing job shift from the goods - producing industries to the service industries. Most white collar and service jobs continued to expand while farm jobs continued to disappear, the report said.

While the number of blue collar workers rose over the year with the recovery from the 1961 recession, the report said, the increase was not significantly higher.

"Nonwhite workers were still much worse off than white workers by all measures of economic status," the report said.

Factory hours of work were sustained at comparatively high levels during the year, the report said. Overtime work at premium pay held at peaks, recording the longest period over which such high levels were maintained. Some 7 percent of hours paid for in manufacturing were paid at overtime rates, the report said.

Community Labor-Management Forum Set Up by Canadian Area

Kitchener, Ont.—Establishment of a labor-management community forum was voted unanimously at a meeting here which was described as Canada's first labor-management educational session.

The meeting was arranged by the Kitchener-Waterloo & District Labor Council and W. V. Yohe, president of B. F. Goodrich of Canada. The principal speakers were Yohe and Executive Vice Pres. William Dodge of the Canadian Labor Congress, both of whom were members of the labor-management-government mission sent to Europe last summer by the National Productivity Council to study labor-management relations.

The motion to establish the labor-management community forum was made by Vice Pres. Richard Gingrich of the labor council and seconded by M. G. Morgan, Goodrich vice president. Those voting in its favor included other labor council officers and the presidents of 15 companies in the Kitchener-Waterloo area.

Dodge and Yohe in their talks agreed that cooperation between strong labor and strong management groups is necessary to insure Canada's growth and economic well-being.

Dodge hailed the occasion as the first when "labor and management have undertaken to place the case for economic planning and labor-management cooperation before the citizens of a Canadian community."

He expressed the hope that Canadian leaders would discard "preconceived ideas and prejudices" and follow the example set in Sweden, where workers and the general public are kept aware of industry policy matters that might affect them.

Dodge agreed that Canada can best compete in the world market by increasing production and keeping prices competitive, but rejected the doctrine that this could be accomplished by depressing wages.

"We are already competitive in most world markets," he said, "and the only market area in the world where we are having trouble with the competition is the United States, where wages are higher than they are here."

To get the growth rate "up to the level necessary to provide full employment," Dodge added, "there must be a planned and orderly expansion of the public sector of the economy."

Yohe predicted that progress will be slow until there is more "interest in and understanding of" the economic situation among the general public.

Union Honors Heroic Fireman

Klamath Falls, Ore.—A Southern Pacific locomotive fireman who prevented a serious accident when he took over a locomotive in snowplow service from a stricken engineer has been named winner of his union's monthly safety award.

Dennis A. Depuy, 35, found the engineer dead at the controls when he investigated to see why the locomotive was gaining speed when it should have been slowing. The Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen, in citing Depuy for his alertness, said a serious accident could have resulted if the uncontrolled locomotive had entered the main line.

To Assure Stable Prices:

Kennedy Reaffirms Wage, Price Guides

Pres. Kennedy has reaffirmed the wage and price "guideposts" set out by the Administration a year ago and declared their continuation would assure stable prices in 1963.

"As long as wage rate increases stay within the bounds of productivity increases, as long as the push for higher profit margins through higher prices is restrained—as long as wage and price changes reflect the 'guideposts . . .' the outlook for stable prices is excellent," the President told Congress in his Economic Message.

The Council of Economic Advisers restated the "general guides for non-inflationary wage and price behavior" in their report with specific qualifications.

In the wage area the qualifications for increases beyond the productivity range—estimated at about 3 percent—would be to attract sufficient labor in an industry short of workers or to improve exceptionally low wage rates compared to those earned by labor of similar ability.

Dr. Walter W. Heller, CEA chairman, told a news conference that "the guideposts have been effective in moderating wage increases and, indeed, therefore, in moderating and contributing to the record of price stability."

Wages in 1962, Heller said, "held at a lower rate of increase than any other postwar year" and averaged 2.2 percent for the latest 12-month period in manufacturing, without including fringe benefits.

In its report, the council pointed out that the rate of wage increases in manufacturing "has been considerably reduced in the past five years."

Average hourly earnings rose 5.5 percent a year between 1947 and 1958, the council said, and only 2.9 percent a year between 1958 and 1962.

"Labor costs per unit of output in all manufacturing have been stable or declining since 1958, whereas in the earlier period they had advanced," the council reported.

Steel Price 'Rise' Inflationary Threat

The "principal threat" to price stability in 1962 was the attempt by steel producers to hike prices after signing a "non-inflationary" wage contract with the Steelworkers, the Council of Economic Advisers reported to Congress.

"Had this increase stood," the CEA declared, "it would have caused and invited other price increases throughout the economy."

Fortunately, the report commented, "the price increase was rescinded after the President expressed the country's concern over the serious threat to price stability and our balance of payments."

Report Shows Schools Shy 121,000 Classrooms

The nation's public schools were short more than 121,000 classrooms to accommodate a record enrollment last fall, the U.S. Office of Education has reported after a nationwide survey.

Nearly 3.4 million students, the survey showed, began the 1962-63 school year in "overcrowded classrooms, makeshift quarters," or in "obsolete and unsatisfactory facilities."

While the number of full and part-time teachers increased 3.4 percent over the previous year to 1.5 million, school enrollment rose 3.7 percent over the same period to 38.8 million.

A reported 72,000 new classrooms were added during the 1961-62 year, but most were needed to meet the increased enrollment and to replace rooms that have been abandoned. The backlog of needed classrooms, the report noted, was reduced by only 6,000 over the past year.

One area of improvement was the reduction in the number of teachers who do not meet full certification standards of their states. There were 83,000 full-time teachers in this category at the start of the current school year. They made up 5.5 percent of the teaching force, a drop from 6.3 percent the previous year and the lowest percentage during the nine years of the government's survey.

PRES.-ELECT JUAN BOSCH, of the Dominican Republic, is shown here with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany during a visit to AFL-CIO headquarters. Bosch, who takes office Feb. 27, has pledged democratic government as the first elected president following the overthrow of the Trujillo dictatorship.

How Recovery Ran Out of Steam

Data for last two months are preliminary.

'Moderate Expansion' Predicted By Kennedy in Economic Report

(Continued from Page 1)

GNP at constant prices is necessary to reduce the unemployment rate to 4 percent.

Heller reaffirmed at a news conference that "the unemployment rate would tend to stay about the same in the course of 1963, with some improvement towards the end of the year."

Kennedy laid out the Administration's goals in his message, stressing that the "core" of the 1963 program for carrying out the objectives of the Employment Act of 1946 "is major tax reduction and revision, carefully timed and structured to speed our progress toward full employment and faster growth, while maintaining our recent record of price stability and balance of payments improvement."

The nation is "still failing substantially short of its economic potential," the President said, citing the fact that the unemployment rate dropped 5 percent in only one month in the past five years; the $30-40 billion of usable productive capacity lying idle; an average growth rate of 2.7 percent since 1955; the $7-$8 billion of profits obtainable at reasonable full employment but now lacking and the similar shortfall of $18-$20 billion in wages and salaries.

The Administration's programs since 1960, Kennedy said, carried the economy "safely past the shoals of a sharp break in the stock market, a drop in the rate of inventory accumulation and a wave of pessimism in early summer."

"As the year ended, the economy was still moving upward," he added.

'At Moment of Decision'

The economy is now "poised at a moment of decision," he told Congress, and it will require private initiative and public policy to bring new economic growth.

"The main block to full employment is an unrealistically heavy burden of taxation," he said. "The time has come to remove it."

The President estimated that if Congress adopts the tax program, about $8 billion would be cut from the consumer tax load and well over $7 billion would be spent in consumer goods markets.

In addition to his tax program the President also called for additional economic measures to spur the nation's growth:

- Extension of minimum wage law coverage to "a large number of workers" still without this protection.
- Permanent improvements in the unemployment insurance system "to extend coverage to more workers and to increase the size and duration of benefits."
- Equal competitive opportunity for all forms of transportation and federal aid for urban transportation improvements.
- Revision of the nation's silver policy to withdraw the metal from a monetary function except for coinage.
- Development of a federal-state engineering extension service and new means of facilitating use by civilian industry of the results of government financed research.
- Adjustment of the income tax laws to give business firms an additional stimulus to invest in research equipment.
- Improvement of the educational system with specific proposals to be made in a later message.
- Increased funds for manpower development and training.
- Passage of the Youth Employment Opportunities Act.

The President said that to aid small business he will recommend that effective Jan. 1, 1963, the rate on the first $25,000 of corporate income be dropped from 30 to 22 percent while the 52 percent rate on corporate income over $25,000 is retained. In later stages the 52 percent rate would drop to 47 percent.

Queried on whether there is a danger of the current business expansion ending before the close of 1963 if Congress doesn't act promptly on the President's tax proposal, Heller said "there is such a danger," but added that the tax program" is not specifically designed as an antirecession program."

"On the other hand," he said, "it would provide extremely important insurance against a recession."

Kennedy Links Tax Cuts to Reforms

Says Spending Slash Would Imperil Nation

(Continued from Page 1)

would gain revenue, on balance would produce an offsetting increase of $3.4 billion, leaving the net reduction at $10.2 billion.

Rate Cuts Proposed

The three-year program would cut individual tax rates from the present 20 to 91 percent spread to a range of 14 to 65 percent in 1965 under this schedule:

- 1963—a rate range of 18.5 to 85.5 percent applying to the full calendar year, with the appropriate withholding rate dropped from 18 percent to 15.5 percent effective upon enactment of the program.
- 1964—a rate range of 15.5 to 71.5 percent for the entire year accompanied by a withholding rate of 13.5 percent starting July 1 of that year.
- 1965—a permanent rate schedule of 14 to 65 percent maintaining the withholding rate at 13.5 percent.

The lowest rate of 14 percent, under Kennedy's plan, would apply to the first $2,000 of taxable income for a married couple filing joint returns and to the first $1,000 of taxable income for a single taxpayer.

In addition, there would be a minimum standard deduction of $300 plus $100 for each dependent up to the standard deduction limit of $1,000.

Under present law, the standard deduction cannot exceed 10 percent of the taxpayer's income so that a couple with income of $4,000, say, may take a standard deduction of only $400. Under Kennedy's proposal, such a couple with three dependents would get the minimum standard deduction of $600.

Itemized Deductions

Taxpayers who itemize deductions, however, would fare differently. Kennedy proposed limiting such deductions—for state and local taxes, interest on mortgages and other loans, medical expenses, etc. —to the amount by which they exceed 5 percent of taxable income.

This proposal, the President said, would produce $2.3 billion in additional revenue, more than three-fourths of the net gain anticipated if all structural revisions are enacted. It will also mean, he said, that an additional 6.5 million taxpayers would choose the standard deduction rather than itemize.

Kennedy's proposals for corporate tax reductions in 1963 would cut the present normal tax of 30 percent on the first $25,000 of income to 22 percent but would raise the 22 percent surtax to 30 percent, thus keeping the rate for income over $25,000 at 52 percent.

In calendar year 1964, the corporate surtax would drop to 28 percent for a combined rate of 50 percent, and in 1965 the surtax would be further reduced to 25 percent, bringing the overall rate to 47 percent.

The President also urged that corporations paying taxes of $100,000 a year or more be brought over a five-year period under a fully current schedule of quarterly declarations and payments. This, he estimated, would offset revenue losses by $1.5 billion per year over the period without adding to the net tax burden of the corporations.

Other highlights of his proposals for structural reform affecting both corporations and individuals:

- Repeal of the $50 exclusion and 4 percent tax credit on dividend income, which provide the greatest benefit, Kennedy said, "for the very highest income recipients."

If Congress refuses to repeal this provision, the President said, tax rates should be scaled up to 70 percent rather than the 65 percent he proposes.

- Application of ordinary income tax rates, rather than capital gains rates, to the spread between the price of a restricted stock option and the value of the stock at the time the option is exercised, with the tax payable at that time.
- Reduction from 50 percent to 30 percent of the amount of long-term gains included in individual income subject to tax. Combined with the proposed reductions in income tax rates, the President said, this will produce capital gains tax rates ranging from 4.2 percent to 19.5 percent instead of the present spread of 10 to 25 percent.
- Application of long-term capital gains treatment only to assets held for more than a year, rather than the present six months, to confine benefits to investors rather than short-term speculators.
- A $300 credit against taxes for all persons 65 or older to replace both the extra exemption and the retirement income credit. The $300 credit would be reduced by a percentage of the social security or railroad retirement benefits received.
- Repeal of the sick-pay exclusion of up to $100 a week received under employer-financed wage or salary continuation plans.
- Inclusion in individual income of the amount of employer-paid premiums on group life insurance in excess of $5,000 coverage.
- Elimination of itemized deductions for casualty losses in the amount they fall below 4 percent of the taxpayer's income.
- Revision of rules for deducting medical and drug expenses to provide a combined floor of 4 percent of income instead of the present 3 percent floor on medical costs and 1 percent on drugs.

SIGNING OF ANTI-DISCRIMINATION pledge by AFL-CIO unions with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunities was re-enacted by the Chemical Workers for a documentary film on the union. Shown at the replica signing in the White House as movie cameras ground are, left to right, seated, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, ICWU Pres. Walter L. Mitchell and AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; standing, ICWU Intl. Representatives Thomas F. Mullen and Cornelius Maiden; Dir. Boris Shishkin of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights; ICWU Sec.-Treas. Marshall Shafer; Hobart Taylor, executive vice chairman of the President's Committee, and Walter Davis and Donald Slaiman of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights.

Word of British Health Plan Success Gets Back to Rep. Mills' Constituents

Little Rock, Ark.—The news has reached this home district of Rep. Wilbur Mills (D) that Britain's government-supported National Health Service is working out pretty well, on the whole, contrary to the propaganda of the American Medical Association.

Mills is chairman of the House Ways & Means Committee, which in the last Congress bottled up the Kennedy Administration's program of hospitalization insurance for the aged under the social security system, a program far less complex and comprehensive than the British plan and not subject to the same system of government control.

The Arkansas Gazette, largest daily in the state, which is published here in the largest city in Mills' district, recently printed an article by John Gale, Associated Press writer, reviewing the first 14 years of the British plan and concluding that "on the whole, it appears to be succeeding."

"Most of all," Gale found, "the National Health Service has succeeded in the high purpose it set out to achieve in the aftermath of World War II. Nobody is disbarred by lack of means from receiving proper medical attention. With the state picking up most of the bill, Britain's 52 million people can at last afford to be ill."

The article cited criticism of the plan from a number of doctors, but noted that it was directed chiefly at obtaining changes, not complete elimination of the NHS.

"Only a tiny minority of the medical profession would like to see the NHS scrapped," Gale reported, noting that only about 600 of Britain's 35,000 physicians had remained in private practice rather than participate in the plan.

He found, too, that the British public overwhelmingly supported the plan. A national poll showed that 89 percent of the public evaluated it as satisfactory and 81 percent felt they were getting value for money.

As for the doctor-patient relationship, which the AMA cries would be destroyed by the Administration's medicare program, it hasn't happened in Britain.

One doctor declared to Gale that his relationship with his patients had "never been better."

Actually, there is little comparison between the tax-supported, state-run NHS and the health-care program for the aged proposed in the United States.

The latter would cover only persons 65 and older and would be limited to hospitalization and nursing home care. It would be financed largely from increased social security contributions during the beneficiary's working life. It would not enlist family doctors into government service and would not put hospital administration under government control.

1-26-63

Liberals Seek Vote On Senate Cloture

(Continued from Page 1)

A broader drive to enable a majority of the full Senate to cut off debate is being pushed by a bipartisan liberal coalition headed by Democratic Whip Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.) and GOP Whip Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.).

Their respective party leaders, Sen. Mike Mansfield (D-Mont.) and Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen (R-Ill.), are split on the issue.

Mansfield, although not actively participating in the drive for rules reform, has said he will vote for a three-fifths cloture rule. Expressing impatience at the inability of the Senate to resolve the issue, Mansfield announced that he would lengthen the present noon to 6 p. m. sessions to run from 10 a. m. until 10 p. m.

Dirksen, who has in the past expressed support of a three-fifths rule, now says that he is opposed to any rules changes. He confirmed to newsmen that he had told an official of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that he felt during his recent re-election campaign that the NAACP and the Negro press had not "demonstrated any real appreciation" of his past efforts on behalf of rules changes and civil rights.

The two issues are closely linked because the filibuster has been over the years the chief southern weapon to block civil rights bills.

The NAACP's Washington representative, Clarence Mitchell, said Dirksen had told him he did not feel he had any obligation to go out of his way for the Negro.

Dirksen, however, agreed—reportedly at the urging of liberal Republican senators—not to go ahead at this time with his announced plan to move to table, and thus kill, the rules reform issue.

Leading the well - disciplined southern forces is Georgia's Sen. Richard B. Russell (D), perhaps the most skilled parliamentarian in the Senate.

The last time the Senate cloture rule was changed was in 1959, when the previous requirement for a two-thirds vote of the full Senate to limit debate was modified to require only two-thirds of those present and voting.

At that time, however, the Senate wrote into its rules a statement that rules continue from one Congress to the next and the cloture requirement also applied to debate of future changes in the rules. While most southerners voted against the 1959 modification, they did not seek to block it.

GOP Wins Seat In California Vote

Sacramento, Calif. — The 1st Congressional Dist. was captured by Republican Don Clausen in a special election to fill a vacancy caused by the death of the late Democratic Rep. Clem Miller.

Clausen beat William F. Grader, who had served as Miller's administrative aide, and another Democratic candidate, John C. Stuart. The complete vote tally showed 79,111 for Clausen to 64,740 for Grader and 1,631 for Stuart.

Clausen lost in the general election last November despite the fact that Miller had been killed in an airplane accident during the campaign, too late for his name to be removed from the ballot.

The result is to shift House membership to 258 Democrats and 177 Republicans, giving the GOP a net gain of three seats from the 87th Congress.

Office Workers Win Election in Hospital

San Juan, P. R. — Forty-seven clerical employes of the Presbyterian Hospital at Santurce chose the Office Workers as their collective bargaining agent in an election conducted by the Insular Labor Board.

The election, in which the union won a 3-1 margin, was the climax of a campaign conducted by AFL-CIO Reg. Dir. Agustin Benitez and OEIU Rep. Heriberto Ortiz.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, February 2, 1963 | No. 5

Joblessness Rate at 5.8%, Unchanged from Year Ago

RALLY URGING ACTION on contract demands of United Federation of Teachers Local 2 drew hundreds of union members to a demonstration march around headquarters of the New York City Board of Education in Brooklyn. The board denied unnecessary delay, said it has received no budget figure from the city.

Breadwinners Hit By Rise in January

By Robert B. Cooney

Unemployment rose in January by 850,000 to a total of 4.7 million, boosting the jobless rate to 5.8 percent and leaving both figures at the levels of a year ago, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The rise—made up mostly of family breadwinners—was "about the usual increase for this time of year," the department said in its monthly summary report.

The failure of the employment picture to improve over the year is the "only really significant development," said Harold Goldstein, assistant commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The key seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment at 5.8 percent, was up from December's 5.6 percent and matched 1962's highpoint. This means 58 of every 1,000 persons in the workforce were actively seeking jobs and failed to find them.

The department noted that when total unemployed and the rate of joblessness both stood at the same levels in January a year ago, the economy was then coming out of the worst of the 1960-61 recession. However, the recovery in jobs leveled off in mid-1962.

Counting the impact on breadwinners, the department's report noted that "unemployment among adult men rose by 500,000 over the month to 2.7 million, accounting for 60 percent of the increase in total unemployment."

Post-Christmas Cutbacks

"The seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for adult men has been edging upwards since October, but at 4.8 percent in January was not significantly changed over the month or over the year," the report added.

The post-Christmas cutbacks caused a jobless rise of about 100,-

(Continued on Page 12)

Prices Up 1.2 Percent In 1962

Higher prices for services were the major factor in the 1.2 percent rise in the consumer price index in 1962, the Labor Dept. reported, although higher food and used car prices were contributing factors.

The 1962 price picture showed an average rise of one-tenth of 1 percent a month, with about half the total increase occurring in the first four months of the year.

The department reported that for December the index registered a two-tenths of 1 percent drop due primarily to lower prices for fresh fruits, poultry and pork, while nonfood items were unchanged and services continued to advance slightly.

Robert Myers, deputy commissioner of labor statistics, warned that the December drop in food prices would probably be wiped out in January because of the severe cold weather in southern fruit and vegetable areas. He anticipated increases also in heating oil and services generally, leaving "little doubt" that the

(Continued on Page 2)

'Assistance Without Federal Control':

Kennedy Again Proposes Aid-to-Education Program

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Kennedy has renewed and re-emphasized an appeal to Congress to give "high priority" to a large-scale federal aid to education program which he termed "vital" to the nation's security.

The President wrapped into a single legislative package his requests for new or expanded programs of assistance to public schools and junior colleges, public and private colleges and universities.

Declaring that education cannot be "divided into several parts," Kennedy asked that the bill include funds for teacher training and for manpower retraining, for both school and community libraries, adult education and improved vocational courses.

He urged more fellowships for graduate study in scientific areas, a large-scale loan and loan insurance program for college students and a new federally-subsidized work-study program similar to the National Youth Administration program of the New Deal era.

The first-year price tag was put at $1.2 billion in new appropriations of which $144 million would actually be spent during the fiscal year.

Kennedy described his proposals as "clearly realistic in terms of costs" and "clearly essential to the growth and security of this country."

He warned Congress that failure to raise educational standards is "poor economics" as well as "poor social policy."

Price of Ignorance

The price of "ignorance and illiteracy, unskilled workers and school dropouts," he said, is "delinquency, unemployment . . . a loss of productive power and purchasing power."

The President's request for a single-package bill combines politically-popular programs such as aid to "federally-impacted" school districts with the more controversial general school construction assistance to improve chances of favorable congressional action.

On Capitol Hill there were predictions that the package would be broken up into separate bills. The 87th Congress, politically similar to this one, killed or pigeonholed all major education bills.

School Aid Trimmed

Kennedy's new program sharply pares down the $2.3 billion request he made in 1961 for an across-the-board three-year program of grants which states could use for either

(Continued on Page 11)

Senate Filibuster Foes Suffer Initial Setback

The anti-filibuster rules reform drive in the Senate met with a setback after three weeks of debate, but Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) said the reform "show of strength" was "encouraging" and said the fight would go on.

By a 53 to 42 vote, the Senate tabled a constitutional claim by rules reform supporters which would have enabled a majority of senators to cut off debate on rules proposals at the start of a new Congress — without being bound by cloture rules adopted in a previous Congress.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, in a telegram to senators, had urged defeat of the tabling motion. He warned that the "future of much liberal legislation depends on reducing the number of votes required to invoke cloture."

The 1961 AFL-CIO convention, Biemiller emphasized, unanimously called for Senate rules reform.

Civil rights groups also strongly protested sidetracking the issue, stressing that the filibuster has repeatedly been used to block passage of civil rights bills.

Humphrey termed the vote "a surprising demonstration of strength" for forces pushing for rules change "on a highly technical procedural issue." He added:

(Continued on Page 11)

Wyoming GOP Nears 'Work' Law Passage

Cheyenne, Wyo.—A "steamroller" operation by "'right-to-work" supporters has moved a penalty-laden bill to outlaw union shop agreements to the brink of passage in the Republican-controlled Wyoming legislature.

Less than two weeks after the message had been introduced, it was whisked through the Senate Labor Committee without public hearings and passed the Senate by a 16-11 vote. Except for one Republican who opposed it and one Democrat who supported it, the vote followed party lines.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, the antiunion bill had been reported to the House calendar without recommendation by the House Labor Committee and its fate apparently depended on the votes of a group of moderate Republicans. The GOP controls the House, 37-19.

If Wyoming bans the union shop, it would be the 20th state to do so—and the first since 1958, when Kansas inserted a "right-to-work" provision in its constitution. That same year marked a sharp setback for "right-to-work" forces as voters in five other states rejected similar

(Continued on Page 2)

CONGRATULATIONS are extended to Vice Pres. Charles Garrahan of the Clothing Workers upon his assumption of the presidency of the Union Label & Service Trades Council of Greater New York & Long Island by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Richard F. Walsh, head of the national Union Label & Service Trades Dept. and president of the Theatrical Stage Employes. Shown at the installation are, from left, Vice Pres. Joseph Tuvim of the council, Walsh, Garrahan, ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky and Council Sec.-Treas. Harry Avrutin.

Court of Appeals Rules:

Contract Binds Firm Involved in Merger

New York—The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here has ruled that workers' rights under a collective bargaining agreement continue and are subject to arbitration when the company under contract is involved in a consolidation.

The circuit court reversed a lower court ruling that District 65 of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Workers could not compel arbitration of the issues after Interscience Publishers merged with John T. Wiley Co. in 1961.

Wiley notified the union that its contract with Interscience was terminated, although it would normally have not expired until Jan. 30, 1962. The union maintained that the contract continued through its expiration date and that the employes had "vested" rights beyond the expiration of the contract.

The union initiated arbitration, but after Wiley refused to arbitrate the union went to the courts to compel arbitration.

The circuit court ruled that although the contract between District 65 and Interscience did not have a "successor" clause it was not terminated by the consolidation with Wiley and that the agreement to arbitrate seniority and other provisions survived the consolidation.

The three judges said that "the federal policy of promoting industrial peace and stability, especially with reference to arbitration procedures set up in collective bargaining agreements, can be fostered and sustained only by answering . . . in the negative" the question, "Did the consolidation abruptly terminate the collective bargaining agreement and the rights of the union and the employes created or arising thereunder."

A contrary decision, said the court, "would be a breeder of discontent and unharmonious relations between employer and employes and a source of unnecessary and disrupting litigation."

The consolidation was not intended to preclude the union "from proceeding to arbitration and to determine the effect of the consolidation on the contract and on the rights of the employes . . .," the court ruled.

Wyoming GOP Nears Passage of 'Work' Law

(Continued from Page 1)

proposals and defeated a host of Republican candidates linked to the anti-union drive.

With new leadership coming from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, "work" law supporters have mounted a drive in Oklahoma as well as in Wyoming, and have launched a petition campaign in Maine in an effort to force the issue to referendum.

Wyoming's new Republican governor, Clifford P. Hansen, has taken the position that he would neither request the legislature to pass a "right-to-work" law nor oppose its passage.

The Senate-passed bill, if adopted, would impose harsh penalties, including jail sentences, fines, damage suits and injunctions, for "direct or indirect" violations.

In addition to being liable for damages, persons found guilty of violations would be subject to six months in jail and a $1,000 fine. The bill also specifies that "each day of continued violation after conviction shall constitute a separate offense" subject to the same penalty.

State AFL-CIO Pres. Paul Shafto said four previous attempts in recent years to pass a "work" law had been defeated. Last year, however, a group calling itself Citizens for Right-to-Work launched a massive campaign to outlaw the union shop. Republican gains in the November elections, including the defeat of a Democratic governor on record against a "work" law, tipped the balance.

The so-called "citizens' group" lobbying for "right-to-work" is headed by Lloyd W. Taggert, a contractor who is also a member of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's Special Committee for Voluntary Unionism. This "blue-ribbon" committee was set up in September 1961 with the avowed aim of outlawing the union shop "wherever and in whatever form it may exist."

Prices Up 1.2 Percent In 1962

(Continued from Page 1)

January index will move upward again.

The December drop in the index was the sharpest in four years for a month-to-month change and was the second monthly decline in 1962.

Earnings Up

In a companion report, the department said spendable earnings of the average factory production worker rose to a new high in December stemming from small increases in both the manufacturing workweek and average hourly earnings.

A factory worker with three dependents earned take-home pay—after taxes—of $86.72 in December compared to $86.19 a month earlier. Adjusted for consumer price changes, his real spendable earnings averaged $81.97, up from $81.31 in November.

About 270,000 trucking workers will receive an increase of 4 cents an hour and about 3,500 New York City harbor seamen will receive a 1.2 percent increase based on the change in the index during 1962. Cost-of-living allowances of 18,000 workers in various small industries will be increased by 1 cent an hour, while another 20,000 will suffer a reduction of 1 cent.

Unions Given Guidelines To Aid Under Trade Act

Unions representing workers in plants or industries adversely affected by trade concessions made by the United States may petition for adjustment assistance under the Trade Expansion Act of 1962, the U.S. Dept. of Labor has pointed out in a new booklet.

When layoffs occur, or are threatened, as a result of any reduction in tariff or change in import quota, workers or their unions may ask the U.S. Tariff Commission to certify to the President that the trade concessions had an adverse economic effect. The Tariff Commission must make a finding on the issue within 60 days.

If the Tariff Commission upholds the petition, the President is authorized to set in motion the procedures for adjustment aid, including these benefits for workers laid off:

- Readjustment allowances of 65 percent of pay, up to a maximum of 65 percent of the average national manufacturing wage. These benefits will not be paid if a worker refuses a suitable retraining course recommended by his state employment security office. Benefits will normally be paid for up to 52 weeks of unemployment and up to 65 weeks for persons 60 or over at the time they were laid off. The Secretary of Labor may also authorize up to 78 weeks of benefits when necessary to enable a worker to complete an approved training course.
- An additional subsistence allowance when a jobless worker must go beyond normal commuting distance in order to take a training course.
- A relocation allowance, which includes moving expenses, when an eligible worker who is the head of a family moves to another area in order to accept a job offer.

Information and technical help on submitting petitions to the Tariff Commission are available from the Labor Dept.'s office of Trade Adjustment Assistance.

Court Backs Musicians In Band Leader's Suit

New York—The Musicians have won a federal court test of the union's right to expel band-leader members for failure to abide by union regulations, including the payment of minimum wage scales.

The AFM described the ruling as a "far-reaching decision" protecting its right to restrain union musicians from working with expelled members.

Judge Richard H. Levet of the U.S. District Court here denied a motion by New York band leader Joseph Carroll for a preliminary injunction and dismissed on its merits Carroll's action to set aside his expulsion from the AFM and win reinstatement by Local 802.

Charges that he had failed to pay union scales to members of his orchestra were among the grounds leading to Carroll's expulsion from the AFM.

A union spokesman described him as "one of the organizers of the so-called Orchestra Leaders of Greater New York," a group which, the AFM said, is composed of a small number of band leaders seeking exemption from AFM and local laws on the ground that they are employers, while at the same time insisting on the right to continue as members.

In dismissing Carroll's action, Judge Levet found that there was no doubt that he had committed the violations of the union by-laws with which he was charged, that he had been given a chance for a full and fair hearing, and that his rights had in no way been violated.

Carroll sought to excuse his violation of the wage scales on the ground that he had challenged the propriety of these scales in other suits against the union. The court commented, however:

"The minimum that membership can require is compliance with the regulations, especially wage scales, until successfully challenged. If a member chooses not to obey the challenged regulation and thereby suffers expulsion, he stakes his all on the efficacy of the court action. If unsuccessful there, he cannot subsequently challenge his expulsion because its basis was the very regulation he challenged."

The AFM said that as a result of the court decision, its members will continue to refuse to play in orchestras under Carroll's leadership or in which he performs.

Marathon Talks Narrow Issues In New York Newspaper Dispute

New York—First signs of real progress in the eight-weeks-old New York newspaper strike and lockout came after the fifth day of marathon talks between the parties conducted at City Hall by Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

After an 18-hour bargaining session that lasted through the night, Wagner announced that several of the issues separating the striking printers and publishers of the city's major dailies "have been settled."

He cautioned, however, that although the issues had been "sharply narrowed and defined" by the continuous meetings, "the parties are still a long way from settling this dispute."

His statement said that while both sides had declared a number of the remaining problems to be "readily susceptible to settlement . . . two critical issues remain unresolved."

Because the meetings had consumed 75 hours over a five-day span, Wagner said, he had adjourned them for a day to give the parties a chance to restudy their positions.

4 Papers Struck

The Typographical Union's "Big 6" local on Dec. 8 struck four of the dailies—the News, Times, Journal-American and World-Telegram & Sun. Four others—the Mirror, Herald Tribune, Post and the Long Island Star-Journal—promptly suspended publication voluntarily, and the Long Island Press cancelled distribution within the city.

Among the key issues have been the printers' insistence on wage improvements beyond the $8.50 two-year package negotiated earlier by the Newspaper Guild, a common expiration date with the Guild and other unions, the 35-hour workweek already enjoyed by the Guild, and improvements in sick leave, vacations, and severance pay.

A major stumbling block in the talks has been the publishers' demand for elimination of "reproduction"—resetting of advertisements that come to the papers already made up in plate or matrix form—and for the right to set stock tables in type from punched wire-service tape.

Job Loss Seen

These demands, the ITU said, would cost the jobs of a large number of its members.

The financial pinch the dispute has meant to the unions—about $1 million a week in strike benefits for the 20,000 workers affected—will be eased somewhat when state unemployment benefits become payable the first week in February.

Companies Balk at Board Proposals

Unions Accept Terms In 4 Major Disputes

By John M. Barry

Four of the major collective bargaining disputes high in the news in recent weeks have had outstanding characteristics in common, although the result in each case has been different.

- In all four cases federal mediators or special fact-finding boards recommended formulas for settlement.
- In all four cases the union accepted the suggested settlement terms.
- In only one case—the Longshoremen's strike at East and Gulf Coast ports—did management accept the proposed terms in toto to bring about a settlement.
- In another case—the Machinists' dispute with Lockheed Aircraft Corp.—settlement was achieved and an injunction-delayed strike averted only when the union accepted a lesser form of union security than was proposed by a presidential board.
- In two cases—the bargaining impasse between the IAM, the Auto Workers and the Boeing Co. and the strike of nonoperating employes against the Florida East Coast Railway—management has flatly rejected the recommendations of government panels.

In a fifth major dispute—the Transport Workers' strike against the Philadelphia Transportation Co.—a tentative settlement fell apart when terms worked out by the company president and TWU negotiators were repudiated by the firm's executive committee. The company president promptly resigned in protest.

Here is a summary of each situation:

Docks . . .

The Longshoremen's walkout, which started Dec. 23 on the expiration of an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction, was settled after 34 days when ILA members and the New York Shipping Association, which represents about 145 companies, accepted the recommendations of a presidentially-appointed panel headed by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.).

The agreement, which was extended to other Atlantic and Gulf Coast ports, calls for a two-year contract containing pay increases of 24 cents an hour and improvements in fringe benefits valued at 13 cents an hour.

The knotty issue of the size of dock work crews and other manning problems earlier had been shunted aside for mutual study.

Lockheed . . .

The key issue of the union shop, over which the IAM was prepared to strike, was resolved when the company agreed to recommend to new employes that they seriously consider joining the union and to introduce them to shop stewards to discuss on company time the advantages of union membership. The maintenance-of-membership clause will continue.

Other improvements in the contract, which runs to July 23, 1965, include pay increases of 5 to 8 cents an hour retroactive to last July 23; 6 to 8 cents effective next July 23, and 6 to 9 cents effective July 23, 1964; additional retroactive increases of 3 to 15 cents an hour to correct inequities in 44 classifications; improvements in vacations, medical care and layoff benefits, and an additional paid holiday.

The company also agreed to cooperate in setting up training programs for IAM stewards and will pay up to 75 percent of the tuition for stewards taking courses at IAM-recognized schools.

The agreement was reached as time began to run out on an 80-day injunction which had halted a two-day walkout by the union Nov. 28.

Boeing . . .

An 80-day injunction against the IAM and the UAW under the national emergency provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act prevented a walkout scheduled for midnight Jan. 25 at Boeing's main plant in Seattle and at 10 other company installations around the country.

As in other aerospace negotiations, the union shop is a key issue. The company rejected the recommendations of a presidential board that such a clause be included in the contract after 73.8 percent of the employes had approved it in an advisory vote conducted by the National Labor Relations Board.

Also at issue are wage increases to match pay levels in other aerospace plants, a change in the employe rating system, a cost-of-living clause and other improvements.

Rail . . .

Some 1,350 members of 11 nonoperating rail unions struck the Florida East Coast line Jan. 23 after months of unsuccessful efforts to win agreement on the same terms accepted by other Class I railroads.

The national agreement was worked out last June 5 following the recommendations of a presidential emergency board appointed under the Railway Labor Act. It brought pay increases of 4 cents an hour effective Feb. 1, 1962, another 6.28 cents effective May 1, 1962, and a minimum five-day notice before layoffs from regular jobs.

Although these terms were "substantially less" than the employes felt they deserved, union spokesmen said, the FEC has "steadily refused" to meet even these conditions.

Instead, the railroad has sought appointment of a separate presidential emergency board.

The National Mediation Board, however, said that there was no point in going over the same issues again.

Transit . . .

The Transport Workers maintained picket lines in their three-week-old strike against the Philadelphia Transportation Co. when the company's executive committee turned down a settlement reached with the TWU by PTC Pres. Robert H. Stier.

The 5,600 TWU members had ratified the agreement by an 8-1 vote before they learned of the management committee's rejection, which was quickly followed by Stier's resignation.

TWU Pres. Michael J. Quill warned the management action could lengthen the strike to "weeks" and said the union was reinstating its original settlement proposals.

Meanwhile, the State Supreme Court reversed a lower court's appointment of a receiver for the company, sought by the city after management rejected the settlement.

LONGSHOREMEN line up in the Brooklyn, N. Y., hall of ILA Local 1814 to vote ratification of contract terms to end the strike that started Dec. 23. The terms, proposed by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) and two other members of a panel named by Pres. Kennedy, were accepted by employer-members of the New York Shipping Association and recommended by union negotiators.

BOEING CO. WORKERS crowd the High School Memorial Stadium in Seattle, Wash., to hear reports from Machinists' officials on Boeing management's refusal to accept either contract terms recommended by a presidential panel or arbitration. Auto Workers and IAM members here and at other aerospace plants across the country authorized a strike but the President invoked the Taft-Hartley Act to seek an 80-day injunction.

NON-OPERATING EMPLOYES of the Florida East Coast Railway picket the road's midtown Miami passenger station to win the same wage improvements achieved last year on all other Class I railroads.

TRANSPORT WORKERS march the picket line after an apparent settlement of their strike against the Philadelphia Transportation Co. fell through when the firm's executive committee rejected it.

32,000 Participants Seek Reports on Welfare Plans

The new Office of Welfare & Pension Plans in the Labor Dept. made available for public examination 11,000 new descriptions of welfare and pension plans, 21,000 amended plan descriptions and 110,000 annual financial reports in 1962.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz reported to Congress that under the labor-supported 1962 Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act amendments, 32,000 reports were examined by plan participants and other interested persons and that the office furnished 26,000 pages copied from reports in response to requests.

Primary emphasis over the year, said Wirtz, was on development of administrative and operational policy and the issuance of implementing regulations and technical and explanatory materials as an aid to those affected by the amended law.

'Across Border' Rally Organized by ACWA

El Paso, Tex.—"Hands across the border" is not only a slogan but a way of life for the Clothing Workers here.

A drive to bring the benefits of union membership to more than 6,000 men's clothing makers in this border area was launched with a mass rally and festival in Juarez, Mexico, addressed by ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

Potofsky and other union members crossed the international boundary in an auto caravan to extend an emphatic invitation to all industry workers, whether Mexican or North American.

Many workers employed in El Paso live in Juarez and nearby towns and are citizens of Mexico.

'An Old Friend'

"Our union," Potofsky told an enthusiastic audience at the rally, "is an old friend of Mexico and Mexican workers.

"Many of our members are Spanish-speaking, and they are represented on all levels of officialdom as organizers, business agents or administrators in New York City and many of the branches."

The ACWA president reminded his listeners that he and the late Sidney Hillman, first president of the union, had visited Mexico many times to "help strengthen the democratic traditions of the Mexican labor movement."

He added: "Our objective is to advance the economic and social standards of the workers regardless of race, creed or national origin, and we are confident all workers will join us in our continuing social progress."

Half-Century Reviewed

Reviewing 50 years of Clothing Worker history, Potofsky pointed out that members have "good wages, paid vacations, guaranteed holidays, hospital and surgical insurance, weekly sick benefits, life insurance, good working conditions, prompt and proper handling of grievances, and security on the job."

The only way the average worker can protect his job and his benefits is through organization, Potofsky declared.

Rally speakers recalled that most of the ACWA's progress has been made through peaceful negotiations. The union recently celebrated more than 50 years of peace with the giant Hart Schaffner & Marx Co., Chicago.

Here to assist Potofsky in the organizing drive are ACWA Vice Presidents Richard Brazier and Leonard Levy, Assistant Sec.-Treas. Sol Brandzel, and Organizers Antonio Pena, Herman De La Grasa and James Boyer.

Union Editor Named to AID Overseas Job

Roger E. Burgess, editor of the Street Railway Employes' publication, has resigned to join the State Dept.'s Agency for Intl. Development. He will be a labor training advisor for AID in Ankara, Turkey.

Burgess came up from the ranks of union membership, joining Division 537 of the Amalgamated after he had been hired as a bus driver by the Holyoke, Mass., Street Railway Co. in 1942. After service in the Army Air Force during World War II, he returned to his bus driving job and became active in his local union, serving as financial secretary, executive board member, and correspondent to the international's monthly magazine.

In 1946, he was appointed editor and in 1953 was elected a vice president.

In addition to the monthly magazine, In Transit, he also edited The Union Leader, a semi-monthly tabloid issued by the international for the benefit of its 20,000 members in Chicago.

Burgess began his new duties Jan. 28 and expects to leave the country with his wife and five children early in March.

Pres. John M. Elliott of the union, announced the appointment of Charles C. McCaffrey, of Dayton, O., as acting editor. McCaffrey is also a vice president.

Wirtz Sees Danger Of 7% Joblessness

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has told Congress that unemployment will rise to more than 7 percent in 1967 if the economy continues providing only 90 percent of the new jobs needed. This, he said, would be an "intolerable price."

Testifying before the Joint Congressional Economic Committee in support of a tax cut to spur growth, he said a new manpower report shows a net loss of 425,000 jobs in manufacturing in the last five years along with the steady drop in farm jobs.

On labor's drive for a shorter workweek, Wirtz said the economy could not take an across-the-board shift to 35 hours but pointed out there is a trend towards shorter hours.

Appeals Court Decision:

Unauthorized Local Strike Ruled Ground for Expulsion

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has upheld the right of Pres. Gordon M. Freeman of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers to revoke the charter of IBEW Local 28 for striking a group of Baltimore contractors in defiance of his express refusal to authorize a walkout.

The 2-1 decision reversed a U.S. District Court order that the charter be restored and sent the case back to district court for further orders consistent with the appeals court ruling.

"Parent unions have played a useful role in bringing a measure of order and stability to the labor market," the appellate court ruled. "Perhaps their best contribution has been in restraining their component bodies from reckless resort to work stoppages and strikes.

'Defiance' Rejected

"If in some quarters abuses have arisen that require correction, there should be legislation. But courts should not step in and, in order to achieve immediate objectives thought to be desirable, establish a rule that locals may with impunity defy their parent unions and strike at will.

"By the judicial application of ad hoc standards, in the pursuit of what is called democracy in union government, we will have succeeded only in introducing, not democracy, but chaos. This would not only tend to disintegrate the labor movement, but the irresponsibility thus generated could have serious implications for employers and others as well."

The district court in the ruling reversed by the Court of Appeals had held that the strike required Freeman's approval under the IBEW constitution and that he had acted without malice or ill-will. Nevertheless the charter should be restored, the ruling said, because Freeman had acted from "mixed motives," the local had not been given a fair hearing and the penalty was too severe.

Writing the majority opinion for the appellate court, Chief Judge Simon E. Sobeloff said there was "no sufficient basis for holding that the IBEW or its international president breached a fiduciary obligation to Local 28 or its members, or that the hearing was lacking in fairness, or that revocation was an unduly severe sanction."

To find that Freeman had acted from "mixed motives," he observed, was inconsistent with the finding that he had acted without malice or ill-will.

Before the local's charter was revoked, it was given a public hearing before Referee Carl R. Schedler, an arbitrator. The IBEW executive council, acting on the local's appeal, later sustained Freeman's decision, and the local took its case into the courts.

Regarding the "severity" of the penalty, Sobeloff's opinion said that while nullification of the sanction might have the immediate result of "an amelioration" for Local 28 members, "in the long view such a judicial directive, even if permissible, could break down their most effective organizational agency."

He noted that custody of the local's funds and other assets was not at issue in the case, but that the international union had taken steps to assure Local 28 members they would not suffer unnecessary loss of financial benefits.

He noted, too, that members could preserve their IBEW membership by accepting the invitation to join Local 24, a new local chartered to replace Local 28.

Merger Eyed By Engravers, Lithographers

New York—The Photo Engravers and the unaffiliated Lithographers are proceeding with talks aimed toward eventual merger following a meeting of officers of the two unions here on problems of organizational structure.

The merger discussions grew out of mandates voted by the conventions of both unions.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, at a meeting Jan. 7 with IPEU Pres. William J. Hall and ALA Pres. Kenneth J. Brown, expressed deep interest in successful conclusion of the merger talks and assigned his executive assistant, Lane Kirkland, to aid in working out problems, Hall and Brown reported.

Kirkland, meeting with the group, reviewed a number of other union mergers recently accomplished or currently being discussed.

Officers of the two unions agreed to schedule further meetings to begin the actual task of drafting a proposed merger agreement and constitution, which would include procedures for integrating funds and safeguarding existing benefits of their members.

They agreed also to expand future talks to include representatives of a cross-section of IPEU and ALA locals in the United States and Canada to consider how merger can best be carried out on a local union basis.

TWUA Prods Congress For Speed on Tax Cuts

Atlanta, Ga.—Prompt congressional approval of Pres. Kennedy's tax-cut proposal with reduction in the lowest brackets retroactive to Jan. 1, 1963, was urged by the executive council of the Textile Workers Union of America at its quarterly meeting here.

The council called also for expansion of public services in education, health and welfare as part of the "attack upon persistent poverty and deprivation," and supported a 35-hour week with no reduction in pay "to spread and increase employment."

The council's resolution on unemployment and the economy declared "that textile workers have suffered cruelly from the sluggishness of the U.S. economy. Automation and technological change have taken a heavy toll of textile jobs.

"In 1962, the industry produced the same volume of goods as in 1952 with 300,000 fewer production workers."

In other actions the TWUA council called for:

- Aid to the textile industry by establishing a one-price cotton policy and appropriation of funds for a government-sponsored research program.
- Denial of federal contracts to any company which violates federal labor law. The council cited the recent award of a $1,065,706 order for military blankets to Burlington Industries, Inc., as a "flagrant example" of how government agencies "are ignoring their responsibility to promote constructive labor relations."

Burlington, said the council, "has a long, notorious and continuing record of flouting federal labor laws and frustrating the right of its employes to seek the benefits of collective bargaining."

- Urged amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act to protect workers' rights and "forceful administration" of federal labor laws, especially by the general counsel of the National Labor Relations Board. The resolution cited the "timidity" and delays of the general counsel's office in a number of cases involving the union.

Keenan Condemns 'Bias' In Coverage of Labor

Mass communications are for the most part in the hands of people who are antagonistic to organized labor and create an atmosphere in which it is difficult to conduct responsible collective bargaining, AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph D. Keenan declared.

Keenan, speaking at the installation of the new officers of the Greater Washington Central Labor Council, stressed that the major problem is that most of those who control the press, radio and television do not accept labor as a permanent institution in American society.

This results, he said, in situations in which news reports are biased in favor of management and the public has difficulty in obtaining the actual facts in labor-management disputes. Government at all levels and the public at large have an obligation under the American system, he added, to foster a favorable climate for collective bargaining.

Modern industrial society, he said, cannot survive as a free society unless there is an aggressive, militant and free labor movement.

Keenan warned of the current anti-union legislation under consideration by ultra-conservative groups and sketched the history and the adverse effect of other anti-union legislation passed in the past 15 years.

J. C. Turner was installed as president of the council; W. F. Strong, James C. Gildea and Martin J. Bond as vice presidents; Walter J. Bierwagon, treasurer; F. Howard McGuigan, secretary.

IUD Pamphlet Aids Consumers

The consumer who feels he has been spending more and getting less is urged to support the truth-in-packaging bill sponsored by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.).

"It's What's Inside that Counts," a new 22-page pamphlet available from the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., describes devices which confuse or deceive: slack fill or "packaged air," misleading claims, fractional weights, microscopic lettering and so on.

AT EASTERN HIGH SCHOOL more than 2,000 Washington area school youngsters packed the auditorium to hear concerts by the National Symphony Orchestra sponsored by the Greater Washington Labor Council and the national AFL-CIO.

TWO ATTENTIVE elementary school students, Doris Smith, 10 (left), and Joyce Jenkins, 9, listen as the concert gets underway. Youngsters from 19 schools attended. The program was heard by two capacity audiences.

Labor Bids the Youngsters to a Concert

More than 2,000 Washington area school youngsters attended two AFL-CIO-sponsored youth concerts at Eastern High School. Lloyd Geisler, associate conductor, led the National Symphony Orchestra in the concerts which included music ranging from Beethoven's 8th Symphony to Copland's Hoe Down from Rodeo and excerpts from Tchaikovsky's Nutcracker Suite. Pres. Jay Turner of the Greater Washington Labor Council, which with the AFL-CIO sponsored the concerts, represented AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. In a letter following the concerts, Assistant Orchestra Manager Edward Dougherty said the results of "your sponsorship were wonderful." Students attended from 19 Washington area schools. Two concerts were held and each played to a full house. Turner said the concerts offered the students a chance to hear and appreciate good music.

CONCERT PROGRAM included not only listings of the selections, but also advice on concert manners, which cautioned students to sit quietly so everyone could listen to each number.

LLOYD GEISLER, associate conductor, led the orchestra in the concert. The program included music by Handel, Beethoven, Tchaikovsky, Copland and Ravel.

STUDENTS FROM 19 Washington area public and parochial schools came by bus to attend the concerts. Eastern High had the largest number—422 students. In this group, lined up to attend the second concert, more than 1,000 students wait for admittance. Young people's concerts are frequently given by the National Symphony Orchestra.

DISCUSSING THE CONCERT, left to right, are: Eastern Principal L. F. Wordworth, Pres. J. C. Turner of the Greater Washington Labor Council, who represented AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, and Edward Dougherty, assistant manager of the orchestra.

A Pox on Irresponsibility

THE HARD-CORE anti-union forces of the country are gearing up their campaign for punitive legislation at the current session of Congress. There is nothing new in this know-nothing type of attack on unions, but in the past few weeks normally responsible elements are lending aid and assistance to the drive.

There has been a flurry of newspaper and magazine articles, radio and television commentary and a stepped-up concentration on strike news and reporting. Nearly all deal with legislative formulas and approaches; intricate and difficult backgrounds of the disputes and some of the essential facts involved are largely ignored.

Overlooked in the communcations build-up of a new "crisis" in labor disputes and legislation is the essential issue of job security in the face of technological change and automation. With one or two notable exceptions, management is seeking to reap the full benefits and savings of automation with little or no concern for the workers who will be displaced.

This is pointed up sharply by the actions of specially appointed presidential boards to investigate major disputes. The unions involved by and large have gone along with recommendations of these special boards; the companies have rejected them or attempted to limit their application.

THESE CIRCUMSTANCES do not call for legislation to cripple and weaken unions. They call for an understanding by management that, in line with the Kaiser-Steelworkers agreement, some provision must be made to assure workers job security and a share in the progress under automation.

They do not call either for editorial comments such as carried in the West Coast edition of the New York Times—reflecting perhaps some of the bitterness of the strike in New York itself—that unions seeking to cope with technological changes are "the new reactionaries."

As long as management operates on a one-way street basis, gathering for itself in greater and greater profits the savings of automation and tossing the workers on the scrap heap, unions will fight for the economic security and dignity of their members.

When management is willing to cooperate actively with unions to work out a solution that will benefit the company, the workers and the public, there will be a slackening of disputes.

New Chance for Schools

THE KINDERGARTEN to graduate school sweep of Pres. Kennedy's message on education, its comprehensive treatment of the many-faceted aspects of modern schooling, is a major contribution to the continuing struggle for congressional action.

The President's message has eloquently summed up the case for federal aid. The facts and figures are beyond contradiction. They demonstrate the critical need for a first-class school system in a period of dramatic change and challenge.

To those who raise the false issue of "federal control," the presidential message is a sharp refutation. He points out the dozen or so currently operating government programs to aid schools and students and asks for their expansion. He has recommended an additional dozen programs, all geared to control by local school systems on the basis of specific need situations.

The President and the liberal and progressive groups in Congress can win on this issue if the parents of students in overcrowded and unsafe schoolrooms, the parents of high school graduates who are financially blocked from continuing their education, turn on the heat to bring aid to education out of the congressional deep freeze.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, February 2, 1963 No. 5

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Swedish Economist Says:

Economic Weakness Curtails U. S. Leadership in Free World

The following is excerpted from an address by internationally famed Swedish economist Gunnar Myrdal before the 10th anniversary convocation of the Fund for the Republic:

THE AMERICAN ECONOMY seems to have settled down to a sequence of recessions, short lived and inadequate upturns and periods of stagnation between. If there is a consistent pattern it looks as if the recoveries after the recessions tend to become ever more hesitant and to result in an ever more incomplete re-employment in proportion to the rise in output.

I have seen no evidence that would render it probable that the American economy by itself—that is, as a result of the forces now at work in that economy, including present government policies—would get out of this rut.

The famous built-in stabilizers have, until now, prevented the recessions from developing into serious depressions. But such an eventuality cannot be excluded.

That a depression would not be permitted to develop into anything like the Great Depression of the thirties but would call forth vigorous government action is a statement that does not satisfy me. The policies should have been applied in time to prevent such a depression. Or rather, as the whole pattern of development now established, even assuming that the recessions will remain mild, is unsatisfactory, government policies should be planned and executed in order to set the economy into an entirely new pattern of rapid, steady growth.

If we properly deflate the average American growth rate in the way we are accustomed to do for underdeveloped countries, the figure for the United States for the last decade comes out at around 1 percent, actually a lower rate than—on a very hazardous statistical basis—we believe is about the one that poor India has realized during its first two five-year plans.

I am inclined to believe that the most important problem in the world today is how to get America out of the automatism of relative economic stagnation. A continuation of the present trend means frustration in its foreign relations as well as in its internal life, which, because of the size and weight of America and the role it has to play is extremely dangerous.

I HAPPENED to be an observer at close range during America's great rescue action during the latter part of the '40s and the beginning of the '50s. In that Marshall Plan period the United States had all the power and could have prescribed and enforced any policy in Europe it wanted to have the Europeans to adopt. But the American policy was to hold back and not use its power. It advised the European governments to make up their own minds, promising to support financially any constructive policy they could agree upon.

America had its very clear concepts about what then should have been done in Europe. I wrote toward the end of that period that the businessmen, administrators and economists who took a leading part in the rescue mission were among the very best Europeans. But, as I said, in that period of the great dollar shortage, when America had all the power, it largely abstained from using it.

America's relations with Western Europe are now on an entirely different basis. America is well entitled to feel satisfied that its rescue action was so successful that most Western European countries now enjoy a rapid and steady economic growth.

Remarkably enough this holds true quite particularly in regard to the initially weakest and most troubled countries on the European continent, i.e. those countries that had been overrun by the Nazis and were liberated by the Great Alliance of the U.S., the USSR and Great Britain—das neue Europa of Hitler's dream world. They are still weak in many respects; they have serious unsettled psychological and moral problems to cope with; democracy is there not so firmly established as in the Anglo-Saxon and Scandinavian countries. But economically they are striding ahead rapidly.

The snag is that meanwhile America itself has lapsed into relative economic stagnation. At present America has good reasons to urge fundamental changes in the policies of its European allies in many and diverse fields. But it has no longer the economic strength for pressing for them effectively.

America has even to suppress some of its demands or present them sotto voce. This situation is almost the reverse of the one 10 or 15 years ago.

America is in the danger of losing out as the uncontested leader within the Western world, which is bound to become even more pronounced if the differences in economic growth rate remain. This I regret. In any case it must be contrary to American ideals and interests.

Morgan Says:

ABC Network Chief Talks Back To Utah College Spokesman

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

SOMETIMES the impression gets around that American businessmen are more interested in profits than in principles and that they don't mind cribbing on the latter if it means fattening the former. There is, sad to state, some basis for this impression but it is just as wrong to draw reckless generalities from it as it is to condemn organized labor as a racket because some unions and their leaders are corrupt. It's the bad news on both sides, unfortunately, that gets the biggest headlines.

Morgan

On the theory that we should view our society in the sharpest—and fairest—perspective possible, I have encountered an incident which comes down on the positive side.

I am all the prouder to report it because the hero of the piece happens to be one of the top executives of the American Broadcasting Co. —a corporate entity which still employs me despite the fact that I have publicly criticized it on some public matters in the past.

The background of the incident is this: In connection with my program, ABC and the AFL-CIO are co-sponsoring, for the third year, a nationwide college essay contest. In publicizing this year's theme of youth's stake in the labor market and the prizes of graduate scholarships, the president of the ABC Radio Network, Robert R. Pauley, wrote to hundreds of colleges and universities around the country. Among them was Utah State University at Logan. From one John J. Stewart of the university's information services, Pauley received the following reply, typed on the original ABC form letter which was returned:

"Dear Mr. Pauley, I would not care to have my students participate in a contest sponsored by a network whose TV affiliate would have Alger Hiss on under the circumstances that ABC did recently. I think it is high time all radio and TV commentators became objective or at least ethical in their handling of news subjects."

He was referring to Commentator Howard K. Smith's report on the political rise and fall of Richard Nixon on which Hiss' views were recorded on Nixon's handling of the congressional anti-Communist investigation which led to the conviction of the former State Dept. official for perjury.

Pauley wrote Stewart regretting his decision not to have Utah State students participate in the essay contest.

"As a result of your paternalistic attitude," Pauley said, "I only wonder when, if ever, your students will be permitted, or, indeed . . . be able to decide for themselves issues vitally affecting their future education, income and the future of America.

"By your arbitrary and prejudiced act, you are, of course, depriving your students of the opportunity of a cash scholarship for graduate education. I suppose if you go on making decisions for them at USU, the shock of graduate studies elsewhere might be too much for them to handle.

"Guilt by association, I thought, was part of our past. The ABC Radio and Television Networks are autonomous operations and your endeavor to take sanction against your students for something which you personally didn't like on ABC-TV is the most reprehensible form of subjectivism. Whereby are you even qualified to use the word 'objective'?

"It is quite possible that your students may not agree with your edict, and we shall make every effort to inform them.

"ALSO I NOTE that USU is a land grant college and that the state and federal governments may be interested in the position taken by USU as expressed by you.

"I'm enclosing a photostat of your note to me and I challenge you to place this letter and my original letter with your accompanying note on the bulletin board for your students to read. I'd welcome comments from any of them."

The fact that this news program and an essay contest publicizing it have become involved in a small rumble is unimportant. What is important is the fact that an educator, if that is the proper term in this case, decides on the basis of his own prejudices what opportunities for graduate study should or should not be made available to college students.

What is even more important, in some respects, is the fact that a busy business executive, in this instance ABC Radio's Pres. Robert Pauley, took time from his own regular work schedule to dive headlong into a controversy on a matter of principle.

Too many businessmen, indeed too many citizens in general, shrink from honest intellectual controversy. From it sprout the seeds of a nation's maturity and wisdom. But no nation ever grew or remained great on the weeds of ignorance, prejudice and fear.

Washington Reports:

Dr. Kelsey Sees New Drug Law Safeguarding Doctors, Patients

DR. FRANCES KELSEY of the U.S. Food & Drug Administration, who achieved national attention during the thalidomide scare, believes that new drug-control laws passed by Congress last year will benefit both physicians and their patients.

Dr. Kelsey, who was appointed chief of the investigational drug branch of the FDA following her order removing thalidomide from the U.S. market, expressed this opinion in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on 500 radio stations.

The woman doctor said that the most important change enables FDA to order a drug removed from the market whenever there is evidence of hazardous effects. Previously, no such drug could be taken off the market until after a hearing in which the burden of proof was on the government. Now the manufacturer must defend the drug affirmatively.

Physicians now have the advantage of detailed labeling and advertising, Dr. Kelsey noted.

"The general standard of drugs should be improved," she predicted, "and there will be fewer inferior drugs on the market."

The new legislation, Dr. Kelsey explained, also requires a manufacturer before making the first test on human beings to report to the FDA the chemistry of the drug, the facts of tests made on animals and those he proposes to make on men; the name and qualifications of the person who will make the tests and the facilities he has for drug testing.

"Previously this information came to us only when the manufacturer believed his drug was ready for marketing," she said. "A great deal of information was lost in this fashion."

Another provision is that a drug must not only be shown to be safe, as hitherto, but also that it will do what is claimed for it.

TO PUT THE NEW LAWS into effect, Dr. Kelsey said, the Bureau of Medicine drug division now has five branches, including one on chemistry and standardization, others on preliminary investigations, on final approval of a new drug, on observation of effects of a drug after it is on the market, and another to determine whether a proposed drug is really "new."

The investigational drug regulations go into effect Feb. 8, regulations on toxicity in May. The staggered dates for application of the various parts of the law, said Dr. Kelsey, is to make efficient handling more likely.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

REPUBLICAN "ACTIVISTS" in the House, who scored a symbolic success when they threw out an Old Guardsman and installed the vigorous Rep. Gerald R. Ford of Michigan as chairman of the GOP Conference, are keeping a certain amount of pressure on the party's official floor leader, Charlie Halleck of Indiana.

They don't say publicly that they deplore the public effect of the famed "'Ev and Charlie" show—the weekly news conference of Halleck and Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen, the GOP Senate leader —but they allow it to be known they want a "broadening" of the cast. They suggest that Halleck should invite other and younger House Republicans to share the spotlight.

The Republican National Committee last year cut off the subsidy out of which the GOP congressional leaders were able to hire staff personnel. In the first month of Congress, "Ev and Charlie" have made no joint appearance.

In the meantime, Ford is seeking to make the Republican Conference, which includes all House GOP members, a forum for the party. A briefing session was scheduled at which former Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Lewis L. Strauss was to discuss Pres. Kennedy's policy on negotiating a prohibition of nuclear tests.

There was no clear indication that the operations of the "activists" would substantially change the voting record of House Republicans on major Kennedy domestic programs. There is some prospect that on certain issues the GOP will offer affirmative proposals as substitutes.

* * *

IT SHOULD BE clearly understood that the Republicans are approaching the election next year with a considerable hope of scoring gains in the Senate and House if not of beating the President for re-election. (They have not written off a presidential victory either.)

The Republican hope in the Senate involves the fact that nearly all the Democrats elected in the landslide year of 1958 are from the North, Mountain States and Midwest, where the GOP has substantial basic strength. Now these senators must face the voters again, and the Republicans think some of the states may return to traditional GOP moorings.

GOP National Committee Chairman William E. Miller has pointed out that the vote for Republican congressional candidates last November increased sharply from the previous midterm election while the Democratic vote was static. There seems some hope that chances for continuing this trend would be improved if the Republican image conveyed by Ev and Charlie were modernized.

* * *

MEANWHILE, THE NO. 1 PROSPECT for the GOP presidential nomination, Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller, is having to deal with the melancholy problem faced by almost all governors—heavy demands and needs for state services and not enough revenue.

The Rockefeller budget for the next fiscal year is $2.8 billion, up 11 percent from the current budget. The governor promised in his re-election campaign last year that he would "hold the line" on taxes, but current expenditures have already been reduced because of a drop in income tax revenue below projected estimates.

Rockefeller's method of dealing with this problem is to get more money by sharp hikes in automobile registration and other license fees and by advancing the collection date of taxes already owed.

Rockefeller will probably welcome any change Ford and his fellow House GOP activists can produce in the party's public stance. Former Pres. Truman demonstrated that a presidential nominee could run effectively by assailing the GOP on the basis of sheer negativism in Congress. And negativism is about what has been offered in the last few sessions by Halleck and Dirksen.

This holds true for this session, too, in House committee assignments. Five of six GOP vacancies on the Foreign Affairs Committee were filled with opponents of foreign aid; two on the Education & Labor Committee with opponents of federal school aid who are also considered conservative on labor issues.

DR. FRANCES KELSEY, chief of the new investigations branch of the FDA drug unit, expects recent legislation resulting from disclosure of the deforming effects of thalidomide to offer greater protection from dangerous drugs offered for the market. Dr. Kelsey was interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

Winter Has Been Tough Enough Without Buying Too Much Fuel

By Sidney Margolius

THIS HAS BEEN a cruel winter, and not the least of the weather's barbs has been the increase in the cost of fuel. Oil, for example, seems to go up in inverse ratio to the drop in temperature. In some parts of the country, there already have been two price hikes this heating season for a total increase of approximately 10 percent.

For many families, the result of the low temperatures and high prices is fuel bills running up to $50 a month. The extreme weather also has placed a heavy strain on the inadequate heating systems that bless many homes and a host of breakdowns have occurred.

Oil companies usually give a reduction of half-cent a gallon on deliveries over 300 gallons. Unfortunately, this is just over the 275-gallon capacity of most basement tanks.

But some suppliers also give a discount of 2 percent for cash. Thus, a family with the money wisdom to maintain a fuel capital fund of $30 or $35, instead of depending on the oil company to plan for it, can make this modest fund earn money at the rate of 20 percent a year (by using it over and over to pay cash for fuel).

In any case, this is a year to practice expert economy in use of fuel. In many homes, unnecessary heat losses can be found. One family that seemed to have large fuel bills (heating was by gas), finally checked with the local utility and found that its bill did run about $10 more a month than for homes of similar size and type in its neighborhood.

The heat loss was traced to a poorly-fitted back door with no storm door; leaky window frames, and an over-age hot-water tank with wornout insulation. The savings on fuel in just one heating season paid for correcting these defects.

HERE IS A CHECKLIST of frequent sources of heat loss that are not difficult to remedy:

Storm windows can save 50 percent of the heat lost through windows. It is not too late to install them. In fact, you can get special prices on storm windows in midwinter sales. The self-storing aluminum triple-track windows are available currently for less than $15, and storm doors of the standard 1-inch thickness for under $30 plus $10 for installation. In storm windows, the tilt type is easiest to clean.

One of the most common heat losses, and the least expensive to remedy, is caused by loose window and door frames. These need weather-stripping to keep out cold air.

Many families fiddle with the thermostat too often. A constant temperature of 70 degrees is recommended by heating engineers as comfortable and economical. One study found that fuel consumption is increased 1.5 percent for every degree over 70. Nor does it pay to lower the thermostat excessively at night. The walls and furniture cool off, and in the morning the heating system has to operate overtime to restore the desired temperature.

Airlock in convectors and radiators often blocks circulation of hot water. Convectors have a little petcock on one side. These may need to be opened occasionally (until water escapes) to correct airlock.

In warm-air heating systems, dirt-filled filters block the heat from the furnace. These need to be replaced or cleaned frequently.

Improperly adjusted burners can waste 10 to 15 percent of your costly fuel. One clue to efficient operation of the common high-pressure oil burner is the color of the flame. It should be orange-yellow, bushy and even in shape, should never look or sound like a blow-torch or show more than a slight tinge of smoke at the tips, and should not produce visible smoke from your chimney.

Burners located in small utility rooms or in tight, small basements often do not get enough air for proper combustion. This results in a loss of heat up the chimney, and can be corrected by opening a window slightly.

Ceilings without insulation can result in heavy heat loss. Heating engineers recommend at least 4 inches of insulation. If your attic is not completely floored, you can correct heat loss in the main part of the house at moderate cost either with blanket or loose-fill insulation.

A cold basement results in cold floor which wastes heat. Use weatherstripping and storm sash to prevent heat loss in the basement too.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

COMMUNITY SERVICES activities of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Local 106 included the recent presentation of a stereo phonograph to the Burlington County (N. J.) Home for the Aging. Shown at the presentation, from left, are Joseph Pugliese, local community services chairman; Superintendent W. I. Leonard of Burlington County Institutions; Local 106 Pres. George E. Norcross; William Colozzi, Local 106 member who also is a member of the County Health & Welfare Committee; and Mauretta Jackson of the County Mental Health Association.

U. S. Committee Active:

100 Countries Join UN Drive on Hunger

THE FREEDOM FROM HUNGER Campaign operates in nearly 100 countries throughout the world as part of a drive launched by the United Nations' Food & Agriculture Organization. Most of these countries have established their own national organizations to further the campaign's objectives, thus forming a coordinated international attack on the root causes of hunger and malnutrition that today plague over half of the world's population.

The American Freedom from Hunger Foundation was set up by Pres. Kennedy last year. It is headed up by the president of the National Farmers Union, James G. Patton. On its board of trustees are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther. Sec. of Agriculture Orville Freeman heads the Government-Citizens Committee.

Today, some 300 to 500 million people in the world suffer from hunger. An additional 1 billion people suffer from malnutrition. They live not only in areas of deprivation but in breeding grounds for communism. And it is interesting to note that neither Soviet Russia nor Red China is part of the FAO, nor are they participating in the Freedom from Hunger campaign.

As coordinator of the Freedom from Hunger campaign on behalf of the FAO, Charles Weitz recently observed:

"A hungry man is a social liability. He cannot work effectively on an empty stomach; he cannot study and learn as he must to improve his conditions of life; he cannot think beyond his immediate needs, of which food is dominant; he cannot build up resistance to disease; and, in short, because he is counted in the millions, he retards economic and social development of his own country, and also the prosperity of the world."

There are two significant dates to remember in this drive against hunger:

World Freedom-From-Hunger-Week—This has been set as the week of Mar. 21, 1963. The date was selected because in the Northern hemisphere it marks the beginning of spring sowing and in the Southern hemisphere it is the time of harvesting and thanksgiving.

Pres. Kennedy, in a presidential proclamation, has declared the week of Mar. 17 through Mar. 23 as "Freedom from Hunger Week" in the United States.

World Food Congress—The United States will be host to this conference. An estimated 1,200 persons from more than 100 countries are expected to attend in Washington, D. C., June 4-18, 1963.

It will be a "people to people" meeting. It is not a meeting of governments. Participating will be representatives of both governmental and nongovernmental organizations including labor and industry experts, etc.

American citizens can be proud of the role of their government in combatting hunger throughout the world. The U.S. Food for Peace program, for example, is currently reaching an average of 92 million people per day in more than 100 countries. Accompanying it is a unique low-cost sales program.

Freeman, addressing the second annual meeting of the Freedom from Hunger Foundation, said that the drive "is something new in history," adding:

"Since the dawn of time men have sought to increase their own chances to achieve freedom from hunger at the expense of their neighbors, through immigration and migration, and through wars. It was left to our period of history to develop a concern to combat hunger throughout the world."—(PAI)

From Soup to Nonsense:

The Moment of Truth Can Signal The Triumph of Utter Confusion

By Jane Goodsell

SOME PEOPLE can pack for a trip in a casual, matter-of-fact, offhand way. They don't get upset about it. They don't even think about it until the day of their departure, and then they refer to it as "throwing a few things into a suitcase."

Not me, though. I undertake packing with the lip-biting seriousness usually reserved for major surgery and income tax reports. I am beseiged with feelings of doubt and uncertainty.

I start thinking about packing my suitcase weeks in advance. I lie awake nights, brooding about what to take. My head is in a swirl of confusion over luggage, clothes and the state of the weather. I have my clothes cleaned and my shoes shined much too soon so I either have to refrain from wearing them or else I have to do it all over again at the last minute.

I start to make lists, and end up wringing my hands. My luggage is an unmatched hodgepodge of old, new, borrowed and family hand-me-down pieces, and my wardrobe is an equally uncoordinated miscellany, requiring a dismaying number of shoes, hats and purses.

When the moment of truth arrives, and I must actually start putting things into suitcases, I moan in despair. All my clothes seem to be as willowy and hard to fold as parachutes, and everything seems to have enough sleeves to fit an octopus.

I give up trying to avoid wrinkles, and simply wad everything into tight rolls and tuck in a traveling iron.

LIKE ALL UNSEASONED travelers, I prepare for a few days in a nearby metropolis as though I were heading for a year in the Antarctic. I feel that I must be prepared for any emergency, including floods, snowstorms and white-tie dinners.

I equip myself, too, with a vast number of beauty aids and medicinal remedies that I never use at home. My luggage problems are complicated by cuticle oil, bubblebath, tweezers, suntan lotion, a hot water bottle, pain killers, sleeping pills and heat pads.

On the theory that I will not only have a great deal of spare time for reading but that my I.Q. will rise sharply in a different locale, I tuck in a couple of books that I've always meant to read—"The Complete Works of Goethe" and "Crime and Punishment."

I can barely be restrained from packing my bedlamp which, as it turns out, would have been considerably more useful than the fur-lined parka I insisted on bringing.

Unionists Hail Betancourt:

Critical Need Found To Assist Venezuela

Caracas, Venezuela—An AFL-CIO delegation headed back to the U.S. after a 10-day tour of embattled Venezuela convinced that the widest possible support must be directed towards this strategic Latin American country to strengthen her resistance to an all-out Communist campaign against Venezuelan independence.

U.S. labor leaders and editors met with Pres Romulo Betancourt, officials of the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers (CTV), organizers of the Peasant Federation and heard from them details of the Moscow-Havana Axis terrorist drive against the country's 7.5 million population.

The delegation even experienced a taste of the terrorism in Merida, a small city in southwestern Venezuela, which they visited. A mile away from their hotel a gun-battle raged for several hours between a handful of Communist-led students at the university and local police. One policeman was shot and killed during the affray.

In a letter to Betancourt, delivered by the delegation, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared:

"We of the AFL-CIO are well acquainted with Venezuela's remarkable progress under your leadership and we are very proud if our cooperation has been of some value towards the realization of your formidable goals.

"I am taking this opportunity to reaffirm that in the AFL-CIO you will always find a staunch ally in the struggle against totalitarianism and for the dignity of workers in our hemisphere and throughout the world."

The Meany letter was read by L. M. Raftery, president of the Painters and an AFL-CIO vice president, during a delegation visit to the Venezuelan leader's offices. Betancourt, who is scheduled to visit the U.S. this month, replied that "during the long years of my exile, the American labor movement took a firm position in favor of democracy in Venezuela and we can never forget that."

Wounds Remain

The visitors noted that Betancourt's left hand was still bandaged from wounds received during an attempt against his life in 1960 inspired by Gen. Trujillo, since-assassinated dictator of the Dominican Republic. There have been other attempts against his life, according to Venezuelan spokesmen, inspired by the country's former dictator, Gen. Marcos Perez Jimenez, now facing extradition from the U.S., and Cuba's dictator, Fidel Castro.

On their 1,300-mile swing around Venezuela, the AFL-CIO group saw the sights and sounds of a country whose social and economic progress, under a democratic regime but four years old, has been outstanding in the Western Hemisphere.

They visited Venezuela's "little Pittsburgh," Puerto Ordaz. where the iron ore from Bolivar Mountain is made into steel or shipped to overseas purchasers. They toured the island of Margarita off the coast and discussed political and social conditions with local government and trade union officials. In Maracay, as well as Merida, they met labor and farm union leaders.

'Forest of Derricks'

Another stopover was in the Lake Maracaibo region, which they toured by bus and launch, to see what is one of the richest oil-producing areas in the world. Venezuela is the third largest supplier of petroleum after the U.S. and the Soviet Union and produces 1 million barrels a day.

It is Maracaibo which is the present target of Communist sabotage.

Throughout the country, there are daily incidents—setting buses and cars afire, seizing paintings at gun-point from the Caracas National Art Museum, shooting police and soldiers, rebel uprisings, guerrilla forays.

Climax of the tour was a meeting with CTV leaders, headed by Jose Gonzalez Navarro, at their headquarters in Caracas, the country's capital. The CTV comprises 12 national union federations, 22 regional federations with 263 affiliated unions.

In addition, it includes the all-important — because Venezuela is still fundamentally an agricultural country—Peasant Federation. Together, the combined CTV membership totals about 1.3 million members. Last year, the CTV affiliated with the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

At the joint session of CTV and the AFL-CIO delegations, Gonzalez Navarro declared:

"We are on the side of democracy because totalitarianism means the extinction of freedom and human rights, because it means persecution. We are on the side of democracy, not just to help the working-class but to help all the Venezuelan people."

The national labor leadership and many of the subofficials have a personal knowledge of totalitarianism. It was estimated that at least half of them had been imprisoned for underground activities during the 10-year dictatorship which was finally overthrown in 1958.

Partners in Freedom

Replying on behalf of the delegation to the CTV spokesman, Daniel E. Conway, president of the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, said:

"We know that there must be freedom for the trade union movement if we are to provide any growth for the people of a country. The American people are determined to live in peace, under a democratic structure and with strong free trade unions. In this fight for peace and freedom we want to be your partners."

The trip was sponsored by Circleven, a private tourist agency, supported by the government and the CTV. Special travel arrangements can be made for trade unionists who wish to visit Venezuela.

In addition to Raftery and Conway, and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve, representatives of AFL-CIO unions included Thomas J. Lloyd, president of the Meat Cutters; Frank L. Noakes, secretary-treasurer, Maintenance of Way Employes; Raymond Dalton, Glass Bottle Blowers; Lester Zosel, Railway Clerks; William Moran, Steelworkers; Joseph F. Monahan, Plumbers and Pipe Fitters; Anthony Mazzocchi, Oil Workers; Kenneth Rieger, Newspaper Guild; Jesse A. Friedman, AFL-CIO Inter-American affairs.

Labor editors and public relations representatives included Albert J. Zack, director, AFL-CIO Dept. of Public Relations; Arnold Beichman, press representative, Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions; M. S. Novik, AFL-CIO radio consultant; Milton Plumb, director of publicity, Railway Labor Executives' Association; Edward Lashman, Oil Workers; Alexander Uhl, Press Associates, Inc.; Gordon H. Cole, Machinists; Leon Stein, Ladies' Garment Workers; Frank Alexander, Merkle Press; Albert W. Marble, American Travel Association.

A REAFFIRMATION OF THE AFL-CIO'S support of democratic forces in Venezuela was read to Venezuelan Pres. Romulo Betancourt by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. L. M. Raftery as a delegation of U.S. labor leaders and editors met with Betancourt during a 10-day tour of the South American nation (top photo). The letter from AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany hailed Betancourt's leadership in the struggle against totalitarianism. The delegation also visited the headquarters of the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers (CTV) in Caracas and met with its president, Jose Gonzalez Navarro, shown in bottom photo greeting Daniel E. Conway, president of the AFL-CIO American Bakery & Confectionery Workers.

Republican Conservatives Get Choice House Committee Seats

House Republicans have been given their committee assignments with the choicest plums going to some of the GOP's most conservative congressmen. The appointments were made by the party's Committee on Committees, dominated by the congressional Old Guard.

Of six Republicans named to fill vacancies on the House Foreign Affairs Committee, five voted last year against the foreign aid authorization bill, foreign aid appropriations, and the United Nations bond bill.

The result is expected to be a marked shift in the traditionally bipartisan committee support for foreign aid programs. Five of the six Republican vacancies had been held by congressmen who supported the three key bills last year.

Rep. F. Bradford Morse (Mass.) was the only pro-foreign aid Republican named to the Foreign Affairs Committee. The others—all foes of the overseas program—are Representatives H. R. Gross (Ia.), E. Y. Berry (S. D.), Edward J. Derwinski (Ill.), James F. Battin (Mont.), and Vernon W. Thomson (Wis.).

Collier Gets Key Post

A conservative also was named to fill the GOP vacancy on the House Ways & Means Committee, which deals with such major legislation as taxation, social security health care, and unemployment compensation standards. He is Rep. Harold R. Collier (Ill.), whose votes on key issues in the 87th Congress were scored 11 wrong and none right by the AFL-CIO's Committee on Political Education.

New members of the Education & Labor Committee are Representatives Alphonzo Bell (Calif.), with a COPE score of 10 wrong, one right, and M. G. Snyder (Ky.), a freshman congressman who ran as a "Goldwater conservative."

On other committees of special interest to labor, Republican vacancies were filled as follows:

Appropriations: William H. Harrison (Wyo.), Ben Reifel (S. D.) and Louis C. Wyman (N. H.).

Banking & Currency: Oliver P. Bolton (Ohio), William E. Brock, III (Tenn.), Robert Taft, Jr. (Ohio), Joseph M. McDade (Pa.), Sherman P. Lloyd (Utah) and Burt L. Talcott (Calif.).

Judiciary: Pat Martin (Calif.).

Merchant Marine & Fisheries: Charles A. Mosher (Ohio), James R. Grover, Jr. (N. Y.) and Rogers C. B. Morton (Md.)

Post Office & Civil Service: Homer E. Abele (Ohio).

Public Works: Robert T. McLoskey (Ill.), James R. Grover, Jr. (N. Y.), James H. Quillen (Tenn.), Carl C. Rich (Ohio), James C. Cleveland (N. H.) and Don H. Clausen (Calif.).

New York Labor Urges Condon-Wadlin Repeal

Albany, N. Y.—The New York State AFL-CIO has strongly urged the legislature to repeal the state law prohibiting strikes by public employes, the Condon-Wadlin Act, as wrong in principle and "unworkable."

Pres. Raymond R. Corbett of the State AFL-CIO testified before the Joint Legislative Committee on Industrial & Labor Conditions on proposals to replace Condon-Wadlin.

The antistrike law was passed in 1947 following a teachers' strike in the western part of the state. In addition to flatly prohibiting walkouts by state or municipal employes, it imposes drastic penalties including outright dismissal and continuing sanctions for anyone reinstated.

The one-day teachers' strike in New York City and the recent walkout by the city's civil service chauffeurs focused fresh attention on the law's harshness. A consensus has developed that it needs changing. Business interests and Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R) have publicly proposed a downgrading of the penalties.

Corbett, pointing out that pending bills still withhold protection of the public employe's right to strike, told the committee bluntly:

"Experience teaches us that laws against the right of public employes to strike in this country or in other free countries have never prevented strikes when the workers regarded their grievances as sufficiently grave to lead them to take the risks."

Organized labor accepts and honors voluntary no-strike pledges in written agreements, Corbett emphasized.

He said labor recognizes the different status of such groups as police and firemen because of the peculiar nature of their duties. But here, too, he added, a no-strike pledge should be self-imposed so "it would be the union's own decision."

The New York Fire Fighters, in parallel testimony, pointed out its constitution contained a no-strike clause which would apply to its bargaining pacts.

Corbett said that except for police and firemen, most government workers have little or no connection with the exercise of power. This and the fact of widening governmental activities make it a matter of commonsense, he said, that the rights of public employes receive protection equal to those of private workers.

AFL-CIO POSTAL UNIONS train local officers in collective bargaining techniques in preparation for contract negotiations made possible for the first time under Pres. Kennedy's executive order on union recognition. At top, the first of a series of Letter Carriers training institutes is held at the University of Oklahoma. Below, Postal Clerks Pres. E. C. Hallbeck welcomes delegates to a regional institute in Washington, D. C. Seated at his left is Otto Pragan, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, who conducted the institute.

2 Postal Unions School Local-Level Bargainers

Thousands of postal workers are going to union-sponsored schools this winter to prepare for the start of local-level contract negotiations later this year in post offices throughout the nation.

Both the Letter Carriers and the Postal Clerks are conducting large-scale training programs in collective bargaining techniques. Under Pres. Kennedy's executive order on union recognition, written agreements will be negotiated for the first time in the history of the postal service at national, regional and local levels.

Letter Carriers Pres. Jerome J. Keating said 26 college campuses and 24 other centers are being used for a series of three-day training courses for some 5,000 members of local negotiating committees.

The first programs have been held at the University of Oklahoma, the University of Puerto Rico and the University of San Francisco, with others scheduled in nearly every state during February and March.

NALC Vice Pres. James H. Rademacher, in charge of the training program, said the schools use university experts, labor educators and national officers of the Letter Carriers as instructors.

The Postal Clerks have launched a series of regional training institutes for local officers in cooperation with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

UFPC Pres. E. C. Hallbeck said nearly 500 members took part in institutes held at Chicago, Boston and Washington, D. C.—the first of a series of 12 being held at central locations throughout the nation.

No Unlisted Phones For Local Officers

East Chicago, Ind.—"If they want privacy, they shouldn't be union officers," believes Joe DeRosa, president of Steelworkers Local 1133.

So each year, every worker in the big General American plant here gets an eight-page, wallet-size cardboard folder, listing the names, home addresses and telephone numbers of all local officers; the members of every committee; all grievance committeemen and stewards, by department, and the dates and sites of all regular meetings of the committeemen and stewards, the executive board and the local union itself.

ICFTU Protests Strikers' Exiling

Brussels—Gen. Sec. Omer Becu of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions has demanded that the governor of Aden stop deporting workers because of participation in strikes.

Becu, in a letter to Gov. Sir Charles Johnston, said Aden unionists should have a free trade union press, the right of assembly and the right to strike.

Industrial peace will be better achieved through voluntary, genuine and free collective bargaining, he said, than through restrictive legislation.

Upset Asked In Teamsters NLRB Vote

Philadelphia—The National Labor Relations Board's regional director here has recommended setting aside a representation election in which four Teamsters' locals narrowly defeated a rebel bid to replace them as bargaining agents for 8,200 truck drivers and helpers

Sustaining charges that violence and vandalism had interfered with free choice in the election, Dir. Bennet F. Schauffler of the NLRB's 4th region recommended that the board order a new vote among employes of 300 trucking companies affiliated in Motor Transport Labor Relations, Inc.

Last November, the rebel group — the Voice of the Teamsters Democratic Organizing Committee —came within 600 votes in its bid to take the drivers out of the Teamsters and back into the AFL-CIO. The IBT was expelled from the federation in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements.

The tally in the November vote was 3,274 for the Voice and 3,870 for Teamster Locals 107, 312, 331 and 470. Most of the drivers belong to Local 107, fourth largest in the IBT, whose secretary-treasurer, Raymond Cohen, is under state indictment for conspiring to loot the local's treasury.

New York State Sets Union Label Show

New York — The 9th Empire State Labor - Management Exhibit will be held in the Onondaga War Memorial Auditorium, Syracuse, May 24-26 inclusive, the Union Label & Service Trades Dept. of the New York State AFL-CIO has announced.

'Myth' Seen Dispelled:

Rails' Probe Stand Tied to Poverty Plea

An official of the Railway Labor Executives' Association has accused railroad management of opposing a congressional investigation of the industry's finances because it would dispel the "poverty myth" and show that the industry's financial condition is "the best in its history."

RLEA Exec. Sec. Donald S. Beattie charged that the railroads have tried to paint a "bleak" picture of their finances in order to win approval of mergers which would lead to "monopoly" and lessening of service to the public.

Beattie was interviewed on the AFL-CIO public affairs radio program, Labor News Conference, carried by the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Since the end of World War II, Beattie said, the railroad industry "has increased its payment of dividends, reduced its long-term debt very substantially, improved its plant and facilities by the investment of around $1 billion a year, increased its capital surplus and retained earnings very substantially, and the rate of insolvency in this industry today is near an all-time low."

Beattie declared that despite this improved financial position, the railroads are seeking "relief from regulation . . . from taxation (and) from the obligations they have under collective bargaining agreements with the unions."

Subpena Power Needed

The response by individual congressmen to the RLEA's call for an investigation of the railroad industry's finances makes it "quite likely" that there will be congressional action this year, Beattie said.

He declared that the congressional "power of subpena" is necessary to find out "who owns the railroads" and the extent of railroad investments in real estate and other industries.

Beattie predicted that an investigation would show that "interlocking control through directorates reaches into banks, insurance companies, oil companies, investment companies."

He emphasized that rail unions consider "private ownership and control of the railroads" to be "much better for us as employes and much better for the country." But he warned that labor "cannot stand by and watch the decision makers in the industry abandon service and eliminate facilities" and "displace employes to the point where we won't have an adequate railroad system in the future."

Two Groups Helped By New RLEA Fund

The Railway Labor Executives' Association has voted $5,000 grants to the Portland (Ore.) Reporter, a union-backed daily newspaper, and the Eugene V. Debs Foundation, which has been set up to preserve the Debs home as a memorial.

Both contributions came from the RLEA's new Emergency Relief Fund. This was started with the transfer of a $50,000 balance from the recently-closed Charles E. Wright Memorial Fund. The money was part of the amount raised to assure the support of the widow and daughter of Wright, a member of the Railway Carmen, who was killed in 1955 by an armed guard during the Louisville & Nashville railroad strike.

Wright's widow has since remarried, the RLEA said, and the support fund is no longer needed.

McDonald Blasts Drive To Cut Rights of Unions

Roanoke, Va.—An anti-labor "propaganda machine is operating full blast," Pres. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers declared in a message to the annual conference of USWA Dist. 35 here.

The union-busting objective, McDonald charged, is "to force intemperate and hasty action by Congress which would further reduce labor's rights and shackle us in pursuit of just objectives."

McDonald emphasized that the anti-labor drive is not confined to the South and "the clouds are gathering in other sections, too."

The "propaganda merchants," he said, seek "to spread suspicion and disunity. A strike, however just, is held up as an infringement upon the public's rights. Labor's leaders are defamed."

A sluggish economy, McDonald said, "is a good background for the newest assaults on labor."

Declaring that "unemployment and under-employment test a man's courage," McDonald warned that the alternative to strong unions is "industrial cannibalism."

The USWA president said the union will fight during the months ahead to bring to all of its members gains won in major contracts during the past year, including breakthroughs in the areas of extended vacations, profit-sharing and greater job security.

"We spent many years to wipe out the so-called southern differential within our jurisdiction," McDonald said. "We will not permit it to be reborn . . . We will not tolerate a condition which seeks to maintain an economic-social Mason-Dixon Line, which would preserve industrial slavery on one side against the advance of industrial emancipation on the other."

Bank's Conviction In Firing Reversed

Vancouver, B.C. — Police Court conviction of the powerful Bank of Montreal, with a $1,000 fine, on a charge of unlawfully firing an employe active in organizing a local of the Office Workers has been upset by Judge William L. Schultz on appeal to County Court.

Victim of the discharge, Marshall Bluck, had been employed as a clerk for 27 years and was on loan to the Community Chest when he was fired. Schultz said he based his reversal of the lower court on new evidence presented at the appeal, which was more in the nature of a new trial. Alex MacDonald, counsel for Bluck, said an appeal to a still higher court may be filed.

New Programs Asked:

Education Aid Bill Goes to Congress

(Continued from Page 1)

school construction or teachers' salaries.

He is asking instead a "selective" program of grants to be used by the states to meet "critical" construction needs, raise teachers' substandard salaries in "economically disadvantaged" school districts, and conduct pilot programs to meet special needs in urban and rural slums. For this, the President recommended appropriations totaling $1.5 billion over four years, with federal aid ending then.

The President dropped his earlier proposal for federal scholarships for needy college students, and asked instead:

- A greatly expanded student loan program under the National Defense Education Act, coupled with a new program of federal insurance for loans by banks to college students to enable them to continue their education.
- An increase in the number of graduate fellowships from 1,500 to 12,000 a year under the National Defense Education Act, and from 2,800 to 8,700 under the National Science Foundation program.
- "A new work-study program for needy college students" with the federal government "providing up to half the pay for students employed by colleges in work of an educational character as, for example, laboratory, library or research assistants."

Junior Colleges Urged

Strongly emphasizing the nation's need for two-year community colleges, the President asked construction grants to states for building and expanding "public community junior colleges," and grants to both public and private nonprofit institutions to train scientific, engineering and medical technicians in two-year college level programs.

He asked funds totaling $1 billion over the next three years for loans to both public and private colleges for building academic facilities. This is similar to the Administration proposal to the 87th Congress.

The President's package includes a step-up in teacher training facilities and scholarships "with particular emphasis on the training of teachers of the mentally retarded and other handicapped children, teachers of gifted or culturally deprived children, teachers of adult literacy, librarians and educational researchers.

He asked expansion of the "scope and level" of federally-supported vocational education programs "by replacing the Vocational Education Act of 1946 with new grant-in-aid legislation aimed at meeting the needs of individuals in all age groups for vocational training in occupations where they can find employment in today's diverse labor markets."

Trainees Would Be Doubled

He recommended a budget increase to "permit doubling the number of workers to be trained by the Manpower Development & Training Act programs."

The President called for federal grants to enable state universities to expand extension courses for adults.

Declaring that nearly 23 million adults lacking an eighth grade education "represent a staggering economic and cultural loss to their families and the nation," Kennedy repeated a recommendation for grants to states offering basic education courses to adults.

In a major new proposal, the President called for a three-year program of federal grants for public libraries as "an important resource for continuing education." The government presently provides supplementary funds only for rural library service.

Aid 'Without Control'

The overall educational package, Kennedy said, "offers federal assistance without federal control."

In the area of public elementary and secondary education, he said substandard schools and teachers are a national problem, but added that "the federal government cannot provide all the financial assistance needed to solve all of the problems."

He advocated that "instead of a general aid approach that could at best create a small wave in a huge ocean, our efforts should be selective and stimulative, encouraging the states to redouble their efforts under a plan that would phase out federal aid over a four-year period."

Referring indirectly to the dispute over church-state relationships which was a factor in the defeat of education bills in the last Congress, the President said the nation "can no longer afford the luxury of endless debate over all the complicated and sensitive questions raised by each new proposal on federal participation in education . . . We are at a point in history when we must face and resolve these problems."

RECEIVING THE FIRST annual community service award of the New Orleans & Vicinity Central Labor Council is Businessman Homer G. Bartee, shown with A. P. Stoddard (left), CSA staff representative, and Pres. David Winstein (right) of Musicians Local 174, who is also chairman of the council's Community Service Committee.

'Workweek and Leisure' Theme of CSC Parley

The eighth annual national AFL-CIO Conference on Community Services will mark the first labor conference in history on the problems surrounding the constructive use of leisure time, CSA Director Leo Perlis has announced.

The theme of the conference will be "The Shorter Workweek and Leisure Time." Some 500 delegates representing international labor unions, central bodies, social agencies and CSA representatives are expected to attend the sessions Mar. 31-Apr. 4 at the Commodore Hotel in New York City.

Speakers will include August Heckscher, special White House consultant on the Arts, and Laurance S. Rockefeller, chairman of New York State Council of Parks.

The theme of the conference is in line with the AFL-CIO drive for the 35-hour workweek, Perlis explained.

"This is the first labor conference on the constructive use of leisure time in line with the current drive for a shorter workweek," he added.

"It must be emphasized that the drive for the 35-hour week is designed to combat unemployment, rather than to create free time," Perlis said. "Nevertheless it must be understood that leisure time will be a net result of automation and the shorter workweek. We want to raise the level of public understanding of the importance of leisure time in our automated society, and explore sensible proposals for community action."

Perlis said that it has become the responsibility of the AFL-CIO to probe the meaning of leisure and to think through the implications of free time for both the individual himself and society as a whole.

"The conference will attempt to discover ways in which the individual can use free time both to enrich himself and to enrich the community around him," Perlis said.

Other Speakers

In addition to Heckscher and Rockefeller, speakers will include: AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters; Charles E. Hendry, dean of the School of Social Work, University of Toronto; Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes; Pres. Lee W. Minton of the Glass Bottle Blowers' Assn.; Pres. John H. Lyons of the Iron Workers.

The conference will conclude with a banquet for the presentation of the Murray-Green Award to General Alfred M. Gruenther, president of the American National Red Cross. Speakers at the banquet will be AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, chairman of the Community Services Committee. Perlis will preside.

Previous winners of the Murray-Green Award, which is given for outstanding community service, include Governor Luis Munoz Marin of Puerto Rico, the late Eleanor Roosevelt, former Pres. Harry Truman, Dr. Jonas Salk, Gen. Omar Bradley and Sen. Herbert H. Lehman.

Labor Gives Businessman Honor Award

New Orleans—The first annual community service award of the Central Labor Council of New Orleans and vicinity has been presented to Homer G. Bartee, United Fund campaign chairman and local businessman.

Pres. David Winstein of Musicians Local 174, who is chairman of the Council's Community Services Committee, and Pres. Walter B. Holmes, Communications Workers Local 3410, presented Bartee with a plaque.

In a resolution the council stated that:

"The Central Labor Council, through its Community Services Committee, commends Mr. Bartee for the leadership displayed in bringing about the distinct civic accomplishment represented by the successful completion of the 1963 United Fund campaign."

Council Sec.-Treas. William Moody, Jr., announced that the award will be presented annually to the person making the most outstanding contribution to the general community welfare.

"The AFL-CIO is dedicated on the record, as a matter of policy and as a matter of fact, to the proposition that what is good for the community is good for labor," Moody said. "It is in this spirit that members of the AFL-CIO have tried to recognize our community responsibility as citizens of our city, our parish and our state."

Bartee is a vice president of Southern Bell Telephone Co. A. P. Stoddard, CSA labor staff representative, presided at the dinner at which the plaque was given him.

Weinberger Of Hotel Union To Retire

Cincinnati — Jack Weinberger, secretary-treasurer of the Hotel & Restaurant Workers since 1954, has announced his retirement effective Apr. 30.

The union's executive board elected Robert L. Diefenbach, 53, to succeed Weinberger. He has been administrative assistant to Pres. Ed S. Miller since 1953.

Weinberger, a member of San Francisco Local 30, joined the union in 1906. He served the international as director of organization from 1945 until his election as secretary-treasurer. He was a lifetime friend and close collaborator with the union's late Pres. Hugo Ernst, also a Local 30 member who joined in 1906.

Diefenbach was secretary of Local 117 in Belleville, Ill., from 1939 to 1949, when he took a post with the Illinois Labor Dept. under appointment of then Gov. Adlai Stevenson. He joined the international union staff in 1953.

Senate Filibuster Foes Suffer Initial Setback

(Continued from Page 1)

"It is so encouraging that we will proceed with the Anderson-Morton resolution next week. On the next vote—probably on a motion to table by the conservative coalition—we feel we can beat it."

The effect of the tabling motion was to leave the Senate exactly where it was three weeks earlier—with a motion on the floor to call up a rules change resolution, and with southern senators prepared to hold the floor indefinitely in order to keep the issue from coming to a vote.

It would take two-thirds of senators present and voting, under the present Senate rules, to cut off debate. Rules reform advocates concede they don't have that many votes, even though some senators who voted to table the constitutional issue have said they would support a stronger cloture rule if it should ever get to a vote.

Even had the tabling motion been defeated, the reform forces would have been faced with what Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.) described as a "heads I win, tails you lose proposition."

When Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) submitted his motion for an immediate vote, basing his claim on constitutional grounds, Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson submitted the issue to the Senate for determination. This, he pointed out, was in accordance with precedent.

Johnson, however, ruled that the constitutional issue was debatable and held that he had no power to end prolonged or dilatory debate on the issue. A number of liberals supporting the constitutional claim sharply challenged his disclaimer of power, but Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) backed Johnson and declared that any such action would be usurpation of power over the Senate by the executive branch.

Mansfield—who said he supports a modification of the cloture rule but disagrees with the constitutional claim Anderson raised—and Senate GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.)—who opposes any rules change—first asked unanimous consent for a vote on the merits of the constitutional issue.

When the Southerners, led by Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.), objected, agreement was reached to vote on a tabling motion. If the motion had been defeated, the Southerners would still have been able to filibuster indefinitely to prevent a further vote.

If they had been able to overcome the procedural roadblocks, rules reform supporters would have sought first a vote on a proposal to permit a majority of the full Senate to limit debate.

If this failed—as they conceded it would—they would then join in voting for the Anderson resolution, which commanded greater support. This would permit three-fifths of senators present and voting to curtail debate, a drop from the present two-thirds requirement.

IBEW Unit Holds Leaders' School

New Brunswick, N. J.—A two-part union leadership conference has been held at the Labor Education Center here by Local 827 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, with the program developed in cooperation with the Labor Program of the Institute of Management & Labor Relations at Rutgers University.

The local has 27 units scattered throughout the state. The first of the two conference sessions was attended by union officers, executive board members and general committee delegates.

Conway to Assist IUD President

Jack Conway, former administrative assistant to Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, has been named executive assistant to Reuther in his capacity as president of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

Since early 1961 Conway has been deputy administrator of the Housing & Home Finance Agency.

In announcing the appointment, Reuther said Conway's decision to leave his government post to join the IUD "was in response to the challenging new opportunities for meaningful and constructive work provided by a comprehensive organizational drive, an intensified legislative program, more effective liaison with government agencies and other expanded activities."

Jobless Rate Up to 5.8% for January

Unemployment Ratio Same as a Year Ago

(Continued from Page 1)

000 among teenagers and nearly 300,000 among adult women. The jobless rate of teenagers was unchanged over the year at 13.9 percent; the similarly adjusted jobless rate for adult women was 5.4 percent, down slightly from the 5.8 percent of a year ago.

The longterm jobless—those out of work 15 weeks or longer—rose seasonally by nearly 200,000 to a total of 1.2 million. This group numbered 1.3 million a year ago, but totaled 500,000 in January 1957—before the past two recessions.

On the employment side, the Labor Dept. reported a decline of 1.8 million in non-farm jobs over the month to a total of 61.7 million. This slightly more than seasonal drop, following a greater than seasonal rise in December, left the non-farm total at about where it was last November, the report said.

"Aside from seasonal and other temporary fluctuations," the Labor Dept. declared, "non-farm employment has shown virtually no change since last May."

Farm jobs rebounded from December levels which had been depressed by bad weather, the report said, rising contra-seasonally by 150,000 to a total of 4.2 million. This left total employment down by the expected amount to a total of 65.9 million, about 1 million above a year ago.

Counted among the employed are more than 2.2 million non-farm workers on part-time for economic reasons, the same number as in December but about 150,000 more than a year ago, the report said. It added that these part-time figures had been trending upward throughout 1962 but fell sharply in December.

The Labor Dept. said the total labor force, at 73.3 million in January, was down seasonally by 800,000 from December. This was 1 million higher than in January a year ago after adjusting the figures on the basis of 1960 census data, the report added.

The department said this over-the-year gain "continues the pattern in labor force growth maintained during most of the second half of 1962."

A QUESTION IS POSED to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by CBS Editor David Schoenbrun on the network TV program, Washington Report, on which Meany voiced support for the Administration's overall approach to economic problems but expressed concern at the lack of immediate impact on the economy.

Budget Cuts May Hike Jobless Rate—Meany

A reduction in government expenditures at the present time "would add to the rate of unemployment" and hurt rather than help the nation, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared on a nationwide television program.

Appearing on Washington Report on the Columbia Television Network, Meany said labor is not opposed "to government taking a good look at its expenditures to make sure it doesn't waste any money," but that "a blind approach" in cutting expenditures "is not going to solve this problem at all."

Meany told David Schoenbrun, program editor, that the most important aspect of the Kennedy Administration program "is that we are at last making an effort to get this economy going so that it can keep our country where it should be, at the head of the free world."

Labor is "disappointed," he said, "that something more wasn't done to have an immediate impact on the economy in 1963."

"We are very much concerned that the unemployment rate will go well over 6 percent before the year is out," he added.

He pledged labor's cooperation to ensure the success of the Kennedy program, commenting "and if we have to wait a little longer, well, all right, we have got to wait a little longer."

The AFL-CIO president, replying to a query by Schoenbrun about the charge that higher labor costs in the U.S. prevent the nation from competing overseas, said "it is completely untrue."

He cited the case of coal, with American coal miners' wages roughly three times those of British coal miners, "but for every ton of coal that the British put out, we put out seven tons of coal."

"So if our wages are three times higher on the basis of a one-to-seven ratio of production, we are still producing much better than the British on the question of unit cost," he asserted.

Meany cited America's favorable trade balance in 1962 of $4.5 billion, noting that the "greatest favorable balance of trade is in machinery, where American labor gets the highest wages."

He added:

"When business and industry say that we are pricing ourselves out of the world market because of high labor costs, this is completely untrue on the record."

Metal Trades Pact Improves Pay, Benefits

Tullahoma, Tenn.—An immediate pay increase of 3 percent and other benefit improvements have been won by the Air Engineering Metal Trades Council in negotiations with ARO, Inc., operating contractor for the Air Force at the nearby Arnold Engineering Development Center.

The council represents some 1,500 operations, maintenance and service employes of ARO, which tests Air Force space vehicles and missiles under simulated conditions of speed, heat, cold, etc. Twelve local unions of internationals affiliated with the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. are represented.

The 3 percent general increase, effective Jan. 23, amounted to 6.5 to 13 cents an hour for the various job classifications. An additional increase of 8 cents an hour will become effective next Jan. 23, and the contract will be reopenable Jan. 23, 1965, expiring a year later.

A number of inequities were adjusted and the second shift premium of 10 cents an hour was increased to 14 cents. Overtime lunch allowance went to $1.25, up from $1.

The agreement also broadened the severance pay provision to cover terminations for medical reasons as well as layoffs, strengthened the three-day funeral leave, and extended the ceiling on sick pay from the present 13 weeks after five years of employment to 26 weeks after 10 years.

2-2-63

Labor Dept. to Seek Aid For U. S. Film Makers

The campaign of Hollywood film unions to return the production of feature movies to the United States was stepped up when Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz named a departmental committee to consult with the industry over possible relief measures.

Heading the committee is George L-P Weaver, assistant secretary for international labor affairs.

Wirtz acted after a meeting with the labor and industry Joint Committee on Foreign Production at which his aid was asked in securing some type of relief from "runaway productions," films U. S. companies make abroad. Such features often are made with the help of subsidies by the countries in which they are filmed.

Union representatives at the meeting included Pres. Richard F. Walsh of the Theatrical Stage Employes, an AFL-CIO vice president; Pres. George Chandler of the Screen Actors; Pres. Jeffrey Sayre of the Screen Extras; and Pres. Pat Somerset and Sec. H. O'Neil Shanks of the Hollywood AFL Film Council.

Further encouragement came from a meeting between a Film Council committee and Darryl F. Zanuck at which the president of 20th Century-Fox said, "I am formulating plans for resuming feature production in California which I propose to submit to my board of directors at an early date."

'Costs More' Abroad

Zanuck said experience has taught that "it actually costs more" to produce a feature film outside the U. S. than in California, "having regard especially to quality and efficiency of our American production personnel."

In a closely-related area, the Screen Actors made public the text of an agreement it had reached with Canadian, British and Irish television unions to police "runaway" film production within its jurisdiction by imposing SAG scales and conditions on American producers who shoot their films in other countries.

The agreement was reached at a meeting in Toronto also attended by Australian representatives. The parley agreed that:

"Runaway producers will be required to observe the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreements sought to be evaded, unless the terms and conditions in effect in the country of production are more favorable to the performer, in which event such more favorable terms and conditions will apply.

"Producers of television motion pictures and recorded programs who go on location in another country should also be required to observe the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreements in their own country, unless the terms and conditions in effect in the country where such location services are performed are more favorable to the performers. . . ."

The executive boards of the other unions represented at the meeting are expected to act soon on the pact.

'Bold Use' of U.S. Spending Urged

The "bold use" of government spending is the "most powerful single remedy we have for unemployment," according to a new study soon to be published as a pamphlet by the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

The study, entitled, "What Everyone Ought to Know About Government Spending and Full Employment," was written by the IUD's research section in collaboration with Prof. Robert Heilbroner of the New School for Social Research.

Main purpose of the study is to "clear away the myths surrounding the role of government spending in the nation's economic life." It charges that "myths and slogans" about the federal budget "can no longer be tolerated in the face of chronic and growing unemployment. When a government faced with unemployment unbalances its budget," the study declares, "it is not weakening the economy, it is helping to restore it to health."

System of 'Guidelines' Urged for Business

A program of democratic national planning by private and public groups "to provide guidelines for major corporations that will enable them to mesh their economic decisions with the overall needs of the economy," has been urged by Auto Workers Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock.

In addition to such a program, Woodcock recommended a five-point program that would help corporations fulfill their dual responsibility to "serve both the national purpose and [their] stockholders."

To curb the "unrestrained power of giant corporations" that dominated the economy, he urged:

- An ethical practices code similar to the code adopted by the AFL-CIO.
- Public hearings before any corporation that dominates an industry could hike its prices.
- A requirement of federal charters for corporations over a stated size, with a provision that such corporations be subject to carefully devised standards in terms of the public interest.
- A provision that boards of major corporations should include some directors appointed independently to represent the public.
- Legislation to guide new plants into areas of serious unemployment.

Woodcock's recommendations were made at the inaugural lecture series of the Grosse Pointe War Memorial Association at Grosse Pointe, Mich. The UAW officer is also chairman of the board of governors of Wayne State University and a presidential appointee to the executive committee of America's communications satellite corporation.

Commenting on the role of major corporations, Woodcock said "their power frees them from the necessity of obedience to the dictates of the competitive market place and no mechanism has been substituted to assure that private profit-seeking serves the public interest."

Ashley Totten, Rail Porters Leader, Dies

St. Croix, Virgin Islands—Ashley L. Totten, secretary-treasurer of the Sleeping Car Porters and one of the founders of the union, died here Jan. 26 at the age of 78.

Totten, the only secretary-treasurer the union has had since its founding, had worked with Pres. A. Philip Randolph since 1925 to organize sleeping car porters and win recognition for their union.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, in a telegram to Randolph, expressed sorrow at the death of Totten, "who served your union and the labor movement so long, so well and so faithfully." Meany added:

"The loss of this longtime friend and ally must be especially painful to you. You have our fullest sympathy. Please extend the condolences of the AFL-CIO to Brother Totten's family and to his thousands of friends and associates in your union."

Totten was born and educated in the Virgin Islands and, in 1961, was named by Pres. Kennedy as a director of the Virgin Islands Corp.

He is survived by his wife, Violet, two sons, four grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

Funeral services were scheduled to be held Feb. 2 at St. Martin's Episcopal Church in New York.

Pay Floor Hike Found Economic Boon

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, February 9, 1963 | No. 6

Wirtz Asks Wage Act Extension

By Saul Miller

The 1961 increase in the federal minimum wage "brought substantial benefits to low-paid workers in many areas of the country" and "the increases in their incomes and purchasing power had beneficial effects in the communities in which they work," Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has reported to Congress.

His annual report on the effect of the wage-hour law expressed the "necessity for further extending the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act," emphasizing that workers who were not covered did not benefit, even in an indirect manner, from the increases.

Wirtz told Congress that the increases effective Sept. 3, 1961, had no inflationary effect upon wage levels generally nor did they have any detrimental effect upon the nationwide level of employment in the industries affected.

Employment has in fact risen, Wirtz said, in those industries brought under the law's coverage since the increase took effect.

The September 1961 amendments to the wage-hour act increased the minimum wage to $1.15 an hour, providing wage increases of more than $500 million a year to 2.5 million low-paid workers. Almost 2 million workers were already covered but had been paid less than the new minimum. Another 600,000 were among the 3.6 million workers not previously covered and had also been working for less than the $1 minimum set for newly covered workers.

Evidence of Advance

On Sept. 3, 1963, the minimum wage for workers covered before enactment of the amendments will go to $1.25 an hour. For newly covered workers the rate will go to $1.15 on Sept. 3, 1964, and to $1.25 in 1965. Beginning in September 1963, newly covered workers will be entitled to time and one-half for work over 44 hours, going to 42 hours in 1964, and to 40 hours in 1965.

Wirtz' report stressed that "despite repeated predictions to the

(Continued on Page 2)

Filibuster Foes Lose Cloture Vote

Senators supporting a stronger anti-filibuster rule lost a last-ditch effort to force the issue to a vote, but were able to demonstrate conclusively that a majority of the Senate favors rules reform.

The showdown came on a motion to invoke cloture—to limit the debate which had tied up the Senate since Jan. 15. Under the existing rule—the one a bipartisan liberal coalition has sought to change—it requires two-thirds of senators present and voting to limit debate. The 54-42 majority for cloture fell short.

Voting for cloture were 36 Democrats and 18 Republicans; opposed were 27 Democrats and 15 Republicans.

The issue was then shelved by a 64-33 vote to adjourn, which had the effect of removing the rules motion as the Senate's pending business. Since the start of the debate, the Senate had been in day-to-day recess to freeze the parliamentary situation.

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.), who had supported the cloture move, made the

(Continued on Page 10)

Rash of Anti-Labor Bills Aims to Splinter Unions

FIRST CONTRACT between the Government Employes and the Dept. of Labor, covering nearly 4,500 employes, is signed by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and representatives of the AFGE. From left, AFGE National Pres. John F. Griner; National Vice Pres. Adrian Roberts; John Thurber, president of the union's Labor Dept. lodge, and Wirtz. The union won exclusive recognition as bargaining representative for departmental employes under Pres. Kennedy's Executive Order on employe-management relations.

Bargaining, Strike Bans Proposed

By David L. Perlman

A series of bills to split the labor movement into isolated one-company unions, barred by anti-trust laws from industrywide bargaining and virtually all forms of cooperation during negotiations and strikes, has been introduced during the first weeks of the 88th Congress.

Other anti-labor bills introduced would virtually wipe out the union shop, prohibit strikes in industries employing millions of workers, subordinate federal labor legislaiton to more punitive state laws, and weaken the Norris-La-Guardia anti-injunction law.

A number of the proposals are repeats of measures introduced in the 87th Congress; others are new. None have Administration backing but the most damaging are being pushed hard by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and a highly vocal bipartisan right-wing coalition in and out of Congress.

All of the bills which would make meaningful trade union solidarity an illegal "conspiracy" seek to repeal or drastically amend Sec. 6 of the Clayton Anti-Trust Act of 1914.

Enacted after the earlier Sherman Anti-Trust Act had been transformed by court decisions into a union-destroying weapon, the Clayton Act contains the historic declaration: "The labor of a human being is not a commodity or article in commerce."

It goes on to say that unions, in carrying out their "legitimate objectives," cannot "be held or construed to be illegal combinations or

(Continued on Page 11)

'Close Cooperation' Needed:

Meany Urges New Approach In Complex Bargaining Era

The economic and collective bargaining problems of this era require "genuine, close and wholehearted cooperation by labor, management and government on a scale not previously acceptable to any of them," according to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Meany's statement is contained in a signed editorial that leads off the February issue of the AFL-CIO magazine, The American Federationist. (Text of the editorial appears on Page 6.)

The issue is keyed to the 50th anniversary of the Dept. of Labor, and also includes a four-page article by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

"The golden anniversary of the Labor Dept. coincides with a most crucial period in American economic life," Meany's editorial notes. "Sweeping changes are now under way—changes that affect workers first but which will profoundly influence the future of everyone."

Earlier changes, such as the development of collective bargaining on a national scale, "caused few problems for the country despite the dismay of labor's enemies," Meany maintains.

"On the contrary, the labor movement's ability to raise the general level of wages, to establish such safeguards as welfare and pension programs and to exert a progressive influence in the legislative halls was indispensable to the general prosperity of the postwar period," he says.

"But in recent years there have been other, more ominous changes. The advance of automation and allied technological developments has proceeded from a crawl to a trot to a gallop. Combined with a flabby economy and a soaring population, it has produced an ever-increasing backlog of unemployment and the wholesale destruction of jobs.

"While unions are still primarily concerned with raising the living standards of their members they are today confronted with the basic problem of economic survival for these members. But employers care less about wages than about cutting wage-earners from the payroll. This is a fundamental collision that is not subject to settlement by test of strength or by the art of compromise as we have known them in

(Continued on Page 11)

Kennedy's Labor Advisers Stress Urgency of 'Effective' Tax Slash

By Willard Shelton

The need for "prompt and effective action" to cut taxes is more urgent than ever, the Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy has reported to Pres. Kennedy.

"We share with you a deep and increasing concern with the high and persistent level of unemployment," the committee said.

"We are more convinced than ever," it continued, that the national economy must be stimulated to more rapid growth rate to create more jobs. "A thorough review and revision of the tax system should not be permitted" to delay congressional action for a "significant" reduction in tax rates this year.

The Labor-Management Advisory Committee, made up of 21 members drawn equally from business, labor and public representatives, is headed this year by Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges, with Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz as vice chairman.

In a separate statement on unemployment, the advisory group said that despite "some gains" in job availability in the two years since the committee was created by Kennedy, "the persistence and magnitude" of joblessness have produced a situation that "remains intolerable."

Detailed reports on unemployment were given the committee by

(Continued on Page 2)

MIDWEST SEMINAR on National Labor Relations Board policy changes, held in Chicago under the auspices of the University of Chicago Extension Div., heard among others (from left) Vice Pres. Pat Greathouse of the Auto Workers; NLRB Chairman Frank McCulloch; Chairman Harold A. Katz of the U. S. National Committee, Intl. Society for Labor Law & Social Legislation, and Theodore J. St. Antoine, assistant general counsel of the AFL-CIO.

McCulloch Tells Seminar:

NLRB Developing New Bargaining Aids

Chicago—The National Labor Relations Board is devising new remedies to accomplish its unchanged goal of promoting free collective bargaining, NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch declared here.

Addressing a seminar on NLRB policy changes sponsored by the University of Chicago extension division, McCulloch said the labor board has tried to promote industrial peace by speeding up its procedures and such measures as:

- Extension of the contract bar period for representation elections from two to three years.
- Awarding back pay with interest as a remedy for unfair labor practices.
- Providing "full relief" for unwarranted picketing.
- Requiring companies to bargain with unions on the impact of automation or plant closings.
- Exercising board supervision of persons repeatedly violating the labor relations law.
- Using NLRB power to seek an injunction against unfair practices.

McCulloch told the 300 lawyers, union and business officials attending the seminar that education in bargaining and getting at the causes of disputes has been a major factor in promoting industrial peace.

Other speakers included Lester Asher, chief counsel for the Illinois State AFL-CIO; Jack Barbash of the University of Wisconsin; NLRB Solicitor William Feldsman, and Philip Marshall, Milwaukee arbitrator.

Asher criticized the division of NLRB authority between the board and its general counsel under the Taft-Hartley Act and charged that union organizing efforts have been handicapped by positions taken by the general counsel "without sufficient hearing or investigation."

Albany Rally To Seek $1.50 Wage Floor

Albany, N.Y.—The New York Citizens' Committee for a $1.50 Minimum Hourly Wage has called a statewide "freedom from poverty" rally to be held here Feb. 12—Lincoln's Birthday.

The committee is headed by A. Philip Randolph, president of the Sleeping Car Porters and a vice president of the AFL-CIO.

Randolph said the $1.50 minimum "is an issue of crucial importance to the low paid, exploited workers of this state, and a matter of special importance to Negro and Spanish-speaking workers who are heavily concentrated in the low wage brackets."

"It is also of vital importance to the state as a whole, since many of the social, economic and moral problems of the low-paid workers and their families stem directly from the fact that so large a mass of workers do not receive wages sufficient to provide adequate maintenance for themselves and their families," he added.

He called on Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller "to make publicly known" his position on the issue.

Benefits for Lower-Paid Flow From Raise in Minimum Wage

(Continued from Page 1)

contrary, the evidence is emphatic that the successive amendments to the act have gone far toward its objective of eliminating 'conditions detrimental to the maintenance of the minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency and general well-being of workers . . . without substantially curtailing employment or earning power."

The most pronounced change in wage structures disclosed by the Labor Dept.'s surveys on which Wirtz's report was based occurred in "non-metropolitan areas of the South." In these areas 44 percent of the employes in wholesale trade and 27 percent in manufacturing received wage increases to bring their earnings to $1.15 an hour. Employment in covered industries in these areas—other than retail trade — increased by 235,000 over a 20-month period.

In covered retail trade in these same areas about one-fourth of the workers received increases to $1 an hour.

The report says: "These increases in the wages of low paid workers made possible, on the average, a 10 percent improvement in their level of living."

In the non-metropolitan areas of the North Central region, wage increases to bring hourly earnings to $1.15 "affected less than 10 percent of employment in both manufacturing and wholesale trade."

Retail Pay Up in South

The department's nationwide surveys of retail trade show that the proportion of all covered retail establishments whose hourly earnings were raised to $1 was about 7 percent. The proportion for covered variety stores, however, was 31 percent in the U.S. and 55 percent in the South.

There was little evidence up to June 1962 of changes in wages in non-covered establishments resulting from the minimum wage, the report said. In non-covered retail trade the proportion of workers paid $1 an hour or more increased from 81 percent in June 1961 to 84 percent in June 1962. In non-metropolitan areas of the South the proportion increased from 56 to 62 percent.

As of June 1962 "there was small but significant change in weekly hours of work in covered retail establishments," the department said.

In the nation as a whole the proportion of retail workers working 40 hours or more decreased from 61 percent in June 1961 to 57 percent in June 1962. In the South the decrease was from 70 percent to 63 percent and for variety stores in the South from 58 to 42 percent.

Labor Advisory Panel Says Tax Cut 'Urgent'

(Continued from Page 1)

Wirtz and Area Redevelopment Administrator William L. Batt, Jr., in a White House meeting. Although unemployment has been reduced from 6.9 percent to 5.8 percent at present, the economic picture is "most unsatisfactory," the committee declared.

Dillon Testifies

The statements came as Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon warned the House Ways & Means Committee that dropping the tax structure reforms the Administration has asked would force a reduction in tax cuts as well.

The President's program proposes tax cuts of $13.6 billion and strutural reforms to produce $3.3 billion in offsetting revenues. The net tax slash of $10.3 billion is "the maximum revenue cost that can be safely accepted," Dillion told the committee.

The Treasury secretary was the opening witness for the Administration and both he and Hodges, who followed, ran into Republican demands that the Administration reduce its expenditure proposals.

The tax-writing Ways & Means Committee took over the spotlight as the Joint Economic Committee completed hearing government spokesmen and a wide range of economists who were virtually unanimous in urging support of tax reduction. Some leading economists, however, emphasized a need for an easier Federal Reserve Board money policy as well as tax slashes. Others urged that a heavy increase in direct government expenditures would be more productive than a tax cut in stimulating a rapidly increased rate of economic growth.

The Labor-Management Advisory Committee noted in its statement on unemployment that the Manpower Development & Training Act and the Area Redevelopment Act have already justified themselves, but "they do not get to the heart of our unemployment problem."

'No Greater Challenge'

No greater challenge confronts the country, the committee said, than the problem of utilizing manpower productively. Warning that 26 million jobs must be found for new workers in this decade and that "many more millions will be displaced from their present jobs," the statement said that action to meet this challenge requires "the best efforts of both the government and the private sector of the economy."

There must be "even greater attention" given the training and retraining of the unemployed, the group declared.

The statement noted that there are specific problems involving youth unemployment, "especially the school dropouts," the "plight of minority workers," the reemployment "difficulties" of middle-aged and older workers, and the inadequacies of our educational system.

"Basically we must seek to understand why our economic system is not operating at full capacity, so that the unemployment problem as a whole as well as the specific areas of unemployment will be closer to solution," the advisers said.

The "persistence" of the problem is "most dramatically illustrated" by the fact that in 62 straight months the national joblessness rate has dropped below 5 percent only once, they said, and it is this situation that "remains, in our judgment, intolerable."

Woman Honored as Labor 'Man of Year'

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Mrs. Martha Reynolds, a member of Auto Workers Local 257, has been named "Man of the Year" by the Kent County Labor Council in recognition of her services as its community services activities representative.

Mrs. Reynolds is a member of the President's Commission on the Status of Women, of the executive board of the Kent County Council of Churches and of the NAACP. In addition she is a lecturer at the Michigan State University and the U. of Michigan.

Henning Lashes Bill To Add Curbs on Unions

Los Angeles—Under Sec. of Labor John F. Henning has warned against the danger of letting current labor disputes result in anti-labor legislation or "government controls and coercion."

Henning also denounced the legislative program of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce as one which would result in "chaos and confusion, pit union against union, company against company, and destroy whatever stability has been achieved in this country's labor relations."

The Dept. of Labor official issued his warnings in a series of interviews and testimonial dinners here and in San Francisco, where management, labor and community leaders joined to honor the former California union leader and director of the state's Industrial Relations Dept.

Henning was particularly critical of the labor law proposals outlined by H. Ladd Plumley, president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and embodied in legislation introduced by Rep. Dave Martin (R-Neb.).

The proposals would forbid industrywide bargaining, limit unions to representing workers of only one company, and impose anti-trust laws on them.

Such proposals, Henning said, are "unthinkable in a free society, and can enjoy no logical support from either labor or management."

While here he participated in ground-breaking ceremonies for a new headquarters for the Los Angeles County AFL-CIO and was guest of honor at a $25-a-plate dinner, proceeds of which went to establish a John F. Henning fund for needy Israeli children.

In San Francisco, nearly 2,000 labor, management and community leaders joined in a testimonial dinner to him.

The former research director for the California Labor Federation also declared that "the real crisis of labor in this country is not strikes, but unemployment," noting that more manpower time was lost in the month of January alone from unemployment than was lost from strikes in the entire past 35 years.

He denounced proposals for compulsory arbitration as a "foolish response to unnecessary panic stemming from current labor disputes."

"Compulsory arbitration would be a confession of intellectual bankruptcy and I strongly oppose such procedures—which would mean some college professors would end up writing labor-management contracts and would also mean an end to free collective bargaining in this country," he said.

The real need, he declared, is to do something about the "real crisis of labor, unemployment, where workers today are haunted by technological changes that are displacing 150,000 Americans from their present jobs each month."

He praised the cooperation of the labor movement with the Kennedy Administration, called for support of the President's tax program, and said labor and management should give more consideration to greater voluntary use of "third-party" help which has resulted at times in major advances, such as "those promised in the agreement between the United Steelworkers of America and Kaiser Steel Co."

Bargaining Program:

Production Bonus, Jobs Goal of URW

Cleveland—Job expansion, wage increases and a bonus plan geared to productivity will top the bargaining goals of the Rubber Workers in negotiations this spring with the Big Four companies in the industry.

The URW's 175-member Policy Committee gave unanimous approval to a program calling for:

- A "substantial" general wage increase, coupled with a productivity formula giving workers a monthly bonus based on "a fair share of increases in economic productivity."
- A modified form of "sabbatical leave," which the URW said would increase a plant's employment by 3 to 4 percent.
- Strict limitation of overtime hours to "unusual and essential situations."
- Improvement in the supplemental unemployment benefits program.
- Elimination of plant inequities; extension of bargaining rights to new and relocated plants, including protection of seniority.
- Establishment of company-wide automation committees to study problems arising from the impact of automation.
- A paid holiday on a general election day "upon presentation of proof that a worker (if of age and a citizen) has voted."

The URW said its productivity formula would be based on "a fixed percentage of value added by manufacture of products from raw materials to finished goods.

It cited as an example the case of a company which pays $500,000 for raw materials that are used to produce goods selling for $2 million. The "value added by production," the union said, would be $1.5 million.

"Using the fixed percentage established by an agreed-upon past period, it would be determined if the workers had received a fair share of increased economic productivity in their pay envelopes," the union said. "If payroll had not been up to that fixed percentage, then the difference due to bring it up to that point would be divided as a bonus among the workers."

URW Pres. George Burdon described the economic goals "the most positive and progressive in the union's history. . . . We're saying to the companies that they have an obligation to face up to the responsibility they have to loyal and faithful employes in this age of automation."

Contract talks with major producers are expected to get under way in mid-March. Agreements with Goodyear, Goodrich and Firestone expire Apr. 20. The contract with U. S. Rubber has a June 1 expiration date. The URW represents 70,000 workers in the four companies.

Missile Site Stoppages Cut By 53 Percent

Operations of the Missile Sites Labor Commission have helped reduce work interruptions due to employer-labor disputes almost to the vanishing point, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has reported to Pres. Kennedy.

In the last six months of 1962, Wirtz reported, the number of work stoppages on missile sites was cut by 53 percent from the same period in 1961 and only 3,696 man-days were lost compared to 8,239,000 man-days worked.

Prior to creation of the Missile Sites Labor Commission in 1961, the ratio of man-days lost was 1 to 96. In the commission's first year this was reduced to a ratio of 1 to 1,100, and in the last six months of 1962 the ratio was 1 to 2,229.

One result, Wirtz said: Five Titan and five Atlas missile sites became operational in the second half of the year.

3 Unions Lose Vote In Department Stores

Milwaukee—Three AFL-CIO unions lost a hard-fought campaign to organize the seven-store Gimbels-Schusters department store chain here. The joint drive by the Retail Clerks, Office Employes and Building Service Employes met a 4,117 to 1,311 setback in a National Labor Relations Board representation election.

SHORTER WORKWEEK is needed "on the basis of meeting the unemployment problem," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said on a television program broadcast over educational TV stations. Meany is shown in interview by A. H. Raskin of the New York Times editorial board, who also questioned Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, Prof. John T. Dunlop of Harvard University and Solomon Barkin, former research director of the Textile Workers Union of America.

'Weep' Film Brings Second Ruling By NLRB to Set Aside Election

New Orleans—A National Labor Relations Board representation election here has been set aside, and a new election ordered, because the employer showed the notorious anti-union movie, "And Women Must Weep," to captive audiences of his employes just in advance of the election.

The movie, a product of the National Right to Work Committee, has come into widespread use by anti-union employers during employe organizing campaigns.

Purporting to tell the factual story of a 1957 strike in Princeton, Ind., the film has been labeled by the national NLRB a "vividly dramatized" version employing "the art of the playwright and the acting profession" and "poetic license" to "give substance" to anti-union allegations.

The labor board last December ruled, in its first decision on the movie, that a showing of the film went beyond the permissible bounds of campaign distortions and "trickery" and involved "substantial departure from the truth" at a time when "effective reply" by the union was foreclosed.

The case here involved stores of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. in this area and Meat Cutters District Union 327, which was seeking representation rights for 115 employes. The tally of results showed 43 votes for the union, 68 against.

Interference Charged

The union promptly filed charges of employer espionage during the organizing campaign, interrogation of employes and economic threats as well as showing of the movie.

NLRB Regional Dir. John F. LeBus overruled or dismissed most of the charges on the grounds that they involved incidents of an isolated nature or, if more serious, had occurred prior to the union's election petition.

The chain of events involving the anti-union propaganda movie, he ruled, raised "material and substantial" issues constituting illegal interference with the employes' rights.

Two days in advance of the scheduled election, LeBus found, a company spokesman summoned employes in three groups to a meeting room controlled by A & P, read a "prepared speech" to each group, read a "brief written introduction" to the movie, and showed the movie itself.

The union promptly sent a telegram demanding "equal time" to address the workers "on company property and time." A specific request was made "for equal time to reply to emotional appeal and misrepresentation of facts contained in movie shown to employes."

To this telegram there was no reply.

Employes testified that the company spokesman, one Parsons, in his introductory speech implied that violence and trouble arose "when employes got a union" or a strike occurred. Parsons declined to furnish a written copy of his remarks but testified that he merely pointed out that in one New Orleans strike a number of strikers had lost their jobs.

LeBus held that regardless of the exact words, the remarks made by Parsons, the "contents of the film" and the showing of the film "less than 48 hours before" the election constituted illegal interference. He cited the earlier NLRB findings on the film and ordered a new election.

Study Finds Kerr-Mills Covers Only Half U.S.

Protection under the Kerr-Mills Medical Assistance to the Aged program—the conservatives' alternative to medicare under social security—so far is available, with wide variations, in only half the states, according to the latest government figures.

The Bureau of Family Services of the Social Security Administration has released figures on the program as of November.

They show it is operating in 25 states plus Guam, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. For the nation as a whole, an average of 6.4 in every 1,000 persons over 65 years of age is receiving aid.

The aid coverage varies widely. In Massachusetts, medical bills were paid for 37 of every 1,000 elderly persons; in neighboring New Hampshire, 1 person out of every 1,250 over 65 received aid.

On the amount of aid provided, payments ranged from an average of $18.70 in Kentucky to $350.06 in Illinois.

Bulk of the money paid out under Kerr-Mills is distributed in a few big industrial states. The figures show that of the $22.6 million paid in November, four-fifths was divided among the four industrial states of New York, California, Massachusetts and Michigan.

New York alone received $900,000 more for its Kerr-Mills program than 19 other states combined.

The AFL-CIO has strongly opposed the Kerr-Mills approach and program because it contains a means test by which the elderly must prove they cannot meet medical costs, because labor feels help would be determined not by real needs but by the political make-up of a state legislature and because states vary greatly in their ability to provide aid. All these things, labor feels, mean Kerr-Mills must remain limited and inadequate.

Organized labor has pushed vigorously for a program of health care for the aged under the social security system. It has called for a program that would embody the social insurance principle under which benefits would be earned, which would provide adequate benefits on an equal basis, and which would cover all Americans over 65, of whom there are now more than 16 million.

GM Urged to Cut Prices; $1.46 Billion Profits Cited

Detroit—General Motors Corp. profit figures for 1962 show the company could have cut its prices "significantly" to the common benefit of the corporation, its workers and the public, Vice Pres. Leonard Woodstock of the Auto Workers said here.

Citing GM's 1962 earnings figure of $1.46 billion—"more money than any other manufacturer in any industry" ever made in the past—Woodstock pointed out that these profits were reaped on sales at price levels "equal to or lower than" those charged the previous year on identical models and after taking the full effect of higher wages and improved benefits negotiated by the UAW in 1961.

On a sales increase of only 28 percent, he continued, "before-tax profits increased by 66 percent." GM "proved again that volume, rather than high prices, is the key to profitability."

If the company had lowered its prices as the UAW had recommended, Woodstock said, "its profits would still have been at astronomical levels, more units would have been produced and sold, more workers would have been employed, and the additional purchasing power . . . would have benefited the entire consuming public."

GM's previous earnings, the UAW official observed, gave the company an accumulation of "$1 billion in cash and low-yield securities in excess of its working capital needs." This reserve, which "is probably greater now," is the result of "excessive prices" and "represents money withdrawn from the economy, which depresses economic activity and employment." A price cut could "give the economy a much-needed shot in the arm," he said.

'Work' Bill Clears Wyoming Houses

Cheyenne — A so-called "right-to-work" bill cleared both houses of the Republican-controlled Wyoming legislature and awaited only the signature of GOP Gov. Clifford P. Hansen to become law.

The House voted 32-24 to outlaw the union shop after rejecting all attempts to amend the bill which contains stringent criminal and civil penalties. Earlier it had passed the Senate 19-11.

If the governor—who has not taken a public stand on the merits of the issue—signs the bill, Wyoming will become the 20th state to ban union shop agreements and the first since Kansas adopted a constitutional amendment in 1958.

No-Layoff Plan Ends Walkout In Bus Lines

Philadelphia—More than 5,500 members of the Transport Workers Union went back to work on this city's transit lines after the Philadelphia Transportation Co. adopted a strike-settling contract basically identical with one it had previously repudiated.

Key to the settlement was a no-layoff clause for the duration of the two-year agreement. All TWU members employed at the time the 19-day strike began and all new employes hired hereafter are guaranteed work for the contract period.

The Transport Workers and its Philadelphia Local 234 estimate wage and benefit gains at 33 cents an hour with 10 cents payable immediately in wage increases and an additional 10 cents effective Jan. 15, 1964.

Welfare benefits provide that the company will pay the full costs of health protection under Blue Cross and Blue Shield plans for employes and their families. They include a $10-a-month increase in pension payment, a $10-a-week hike in sick leave benefits, and a four-week vacation after 15 years of service. Previously the health plan has been financed by shared company and employe contributions.

A negotiated agreement to end the strike on Jan. 25 was repudiated by the company's executive committee and the company president, Robert H. Stier, immediately resigned.

The company had been insisting on a proposed fare increase which the city government opposed. Pennsylvania's Gov. William W. Scranton (R) intervened when the first settlement collapsed with management repudiation, and a quick meeting of the state Public Service Commission authorized the company to raise fares from 23 cents to 25 cents a ride and the price of tokens from 21 to 23.5 cents.

Labor Dept. Upheld in Vote Supervision

New York—A precedent has been set here that a union charged with violating the election procedures of the Landrum-Griffin Act cannot escape the supervision of the Secretary of Labor in any new election ordered by a federal court.

The Labor Dept. filed a suit in U. S. District Court here last Nov. 29, accusing an "amalgamated" and unaffiliated unit calling itself Local 355 of failing to conduct elections every two years.

The union claimed that it represented employes of several employers and was not bound by election procedures required of local unions. Its officers set up an election, however, and in court offered the new election as a defense and asked that the Secretary of Labor's suit be voided.

U. S. District Judge Joseph C. Zavatt ruled that a local can "correct and remedy violations" up to the point where a court complaint is filed, but that thereafter "the right of the government to investigate the breakdown of democratic processes" cannot be "capriciously brushed aside."

Local 355 now entered a stipulation for an election conducted under supervision of Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

The "amalgamated local" says it represents some 1,100 employes. It holds its charter from a group once controlled by Johnny Dio, who was the subject of McClellan special Senate hearings in 1957. Its business agent is Bernard Tolkow, who received the charter from Dio.

JOINT PICKET LINE by Congress of Racial Equality and Ladies' Garment Workers locals in New York City accuses Sealtest Co. of discriminatory employment practices.

COPE Area Parleys Open Mar. 2 in Norfolk

The AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education will open its 1963 area conferences Mar. 2 with a two-day session at Norfolk, Va.

COPE Dir. James L. McDevitt, in issuing the schedule of 16 conferences, stressed the importance of attendance by union leadership in the areas affected.

"We hope, through these conferences, to lay the groundwork for a greater and more successful political effort from labor in the 1964 elections," McDevitt said.

The schedule, including hotels at which the conferences will be held and the states covered, is as follows:

Mar. 2-3, Norfolk, Va., Golden Triangle—Maryland, North Carolina, Virginia, South Carolina, District of Columbia.

Mar. 6-7, Gatlinburg, Tenn., Mountain View—Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee.

Mar. 13-14, Houston, Tex., Shamrock Hilton—Texas, Louisiana.

Mar. 16-17, Little Rock, Ark., Marion—Arkansas, Mississippi.

Mar. 20-21, Oklahoma City, Okla., Sheraton Oklahoma—Oklahoma, Kansas.

Apr. 2-3, New York, N.Y., Statler Hilton—New York, New Jersey.

Apr. 5-6, Boston, Mass., Bradford—Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hamshire, Maine.

Apr. 26-27, Pittsburgh, Pa., Penn-Sheraton — Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Delaware.

Apr. 28-29, Cleveland, O., Statler Hilton—Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky.

May 1-2, Chicago, Ill., Morrison —Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin.

May 4-5, St. Louis, Mo., Jefferson-Sheraton, Missouri, Iowa.

May 21-22, Moorhead, Minn., FM—Minnesota, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska.

May 25-26, Portland, Ore., Multnomah—Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Alaska.

May 28-29, San Francisco, Calif., St. Francis—California, Nevada, Arizona, Hawaii.

June 1-2, Denver, Colo., Denver Hilton—Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, New Mexico.

Florida to be scheduled.

Labor Relations Gains Cited in Federal Service

Norman, Okla.—Collective bargaining for federal employes is new to the United States but has long been standard practice in most democratic nations, Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver told a cross-section of the nation's postmasters at a management seminar at the University of Oklahoma.

Weaver praised the Post Office Dept. for setting up a training program in employe-management relations and declared the government has "come a long way" since the period when "department heads could remove employes without notice and the 'gag rule' was used as a bludgeon to silence the complaints of any organization."

Until Pres. Kennedy's Executive Order last year provided for union recognition and collective bargaining, "America lagged behind much of the free world in recognizing the organizations of its federal employes," Weaver declared.

He termed the relationship between government agencies and federal employe unions "still in a developmental stage." He expressed the hope that other departments will follow the lead of the postal service in training senior officials to work with union representatives to make collective bargaining function "within our traditional American framework of pragmatism, justice and fair play."

Weaver addressed the first of a series of four week-long seminars scheduled to be attended by 600 postal officials.

NYC Teachers To Honor Douglas

New York—The 1963 John Dewey Award of the United Federation of Teachers will be presented to Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas at a luncheon Feb. 23.

The award is given annually as a tribute to Dewey, noted educator, and to the democratic ideals the union has found embodied in his philosophy. UFT Pres. Charles Cogen said it is "long overdue" to Douglas.

"Through his court decisions and writings," said Cogen, "he has been one of our foremost educators as to rights and responsibilities of citizens in a free society. John Dewey's good life, where men speak freely in an atmosphere of mutual respect, has come closer to reality because of Justice Douglas' work."

Conduct Called 'Incredible':

Air Force Removes Agent at Lockheed

Sunnyvale, Calif.—The Air Force has removed Col. James H. Voyles, Jr., as its plant representative at Lockheed Aircraft Corp.'s missile division here after what union leaders termed "incredible conduct" by the officer.

The controversial colonel who urged Lockheed to defy recommendations for a contract settlement from Pres. Kennedy, Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and others, was moved without another specific assignment to a nearby aerospace test center.

Lockheed and the Machinists finally reached agreement on terms of a new contract, but the colonel's advice to the company threatened for a time to disrupt it and underscored an IAM protest that at times the military interferes with the bargaining process in defense industries.

The IAM made public a letter from Voyles to Lockheed's board chairman, Courtlandt S. Gross, and the Air Force began an immediate investigation of the letter as the union demanded.

An Air Force spokesman said if any further action is taken against Voyles it will come from a review of the case in Washington, and that no further action is planned by local Air Force officials.

Military regulations spell out the requirement that no officer is allowed to interfere in labor relations of any firm.

The special board appointed by Kennedy recommended that Lockheed workers be given a chance to vote on whether they wanted a union shop clause. The President and most other top government leaders urged acceptance of the proposal, but Lockheed said no. Voyles said the company's position was "striking a blow for restricting the government to its proper sphere of action."

He said he appreciated the fact "that your (Lockheed's) position is one which brings extreme pressures in a political sense," but the firm's resistance will "enchance and strengthen your position as a leader, or rather as the leader in American industry who understands, respects and insists on governmental responsibilities being exercised in the proper manner."

ITU Votes Assessment To Finance Strike Aid

New York—Typographical Union members across the continent gave a strong vote of confidence to striking and locked-out newspaper printers here with apparently heavy approval of a unionwide assessment to finance further strike benefits for members of New York's "Big Six" local.

ITU Pres. Elmer Brown said the pattern of early returns showed that the proposed assessment of 3 percent of earnings "apparently will carry by a margin of about 3 to 1."

Brown came to New York at the request of Mayor Robert F. Wagner to take part in talks seeking a solution to the dispute, which has shut the city's major dailies for nine weeks.

The printers struck four papers on Dec. 8—the Times, Daily News, Journal-American and World Telegram & Sun. The strike was promptly followed by voluntary suspension of publication — and lockout of employes—by the Post, Mirror, Herald Tribune, and Long Island Star-Journal.

Wagner has issued no further reports of progress in negotiations since his earlier announcement that the parties had settled a number of issues in marathon bargaining sessions at City Hall.

Local 6 Pres. Bertram A. Powers in a statement to members cautioned against "false optimism" that a settlement will be achieved soon. He emphasized that remaining issues are of "vital importance" and are "far from resolved."

It is understood that among the key issues still outstanding are wages and the workweek, with the settlement of a number of others "conditional" on agreement over the final package.

Benefits for the striking and locked-out printers and ITU mailers here and in Cleveland, where five newspaper unions are striking, have totaled more than $345,000 a week. The ITU estimates that the 3 percent assessment will just about cover that amount.

In all, unions affected by the disputes have been paying about $1 million a week in benefits to aid their more than 20,000 members.

The Newspaper Guild, having exhausted its international defense fund of nearly $1 million in reserves and borrowed money, suspended payment of benefits when its New York members became eligible for unemployment compensation the first week in February. The State Unemployment Insurance Office reported that more than 11,700 persons put out of work by the newspaper dispute had applied for benefits during the first week of eligibility.

Sheet Metal Workers Win Rockford Vote

Rockford, Ill.—The Sheet Metal Workers have cracked the 60-year-old non-union record of Barber-Colman Co. in Rockford, winning a National Labor Relations Board election in which 2,355 out of a possible 2,526 workers voted.

The vote was 1,261 for the Sheet Metal Workers, 1,140 no union, 43 challenged and 11 void at the air-conditioning plant.

The election was the fourth try by a union in six years to organize the company. It had remained unorganized for 60 years while other plants in the area involved in the same type of business have come under the jurisdiction of a number of AFL-CIO unions.

Organization Dir. Edward Hussey said that the Sheet Metal Workers received unprecedented cooperation from all local unions in the Rockford area in the drive to organize Barber-Colman.

Sheet Metal's victory at the Hotpoint division of the General Electric Co. in Chicago last May, where it won representation rights for 2,488 employes was instrumental in the Barber-Colman victory, said Hussey.

Barber-Colman started at the turn of the century as a manufacturer of textile machines but over the year became a major producer of air-conditioning equipment.

3 Plants Still Out:

Shell, Mobil Strikes Gain 5% Pay Hike

The Oil Workers, Operating Engineers and a dozen other unions have reached contract settlements providing a 5 percent wage increase at major installations of the Shell Oil Co. and Socony-Mobil Oil Co. after strikes that lasted as long as eight months.

A common factor in each of the long-drawn-out struggles was a management drive to change contract language so as to give the companies unilateral control of working conditions, job assignments and other on-job operations.

The effect of these company demands would have been to place heavy emphasis on what the U. S. Chamber of Commerce labels "management rights" to shift workers from job to job, to cut the number of workers for economic reasons and to remove significant protections from the area of arbitration.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council last Nov. 18 noted that the oil companies' drive for "management rights" contract shifts fell into the "pattern" recommended by the C. of C. It also pointed out that the workers were faced with the threat of heavy employment cutbacks because of automation and economy layoffs.

On Strike Since Aug. 18

The council urged support of the striking workers by all AFL-CIO affiliates, and support was given both in strike funds and in food and other supplies.

Operating Engineers, Machinists, and the Oil Workers Independent Council—the latter a group made up of workers from 11 building and metal trades unions—were forced on the picket lines Aug. 18, 1962, at the Shell plant in Wood River, Ill.

They went back to work on Feb. 5 with a one-year contract providing for the 5 percent wage increase, not retroactive to the expiration date of the previous agreement, and with a letter of intent from the company to restrict contracting-out operations that deprive Shell employes of work historically done in the plant.

Pres. Dave Grieve of Operating Engineers Local 525 said the company insisted on penalizing the strikers by taking away, for purposes of their seniority ratings, all but 30 days of the 168 days spent on the picket lines.

The most serious effect of prospective economic layoffs, Grieve said, is to reduce safety protection against job hazards.

"We lost 17 men in an explosion in 1951," he said.

OCAW Wins Pacts

The Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers won what the union described as "satisfactory" new one-year contracts with Socony-Mobil installations in East St. Louis, Ill.; Trenton, Mich., and East Chicago, Ill. The agreement provides a reopener on wages once during the life of the contract.

The Trenton strike began last June 27, the others on Aug. 7.

Working conditions are "extremely important" to employes in the highly-automated refineries, an OCAW spokesman said, and the union was able to turn back "most if not all" demands for contract revisions designed to give broad unilateral job-control "rights" to the management.

Twenty-five hundred OCAW members are still on strike at two Shell Oil installations in Pasadena, Tex., and 1,000 members of an unaffiliated local oil-chemical union have been unable to get a satisfactory contract offer from Shell management at Norce, La.

THIS WAS THE SCENE outside the Shell Oil Co. refinery at Wood River, Ill., last August after Operating Engineers, Machinists and 11 other unions struck against company demands for "management rights" contract modifications that would have sharply reduced job protections. The marathon 168-day walkout ended Feb. 5 with a 5 percent wage increase.

Minimum Craft Wages Set in ILGWU Pact

New York—A wage increase of 12.5 percent and the establishment of craft minimums are principal features of a new two-year national contract negotiated between the Ladies' Garment Workers and Bobbie Brooks, Inc., the country's largest manufacturer of women's sportswear.

The agreement, announced by ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky, was subject to ratification by the union's 3,000 members in Bobbie Brooks' 10 shops scattered through Pennsylvania, Ohio, Missouri and Arkansas.

The contract when put into effect will cover an additional 4,000 workers who are employed at all branches of the trade in about 40 outside shops working for the firm.

Dubinsky said the agreement represents "significant advances, particularly because of the establishment of craft minimums and the add-in feature of the wage increase."

"The fact that we reached it without a strike reflects a good deal of credit on the Bobbie Brooks management," he added.

Another feature of "major importance," the union said, is a provision that before Bobbie Brooks buys any additional outside shops the company must negotiate with the ILGWU on the labor standards to prevail in them.

A union proposal that the agreement be administered by an impartial outside chairman to adjudicate disputes is still being negotiated and Dubinsky said the union expected the issue would be "resolved in a satisfactory way in the near future."

The wage increase is divided into two parts—7.5 percent retroactive to last Jan. 1 and the additional 5 percent to become effective in September. It will be paid to piece-work employes by an addition to previous earnings.

Vacation and holiday provisions of the previous contract were improved.

N. J. Labor Fights Medical Fee Bills

Newark, N. J.—State AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. Charles H. Marciante has urged the New Jersey Legislature to defeat a series of bills sponsored by the state's Blue Cross-Blue Shield.

In a letter to all legislators, Marciante strongly opposed authority for Blue Cross to base its group charges on a limited "experience rating system."

"If enacted," he said, "this system would deprive Blue Cross-Blue Shield of their basic character so that those most in need of protection would be charged most for protection."

He also criticized a bill which would enable Blue Cross-Blue Shield to recover the cost of hospital and medical services when the patient receives a settlement from an accident or injury caused by another person's negligence.

Cooperative Organizing Drives Planned by Industrial Union Dept.

The AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. has announced plans for cooperative organizing campaigns in five geographical areas and four industrial groupings.

Auto Workers' Pres. Walter P. Reuther, head of the IUD, told a press conference the aim of the drive —with a projected budget of $4 million over the next 18 months—is to help the labor movement move on the organizational front.

The area targets are Greater Boston, Greater Chicago, Greater Philadelphia, South Carolina and Houston-Dallas-Fort Worth.

The industrial targets are furniture, wood and related industries; office, technical, professional and public employes; textile and duPont.

Reuther pointed out the multi-union approach to organizing an area is now being applied by the AFL-CIO in Los Angeles. He said the IUD hopes it becomes successful and is applied elsewhere.

Of the $4 million budget, $1 million has been pledged by the Auto Workers and $1 million will come from the IUD. The remaining $2 million will come from participating unions in amounts "commensurate with their resources," the IUD said.

The drive was okayed by the IUD executive board last December and a detailed program prepared by Reuther was approved by the IUD executive committee in mid-January.

A series of meetings was scheduled to implement the program in each area. The IUD organizational operating committee is scheduled to meet in Washington, D. C., on Feb. 13 and the industry organizing committees were scheduled for the week of Feb. 18 in Miami, where the AFL-CIO Executive Council is to hold its winter session.

"Area projects," said the IUD announcement, "will embrace the concept of cooperation and coordination outlined by the AFL-CIO in its Los Angeles project. The IUD will supply a coordinator who will be in charge of each area project and participating affiliates will supply the necessary organizers. Refusal of any IUD affiliate to participate will not deny the right of other affiliates to advance any coordinated drive."

27 Films Added To AFL-CIO List

Twenty-seven new films which have been added to the AFL-CIO Film Library in recent months are listed in a supplement to the AFL-CIO film catalogue, Films for Labor.

They include "Superfluous People," a documentary on urban poverty, and the Columbia Broadcasting System documentary, "The Other Face of Dixie," a report on school integration in the South. Subjects of other films include union history, the Peace Corps, school drop-outs, automation and unemployment.

Single copies of the supplement are available without charge from the AFL-CIO Pamphlet Division, 815 Sixtenth Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C. They are not available in quantity.

Teamsters 'Voice' Unit Gets AFL-CIO Charter

Philadelphia—More than 800 members of the Voice of the Teamsters overcame the effects of the Philadelphia Transit Co. strike and icy streets to cheer AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne's presentation of an AFL-CIO federal labor union charter to employes of the Smith Transfer Co.

The Smith truckers, a group of about 35, represented the first Philadelphia Teamsters to break away successfully from IBT Local 107 and win a National Labor Relations Board election. They are now members of AFL-CIO Local Union 3032.

Recalling Teamster claims that they would never win AFL-CIO affiliation, a leader of the new local union held the charter over his head and called upon IBT Pres. James R. Hoffa to "read it and weep!"

Beirne told the packed meeting that he hoped the new AFL-CIO charter would be followed by "many, many more." He warned:

"Hoffa will try to beat you with fear. He will tell you that you will lose benefits if you leave the Teamsters. He may try to use muscle to keep you in line. But, he is the one who is really afraid.

"Every group of workers that has left the Teamsters and rejoined the AFL-CIO has won better wages, better working conditions, and better fringe benefits."

The meeting also hailed the NLRB regional director's order that a second election be held for some 8,200 truck drivers employed by companies belonging to Motor Transport Labor Relations. A November election, narrowly won by the Teamsters, was ordered set aside by the board official when he upheld charges of violence by Teamsters against Voice members.

Beirne noted that the Voice group received 47 percent of the votes in the first election and predicted defeat of the Teamsters when the second election is held.

3d Straight Election Won By AFGE

New York—The Government Employes scored a 4-1 victory in a representation election at the Social Security Payments Center here, winning exclusive bargaining rights for all non-supervisory employes.

With 93 percent of eligible employes voting, AFGE Lodge 1760 received 950 of the 1,146 ballots cast.

It was the third big win in a row for the AFGE at a major social security office. Last month the union won votes at the Chicago office by a 911-125 margin and in Philadelphia by a 797-264 vote.

The New York unit, which petitioned for the election with only 300 of the 1,200 employes as members, put on an intensive pre-election drive, emphasizing personal contact with every eligible employe.

Contract negotiations, possible for the first time under Pres. Kennedy's union recognition order, will get under way shortly at all three offices.

Attack on America

THE FISTFUL of anti-union proposals dropped in the congressional hopper this year ostensibly designed to "curb the power" of labor in reality are proposals that would impair the nation's strength and vitality.

Free, strong, democratic trade unions are part of the fabric of American society. Our modern political and economic democracy cannot function effectively without a strong and responsible labor movement. To weaken or cripple unions is to attack one of the basic sources of America's strength.

The sponsors of the anti-union bills, however, are not concerned so much with the public interest and the nation's strength and viability but with insuring unilateral power and dictatorial decision-making to that segment of management that seeks to impose its will on its workers and the country.

The same groups that are sponsoring and urging passage of the anti-union measures by and large have been and are now opposed to every progressive step to meet the nation's economic needs, its social welfare needs, its civil rights crisis.

In a period when all groups in the nation are drawing closer together to serve the public interest and the common good, the ultra-conservatives are fomenting a new type of class warfare.

Their proposals strike not only at the unions but at the national welfare and America's role as a leader of the free world.

The Grip of Joblessness

THE GOVERNMENT'S latest report on unemployment underscores dramatically the continuing and unyielding grip of joblessness on the nation's economy.

From January 1962 to January 1963 there has been no change in either the rate of unemployment or the actual number of unemployed. In January 1962 the economy was emerging from the worst of the 1960-61 recession. Twelve months later there was no recession, but a tapering off of the recovery period into a sideways movement.

On the basis of the Administration's budget and economic outlook, the current rate of unemployment will persist throughout 1963 with some indications that it may move even higher.

This is a time, then, not only for new, bold economic thinking which characterizes the Administration's fiscal policy approach but an equally forceful program that will put the unemployed back to work. Otherwise in January 1964 we may well be at about the same place, in terms of unemployment, as in January 1963.

Wanted: More of the Same

IT WAS ENTIRELY predictable that the increase in the minimum wage and the expansion of coverage that went into effect in September 1961 would, in the words of Labor Sec. Wirtz bring "substantial benefits to low paid workers" and have "beneficial effects in the communities in which they work."

The secretary's report lays the basis for a new attack on low-wage poverty in the United States by expanding the coverage of the wage-hour law to millions of workers still unprotected by a wage floor and an hours ceiling.

The public interest is very much at stake here, for an increase in purchasing power in the low income brackets will have a decided stimulus on the economy as well as providing a step-up toward a decent living standard for all Americans.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, February 9, 1963 No. 6

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Holding Up the Job

On Golden Anniversary:

Meany Sees Labor Dept. Goal To End Poverty, Unemployment

The following editorial, "To Abolish Poverty and Unemployment," by George Meany appears in the February 1963 issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist.

OBVIOUSLY the trade union movement stands at the head of the line in congratulating the U.S. Dept. of Labor on its 50th anniversary. Although as an agency of government the department properly represents all the people, it also serves as a special two-way avenue of communication between the government and the nation's workers.

Half a century ago, both the labor movement and the Labor Dept. were small. We have, in that sense, grown up together. I am sure we share the conviction that we should both be larger. Certainly it is inevitable that we will be more involved with each other in the future than in the past.

The golden anniversary of the Labor Dept. coincides with a most crucial period in American economic life. Sweeping changes are now under way—changes that affect workers first but which will profoundly influence the future of everyone. Therefore it is appropriate to examine these changes briefly and to see what can and should be done to adapt to them.

Let us begin with the changes in the labor movement. Fifty years ago, unions operated almost entirely on a local basis. Small unions dealt with small local employers. The big employers, with a few exceptions, brushed aside with ease the efforts of their workers to organize. By today's standards the labor movement was not a significant force on the national scene, economically or politically.

For the benefit of non-union readers it should be noted that union activity is still basically local. The lifeblood of any union is what it does to safeguard each individual worker in his own place of employment—the day-by-day effort to ensure fair treatment for each employe in all aspects of his working life. This is a part of the labor movement that the public does not see, but it is the fountainhead of all the rest.

However, in recent decades something has been added to these local operations. The big employers, the giant industries, have been brought under union contract. The labor movement operates in a new dimension. Collective bargaining agreements with key industries or huge, nationwide corporations tend to set patterns for millions of workers not directly involved. And on those occasions when there is a failure to agree—those infrequent occasions when a major strike takes place—the impact is apt to be severe.

THESE CHANGES in themselves caused few problems for the country despite the dismay of labor's enemies. On the contrary, the labor movement's ability to raise the general level of wages, to establish such safeguards as welfare and pension programs and to exert a progressive influence in the legslative halls was indispensable to the general prosperity of the postwar period.

But in recent years there have been other, more ominous changes. The advance of automation and allied technological developments has proceeded from a crawl to a trot to a gallop. Combined with a flabby economy and a soaring population, it has produced an ever-increasing backlog of unemployment and the wholesale destruction of jobs.

While unions are still primarily concerned with raising the living standards of their members, they are today confronted with the basic problem of economic survival for these members. But employers care less about wages than about cutting wage-earners from the payroll. This is a fundamental collision that is not subject to settlement by test of strength or by the art of compromise as we have known them in the past. It requires genuine, close and wholehearted cooperation by labor, management and government on a scale not previously acceptable to any of them.

Neither mediation, arbitration nor legislation will prevent disputes over the elimination of jobs until there are enough jobs to go around. Retraining cannot be a solution until there is work for the trained. It is true, of course, that there must be better on-the-scene terms for the victims of technological change, including retraining allowances, severance pay, relocation rights and all the rest. But until every American worker can reasonably assume that a job at decent wages is available to him, these other devices do little more than redistribute hardship.

We need labor-management-government cooperation to eliminate poverty and unemployment. That is the objective of the AFL-CIO and we hope it is the objective to which the Dept. of Labor, as it begins its second half-century, will devote its accumulated knowledge, experience and skill.

Morgan Says:

With Insufferable Pride, There Goeth a Partial Comeuppance

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

WITH UNCONCEALED and insufferable pride, linked with astonishment, this correspondent finds himself telling his friends that he has written a book. Actually it would be more precise to say that this program has written it because the volume is basically a collection of my commentaries aired on this broadcast since it began more than eight years ago. The publisher, a daring if not downright reckless fellow named Robert B. Luce, has chosen to call the book "Clearing the Air," though I confess that in reading the galley proofs with the clarity of hindsight it occurred to me a more appropriate title might have been "Clouding the Atmosphere."

Morgan

Be that as it may, I now realize, having brought the subject up, that it may be considered bad taste, if not objectionably brassy, to mention publicly that some of my electronic opinions have been converted to print. In attempt to minimize undoubtedly substantial grounds for the accusation that this essay is little more than a marathon commercial for a home-made product, I propose the flimsy dodge of talking not about the book so much as about its effect on the author.

I feel like a father; maybe even like a mother. I had no idea of the birth pains such an enterprise involved, even one in which I did not have to start completely from scratch. Writing, journalistic writing, is the only craft I know. It is rewarding but for me it has always been the hardest possible kind of work. I grunt and stew and bite my nails and sneak out to the water cooler for a drink. I invent all sorts of diversions and distractions and urgent prior commitments in order to delay coming actually to grips with the tauntingly virginal sheet of blank paper in the typewriter.

But the most surprising experience of all in this book-doing assignment was the difficulty, indeed for a time the utter impossibility of writing about myself. This was not out of shyness. The development of my ego has not been neglected and as a matter of fact I once considered that that plus an interesting contrapuntal tendency I have toward brooding introspection perhaps made me the most promising autobiographical novelist yet undiscovered.

That illusion was shattered, however, when I became completely stymied in trying to construct the prologue to "Clearing the Air." Finally in desperation I had to flee to Bob Luce, who also stalwartly served as my editor, and ask him the way through this rhetorical roadblock.

"Look," he said, after examining my miserable efforts, "this is not an epic. You are not Thomas Wolfe, James Joyce or Ernest Hemingway. Just don't fight it and write it down as it comes." I cannot honestly report that my mental block then blew like the cork out of a champagne bottle but my pretentiousness had been cracked and gradually the job was done.

ACTUALLY THE EXPERIENCE set me to thinking about one of the occupational diseases of journalism, to which Washington correspondents are particularly vulnerable, namely a pretentiousness and presumptousness with facts. This malady's most easily identifiable symptom is a rash, commonly refered to as cocksureness or knowing all the answers.

So in a mood of contrition I went on to confess the point in "Clearing the Air" that one of the things that bothers me most about my job in this world capital "is how little I know about matters of vast importance and how my knoweldge continues to shrink as these matters become more and more technical and complicated . . ."

". . . I would love to be the pundit who expertly culls the black from the white, the right from the wrong, the hero from the villian, and the wheat from the chaff but (I wrote) I am not so decisively equipped."

Now, however, I must warn myself and others that, like a confession obtained by the police in the precinct station before the suspect is brought to trial, that document of self-effacement may be repudiated if things continue as they have been developing since the book came out.

Now I know why senators and representatives have their remarks extended and preserved for posterity in the Congressional Record. It isn't entirely that they are allowed to do this at the taxpayer's expense. There is something so permanent and authoritative about the printed word. Broadcasts are floated on the ether and soon (happily for all concerned in most cases, no doubt) disappear in thin air. But words tucked between book covers are tangibly, palpably there.

Through this tangibility the author is transmuted with a feeling of status. He is asked to sign his autograph on the flyleaf. Press agents with an eye on the sales charts elaborately arrange to have his opinions asked on broadcast panel shows and before luncheon clubs and seminars. First thing the author knows he is signing his name with the flourish John Hancock used to endorse the Declaration of Independence and he is intoning his views with the pompous profundity of a politican running for office.

I must report, however, that I have already had a partial comeuppance. One experienced editor in the literary world who read an advance copy of "Clearing the Air" wrote me to say he sincerely liked it and would I consider doing another book, possibly, he suggested, a novel.

Washington Reports:

Cut in Federal Spending Seen 'Nullifying' Reduction in Taxes

THE GOVERNMENT would be nullifying the effect of a tax cut if it sharply reduced expenditures," Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program broadcast by more than 500 radio stations.

"I say that," the Senate majority whip continued, "because the expenditures that the federal government makes are a part of the total spending of the nation and the tax cut is based on the theory of releasing spending for consumers to increase production and provide for new jobs. If you reduce government expenditures by, let's say, $5 billion, and cut taxes $6 billion, what you've really done is just release $1 billion of spending—that's all."

Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (R-Calif.), the minority whip, said on the same program that health insurance for the aged this year "stands a far better chance."

"I believe the American people have begun to realize that elderly citizens who are not paupers, who are not indigents, who are living in retirement, have facing them the growing hazard of catastrophic costs for catastrophic illnesses," Kuchel observed.

Humphrey expressed hope for enactment of the tax cut not later than August, retroactive to Jan. 1 or July 1.

HE SAID Pres. Kennedy faces a major education job in winning supporters to the tax bill "because there will be big deficits for a couple of years," a prospect he described as a necessary and calculated risk.

Kuchel said he hoped that at least those sections of the eduction bill providing federal aid for impacted areas and for classroom construction would be enacted.

Identifying his position with that of the late Sen. Robert A. Taft (R-O.), the minority whip asserted:

"Education in America is a national problem when we have half-day schools, children going to school in Quonset huts. That endangers the future of this country."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

AMONG THE SAD ELEMENTS in the southern Democratic victory in the Senate's filibuster fight is the demonstration, once more, that one of the ablest senators of his generation, Richard Russell of Georgia, has felt compelled to waste his great talents and energies in this most fruitless of defensive operations.

Russell came to the Senate in January 1933—30 years ago—and is second only to Sen. Hayden of Arizona in seniority. He is heir apparent to Hayden as president pro tem. His qualities of intellect, his mastery of Senate processes and precedents, his personal charm, have not been surpassed by those of any senator he has served with.

He is individually cherished and genuinely respected in a body that has a very high level of talent. The Armed Services Committee over which he presides has been trusted unhesitatingly by presdents of both parties and by members of Congress of both parties.

In the normal course of events—other things being equal—there is no limit to the services to which Russell might have aspired. The vice presidential Democratic candidates in the past four elections have come from the southern or border states—Sen. Barkley of Kentucky, Sen. Sparkman of Alabama, Sen. Kefauver of Tennessee, Sen. Johnson of Texas. But the call never comes for Russell.

For Russell serves—and has served for 15 years—as permanent captain-general of the southern forces when they conduct their masterful defenses against the recurrent drive for stronger civil rights legislation. He becomes, for the duration, the real leader of the Senate, the dominating figure. And for what purpose? Viewed in its end result, to keep down the Negro, to perpetuate 20 million or so fellow-Americans in educational, social and economic disadvantage.

* * *

ONE MAY BE SURE that this is not Russell's private and personal desire. And the argument is not stated in these terms on the Senate floor.

But there is no merit to the claim that those who seek stronger rules to end filibusters are actually seeking to "gag" the Senate generally, to break its long tradition of free and open debate and lengthy examination. It is an honorable tradition of great value to the nation; the Senate, indeed, stands to many of us as the most distinguished legislative chamber in the world.

The slight modification of the filibuster rules sought in recent years would do no violence to this. There would still be weeks for full debate of the issues presented in civil rights bills.

What is involved, really, is the ancient political pride and prejudice in which some sections of the South are still trapped—the doctrine that a democratic government's moves to strengthen the protection of civil rights for all citizens must be resisted to "save southern society." It is a doctrine that "we're not going to have the federal government coming down here and telling us what to do."

* * *

AND THIS IS THE TRAP that holds Russell fast, along with too many other southern senators. The ethos of the sectional political society evokes speeches designed to prevent federal action to help raise Negroes to full citizenship rights—although in their hearts most of the speakers have full sympathy for the objective, and consider it both desirable and inevitable.

There is no real political advantage in the South, any more, in demagoguing about white "supremacy" in a loudmouthed and overt manner. The younger senators as they come up show no desire to be known as white supremacists. Sen. Herman Talmadge of Georgia in his six-year first term was practically mute on civil rights except for the formal filibuster speeches.

Still, when the occasion arises and the war gong sounds, the southerners go into the familiar defensive exercise, and the Senate as a whole acts out the play as solemnly as if preservation of Rule 22 in its present form was the rock of salvation. And in three decades, Russell's career has led him to automatic leadership in this farce. The creative capacities he revealed at other moments have been sacrificed to this deadend and unworthy cause.

SEN. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, majority whip of the Senate (left) predicted passage of a tax cut by August, and Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel, minority whip, foresaw improved chances this year for enactment of health insurance for the aged as they were interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

New Warning Sounded Against Entrapment by Referral Plans

By Sidney Margolius

WAGE-EARNING FAMILIES all over the country have been and still are being trapped by referral plans into buying many types of merchandise despite repeated warnings in labor and co-op papers. Not all the might of the United States government seems able to stop it, so you will have to defend yourself.

"Referral selling" is a plan used by house-to-house salesmen and other dealers promising you bonuses on your own purchase if you supply names of prospects. We were startled enough by the many families who bought vacuum cleaner outfits for $220 on this basis. But now we have just come across "built-in" vacuum cleaners sold for as much as $1,000 on a referral plan.

Mr. & Mrs. G. W., of Columbus, O., first got a letter from a close friend saying that a man would call to make an appointment "to tell us about a wonderful deal." He did, and explained that for every 20 names, Mr. and Mrs. W. would receive $300 plus $100 for each prospect that actually purchased a "built-in" vacuum.

The salesman wrote up the contract and the cleaner was installed the next day. (Notice how quickly he worked.) Mrs. W. later turned over not 20, but 60 names. She heard nothing more until, several weeks later, she got a letter from a local bank enclosing a payment book and notifying her that her first payment was due.

She called the vacuum cleaner company but was told the salesman was working in another state and the company did not know where he could be reached.

Now the bank has notified Mr. and Mrs. W. that they owe almost $1,000 and that Mr. W's wages and their home both will be attached if payments are not forthcoming.

As this department previously warned, referral plan sellers often have no intention of paying bonuses at all, or sometimes pay only a few bonuses which they use as examples to persuade others to sign contracts.

Meanwhile, whether you earn any bonuses or not, you have signed a sales contract and must continue to pay. Under the weak laws in most states, you would have to prove that you were fraudulently led into signing the contract, and it is hard to prove fraud in the case of oral statements.

Thus, it is most important that any contract you sign for any purchase include a written statement of the oral representations made to you. A recently-enacted California law now even requires that salesmen include in their contracts any promises made to pay bonuses for prospects.

HOWEVER, EVEN THIS slim bit of protection is hard to enforce by anyone but the buyer himself, and may prove illusory. In fact, the salesman may write into the contract that bonuses will be paid on sales made to your prospects, but indicate to you orally that bonuses will be paid merely for a list of names.

Families like Mr. and Mrs. W. who already have been caught might follow the lead of a group of homeowners in Clearwater, Fla. Since legal action to prove fraud is usually prohibitively expensive for an individual family, 24 families in Clearwater banded together to sue an Atlanta carpet company which had promised $60 for each name of a prospective buyer plus $40 for each prospect that actually bought carpeting. These homeowners all had given mortgages to have carpeting installed and were in danger of losing their homes if they didn't pay. They also sued the finance companies which had taken over the sales contracts.

But we recommend not buying any item sold on a referral plan. Even if the plan really intends to pay bonuses, then the item itself must be overpriced to include the cost of the bonuses.

Besides vacuum cleaners, rugs and carpets, referral plans also have been used most frequently to sell garbage disposers, home fire-alarm systems and various home repairs. In the home repair area, the twist often used is to tell you that the new roof or other improvement you are buying will be used as a model. You are promised both a lower price than usual, and commissions on sales made as the result of showing the work done on your house.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

From Soup to Nonsense:

How-did-We-Ever-Get-into-This Way of Life Is Universal, Honey

By Jane Goodsell

I AM CONTINUALLY astonished at the way things happen in our household. Do other families, I wonder, undertake major projects carefully and analytically? Do they lay step-by-step plans, and figure things out methodically with paper and pencil?

Or do they, like us, inch themselves into situations without realizing what they're doing, and end up wringing their hands and asking themselves, "How did we ever get into this?"

It all began when Katie asked for a new bookcase for her birthday. It seemed a simple enough request. It was true, as she pointed out, that her old bookcase was too small to hold her books, which were slopping around on the floor and windowsills.

The trouble was that Katie's room wasn't big enough for a larger bookcase unless we moved out the extra bed. Still, we wanted an extra bed somewhere upstairs, so we decided to move it into Ann's room, which is larger. This wouldn't work, though, unless we moved Ann's long, low bureau into Molly's room, and moved Molly's two smaller bureaus into Ann's room.

Luckily, everything fit nicely. The only drawback was that all the furniture was now the wrong color. So I painted Ann's bureau pink to match Molly's room, and I painted Molly's bureaus white to match Ann's room. Then Katie's old bookcase, which was aqua, had to be painted pink for Molly.

Katie's twin bedspreads, which were yellow, didn't look right in Ann's room so I bought new ones.

THE NEW BEDSPREADS and newly painted furniture looked lovely, but they made the walls look dingy by contrast. So we called in painters to repaint the children's bedrooms, and I made new curtains because the old ones looked faded against the nice, fresh walls.

Since the painters were there and our bedroom really needed painting, too, we had them do our room and the upstairs hall. Then, since everything else upstairs was fresh and clean, it seemed a shame not to do something about the dingy woodwork in the bathroom. But, if we were going to paint the bathroom, we might as well replace the bathtub, which was badly chipped.

Of course, this necessitated new flooring, and the new floor was so pretty that it made the old light fixture look terrible so . . .

What Katie really wanted for her birthday was a horse, but we told her that a horse was too expensive and we couldn't afford it.

As it turned out, a horse would have been a lot cheaper than that bookcase.

Central Bodies Urged To Back Library Week

Workers need to read more books to keep pace with technological changes and to be better citizens, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany believes.

This was the crux of a letter Meany sent to more than 700 AFL-CIO local central bodies, urging them to take part in National Library Week, Apr. 21-27, and to establish a year-round relationship with their local libraries.

"Libraries are not only for scholars," Meany wrote. "The intelligent worker wants to improve his skills and keep abreast of the rapidly-changing technology which affects his job. He will find few sources of greater benefit than the public library. There he will also find books which can help him better understand the issues of the world in which he lives . . . and to help him make the most of his leisure and recreational hours."

In Britain as in U.S.A.:

Social Pattern Shifts Altering Workforce

SINCE THE END OF WORLD WAR II broad shifts in social patterns have been taking place in Britain. Responding to the pressures of technological progress and advanced methods of business and industrial organization, the steadily expanding workforce—a characteristic of Britain's economy in postwar years—has undergone widespread redeployment.

Both manual wage earners—blue collar workers—and nonmanual earners—white collar workers—have shared in the general job expansion. But the emphasis has been on the white collar sector, which has expanded at a much faster rate than the blue collar sector, the British Trades Union Congress has reported.

A recent survey of social changes prepared as a background paper for the government reported that whereas the number of wage earners in manufacturing industries had increased by only 2 percent between 1951 and 1960, the number of salary earners had increased by 34 percent. In civil employment as a whole, white collar jobs in 1951 accounted for a little more than a quarter of the total; 10 years later they accounted for more than a third.

This changing pattern of employment has many implications for many people, not least for the trade unions. The active strength of British trade unionism has, for a variety of historical reasons, always rested strongly on manual workers—particularly those in coal mining, cotton textiles and railway transport. It is these industries with long traditions of union activity and high densities of union membership which are shrinking.

On the other hand white collar occupations, where trade unionism is less well-established, are growing and many of the expanding industries, such as retail and wholesale distribution and chemicals, contain a high proportion of marginal white collar workers and white coated technicians. If the trade union movement as a whole is to maintain its present status and degree of influence, it must therefore develop its strength among the white collar occupations.

This fact has not been overlooked by the trade unions. They are trying to recruit more white collar members, and already there is evidence of success. In the postwar years the membership of the nonmanual unions affiliated to the TUC has grown more rapidly than that of other unions, and there are now some 1.5 million white collar workers among the TUC's affiliated membership of 8.2 million.

The details of its expansion are given in a report to the annual TUC conference of nonmanual unions. Recording membership movements between 1950 and 1961, the report drew attention to "some remarkable feats of organization." The Association of Supervisory Staffs, Executives & Technicians, for example, registered a membership gain of nearly 129 percent while both the Clerical Workers' and Bank Employes' unions almost doubled their memberships.

But this progress in recruiting nonmanual workers is generally regarded by trade unionists as only a start. They recognize that if white collar trade unionism is to match the growing importance of nonmanual workers in the labor force the pace of recruiting must be accelerated.

The TUC is very conscious of the fact that if white collar workers are to be attracted to unions, and if their unions are to play a role among TUC affiliates, the TUC must pay sufficient attention to their special occupational problems. This, in turn, will mean that the attitude of the TUC itself will, to an increasing extent, reflect the growing importance of white collar trade unionism.

It was this fact which TUC Gen. Sec. George Woodcock had in mind when he recently told representatives of white collar workers that their experiences and difficulties would assist the TUC in formulating effective general policies representative of the interests of all workers, whatever their craft or status. In the future, he added, the TUC would look to the white collar unions to play an increasing part in the formulation of this general policy.

At the moment, the TUC is embarking on a detailed study of the role of trade unionism in modern society and the organizational form best suited to that role. The final report on this study is certain to give full regard to the implications of Britain's white collar revolution.

PRES. ROMULO BETANCOURT of Venezuela greets the AFL-CIO delegation at the presidential palace in Caracas and describes his country's battle to preserve democratic government and independence from the all-out Communist attack. Betancourt, responding to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's pledge of continued support by American labor, told the delegation that on his trip to the U.S. in February the AFL-CIO would be the second stop—after the White House. Jesse Friedman, AFL-CIO inter-American representative, standing (left), served as interpreter.

A MURAL depicting the struggles of the construction workers dominates the union's headquarters in Merida, a 400-year-old city sitting 6,000 feet up in the Andes Mountains. American labor films are shown every week by the USIA.

Venezuela: Battlefield for Democracy

COMPARING LABOR problems at headquarters of the Confederation of Venezuelan Workers (CTV) in Caracas are (from left) Joseph F. Monahan of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, CTV Pres. Jose Gonzalez Navarro, and Pres. Thomas J. Lloyd of the Meat Cutters.

PROBLEMS of farm workers were heard at Maracay with Juan Fernandez (standing, white shirt), secretary-general of farm workers union, explaining them to Pres. Daniel E. Conway, American Bakery & Confectionery Workers (seated left), and Pres. L. M. Raftery of Painters (standing, second from right). Friedman is interpreting.

GOVERNMENT DEVELOPMENT program is in operation to aid the once poverty-stricken island of Marguerita, 25 miles off the mainland, populated by a nomadic Indian fishing tribe. The oyster and claim beds and pearling and tourism are being developed.

THE FUTURE of Marguerita is discussed by Ramon Borras Gomez, governor of the island, with Raftery and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Emil Rieve. The delegation visited Venezuela under the auspices of Circleven, a government and CTV supported tourist agency.

A FIRST-HAND LOOK at how Venezuelan unionists live was provided in Merida. Here Pres. Bernardo Aranguren (white jacket) of the construction workers in the state introduces his mother.

INSPECTING THE UNDERSIDES of an ore car is Frank L. Noakes, secretary-treasurer of the Maintenance of Way Employes, at Puerto Ordaz, the site of the U.S. Steel Co. crushing plants. The ore is brought to Puerto Ordaz from the minerals-rich Venezuelan mountains, 90 miles away.

Boost in Jobless Seen If Tax Cut Is Delayed

The unemployment situation will "worsen and deteriorate" in 1963 unless the Administration's tax program is given greater economic impact this year and is supplemented with other government programs to ease joblessness, AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger declared.

Appearing on the AFL-CIO Public Affairs program, Labor News Conference, Goldfinger urged extension of the $900 million public works program, passage of improved unemployment insurance legislation and extension of the minimum wage law.

In the program, broadcast over Mutual Broadcasting System, Goldfinger stressed that the "primary emphasis" in solving the problem of high, persistent unemployment "must be on fiscal and monetary policy . . . government tax policy, expenditure policy and money policy."

The Administration tax program, he said, will have little impact in 1963. He recalled that AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had urged Pres. Kennedy to back a tax cut of $10 billion this year retroactive to Jan. 1, 1963.

Queried by Edward Woods, Washington correspondent for the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and Hobart Rowen, labor and economics reporter for Newsweek Magazine, Goldfinger said the AFL-CIO does not regard a shorter workweek as "the ideal solution or panacea for the problem of unemployment" but maintains it "would create some additional jobs and, to this extent, it would be a step in the right direction."

Lack of Demand

The primary reason for the high level of unemployment, he emphasized, was "the lack of effective demand in the economy." Goldfinger reviewed the AFL-CIO's proposals since 1958 for effective tax cuts and other programs to drop the level of unemployment.

Commenting on the Kennedy Administration's economic policies, the AFL-CIO research director listed the measures taken by the Administration to alleviate unemployment, noting that it "has shown humane concern with the problems of the unemployed," but that until this year's tax and fiscal programs there has not been a major effort to attack the problem head-on.

On government expenditures, Goldfinger said the AFL-CIO will probably ask Congress to extend the public works program.

Canning Firm to Use UPWA Union Label

Owatonna, Minn.—Better contracts in the canning industry cannot be obtained "if we keep losing our markets to non-union products," Pres. Harley Randall of Packinghouse Workers Local 442 said as he signed an agreement under which the Owatonna Canning Co. will use the union label on its Festal brand goods, the firm's top quality line.

Wirtz Warns of Inaction:

5-Year Lag in Job Growth Shown in Labor Dept. Report

America's postwar job growth has slowed down to a walk in the last five years, according to a new manpower report issued by the Labor Dept.

The report pointed out that the postwar gains in non-farm employment, in the gross national product and in the real earnings of factory workers were concentrated in the first decade of the 15-year postwar period.

In the 1957-62 period, it said, these changes occurred:

- The rate of job growth in the private sector "slowed down appreciably." Private non-farm jobs rose by an average of 700,000 or 1.7 percent each year between 1947 and 1957; from 1957 to mid-1962, the annual rate of gain fell to 175,000 jobs or four-tenths of 1 percent.
- Structural changes made it more difficult to re-employ displaced workers. With the slowdown in job expansion, there was a speed-up in the longterm shift away from goods-producing jobs towards more services. The proportion of workers in goods-producing—agriculture, manufacturing, construction and mining—fell from 51 percent in 1947 to 46 percent in 1957 to 42 percent in 1962.
- The overall rates of economic growth and employment also dropped. The gross national product rose 45 percent in 1947-57 or 3.75 percent annually; in the past five years, the GNP totaled about 15 percent or 2.9 percent annually, reflecting a slowdown in goods and construction output.

Employment Worse Off

"An even greater slowdown in growth is reflected in employment," the report observed.

Between 1947 and mid-1962 workers on non-farm payrolls rose to 55.3 million, a gain of 11.4 million or 26 percent. Of this rise, 21 percentage points were registered in the first decade and only 5 points in the past five years. Thus the annual rate of nine-tenths of 1 percent of the last five years was only one-half the 1.9 percent annual rate of the 1947-57 period.

The report said these different rates of growth caused significant shifts in job distribution. With goods-producing industries slowing down or in decline, job rises continued in the service areas. Very rapid job growth took place in state and local governments as school systems expanded in response to population growth and the demand for a better educated workforce.

"The effect of recessions," the report declared, "is one important explanation for the decline in growth and the shift in industry pattern."

There were two recessions in the first 10-year period and two in the last five years. Each recession hit mainly the goods-producing industries; large numbers of production workers were laid off and job levels were never fully restored because of technological changes and the lack of gain in product demand.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz unveiled the manpower report along with his recent testimony before the Joint Economic Committee. He said that, in view of the experience of the past five years, "it is plain that the next five years will test our mettle more sternly."

Putting the problem in terms of jobs needed, Wirtz said the economy furnished 90 percent of the jobs needed simply to keep unemployment from rising above the 4.3 percent rate of 1957. It fell short by 1.1 million jobs—the increase in the unemployed in the past five years.

Between 1962 and 1967, he pointed out, the labor force will rise by an estimated 6.5 million and a very conservative productivity rise of 2.7 percent a year—the postwar average—will require another 9.6 million jobs. Thus 16.1 million new jobs are needed just to stay even.

Continuing at a 90 percent rate of efficiency in providing jobs—which also tends to keep housewives out of the labor market and causes older workers to retire earlier—would boost unemployment by another 1.6 million by 1967 to a total of 5.6 million, Wirtz warned.

"This would be the intolerable price of just moving along as we have been," he added in appealing for congressional passage of the Administration's tax program.

He said the human problem at issue also requires a better jobless pay system, a Youth Employment Opportunities Act and broader aid for workers caught up in the transition of changing industries, occupations and labor market areas.

Senate Rules Change Dies in Cloture Vote

(Continued from Page 1)

adjournment motion after declaring he did not consider the vote close enough to warrant another try at limiting debate.

Only a majority vote is required to change the Senate rules. A determined southern filibuster, however, kept the resolution to change the rules from coming before the body. The motion before the Senate after more than three weeks of debate was merely to consider the proposed rules change.

Southern opponents of civil rights have used the filibuster to prevent passage of a number of equal rights bills—most recently last year to defeat an Administration bill barring discriminatory literacy tests used to keep Negroes and other minority groups from voting.

At the start of the session, liberals favoring rules reform had tional claim that a majority of the Senate could proceed to a vote on rules at the start of a new Congress without being blocked by rules adopted during a preceding Congress.

Some supporters of a rules change joined opponents in disputing this claim, however, and the constitutional challenge was tabled by a 53-42 vote.

To demonstrate that the vote was not a majority rejection of a stronger cloture rule, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), a leader of the anti-filibuster drive, filed a petition signed by 50 senators pledging to support a change in the cloture rule "if given an opportunity to vote thereon." At the time he presented the petition several senators who had not signed took the floor to indicate that they, too, would vote for a rules change.

Before the decisive cloture vote, another attempt to indicate the desire of the Senate to vote on rules reform was rendered meaningless when the southern bloc joined supporters in defeating a motion to table—and thus kill—the issue.

The chief motion for a rules change would have lowered the requirements to invoke cloture from two-thirds to three-fifths of senators present and voting. A bipartisan group of liberals supported a rule requiring only a majority of the full Senate to limit debate, but they conceded they didn't have the votes to adopt majority cloture and said they would support the three-fifths plan.

Rail Officials Run Train on Struck Road

Jacksonville, Fla.—The Florida East Coast Railway moved its first freight train since 11 non-operating unions went on strike Jan. 23—but had to draft management officials for the job.

Operating employes ignored the railroad's summons to work, respecting picket lines set up by the "non-op" unions after months of negotiations found the railroad unwilling to grant the 10-cent-an-hour wage pattern agreed to by other railroads.

The striking unions voluntarily withdrew their pickets at New Smyrna Beach long enough to allow a carload of steel needed for a Cape Canaveral missile pad to be unloaded.

In another rail dispute, the Railway Clerks temporarily postponed a strike against the Southern Pacific to give the National Mediation Board a final opportunity to seek a settlement of a job security controversy. The union said its proposals are in line with recommendations made by a presidential emergency board last Dec. 31.

Asbestos Union Ex-Officer Dies

Medford, Mass.—John W. Hoff, international representative for the Asbestos Workers and formerly secretary-treasurer of the union, died at his home after a brief illness. He was 69.

A member of the union since he joined Boston Local 6 in 1912, he became secretary- treasurer in 1955 and served until his resignation in 1960. His appointment as an organizer followed, and he remained active until his fatal illness.

Members of the international executive board attended solemn requiem mass in Immaculate Conception Church, Malden, in a body and served as honorary pallbearers. Burial was in Malden. Surviving are the widow, Gertrude; two sons and a daughter.

Church Groups Urge New Effort To Wipe Out Segregation and Bias

Two major religious groups have called for renewed efforts to wipe out segregation and discrimination in messages prepared for Race Relations Sabbath, to be observed in synogogues on Feb. 9, and Race Relations Sunday, on Feb. 10.

The National Council of Churches is distributing a brochure containing a message by Dr. George D. Kelsey, professor of Christian ethics at Drew University, which brands racism as "diametrically opposed to the insights of Christian faith."

Action Proposed

The brochure also lists suggested social action programs through which church groups can "take more vigorous action to achieve genuine freedom for all people without regard to race or color to participate in all aspects of society."

A message distributed by the Central Conference of American Rabbis declares that the Negro, on the 100th anniversary of the Emancipation Proclamation, "should not be forced to wait for a Second Emancipation Proclamation to achieve his complete freedom."

The message adds:

"Nothing symbolized more clearly and more poignantly the slow pace of man's spiritual progress as compared to the swift rush of his technological advance than that day last October when Walter Schirra orbited in his space ship . . . while beneath him on a college campus ostensibly devoted to the intellectual and scientific disciplines which could make possible such a flight, James Meredith . . . made his way through a mob."

Congress Asked for New Labor Curbs

Outlawing of Industry Bargaining Sought in Anti-Union Proposals

(Continued from Page 1)

conspiracies in restraint of trade under the anti-trust laws."

The most familiar of the anti-labor bills—introduced again this year by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.)—would remove the anti-trust immunity of unions in the transportation industry or in areas affecting transportation in interstate commerce or between the United States and a foreign nation.

Union Unity Banned

McClellan's own analysis of the bill declares that it would make it "unlawful" for any union "acting in concert . . . with any other labor union, even if it is a sister local of the same national or international union," to participate in a strike in the transportation field or engage in picketing, boycotting or issuance of an "unfair list."

City and state central bodies also would be barred from issuing unfair lists and other such activities.

Violations could be punished by one year imprisonment and a $50,000 fine.

McClellan said his bill would also prevent the federal government from "preempting this field of law by providing specifically that the bill's provisions . . . shall be in addition to any other provisions and remedies in the same area which are available under any other federal law or under any state law."

Co-sponsors include Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, to which the measure has been referred. Other sponsors are Senators Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.), Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.), Wallace F. Bennett (R-Utah), A. Willis Robertson (D-Va.), Strom Thurmond (D-S.C.), Carl T. Curtis (R-Neb.), John Stennis (D-Miss.), and John G. Tower (R-Tex.).

The second McClellan bill, also with a bipartisan galaxy of conservative sponsors, would prohibit strikes in broadly-defined "strategic" defense facilities and authorize the Secretary of Defense to establish an emergency board to arbitrate the issues in dispute. It has been referred to the Senate's Labor & Public Welfare Committee.

Rapped by AFL-CIO

This bill was described in a resolution adopted by the 1961 AFL-CIO convention as "unwise and dangerous," a threat "to the American system of free enterprise and free labor."

The McClellan bills appear almost mild in comparison to another reintroduced bill currently being touted by the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

Sponsored by Rep. David T. Martin (R-Neb.), a member of the House Education & Labor Committee, it would place all unions—not just those in the transportation field—under the anti-trust laws. Specifically it would:

- Declare it U. S. policy "to limit the right of employes . . . to combine or conspire with employes of other employers in bargaining collectively."
- Prohibit a union representing workers at one plant from representing or attempting to represent employes of another company in the same industry. An exception would be allowed for other establishments in the same metropolitan area, provided that these do not add up to 25 percent or more of the industry.

As Ladd Plumley, CofC president, summarized it in a recent speech:

"This bill would require a different union for employes of each automobile company or each steel company . . . It would prohibit collusion between these different unions on wages and working conditions."

- Bar unions from imposing what the bill terms "any featherbedding practice," a provision which the CofC president said would prohibit "uneconomic union practices" including employment of men the employer considers "unnecessary" and the establishment of "production quotas."

Plumley expressed the hope that union leaders, on "sober examination" of the bill, would be convinced "that this is not a maneuver to destroy the house of labor."

Still another approach to curbing unions has been advanced by Goldwater.

In addition to co-sponsoring the two McClellan bills, the Arizona senator—top-ranking Republican on the Labor Committee—has introduced a double-edged attack on the union shop.

First, Goldwater would prohibit union shop agreements except where a state has specifically authorized the union shop through legislation. This, of course, is the reverse of the present Taft-Hartley Act provision permitting union shops unless state "right-to-work" laws forbid them.

Even if the state does permit a union shop, however, the provision would be severely limited by another section of the Goldwater bill, which in effect would prohibit a union having a union shop agreement from spending any funds "for purposes or activities other than collective bargaining."

Crippling Restrictions

If a single member of the unit should complain, for example, about the use of any portion of the union's funds for legislative or educational purposes, the union would be required to refund the entire amount of dues collected and could be enjoined against any further such expenditures, barred from using NLRB procedures and stripped of its income tax exemption.

In addition, the Goldwater bill would enable non-union employes to vote along with union members in a secret ballot referendum on whether the union should strike. Even if a strike is approved, non-union members may petition after 90 days for a vote on whether the strike should continue.

Variations of the latter provisions—some more stringent—are contained in bills introduced in the House by Representatives John J. Rhodes (R-Ariz.), O. C. Fisher (D-Tex.), and John M. Ashbrook (R-O.).

Of two bills aimed at barring strikes in the maritime industry, one has already been scheduled for hearings beginning Mar. 5 by the House Merchant Marine & Fisheries Committee.

The committee chairman, Rep. Herbert C. Bonner (D-N. C.), is the author of the bill which would apply to both licensed and unlicensed seamen, longshoremen and other pier employes, crews of tugs and barges, and marine pilots.

It would authorize the President, on receiving a report of a dispute affecting a "substantial part" of U. S. shipping, to appoint a maritime emergency board and impose an 80-day strike ban comparable to the Taft-Hartley provision. The board, however, could be authorized by the President to make public recommendations for settlement.

If mediation fails, the President would then be empowered to order compulsory arbitration.

Dirksen Joins Attack

Another bill, by Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.), would apply to "ocean-going carriers" and would allow either a union or employer to petition for compulsory arbitration to settle a dispute which "may lead to a strike or lockout."

The Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor and the President all become involved in the procedure which has, as a final step, establishment of a national maritime arbitration board. The Dirksen bill is before the Senate Labor Committee.

Before the House Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee is a measure by Rep. D. Mendel Rivers (D-S. C.) to bar jurisdictional strikes on airlines.

Through an amendment to the Railway Labor Act, it would authorize the President to appoint a jurisdictional disputes board to render a "final and binding" decision on disputes involving work jurisdictions or craft qualifications.

The drive to put labor under the anti-trust laws and make it an illegal "conspiracy" for unions to set common wage goals or represent workers of more than one company found its most succinct expression in a bill by Rep. James B. Utt (R-Calif.).

His bill would simply repeal outright the Clayton Act's exemption for unions and amend the Norris-LaGuardia Act to permit injunctions in anti-trust cases against labor. The effect would be to move the legislative clock back 50 years.

Anti-Trust Clamp 'Disastrous' to Labor

If anti-trust laws "meant to regulate the sale of mere commodities" were applied to unions, it would "take things back half a century and weaken labor disastrously," Commentator Howard K. Smith declared on his network telecast.

"It would be the highroad to desperate upheaval in America, and is wholly impractical," he said.

Smith said that unions, far from growing in power, have been weakened by automation which lessens the power to strike because so much work is "done by machinery." The basic cause of industrial unrest, he declared, "is the limping condition of our national economy. . . . If there was plenty of business and plenty of jobs, fear would not haunt either side."

LABOR SUPPORT for federal aid to medical schools and students was expressed in testimony before the House Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee. Committee Chairman Oren Harris, left, sponsor of the aid bill, discusses it with AFL-CIO Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair.

AFL-CIO Asks Passage Of Medical School Aid

Congress should enact "legislation now" to provide federal aid to medical schools and medical students "because there is a doctor shortage in America that is steadily getting worse," the AFL-CIO has declared.

"This problem is that simple and that urgent," federation spokesmen told the House Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee.

Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair, testifying for AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, strongly supported a bill authorizing a 10-year, $810 million program of construction grants and student loans. Also representing the federation was Lisbeth Bamberger, assistant director of the Dept. of Social Security.

The Administration-backed bill, sponsored by Committee Chairman Oren Harris (D-Ark.), won committee approval in the 87th Congress but then languished in a Rules Committee pigeonhole until adjournment.

The Harris bill would earmark $750 million for matching grants to construct teaching facilities for medical, dental and other health personnel.

It would allow some $60 million for loans to students, with a provision that 50 percent of the loan would be "forgiven" if the student on graduation works in a "shortage area," enters the U. S. Public Health Service or is employed by a public or non-profit private agency.

The AFL-CIO urged the committee to consider 100 percent "forgiveness" on loans to encourage graduates to enter fields where the need is great but the monetary rewards limited. It should also, the federation said, make it possible for "talented young people from the lower income groups" to obtain medical training.

Fair thanked the committee for calling the hearings so early in the session and expressed the hope that "the entire Congress will act with a sense of urgency" to get the program under way.

Continued Administration support for the bill was emphasized by Sec. of Health, Education & Welfare Anthony Celebrezze and U.S. Surgeon Gen. Luther L. Terry.

Pipe Fitters Unit Marks Affiliation

Chicago—Pipe Fitters Local 597, largest in the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters, will celebrate 50 years of affiliation with the international union at a meeting Mar. 5.

The organization, which has 8,500 members, was founded in 1885 as Local 2 of the Steam Fitters Protective Association.

Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, an AFL-CIO vice president, and the entire international executive board will participate in the celebration. About 185 members with 50 years and more of service to the local and the pipe fitting industry will be presented with testimonial plaques and emblems.

Burt Beck Named Editor of Advance

New York—Burt Beck, labor journalist and publicist, has been appointed editor of the Advance, offical publication of the Clothing Workers, and director of publicity for the union.

Beck, who formerly worked on daily newspapers in Philadelphia, succeeds Max Awner, who resigned several months ago.

New Era of Bargaining Demands Closer Cooperation, Says Meany

(Continued from Page 1)

the past. It requires genuine, close and wholehearted cooperation by labor, management and government on a scale not previously acceptable to any of them.

"Neither mediation, arbitration nor legislation will prevent disputes over the elimination of jobs until there are enough jobs to go around.

"We need labor-management-government cooperation to eliminate poverty and unemployment. That is the objective of the AFL-CIO, and we hope it is the objective to which the Dept. of Labor, as it begins its second-half-century, will devote its accumulated knowledge, experience and skill."

Wirtz's article is also devoted to past and current changes, both in the Labor Dept. and in the economy. In reviewing the history of the department, he says, "one becomes more convinced than ever that tomorrow belongs to those who face the fact of change, who go forward to meet it, who see it as an essential quality of growth."

Merely "adjusting" to change is not enough, he asserts, "for that would inevitably mean falling further and further behind until the forces of scientific and technological change which promise man's deliverance become rather the forces of his destruction . . ."

"We can and must do better in approaching the problems of technology," he says. "The real answer to the change that is upon us is that nothing will make sense unless we expand the economy to a point where there are another 4 million jobs. There is only one answer to unemployment and that is more jobs."

After Steady Decline:

Unemployment Up In Major Job Areas

After declining steadily since the worst of the 1961 recession, the number of the nation's major job areas with substantial unemployment swung upward in January.

The Labor Dept.'s monthly survey of the nation's 150 major labor market areas showed three areas were reclassified into the 6 percent or over jobless category, raising the total to 44 from December's 41.

In all, 10 areas reported unemployment high enough over the month before to reclassify them. The Labor Dept. said most of these changes "reflect the seasonal slowdown in employment which customarily occurs during the winter months."

The Labor Dept. also added that, despite the seasonal slowdowns in some sectors, most of the major job areas were experiencing "a generally favorable employment situation as the new year opened" and were anticipating modest job gains to spring.

The three areas added to the list of those suffering substantial unemployment were Worcester, Mass., Jersey City, N.J., and Utica-Rome, N.Y.

Three other areas—Fall River and New Bedford, Mass. and Duluth, Minn.-Superior, Wis.—were moved from the 6 to 8.9 percent jobless category to the 9 to 11.9 percent group.

Altoona, Pa., was reclassified into the highest jobless category, with 12 percent or more jobless.

Three areas—Des Moines, Ia., Rochester, N.Y., and Greensboro-High Point, N.C.—were moved from the low unemployment grouping into the moderate jobless group, with from 3 to 5.9 percent unemployment.

Low of 40

The major areas with substantial unemployment—that is, 6 percent or more jobless—reached an all-time high of 101 in the spring of 1961. The total moved downward steadily to 60 in the winter of 1961, edged up to 63 by March 1962 and fell to 40 in November 1962.

The rise to 44 in January puts the total where it was last September.

The total of 44 in January compares to 61 for January a year ago, 76 in January 1961 and 31 in January 1960.

The number of smaller areas of substantial unemployment also rose by three in Janaury to a total of 170. This group totaled 199 a year ago, 152 in January 1961 and 107 in January 1960.

AFL-CIO NATIONAL AUXILIARIES executive council is shown above during meeting in AFL-CIO headquarters conferring with Wesley Reedy, assistant to Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler. At Reedy's left is the Auxiliaries' president, Mrs. Beatrice Weiland, Clintonville, Wis. At his right are Mrs. Marcella Beatty, executive director, and Mrs. Elda Luebbert, secretary-treasurer.

Extended Jobless Aid Beneficial to 3 Million

The temporary extended jobless pay program proved its value by partially restoring wage loss and maintaining the self-respect of nearly 3 million workers, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz declared in releasing a study of the longterm unemployed.

The Labor Dept. report summarized the results of four surveys on the family characteristics and work experience of those receiving benefits under the Temporary Extended Unemployment Compensation Program. The program began Apr. 8, 1961, and expired June 30, 1962.

In all, the report noted, a total of 2.8 million claimants received TEUC benefits amounting to about $750 million.

The typical claimant, according to the report, was a man between 25 and 44 years of age who was the primary or sole breadwinner of his household and was a steady worker.

Wirtz said the report "underscores the value of the TEUC program in partially restoring wage loss and helping to maintain the self respect of close to 3 million wage earners."

"It was also instrumental in preventing substantial related unemployment through added national purchasing power," he added.

The 196-page report presented statistics derived from interviews with some 175,000 TEUC claimants in every state.

It showed that the worker who had exhausted his jobless insurance rights under his state program and went on to collect extended benefits was representative of workers generally in terms of age, sex, family, and industrial and occupational characteristics.

About three-quarters of all TEUC claimants had been in the labor force during the entire 36-month period prior to filing for extended benefits, and 94 percent had been in for at least two years of the three-year period, the report said.

About three-fifths of the claimants were men; two out of five were between 25 and 44 years of age; three-fifths were the primary or sole wage earner; about one-half had worked in manufacturing industries; 70 percent had worked in blue-collar occupations.

The number of claimants reached a weekly peak of 765,000 early in the program and tapered off to 245,000 at the April 1962 survey, just before the program expired.

Anti-Labor Texas Agency Faces Axe

Austin, Tex.—Gov. John Connally has asked the legislature to do something labor has urged for years—abolish the Texas Industrial Commission.

The governor said the commission doesn't fit in with his program of consolidation of state agencies and a new group he is setting up to attract industry to Texas.

The Texas State AFL-CIO says the commission has served as "an arm of the National Right to Work Committee" and in convention resolutions has denounced its activities as "anti-labor."

As a sample of the commission's anti-labor bias, the state AFL-CIO cites a brochure sent to out-of-state employers which boasts: "Texas labor laws truly give management a needed break."

The state's so-called "right-to-work" law leads a listing of restrictive labor legislation which is followed by a statement that other laws designed to appeal to employers "deal with such matters as unemployment compensation, child and female labor and health and safety."

Texas employers, the pamphlet declares, pay one of the lowest unemployment compensation taxes of any state and can tap a low-paid labor pool including "2 million Latin-Americans."

AFL-CIO Brief Urges High Court To Upset Curbs on Agency Shop

The AFL-CIO has asked the Supreme Court to overturn two lower-court decisions that would have the effect of outlawing or limiting the agency-shop contract as a form of union security.

In one case, the court was urged to overrule the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which held last June that an agency-shop clause was illegal under national labor policy embodied in the Taft-Hartley Act.

The National Labor Relations Board had previously held in a 4-1 decision that the General Motors Corp. was guilty of an unfair labor practice in refusing to bargain on an agency-shop clause with the Auto Workers. The appellate court set aside the NLRB order.

Florida Decision Hit

In the second case, the Supreme Court was asked to reverse the state courts of Florida in holding that the state's so-called "right-to-work" law, which prohibits a union shop under Sec. 14-B of the Taft-Hartley Act, also has the effect of legally prohibiting an agency-shop clause. The case involves the Retail Clerks and a Florida firm, Alberta Schermerhorn.

The cases have significance because of the growing use of agency-shop clauses as a substitute for the full union-shop contract. Under an agency shop, employes in the bargaining unit are not required to join the union, but non-members are required to pay a service fee to the union that negotiate contract benefits.

A survey by the Bureau of National Affairs disclosed that as of mid-1960 agency-shop clauses were included in 6 percent of contracts, "up from 1 percent" three years earlier. In recent aerospace negotiations, a U. S. government mediation panel suggested that agency-shop clauses be included as a substitute where management rejected the full union shop.

The AFL-CIO and the UAW intervened in the two pending cases jointly, requesting permission to file their brief as friend of the court.

Violates 'Common Sense'

The appellate court ruling in the GM-UAW case, the brief argued, violates "common sense" and the clear legislative intent of Congress in holding that the Taft-Hartley Act permits a full union shop as a matter of national labor policy but denies the lesser form of union security provision involved in the agency shop.

As a matter of public policy, the brief pointed out, the agency shop "has served over the years as a useful compromise" in disputes over union security, and cited cases to indicate that it "has sometimes served the interests of management."

The agency shop has long been upheld under both Taft-Hartley and Wagner Acts, the brief emphasized, and "every indication of congressional intent" supports its validity.

In the Florida case, the AFL-CIO and UAW argued that while the Taft-Hartley Act's Sec. 14-B allows states to prohibit the union shop its meaning goes no further.

An example was cited: A state may "delegate to a county the authority to prohibit rural speeds [of automobiles] of 50 miles an hour," but this would "not include the authority to prohibit . . . the lesser rate of 35 miles."

'Other Encroachments' Cited

Similarly, the court was urged, Sec. 14-B authorized the states to prohibit "compulsory membership" in unions but not the "mere obligation to pay non-discriminatory, nonexcessive fees" for representation in bargaining, in arbitration of grievances and similar union activities.

To hold otherwise, the court was told, would encourage the states to go further in attempting to prohibit union hiring halls and trying "other encroachments on federal labor policy."

The brief cited the late Sen. Robert A. Taft (R-O.), Senate sponsor of the Taft-Hartley Act, as stating the law would preclude a situation where "those not in the union will get a free ride" from union activities that bring contract benefits.

The Dept. of Justice filed a brief for the NLRB upholding the board's agency-shop ruling in the GM-UAW case and urging the Supreme Court to reverse the appellate court.

In regard to the Florida "right-to-work" law, the Justice Dept. suggested that a "line of distinction" might be found between an agency-shop clause and a "service fee" whereby a non-member would help pay "all cost of collective bargaining but not of legislative or political activities."

2-9-63

Scholarships Honor Washington Unionist

Seattle—The Washington State AFL-CIO will award two $500 college scholarships this year in honor of Evan M. Weston, retired former president of the state central body. Applicants must be the son or daughter of an AFL-CIO member and have taken the National Merit Scholarship Test.

Hemisphere Newsmen Set Up Headquarters

Hemispheric headquarters of the Inter-American Federation of Working Newspapermen's Organizations have been opened in the Casa del Periodista in Panama City, Panama.

The federation, which represents unions or professional organizations of working newspapermen in 22 Western Hemisphere nations, is now operating from a base in Latin America for the first time since plans for its formation were made at a meeting in Panama City on Jan. 12, 1960.

In announcing the opening, Co-chairmen Charles A. Perlik, Jr., secretary-treasurer of the Newspaper Guild, and Luis Carnero Checa, of the Federation of Newspapermen of Peru, said formal ceremonies will be delayed until April, when the IAFWNO executive committee will be present.

The administrative functions of the office will be directed by Richard P. Davis, IAFWNO inter-American representative. A magazine, El Trabajador del Periodismo-The Newspaper Worker, covering activities of newspapermen's organizations and other matters of professional interest, will be published monthly.

Opening of the Panama City office also marks the start of an intensified program of technical assistance to member organizations.

Within the next year IAFWNO plans to conduct a series of seminars on newspaper trade unionism conducted for specific countries or regions; to establish an international press card for members of affiliates; to survey economic conditions of newspapermen throughout the hemisphere; to translate and publish journalism textbooks, and to attempt to arrange an exchange of newspapermen between countries and for scholarships for journalism students.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, February 16, 1963 | No. 7

Wirtz Calls Tax Slashes 'First Step' to More Jobs

Youth Bill Priority Set By Kennedy

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Kennedy has urged Congress to enact the Humphrey-Perkins youth employment opportunity bill as "a measure of the first priority." The bill, blocked in the House Rules Committee last year, would set up a Youth Conservation Corps and a comparable "home-town" program in the nation's cities.

"Immediate" action is needed, the President said, to meet the "increasingly serious" problem of 700,000 out-of-school, out-of-work youngsters who now make up 18 percent of the unemployed.

'Direct' Action Needed

Even with tax cuts and other Administration proposals to stimulate the economy, youth unemployment will remain "disproportionately high for some time" unless "more direct" measures are taken, Kennedy warned.

He outlined a broad program of legislation to expand existing activities and launch new measures. The White House said the presidential message was the first in the nation's history devoted to problems of youth.

The President asked a first-year authorization of $100 million to launch the two-part youth employment program and set up:

- A Youth Conservation Corps, comparable to the Civilian Conservation Corps of the New Deal era, which would enroll 15,000 youngsters from 16 through 21 the first year for outdoor work in national and state parks and forests and other conservation programs. Eventually up to 60,000 youngsters would be enrolled, given off-hours educational as well as on-the-job training, and paid $60 a month in addition to board, lodging and clothing. The basic program would be administered by the Dept. of Labor.
- A "home-town youth corps," less formally organized, which would enable needy youngsters to work full or part-time for public and non-profit community service organizations with the federal government paying half their wages. The ground rules specify that the jobs must provide useful training, must not displace regular workers and must be paid at prevailing rates for comparable work in the locality. Under the President's budget request, 40,000 youngsters could be employed in the first year on this program.

In addition to measures to in-

(Continued on Page 8)

Wyoming 'Work' Bill Is Signed

Cheyenne—Wyoming became the 20th state to ban the union shop as Gov. Clifford P. Hansen (R) signed a so-called "right-to-work" bill less than 24 hours after the Republican-controlled legislature sent it to his desk.

There were no hearings on the bill in the Senate and only a half-hour of semi-public hearings by the House Labor Committee.

The governor, who said during his election campaign last year that he would not initiate a "work" bill, approved the measure despite a flood of telegrams and letters asking him to veto it.

Governor's Statement

In a statement he said he "saluted" the Wyoming labor movement, but signed the measure because, he stated, it was "designed to restore full freedom of choice to the workers."

State AFL-CIO Pres. Paul Shafto reported that "more business lobbyists than had ever been seen before" put "terrific pressure" on legislators. The committee leading the "work" drive was headed by Lloyd W. Taggert, a member of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce's blue ribbon committee set up to fight the union shop "wherever and in whatever form it may exist."

The act becomes effective 90 days after the signature. Existing union shop agreements, however, are not affected until the expiration dates of the contracts. The measure prohibits the "agency shop" as well as the union shop.

The bill imposes penalties of up

(Continued on Page 2)

A CHATTANOOGA MACHINIST, Charles R. Graham, was winner of the Citizenship Award trip to Washington, sponsored for a union voter by the city's Central Labor Council, its Committee on Political Education and the Labor World, local labor weekly. Here he is flanked by Tennessee's two U.S. senators, Estes Kefauver (left) and Albert Gore. (See story on Page 2.)

4 Million Out of Work Intolerable

By John M. Barry

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz told the House Ways & Means Committee that Pres. Kennedy's tax cut program is the "first essential step" to move the economy toward full employment by bringing more jobs through stepped-up consumer purchasing power.

"The proposed changes in the individual tax rates will raise the level of demand for virtually every service and commodity we are capable of producing," Wirtz declared.

"This means more jobs."

Noting that the average American spends at least 92 cents of every dollar that comes into his hands, he said the higher take-home pay resulting from a tax cut would work the same way as a pay raise.

"The additional dollars spent," he said, "will lead to more jobs and further spending, with a continual widening of the circle generating still larger markets and further investment."

'Top Priority' Issue

Tax reduction, he said, has "top priority" on labor's agenda this year, with labor's gain coming only "as part of the common gain from strengthening of the whole economy."

Wirtz said the need to reduce "the present intolerable rate of unemployment" ought not to be considered as a separate matter, but that this alone would be cause

(Continued on Page 8)

To Win 40-Hour Week:

3 Loggers Killed In Canadian Strike

Kapuskasing, Ont.—Reesor Siding, a wilderness hamlet 37 miles west of here and 500 miles north of Toronto, will be linked in labor history with the death of three striking loggers killed by gunfire in a midnight skirmish between strikers and non-union woodcutters.

The death of the three bush workers brought a tragic climax to a month-long strike by the Lumber & Sawmill Workers, a branch of the Carpenters, against the Spruce Falls Power & Paper Co.

Ironically, the three men who were killed and nine others who were wounded were among 1,000 strikers also fighting for the cause of the independent woodcutters. These men, known as settlers, have rights from the Ontario government to cut 100 cords of wood a year on crown land for sale to the company. But by continuing to move the wood during the strike they were undermining the strike itself.

The battle at Reesor Siding developed out of an effort by 500 unarmed strikers to stop the movement of a stockpile of logs. But before the strikers could reach the stockpile the settlers opened fire with rifles, shotguns and small arms, shooting indiscriminately at the mass of strikers.

A small detachment of provincial police stood by without drawing arms; but the next day more than 200 police from each section of the province moved into Kapuskasing.

In the wake of the battle and in the sobering quiet that followed, 19 settlers were arrested on charges of non-capital murder and 237 strikers were charged with participating in a riot.

It took the death of the strikers to stir a passive Ontario Labor Dept.

(Continued on Page 3)

Rails Reject Unions' Bid To New Talks on Rules

Rail management has spurned an invitation by five operating unions to return to the bargaining table and make a new try at resolving the thorny work rules dispute.

Management broke off negotiations last June 22 and served notice that the railroads would unilaterally put into effect job-slashing proposals which had been rejected by the unions.

The five unions—Locomotive Firemen, Trainmen, Switchmen, Locomotive Engineers, and Conductors & Brakemen — have temporarily blocked the action through a legal challenge now pending before the Supreme Court. Their chief executives, representing 200,000 on-train employes, wrote the company officials:

"In light of the obligations imposed by the Railway Labor Act on both labor and management, and in the public interest, we are taking the initiative and inviting resumption of ngotiations.

"We hope you will agree that efforts to achieve settlement should be unceasing and that it is neither constructive nor conscionable to further postpone the task . . . We remain convinced that collective bargaining is the only means that assures both parties solutions they can live with."

Management's reply, expressed by its chief negotiator, J. E. Wolfe, was to accuse the unions of "stalling tactics."

He said the railroads would negotiate only if the unions agreed to limit the bargaining to implementation of recommendations made last year by a presidential study com-

(Continued on Page 2)

Six-Month Job Stall Reported by Labor Dept.

The nation's job situation has been stalled "on a plateau" since the middle of last year, the Labor Dept. has reported.

In its detailed report for January, the department said changes from December employment figures were the mainly seasonal workweek reductions and post-holiday job cutbacks—900,000 in trade, 150,000 in postal and 185,000 in construction.

Greater than seasonal changes hit the manufacturing sector, down by 185,000 jobs, as declines were recorded throughout the durable and soft goods industries, especially the auto industry.

The latter felt "an unusually large reduction of 1.5 hours" in its workweek as output was cut from December's record levels.

The factory workweek dropped slightly more than seasonally, by 24 minutes to 40.1 hours. In the auto industry, however, it still was comparatively high at 41.6 hours, the report said.

"We have been on a plateau," commented Harold Goldstein, Labor Dept. manpower expert, as he noted "substantially no change" since mid-1962 in the key figures on the jobless rate, in total unemployment, in non-farm employment and in the size of the labor force.

The 5.8 percent jobless rate and the 4.7 million unemployed equalled the levels of January 1962, he noted.

Payroll employment—at 54.8 million—was 1.1 million above a year ago but showed "virtually no change" since last June.

Scholarship Established By Hotel Union

A four-year university scholarship for studies in the field of labor and industrial relations has been established by the Hotel & Restaurant Employes and will be awarded annually.

The scholarships, to bear the name of Ed. S. Miller, the union's president, were voted at a recent Miami meeting of its general executive board. Candidates for the $1,500 annual grants must be either members or children of members.

The award will be made each year to a candidate selected from one of four geographic areas. First award, to be made in time for the student to enroll next September, requires that he enter Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y. Thereafter the winner may enter any university offering a four-year program in industrial and labor relations.

Details on selection plans will be announced after consultation with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, Miller said.

Anti-Labor Bias Laid To State Unit

Austin—The Texas State AFL-CIO has asked a state court for a permanent injunction to bar what it terms "pro-employer lobbying" by members and employes of the Texas Employment Commission.

The commission and its staff, the state labor federation charged, used state funds to lobby for amendments to the unemployment compensation law which "on their face" are "in the interest of employers . . . and detrimental to the interests of employes and working men and women."

All of these actions, the state central body said "violate state law prohibiting state employes from influencing legislation or legislators."

The action was filed in Travis County District Court here.

State AFL-CIO Pres. H. S. Hank Brown said one of the proposed amendments would have disqualified from benefits last year 74 percent of the state's jobless. He described the three-member commission, set up to provide representation for employers, workers and the public as "stacked" in favor of employer interests.

UNDERSEC. OF LABOR John F. Henning "supervises" the ground-breaking for the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor's new headquarters at 9th and Lake Sts. from his perch on a dozer as George B. Roberts, county federation president (right), and Executive Sec. W. J. Bassett (center), make with the pick and shovel. Ken Bitter, contractor for the project, is egging them on from the left. Bitter is a former secretary-treasurer of the San Diego Building Trades Council. The $289,000 headquarters is due to be completed in July.

Honest-to-Gosh Voter Wins Washington Trip

A Chattanooga Machinist has completed a three-day, expense-paid tour of the nation's capital awarded him for doing what came naturally—voting in last November's general election.

Charles R. Graham, a member of IAM Lodge 56, employed at Combustion Engineering, Inc., was chosen by lot from a final list of 20 Chattanooga trade unionists as the recipient of the citizenship award of the Chattanooga Labor Council. The only requirement was that the winner must have actually voted.

Not only had Graham voted, it turned out, but he had put in a shift as a poll worker in behalf of Wilkes Thrasher, whom the local labor council had endorsed for Tennessee's 3rd District congressional seat.

Although Thrasher narrowly missed election to the House, he carried the precinct at which Graham worked by a 2-1 margin.

During his Washington trip, on which he was accompanied by Charles M. Houk, treasurer of the Tennessee State AFL-CIO, Graham visited Congress, the White House and the Labor Dept., meeting Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and a number of other Administration officials.

On the House side, he had lunch with Rep. Ross Bass and on the Senate side with Senators Estes Kefauver and Albert Gore, all Democrats from his home state.

Graham's trip to Washington was the first of three prizes sponsored by the CLC, the local Committee on Political Education and the Chattanooga Labor World to encourage voting and promote good citizenship among local union members.

Second prize of a $50 U.S. savings bond went to J. R. Alley of Papermakers & Paperworkers Local 362, and the third prize of a $25 bond was won by H. B. Rogers of Hodcarriers Local 846.

Building Trades Rates Increase

The hourly rates of union building trades workers increased an average of 1.4 cents to an average scale of $3.98 an hour during the last quarter of 1962, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Satistics announced following its quarterly survey of seven major trades in 100 cities.

The increase—four-tenths of 1 percent—was slightly smaller than in the corresponding period of 1961.

Higher rates were registered for 1 of every 7 workers covered by the survey with the upward movement led by electricians, whose average hourly scale was boosted by 4.9 cents. Increases were registered in 11 cities for all the trades except painters; in 17 cities for bricklayers and in 16 cities for electricians.

Public 'Sacrificed:'

Rails and Regulators Assailed by Harrison

A leading spokesman for rail unions has accused both the railroad industry and government regulatory agencies of sacrificing the public welfare to the interest of bigger corporate profits.

Pres. George M. Harrison of the Railway Clerks charged that abandonment and curtailment of service has taken place in disregard of the principle that "the public must be assured of adequate, equitable, efficient transportation service, at reasonable and non-discriminatory cost."

Harrison, a vice president of the AFL-CIO, presented the "labor viewpoint" on the nation's transportation policy in an article for the Annals of the American Academy of Political & Social Science, a leading scholarly journal.

He lashed at "wholly misleading railway corporation propaganda" although conceding it has been "very successful" in promoting the "myths" that railroads are "in desperate financial plight" and held back by "featherbedding" labor practices.

State and federal regulatory agencies, Harrison said, are often staffed by persons who have been or expect to be employed by the industry they are regulating and have shown "a willingness to accept propaganda claims at face value."

The goals of a national transportation policy geared to the nation's present and future needs, he said, are not likely to be achieved through reliance on "regulatory bodies with limited scope, already heavily committed to unsound courses."

He urged the creation, through executive or congressional action, of a National Transport Commission "with authority to develop a long range program integrating the needs and capacities of all forms of surface transportation." The goals, he said, should include:

- A halt to abandonment or curtailing of transportation service, "whether by the piecemeal process of station closing and discontinuing of parts of service, or by the wholesale process of merging competing corporations."
- A recognition that "railways are the backbone of the national transportation system."
- Similar principles of regulation for all modes of transportation.
- Preservation of "competition under private enterprise in those large areas where it will promote efficient and economic service."
- Acceptance by regulatory bodies of the principle that the interests of transportation employes should be "protected" in the regulation of transportation.
- "Extreme care . . . to protect the processes of regulation against subversion by the industries being regulated. . . ."

Newspaper Crafts Seek 4-Day Week

Toronto, Ont.—Four newspaper craft unions have asked for a four-day workweek in joint negotiations with three Toronto dailies.

The proposal was advanced by the Typographers, Pressmen, Stereotypers and Mailers in bargaining proposals offered the Daily Star and the Globe & Mail, with which they negotiate together, and the Telegram, with which they hold separate sessions. Joint bargaining was resumed by the unions this year after a lapse of several years.

The four unions, which represent about 1,000 workers, have asked for day shifts of 8 hours, night shifts of 7.5 hours and lobster shifts of 7 hours. On wages they have proposed uniform journeyman rates of $143, $148 and $149 per week, respectively. Rates under old agreements stipulating the 5-day week run from $139 to $149.

The unions describe the four-day week as a legitimate goal because of technological changes—with greater advances in the offing—which tend to eliminate jobs.

Other proposals include four weeks' vacation after 10 years; an increase in the maximum severance pay to 40 weeks; improved pensions and better coverage and cost-sharing for health plans.

Meantime the Newspaper Guild, which is not involved in the current bargaining, and the Star have agreed on a pioneer program of labor-management cooperation under which a permanent body for discussion of matters of continuing interest will be set up when negotiations for a new contract are completed.

Rails Reject Union Bid To New Talks on Rules

(Continued from Page 1)

mission. The unions have rejected the proposals, which would include abolition of tens of thousands of jobs that railroad workers contend are essential to safe operations.

The unions had proposed an initial meeting "at the technical level" to evaluate new data prepared by the Dept. of Labor, followed by a conference "to determine what issues are actually in dispute," and finally a "summit meeting."

This approach, they contended, would be "far more promising than the present wall of silence."

The unions said they do not consider the financial condition of the railroads a factor in the work rules and pay structure dispute but that if management introduces the claim that "railroads are headed for the poorhouse," there should be a "full and objective" congressional investigation of railroad finances.

"Labor's interest, like that of the public generally, is in more, better, safe, economical and uninterrupted transportation," the union officials said.

Unionists Ready Retirees' Center

Quincy, Mass. — Union carpenters, painters and plumbers are donating their skills to renovate a former home for Spanish-American War veterans into a new center for the area's senior citizens.

City Welfare Commissioner Anthony J. Venna, chairman of the Quincy Council for the Aging, reported:

"We've had almost a score of union craftsmen donating their services. The city and the Golden Agers owe these people a lot, for this work is something we could hardly pay for with our limited budget."

Governor of Wyoming Signs 'R-T-W' Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

to six months in jail and a $1,000 fine for violations, in addition to authorizing civil damage suits and court injunctions. A provision which would have made each day of continued violation after conviction a separate offense was dropped.

Less than two weeks after its introduction, the "right to-work" bill sailed through the Senate, 16-11. After defeating a series of amendments—including one which would have provided that only union members would receive benefits negotiated by a union—the House passed the bill, 33-23, with eight Republicans crossing party lines to oppose it and three Democrats supporting it. The technical vote was 34-22, since one opponent switched his vote to support the bill to pave the way for a later, unsuccessful motion for reconsideration.

Galleries were filled with union members and other opponents of "right-to-work," Shafto reported. He said there was never any question about the crowd being orderly, but a large contingent of police and a squad of national guardsmen were assigned to "guard" the capitol.

Shafto said that several supporters of the "work" measure acknowledged that letters, telegrams and calls from constituents were running heavily against the bill.

The Wyoming law marked the first success for "right-to-work" forces since 1958, when Kansas approved a "work" measure but voters in five other states turned it down—and in the process defeated a host of Republicans identified with the anti-union shop bill.

House Democrats Fill Labor Post

Rep. George E. Brown, Jr. (D-Calif.) has been named to fill a vacancy on the House Education & Labor Committee, completing the committee organization of the House.

Reuther Tells Executives:

Hours, Profits Key To Auto Contracts

Detroit—The shorter workweek and the overtime problem are "going to be knocking at your door" in future negotiations, Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther told Detroit businessmen assembled at the Economic Club here.

Reuther also repeated his earlier notice that a profit-sharing program would be a major objective of the UAW in its 1964 bargaining with auto producers.

"Profit-sharing is something you had better become emotionally adjusted to," he told the 1,200 leaders of the city's business community. He was appearing before the top-flight executives' group for the first time in 10 years.

He said the union's profit-sharing agreement with American Motors Corp., negotiated in 1961, had added a "new dimension" to bargaining in the industry, bypassing the problem of basing contract terms on speculations about what economic conditions would be two or three years in the future.

It represents a more rational approach, Reuther said, because sharing is based on earnings that are known, on "a pie that has been baked."

He indicated the UAW would seek a "flexible" workweek, rather than a fixed ceiling on hours, so that the week could be adjusted downward as unemployment rose and as many workers as possible could be kept on full-time schedules.

The UAW president declared that planned overtime is "morally indefensible as long as thousands of people are denied jobs" and said that more than 900,000 additional workers could have been employed in October and November if no overtime had been worked by job-holders.

Referring to the growing complexity of collective bargaining, and to the increasing responsibilities of the parties, Reuther suggested that both sides have a joint responsibility that transcends their separate roles and that economic facts, rather than economic power, should provide the basis for their agreements.

Yet, he noted, too often bargaining is still "a brief encounter" when it should be a continuing process.

He cited the recent agreement between the Steelworkers and Kaiser Steel Corp. as an example of what can be achieved through negotiations on a long-term basis. The steel pact, which provides safeguards against job losses to automation and guarantees workers a share of cost savings, was worked out in three years of talks by a committee representing the union, the company and the public.

AUTO INDUSTRY BARGAINING prospects in 1964 provided a major topic as Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther addressed some 1,200 leaders of the business community at the Economic Club of Detroit.

Company Tactic on Final Offer Not Unfair Practice, Board Says

The National Labor Relations Board, reversing a trial examiner's intermediate report, has ruled that a company did not refuse to bargain in good faith when it declined to budge from its maximum offer through seven negotiating meetings prior to a strike.

The board agreed, however, that the company later violated the law by "insisting to impasse" on a contract provision granting "superseniority" to strikebreaking replacements and that the walkout was converted at that time to an unfair practice strike.

The trial examiner had upheld the charges of Auto Workers Local 689 that the Philip Carey Mfg. Co. of Hamilton, O., was guilty of refusal to bargain when it engaged in a form of "Boulwarism"—making its so-called final offer at an early stage in bargaining and then refusing to change it.

The local struck the plant Sept. 6, 1960, in an effort to obtain a first contract.

Disagreeing with the trial examiner, the NLRB said in its unanimous decision that he had placed "too much stress on finality and not enough on the amount of negotiation that preceded the 'final' offer."

The company's proposal, the board noted, came on July 28 at the 11th bargaining session, contained an offer of a wage increase, and "does not appear to us in the circumstances to be an indication of a failure to bargain in good faith" in further negotiations.

"One need not listen to argument endlessly," the decision said. "There comes a point in any negotiation where the positions of the parties are set and beyond which they will not go. Where that point is obviously depends on all the facts of the case. On the facts of this case we are not prepared to say that the respondent exceeded the limits of permissible bargaining by substantially adhering to its July 28 proposal."

As for the issue of "Boulwarism," the board said it was "not passing" in this case upon any purportedly general technique of bargaining."

"Boulwarism" derives its name from Lemuel R. Boulware, former head of industrial relations for General Electric, who developed it as a standard approach to negotiations.

The NLRB agreed with the trial examiner that even if the strike had not been an unfair practice strike from the start, it became one on Dec. 28, 1960, as a result of the company's conduct after the strike began.

On that date meetings broke off as management continued to insist that any contract would have to contain superseniority for nonstrikers and replacements hired after the walkout began. In a letter to employes Sept. 26, management had threatened to adopt that position unless its proposals were accepted by the end of the month, a deadline it later extended to Oct. 7.

Demand Withdrawn

The company withdrew the superseniority demand in August 1961 after the NLRB had ruled in the Erie Resistor case—an appeal from which awaits a Supreme Court ruling—that insistence on such superseniority was an unlawful form of discrimination. Further meetings failed to produce an agreement, however.

The board ordered reinstatement and back pay, plus interest, of all strikers replaced on or after Dec. 28, 1960, but not those replaced before that date. Member Gerald A. Brown argued that the unfair practice actually occurred on Sept. 26, 1960, when the company sent its threatening letter to employes.

Clothing Union Victor In Year-Long Fight

Bethlehem, Pa.—The Clothing Workers, after a bitter campaign of more than a year, during which a series of unfair labor practices was filed against the Forte Neckwear Co. here, won representation rights by a 135-121 vote in a National Labor Relations Board election.

In a last-minute effort to turn back the union the head of the firm, Robert Forte, Sr., cancelled the Blue Cross-Blue Shield coverage of those workers known to favor the ACWA and retained it on those opposed to representation.

Union workers since striking Nov. 25 had manned picket lines in one of the Lehigh Valley's coldest winters as part of the campaign to win representation rights at the plant.

The ACWA had agreed to the vote on condition that Forte promptly sit down and negotiate a contract should the union win. In a memorandum of understanding dated Jan. 21, Forte undertook to send the following to the ACWA:

"I wish to state that I am satisfied that if a majority of the employes select your union to represent them, that we will be able to work out a collective bargaining agreement satisfactory to both parties."

Three days later the company posted notices, signed by Forte, agreeing not to discriminate against union members, not to question employes about union membership, not to threaten reprisals against those who engage in union activities or discriminate against them in any way.

The firm also agreed to give back pay to 11 discharged employes "for any loss of earnings they may have suffered by reason of our discrimination" against them.

When the election was held Feb. 5, the company challenged the votes of 11 union members.

The ACWA campaign was conducted by Murray Gassman and Marie Gassman, national representatives, who said picketing will be continued until a contract is signed. During the drive the union signed an agreement with the Schobel Brothers Neckwear Co., also of Bethlehem, giving ACWA protection to about 325 employes.

TV Show Pacts Signed By Musicians

New York—Contracts providing for the use of live musicians in the musical background scoring of the Columbia Broadcasting System television shows, "The Defenders" and "The Nurses," have been signed by Musicians Local 802 and Platus Productions, Inc.

AFM Pres. Herman Kenin and Vice Pres. Al Knopf of Local 802 said the agreement completed 100 percent contract participation by major TV film and tape producers on the East Coast under the same terms and conditions as in Hollywood.

"We are rapidly approaching complete cooperation by producers everywhere," Kenin said, "and musicians now enjoy harmonious relations in another important segment of the entertainment business. Producers have come to realize that the live musician can breathe new spirit into the musical backgrounds of their television shows. They provide, so to speak, the frosting on the cake."

John G. Feild Quits President's Committee

John G. Feild has resigned as executive director of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity to direct special projects for the Potomac Institute, Washington, a non-profit research organization in the area of human relations.

Scholarship Exam To Be Given Mar. 5

The National Merit Scholarship examination will be given Mar. 5 in most U.S. high schools, the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education has noted.

The examination must be taken by high school juniors to qualify for the annual AFL-CIO scholarships and also for more than 1,000 other scholarships administered by the National Merit Scholarship Corp. In high schools where the Mar. 5 date is not practical, the examination will be given at about the same time. Students can check with counsellors for exact information and for a copy of the NMSC Student Information Bulletin, which will help in preparing for the examination.

3 Canadian Loggers Shot to Death in Strike

(Continued from Page 1)

into more vigorous action in an effort to settle the strike and a companion walkout by 400 loggers at the Kimberly Clark Corp., Long Lac, Ont., near the lakehead city of Port Arthur. Kimberly Clark holds the controlling interest in Spruce Falls. The New York Times also has a major share in the Spruce Falls mills.

The strike began over a demand by the loggers for a 40-hour week instead of the present 44—a pattern set earlier by Abitibi Power & Paper Co. Spruce Falls held out against the Abitibi pattern and Kimberly Clark, a sulphite mill, refused to accept the conditions won by the union in the newsprint mill.

Spruce Falls finally acceded to the 40-hour week, unlike Kimberly Clark; but the company demanded a 7-day operation which would have deprived the loggers of two consecutive days off and would have meant Sunday work. This the loggers refused to accept.

The shootings took place early Feb. 11. By Feb. 13 the pressure had mounted on the Ontario Labor Dept., which sent a chartered plane for union and company officials to bring them to Toronto for talks.

Mill workers were in solid support of the loggers. A picket line set up at the mill by the loggers on the 25th day of the strike virtually shut down operations when mill workers refused to cross.

In the wake of the shootings came demands by the striking unions and craft unions in the mills for a royal commission to investigate events leading to the strike and the shootings.

The 237 strikers charged with rioting surrendered voluntarily. They filed into Kapuskasing in small groups under instructions of union organizers. Provincial police, operating out of temporary headquarters in the company-owned Kapuskasing Inn, processed the charges over a two-day period. Bail of $200 each was offered but with $47,000 involved none was posted and the strikers were taken by bus to an industrial prison farm 100 miles north.

The settlers, who had been arrested earlier on nominal charges of shooting with intent to wound and released in $500 bail, were rearrested the next day after a clamor from the union brought charges of non-capital murder.

CORRECTION

In a cutline under a photo of a meeting of the Intl. Solidarity Fund Committee of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which appeared in the Jan. 19 issue of the AFL-CIO News, Sec. Gov-ardhan Mapara of the ICFTU Regional Organization was mistakenly identified as Guptil Mapara. He and Sec. Arturo Juaregui of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers attended the meeting as associate members of the committee, not as observers.

A Minority Tragedy

IN THE CENTENNIAL YEAR of the Emancipation Proclamation and a few days before the nation solemnly marked the 154th anniversary of the birth of Pres. Abraham Lincoln, a minority of the United States Senate almost destroyed the hope for effective civil rights legislation in the 88th Congress.

Fifty-four senators, three more than a constitutional majority of the 100-member Senate, voted to close debate so that the "greatest deliberative body" in the world could begin consideration of proposed changes in the rules. They lost.

Three weeks earlier, at the opening of the 88th Congress, a motion had been placed before the Senate to consider proposed rules changes. Under the tradition of unlimited debate, southerners launched a filibuster to prevent a vote on the motion.

To close debate the consent of two-thirds of the senators present and voting would be needed. If the full Senate were in attendance, this would require 67 votes. The liberal and progressive elements of both parties, frustrated by southern filibuster and the highly intricate parliamentary maneuvering, filed a cloture petition to end debate. They fell 10 votes short of winning the two-thirds needed, although carrying the vote 54 to 42.

★ ★ ★

WHAT HAS ALL THIS to do with civil rights? Senate Rule 22, creating the two-thirds margin of senators present and voting to close debate, has been used by southern Democrats and Republican conservatives to block legislation that 100 years after the Emancipation Proclamation would give first-class citizenship and a full measure of justice to Negroes and other minority groups.

The liberal groups had several proposed changes—to reduce the margin to shut off debate after a reasonable period to 60 percent, or to allow a majority of the full Senate to end discussion 15 days after a petition had been filed, plus an additional 100 hours of debate.

They sought eventually to secure a vote on these changes, but never got beyond the cloture vote on whether rules changes should be given consideration in the first place. The southern Democratic-GOP coalition won despite the fact that more Democrats and more Republicans voted to end debate and get to the substantive rules changes than voted to frustrate civil rights legislation.

★ ★ ★

REALISTICALLY, the prospect for meaningful civil rights legislation in the 88th Congress is dormant if not totally destroyed. It will take another election and a further strengthening of the liberal groups finally to break the grip of a small, narrow-minded group of men dedicated to the preservation of a society that would deny all Americans, regardless of race, color, origin or creed, their full and equal rights.

Organized labor is dedicated to carrying this struggle to final victory—a victory that will allow a majority of the Senate to determine after full and free debate if it will move forward to finally implement the guarantees of American democracy.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, February 16, 1963 No. 7

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'How About Getting My Program Marching?'

'The Oxford Disaster . . . Price of Defiance':

A Son of Mississippi Searches The Troubled Soul of His State

The following is excerpted from a pamphlet "The Oxford Disaster . . . Price of Defiance" by Mississippi State Rep. Karl Wiesenburg of Pascagoula. The material for the pamphlet appeared on the editorial pages of The Chronicle, Pascagoula, Miss., in December 1962.

THE FIRST RESPONSIBILITY of a state is to preserve law and order within the state by the exercise of its police powers. States' rights must be coexistent with state responsibilities. If a state ignores its responsibility to its citizens, then no man's life or property can be safe in such a state. If citizens of this state can be permitted to defy laws they do not like, and obey only such court orders as they may agree with, then we will have no government at all. Anarchy and confusion will prevail.

Maintenance of law and order at the University of Mississippi, or at any public school in the state, is the primary responsibility of the state. If we want to maintain our state's rights, we must accept our state's responsibilities.

The people of Mississippi were deluded into believing that Gov. Barnett had some well-conceived plan that would insure him the final victory in the Oxford crisis. The truth is he had no such plan. So long as he had only to contend with a few unarmed federal marshals, he was a lion in his defiance. Faced with the full power of the federal government, he unconditionally surrendered. He made a serious mistake in believing that he could bluff the President of the United States, the same mistake Khrushchev made in Cuba, and with the same result.

But many political "leaders" still maintain their attitude of defiance, and still urge the people to continue to resist constituted authority. The people are being told they must not submit, they must not surrender, they must preserve their "freedom". Submit to what? Surrender to whom? To a restoration of law and order, to acknowledgment that we are a government of laws not of men? This is not submission, this is not surrender, this is the American way of life.

Unless these political "leaders" change their attitude, further bloodshed is inevitable. No one can doubt that similar situations will arise. How shall these problems be met? Shall every school become a battleground? Shall innocent blood again be shed for political advantage?

We must meet these problems sanely and sensibly, as many of our sister states have met them. To do this we must have leaders who are willing to acknowledge that the orders of our courts must be obeyed.

We cannot afford to repeat the errors that led to the riots at Oxford. We cannot continue to elect to office politicians who think they can curry public favor by advocating defiance of constituted authority, disrespect for their government and open defiance of the law.

A public officer of this state who invites imprisonment by defying court orders violates both his oath of office and his public trust.

"Law and order" seems to be controversial in Mississippi. Pastors, businessmen and other citizens of this state who have spoken out in favor of a return to law and order have been castigated by some newspapers whose columns are filled with vitriolic denunciation of the federal government.

THE TIME HAS COME for the many citizens who have been afraid to speak out for law and order to make themselves heard. Every citizen who has come to the realization that we must have law and order, that we cannot continue to condone open defiance of our courts, and who now remains silent must accept full responsibility for other tragic events that inevitably will take place.

Let us join together in a common resolve that the Oxford tragedy shall not be repeated, that the public schools of Jackson, Greenville, Pascagoula and elsewhere in our state shall not be invaded by mobs.

This will take courage. Men will have to take a stand, to speak out and make themselves heard. Women, who share the highest stake of all, the safety and welfare of our children, must make their influence felt in the home, in the community, and at the polls. When you speak out for law and order, the politicans will speak out for law and order. The lunatic fringe that would destroy our schools, our state and our nation must be exterminated from political life.

Our school boards, both on the state and local levels, must receive our full support in their efforts to meet the problems of today and tomorrow. Our schools must remain free, public and open. Our administrators and faculty must be allowed full academic freedom.

Lastly, we need to search our souls for the answer to why the Oxford tragedy was allowed to happen. It is easy to blame this on others, to defend our state officials and the young people involved in the riot and to exonerate ourselves. The Prince of Peace said, "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone."

Morgan Says:

Africa's Potential for Trouble Great Despite Calm in Katanga

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

IF THE CONGO calms down now that secessionist Katanga is being shepherded precariously back into the fold, there is some fear that American interest in Africa will be diverted elsewhere to the detriment of all concerned.

Warning against a "nothing to worry about" attitude if the chaos in the Congo is finally settled, one U.S. diplomat has told his superiors that within the next 15 or 20 months there could be an explosion in Portuguese Africa that "it will make you yearn for those placid, good old days of the Congo crisis." He pointed out that a strong pivot around which the situation in the Congo turned for the better was Belgian Foreign Minister Paul Henri Spaak, but no equivalent of Spaak with his anticolonial enlightenment is visible in Lisbon.

Morgan

Broadly speaking, U.S. policy toward Africa supports freedom and self-determination, but Africa is a vast continent with a variety of connections and entanglements with European powers and commercial interests. And since our own interests and commitments are global, cross-currents inevitably whipsaw policies so that in application they look different than in theory.

We have taken a somewhat different approach to former British colonial areas, for example, than to nations in the so-called French community; our foreign aid programs have been much larger to the former British territories.

The French in particular and the European Economic Community in general have been giving impressive quantities of aid to the areas of former French Africa that have become independent nations and are struggling to keep afloat. Furthermore, the French wangled what amounts to special treatment for tropical products exported from their ex-colonies to the Common Market.

Under these circumstances it might be asked why Washington feels it necessary to extend these areas any aid at all. One answer is a desire to put or to keep an American foot in the door. Another is what one ambassador has described as the need for these countries to "spread their dependence." With all their ties to Paris, they do not want to be obliged to rely on France alone. So they welcome token American aid. Even though this amounts to a total to the French African community of only about $10 million, compared to more than half a billion from the Common Market countries, Washington is looking with some skepticism at that expenditure.

One fresh reason may be the need to take a wide new look at our relations with France and French Africa because of the changes in the economic and political picture set in train by Gen. de Gaulle's barring Common Market membership to Britain.

It appears that Pres. Kennedy's prestige, happily, is high in much of Africa. Several reasons are suggested, beginning with his speech while he was still a senator advocating independence for Algeria and the application of American influence to hasten it. Interestingly, the U.S. position supporting the United Nations against Katanga's secession has raised American stock in several African capitals, the reason being that Katanga was a symbol of colonialism.

Also, U.S. willingness to take stands counter to French and British positions on Africa has not gone unnoticed by Africans, according to one knowledgeable American observer in the field.

BUT POPULARITY and prestige are mercurial things, by no means stable enough to lean policies on. The Communists have been clumsy in trying to promote their own troublesome interests in Africa but as one diplomat put it, "they don't stop—they haven't written off Africa." Ironically the Soviets and even the Chinese have been trying to exploit the nationalistic ambitions of the emerging African lands though communism is supposed to be the great unifying force of the masses. A Balkanization of African states is just what the continent does not need.

What the weak African governments do need is federation and some of the more sophisticated and responsible leaders are coming to realize it. Pres. Senghor of Senegal refers with a mixture of distress and disdain to what he calls "micro-nationalism"—microscopic nationhood, he might have said—as the curse of Africa.

How can the trend be reversed? Little more than customs unions and cooperation on telecommunications can be expected at first and their formation will be anything but instantaneous. Actually the political education and the economic development of Africa have only just begun and this fascinating but painful and dangerous metamorphosis will command the most intelligent and helpful attention the U.S. can give it.

Washington Reports:

Rival House Whips Disagree On Tax-Cut Prospects in 1963

CONCERN ABOUT governmental expenditures is natural, Rep. Hale Boggs (La.), House Democratic whip, declared in an interview on the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports, adding that there is no threat of inflation at this time and it's easier to talk about cuts than to bring them about. The program is heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Boggs made the statements when asked if it's necessary to cut expenditures the same amount as taxes are cut.

"We must remember we have no inflationary threat at this time," he pointed out. "We have a deflationary threat.

"Also, we have a proposed budget of $98 billion. National defense, the space program, interest on the national debt, the veterans' program, all the result of past wars or the effort to prevent a future war, amount to 75 percent. That means we have $20 to $22 billion to work with, but when you think of the need for growth of our country, and our economic problems, in a country of 190 million people, I wouldn't consider that excessive."

The Republican whip, Rep. Leslie Arends (Ill.), said on the same program that he expected the Ways & Means Committee and the House itself to make so many changes in the tax cut program that "there will be no similarity whatsoever to the suggestions the President sent up here."

He expected the House to pass a tax cut bill this year, "but I wouldn't want to bet too much that the Senate likewise will pass a bill during this session."

BOGGS SAID he was optimistic about passage this year, though "a tax bill is a difficult thing to put together."

Arends was not sure that tax reforms will be part of the original package. Boggs declared the tax program was the most important matter before Congress, because "the main problems that we have are economic problems involving the rate of unemployment."

Arends looked upon the recent incidents involving French Pres. Charles de Gaulle as a step toward a Western Europe that would assume more of its own military burdens.

"The main thing is, I think, that they must make more of a contribution in the way of men and materials than they have," he said. "The burdensome load we have over there now is causing a drain on our gold. In the past we helped them (Western Europe) and now, why shouldn't they do more to help?"

Arends said that though our military cost is now huge, "we have to maintain our superiority; we have it at the present time and we must keep it."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE LINCOLN'S BIRTHDAY SPEECHES by Republicans were marked by a great deal of viewing with alarm directed against the policies and practices of Pres. Kennedy, with emphasis on the difficulties of foreign relations involving Castro's Cuba, de Gaulle's France and Canada.

This is natural and probably harmless, except that a small apprehension has arisen that the bipartisan restraint existing on foreign policy issues for the last 20 years may be eroded.

At campaign times, the bipartisanship has frequently been subordinated to the short-range desire of every candidate to be elected. It has existed strongly, however, in the Senate and House committees directly concerned with foreign policy and military security.

Republicans spoke responsibly and carefully, for public purposes, during the Roosevelt and Truman years. Democrats held back from purely partisan criticisms during the difficult eight years of Eisenhower and the late John Foster Dulles, which included such crises as the landing of Marines in Lebanon and the massing of air and sea power in the Formosa Straits.

The presence of Soviet forces in Cuba is a nuisance and perhaps a regional menace, but it is not a fact that should be looked at one way by Republicans, another way by the Administration, simply because one is out of power, the other in power.

* * *

THE OVERRIDING ISSUES surely are in Europe, where de Gaulle has confronted both Great Britain and the United States with what appears to be a massive attack on the whole concept of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

If de Gaulle is pushing in the direction he seems to be pushing by his veto of British membership in the Common Market, by his insistence on an independent French nuclear operation, it undermines the basis on which foreign policy has been built for 15 years.

It would require the most serious reconsideration of U.S. foreign policy strategy and tactics—strategy and tactics that have been carried through by both Republican and Democratic administrations and supported by well-informed and responsible members of both parties in Congress.

An act of creation and initiative comparable to that which produced the Marshall Plan, and the NATO alliance itself, would seem necessary.

An atmosphere of partisan strife in the Senate and House committees dealing with foreign policy would pose great difficulties. Speeches on the hustings, uttered for a political audience that yearns to be stimulated and encouraged, are one thing. Partisanship carried back to the place where the work is done would be a grievous national handicap.

* * *

AMONG THE REPUBLICAN speeches that caught less attention than it deserved was an impromptu 30-minute declaration in Long Beach, Calif., by Oregon's Gov. Mark O. Hatfield, who shares with Gov. Rockefeller of New York the distinction of winning reelection to a second term last year.

Hatfield remarked that he was worried by recent trends in the Republican Party, which showed GOP leaders standing by while other political leaders tried to grapple with important problems. "Compassion and humility" were the "genesis" of Republican strength, he said, "but the party has not always held to this."

These "Lincolnian principles," he continued, had often been forgotten by the party, so that it stood "diluted and diminished in the eyes of the American people by a very capable opposition party—and compassion was taken from our mantle. We often stood by and permitted it to happen."

The group of GOP "activists" emerging in the House shows signs that it is seeking to break the sterotype of blind opposition to programs designed to embody the "compassion and humility" of American life. But it is too early to tell whether their direction will be toward affirmative programs bearing a party trademark. Hatfield's comments offer at least an explanation of why he is often mentioned as a possibility for national candidacy.

THE HOUSE WILL PASS a tax cut this year, both Rep. Hale Boggs (La.), Democratic whip (left), and Rep. Leslie Arends (Ill.), Republican whip, asserted in interviews on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service educational radio program.

HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY of founding of predecessor body of Rochester and Vicinity Joint Labor Council has seen the resurrection of pictures of union activities in earlier days. This shows the Labor Day, 1911, parade of Typographical Local 15, one of the founders of the original central trades body.

Rochester Labor Celebrates:

Oldest Central Body Observes Centennial

Rochester, N. Y.—Organized labor here this month is celebrating the 100th anniversary of the Workingmen's Assembly of Rochester—the earliest established central trades council in the nation.

Following an unsuccessful strike by Rochester Typographical Local 15, representatives of the printers met with the Iron Molders, the Cutters, the Carpenters & Joiners and the Painters to set up the assembly in February 1863.

According to City Historian Blake McKelvey, the assembly differed from earlier city labor bodies in that the member unions retained their separate identities while cooperating via their delegates to the assembly. The organization had a pragmatic approach.

In his study, "Organized Labor in Rochester before 1914," McKelvey noted that when the assembly met for its first annual session in the old Court House:

"They hastened to deny any connection with a recently established Workmen's Independent Union, a newly formed third party, or with any other political or religious faction, and pledged the assembly to work for the economic interests of its affiliates and their members."

Although the assembly had foresworn close political ties, it engaged in political action by organizing mass meetings for legislation to establish the eight-hour day and to abolish convict labor.

Some indication of organized labor's strength during this period was provided by a labor-sponsored Fourth of July picnic which in 1869 drew 11,000 people out of a community of slightly more than 60,000 people.

Only 5 Locals in 1880

By 1880, the Rochester City Directory still listed only five local unions. Although the 1873 depression had run its course, the average wage for the city's 14,000 wage earners was $357, compared to the 1870 level of $449. The times seemed propitious for a successful organizing drive.

But the campaign to "organize the unorganized" was not led by the assembly, whose power by this time was only nominal. Instead, the task was undertaken by the recently-formed Knights of Labor who began signing up workers in Rochester's shoe industry, then fifth in size in the country.

While the Knights were still in the ascendency, a second group of unions—disenchanted Knights and several older trade unions—joined together in 1884 to form the Central Labor Union.

The ultimate fate of the Knights was indicated by an 1887 strike of Knights Assembly 1735 and Typographical Local 15 against local printing firms. The Knights' printers folded, while the Typos, who had received their ITU charter in 1853, still exist.

The Central Labor Union collapsed in 1888 with the withdrawal of several construction unions, which formed the Building Trades Council in July of that year. The building trades group led directly to the establishment of the Rochester Central Trades Council.

An AFL charter was issued to the central trades council on Sept. 29, 1888. Known since the AFL-CIO merger as the Rochester & Vicinity Joint Labor Council, the body represents about 50,000 workers out of a labor force of 265,000. While Rochester organized labor still looks wistfully at the city's largest employer, non-union paternalistic Eastman Kodak Co., the group is active and vigorous.

Although the matter currently is under a cloud of litigation, the State, County & Municipal Employes has been recognized as the bargaining agent for about 2,000 non-uniformed city employes.

One Challenge Beaten

The non-affiliated Civil Service Employes Association is challenging for jurisdiction of the city workers, but they lost a court fight to have the union recognition ordinance declared unconstitutional. The present court action concerns the basis—chiefly dues deduction authorization cards—for the city's recognition of the AFSCME.

The city council recently passed an ordinance prohibiting the importation of strikebreakers. Currently the AFL-CIO council is working for passage of similar legislation at the state level.

Group Medical Clinic Charges Plot to Bar Staff from Hospital

Bellaire, O.—A union-endorsed group medicine clinic here has charged that the Bellaire Hospital and the Belmont County Medical Society are conspiring to prevent group doctors from using the hospital's facilities.

Involved are the Bellaire Medical Clinic, owned by the Medical Foundation of Bellaire, and the Bellaire Medical Group, comprising eight specialists and five general practitioners. A large proportion of the clinic's patients are members of the Steelworkers and the unaffiliated Mine Workers residing in this heavily-industrial area along the Ohio River in the vicinity of Wheeling, W. Va.

The clinic's doctors—with the exception of the first few who came here 11 years ago—have been denied membership in the medical society. That in turn has led to refusal to accredit them for treating patients or performing operations in hospitals at Wheeling, nearby Martin's Ferry or Bellaire. The City Hospital here is the only one in the 12,000-person community, and it is supported by community contributions. As a non-profit operation it pays no federal or local taxes.

Focus of the new complaints is the hospital's board of trustees, which the clinic charges is responsive to the local medical society's wishes.

The clinic, affiliated with the Group Health Association of America, has brought in the GHAA's counsel — Horace Hanson of St. Paul, Minn.—to work on the case.

The hospital trustees have turned down the application of Dr. J. E. Sams for staff privileges. Sams, a graduate of Tulane Medical School, is an obstetrician certified by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.

In the Army Medical Corps he rose to the rank of colonel and was chief of obstetrics at a large army hospital. He holds the Bronze Star, Purple Heart, Army Commendation Medal and numerous campaign ribbons and stars. But these aren't enough to get him on the Bellaire City Hospital staff, and without that appointment he cannot practice obstetrics for the clinic and its patients.

The medical care of many of these patients is paid for by the UMWA welfare fund. Some 300 of them are members of a group which pays a flat monthly fee for supplementary health care over and above that provided by the fund. Others go to the clinic or one of its two "suburban" branches, where they pay for each visit or service.

The Medical Foundation of Bellaire has charged the boycott was undertaken in the "hope of destroying the effectiveness of a highly qualified group of physicians." It called on the hospital and medical society to drop their hostility. Furthermore, it reminded the AMA that it has "given its approval to the principle of qualified group medicine," and urged that it seek to persuade the hospital trustees to open their doors to the group's doctors.

Illinois Steelworkers To Sue on Redistricting

Springfield—Illinois Steelworkers will ask the courts to compel the General Assembly to reapportion the state senate on a population basis. The Illinois senate is now districted on a geographical setup.

The action was approved in a resolution passed by 400 delegates here at a two-day conference of the union's statewide Political Education Committee.

Dir. Joseph Germano of the USWA's Chicago-Calumet Dist. 31, the conference chairman, said, "We expect support from many groups outside of the labor movement who are as concerned as we in labor are in securing equal representation."

Pres. Reuben G. Soderstrom of the Illinois State AFL-CIO, promised the full support of the state federation. Soderstrom, a guest speaker, said fair reapportionment is also a goal of the State AFL-CIO. He noted that the Illinois house is districted on a population basis.

The resolution declared that under the state constitution 28.7 percent of Illinois voters elect a majority of senators. A voter in a senatorial district in Cook County, with a population of 569,600, has only one-tenth as much voice in the state senate as does one "downstate" district with a population of 53,500.

The 23 largest senatorial districts are all at least twice as populous as the 18 smallest districts, giving USWA members and other citizens in industrial areas a smaller voice in the senate than they should be receiving.

The delegates, representing 100,000 USWA members, also called for a state income tax to replace the present sales tax, laws to implement judicial reform passed by the voters in November 1962, improved benefits under the workman's compensation and unemployment compensation laws and revision of consumer credit laws.

Youth Job-Training Under Discussion

New York—Sponsorship of a job-training project for unemployed young workers will be discussed at a special meeting of the Subcommittee on Youth of the New York City AFL-CIO's Community Services Committee at a meeting Feb. 19.

The program would be financed under the Manpower Development Act, which provides for payments to trainees and allocates funds to administer sponsored projects. The meeting will be addressed by Judge Mary Kohler, Labor Dept. consultant and authority on youth employment.

Ill Health Retires Cooks Union Pioneer

New York—Louis Fernandez, a pioneer of culinary unionism and a veteran of the bitterest organizing fights in the industry since the 1920s, has resigned because of ill health as secretary-treasurer of Chefs, Cooks, Pastry Cooks & Assistants Local 89.

An early member of the old Food Workers Industrial Union, he was a charter member of Local 89 and chairman of its organizing committee when it was chartered in 1936. He has been secretary-treasurer since 1959 and earlier was president from 1951 to 1959 and a business agent from 1946 to 1951.

$1.25 Million Settlement Won in Pension Dispute

Indianapolis—U. S. District Judge Cale J. Holder has given formal approval to a $1.25 million dollar negotiated settlement of a pension fund dispute between two unions and the Atkins Saw Div. of the Borg-Warner Corp.

Affected are about 550 members and former members of the Steelworkers and of Federal Labor Union No. 18,548.

The fight started when the company closed its plant here in 1960 and moved to Greenville, Miss. It maintained it was obligated only for the amount in the pension fund at the time of closing, about $800,000, and announced it would divide the money on a pro rata basis among retired and laid-off employes.

The unions rejected this position, declaring the firm was committed to guarantee continuance of pensions and that it owed another $1.5 million. The company in December 1960 filed suit for a declaratory judgment upholding its position and the unions through their counsel, Keith Reese, filed a counterclaim setting forth their position. The negotiations followed.

Under the settlement approved by the court, all retired employes now on pension will continue to receive their lifetime benefits, including paid-up insurance.

Employes not eligible for retirement received a lump sum based on payment of $25 a year for each year they had worked. The two unions undertook to administer the distribution of checks for the payments.

The largest lump sum check, for $1,050, went to K. A. Hamblin, who was hired Dec. 28, 1918, and laid off in August 1960. He was 58 when the plant was closed, and has been unable to find work since then.

Jacobson Renamed To Rutgers Board

Trenton, N. J.—Gov. Richard J. Hughes (D) has appointed Executive Vice Pres. Joel R. Jacobson of the New Jersey AFL-CIO to a second term as a member of the board of governors of Rutgers University.

Labor's Economic Review:

AFL-CIO Urges 'Substantial' First-Bracket Tax Cut Now

Describing the Kennedy Administration's tax cut proposals for 1963 as "insufficient" to meet the nation's current needs, the AFL-CIO has called instead for a "substantial and immediate cut solely in the first-bracket rate, retroactive to the beginning of this year."

An article in the February issue of the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine, declared that labor will support additional tax cuts across the board "but only concurrently with loophole closing."

The article, "Fair Taxes and Full Employment," is a Labor's Economic Review feature prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

It noted that the Administration's general program of tax reduction and reform is "directed towards" objectives labor supports—elimination of joblessness and a faster rate of economic growth—but expressed deep concern over the proposed three-year "phase-out" of the cuts and the priorities assigned to the first round.

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress to reduce taxes by about $13.6 billion over the three-year period and to enact structural reforms designed to bring in $3.3 billion in offsetting revenue.

"It is labor's judgment," the Federationist article asserted, "that the Administration's proposed first-phase cut of about $6 billion, which at the earliest will be effective only during the last half of the year, will be inadequate to provide the economic stimulus needed in 1963.

"At most, the reduction for 1963 actually will total only $3 billion. If, as seems now to be intended, federal expenditures concurrently grow at a slower pace than last year, much of the expected stimulus of even this inadequate tax cut will be nullified."

6% Jobless 'Ensured'

Even assuming enactment of the first step of the tax cut, the Dept. of Research noted, the President's budget message to Congress anticipated national economic growth for the year at a rate of only 3.5 percent—a rate AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has declared "would ensure 6 percent and more unemployment in 1963."

"Clearly, the planned tax cut for 1963 is insufficient to meet our current need," the magazine declared.

Not only are the proposed benefits for low-income families "far too little" to boost consumer spending substantially, it continued, but what economic stimulus does result from this source may well be lost if upper-bracket tax cuts are granted simultaneously. This is true, the article said, because tax benefits for the wealthy may go largely into savings and not into consumer purchases.

"On balance," the magazine asserted, "the fiscal policy of the Administration is altogether too restrained to significantly spur economic growth in 1963."

With only 85 percent of existing industrial capacity being used and with 5.8 percent of the work force unemployed, "the real need to spur the economy is more customers to buy the billions of dollars worth of goods and services we already are able to produce, but do not," the AFL-CIO researchers declared.

The article observed, too, that a tax cut focused on low and moderate-income families "is long overdue because their tax burden is the most inequitable."

Such families, it noted, are still paying taxes "practically at the wartime level." The World War II first-bracket tax rate of 23 percent has dropped only to 20 percent and the $500 personnel exemption has been increased only to $600, which because of the rise in living costs has lost any advantage in terms of food, shelter and clothing.

Wealthy taxpayers, on the other hand, already enjoyed tax savings from capital gains, excessive depletion allowances and tax-free interest from state and local bonds, the magazine said.

Besides these, "over the last 20 years one new tax loophole after another has further nullified the impact of the official high-bracket rates," it pointed out.

The advantages of income-splitting, stock options, etc., made the effective federal tax rate on reported incomes of $1 million or more 45.7 in 1960, not the official rate of 91 percent, the Federationist reported. Furthermore, when all capital gains are included, the effective federal taxation on such incomes was 28.7 percent.

When regressive state and local taxes—particularly on sales and property—are added to effective federal rates, the tax burden of low and middle-income families is even more striking and has contributed to an adverse trend in income distribution, the Dept. of Research observed.

Source: Based on Richard A. Musgrave in "Federal Tax Policy For Economic Growth And Stability", Joint Economic Committee, 1955. Adjusted by AFL-CIO to show direct tax impact.

*Computation by AFL-CIO based on U. S. Treasury "Statistics of Income", 1960.

NLRB Reinstates Pair Dropped in Arbitration

The National Labor Relations Board has ordered the reinstatement with back pay of two union members whose dismissal by the Raytheon Co. of Quincy, Mass., had been upheld by an arbitrator.

In a rare reversal of an arbitration award, the board said evidence not presented to the arbitrator proved that the two members of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers had been fired because of the company's hostility to their union activity.

The alleged cause for dismissal—violation of the "no strike" provision of the IBEW's contract with the company—"was a pretext to mask the true reason for the discharge," the NLRB ruled in a 3-2 decision. In fact, no strike occurred, only a brief protest meeting on working conditions.

The board majority, upholding the recommendations of Trial Examiner C. W. Whittemore, emphasized that its action "in no way conflicts" with the NLRB's past policy of giving "hospitable acceptance to the arbitral process."

In this particular case, the board said, the arbitrator did not have before him the same facts and the same issue which was considered in the unfair labor practice proceeding before the NLRB.

"We cannot, in giving effect to arbitration agreements, neglect our function of protecting the rights of employes," the NLRB majority said.

The two employes—one of whom was a former chief steward—had led a protest against lack of ventilation in their department which sent the indoor temperature soaring to 101 degrees.

The board majority—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Philip Ray Rodgers and John H. Fanning—held that the dismissals, made after a "cursory" investigation which uncovered "almost no evidence of misconduct" by the employes, were the result of "animosity" based on previous dealings with them on union matters.

Dissenting were Boyd Leedom and Gerald A. Brown, who said the arbitrator's award should be accepted as binding "even though the majority of the board disagrees with his decision."

IAM Doubles Its Scholarships

The Machinists this spring will award 10 four-year scholarships, worth $1,000 annually, instead of the five presented last year, according to Pres. A. J. Hayes.

The additional scholarships were made possible by the fact that IAM lodges and districts contributed $41,621 to the scholarship fund in 1962, compared to $25,860 in 1961, he explained.

Hayes said 819 applications for the scholarships have been received from sons and daughters of IAM members and from younger members of the union. A selection committee of educators not connected with the union will pick the winners, who may go to any college or university of their choice.

Schoemann Hits Attack On Teachers' Unions

Tucson, Ariz.—Union organization among school teachers has been "good for them, for the schools and for the community," AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann declared in a letter rebutting an attack on the AFL-CIO made before a conference of the Tucson Education Association.

Dr. Daniel R. Davies of the University of Arizona's College of Education, according to an account in the Arizona Star, warned teachers "to beware of organized groups that would sap the freedom and responsibilities delegated to the teaching profession."

He put unions, specifically the AFL-CIO, in that category, distinguishing them from the National Education Association, which has persistently fought union organization of teachers.

Schoemann, as chairman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Education and a former president and 20-year member of the Milwaukee School Board, described Davies' charges as "shocking."

"From the earliest years of this nation it has been the labor movement, even when it was desperately struggling for its own survival, that spearheaded the fight for free, universal public education," he pointed out.

"Then and now, the public schools are more important to workers than to any other group in our society. Our whole purpose is to promote an ever-better educational system at every level. We do not need to apologize for that record; we can glory in it."

No Easy Way to Fight Lies

There is "no easy way to combat [the Davies] falsehoods," Schoemann told Fred D. Rhodes, president of the Arizona State AFL-CIO.

"Our only defense is the patient, continuous presentation of the facts," he said.

Foremost among these facts, he noted, are the conditions that led to the formation of teachers' unions: inadequate pay and inadequate protection against "unfair, capricious or discriminatory treatment by school administrators."

"Teachers just don't make enough money," Schoemann declared. "They often don't make enough to maintain a reasonable standard of living, which is bad for them. And they don't make nearly enough in relation to other professions demanding comparable training, skill, dedication and character, which is bad for the community. The crux of the teacher shortage is inadequate pay.

"The goal of union organization is to correct these conditions by the only effective mechanism yet developed to deal with employer-employe problems—collective bargaining."

The public also must be given an understanding of how a union like the AFL-CIO Teachers works, how it is "run by its members" with no "outside dictation" of bargaining proposals, contract acceptance or rejection, Schoemann stressed.

No 'Transformation'

As for the charge that teachers would lose their "independence" through union organization, he pointed out that membership would not "transform a teacher into a union propagandist or affect classroom presentation."

Schoemann cited "a direct and convincing parallel" with newspapermen, whose membership in the Newspaper Guild, he noted, has not had "the slightest effect" on the news or editorial policies of their newspapers, "which remain generally anti-labor."

Unions do have the "entirely legitimate objective" of promoting the use of more labor materials by the schools, just as they want better treatment by the press, he pointed out, but they don't use unionized teachers for that purpose, any more than they use unionized reporters.

Labor's strongest weapon in acquainting the public with the facts, he concluded, is the actual record of those teachers' unions that bargain collectively and the record of labor's role in education generally.

Attack on Mental Illness:

Better Health Goal Set by President

Pres. Kennedy has asked Congress to enact a broad program to improve the nation's health through expanded research, improved health facilities and the training of more medical personnel.

The President also served notice that he will again press for passage of social security health insurance for the aged as "a long overdue measure to fill a crucial gap in our social insurance protection." The details of his medicare proposals, however, were reserved for a later special message.

Earlier, Kennedy sent Congress the first presidential message of its kind asking for a major national program to combat mental illness and retardation, with the hope over the next decade or two of cutting in half the number of hospitalized mental patients—now about 600,000—and the number of children born mentally retarded each year—about 126,000.

Key to the mental health program would be federal grants to states for the construction of community mental health centers starting in fiscal 1965, with the government paying from 45 to 75 percent of the cost of construction and up to 75 percent of the cost of staffing the centers in the early months.

The President also asked for a program of grants to states for expansion of care, treatment and training of the mentally retarded and proposed a five-year, $30 million program for the construction of mental retardation research centers to be administered by the Public Health Service.

Kennedy's program for meeting the nation's basic health needs repeated a number of earlier proposals and added new ones dealing with hospital construction and interstate control of air pollution. Among the highlights:

- Federal matching grants for medical and dental school construction and expansion, plus financial assistance to students in the health professions.
- Federal aid for schools and students of nursing with details to be submitted later.
- A five-year extension of the Hill-Burton Act, due to expire June 30, 1964, which provides federal grants for construction of hospitals and nursing homes, increasing the annual authorization for nursing home construction from the present $20 million to $50 million and adding a new program of aid for modernizing or replacing existing facilities.
- A five-year program of federal loans and insurance to help finance construction and equipment of group practice medical and dental facilities.
- Tighter inspection authority and safety controls over food, over-the-counter drugs, cosmetics and therapeutic or diagnostic devices.
- More intensive research into air polution and action to abate it on an interstate basis along the lines of present water pollution control enforcement measures.
- More funds for the federal-state program of vocational rehabilitation to permit an increase of 25 percent in the number of handicapped persons returned to employment each year.

AMA Finds Kerr-Mills Falls Short on Free Choice

The American Medical Association, a sponsor and strong supporter of the Kerr-Mills law to provide financial medical aid for the aged, has discovered to its horror that the law violates a cardinal AMA tenet: free choice of hospital and doctor.

So the AMA will ask Congress to amend this "sound and constructive method" of aiding the aged by adopting "a specific guarantee of free choice of hospital and doctor . . . as an amendment to Kerr-Mills."

The amendment, says the AMA, which has conducted an all-out, lavishly-financed campaign against medical care for the aged under social security, is part of an eight-point program for the aged adopted by its board of trustees.

The trustee called for greater acceptance of Kerr-Mills, which presently covers the aged in only 25 states, and easing of eligibility requirements in certain cases. Under the federal-state matching grant program, many of the aged have to take the equivalent of a pauper's oath to obtain assistance.

The AMA has contended that any legislation dealing with health care that bars "free choice" of a doctor violates American principles.

Wirtz Calls Tax Cuts First Step to New Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

enough for enactment of the President's tax cut proposals.

The nation's 4 million unemployed, he observed, represent "a heart-sickening story of unnecessary, avoidable human tragedy" and "irretrievable" economic waste. The "billions of man-hours of productive labor" that jobless workers could perform in just one year, he noted, would be far more than enough to build all the school rooms the country needs at a cost of "just about what we pay out each year in unemployment benefits."

"This is economic nonsense," he declared.

Wirtz was the third major government witness to appear before the committee in support of the President's proposals for a net reduction of $10.3 billion in taxes over the next three years. He followed Commerce Sec. Luther H. Hodges and Treasury Sec. C. Douglas Dillon.

In his lead-off testimony, Dillon cautioned the committee that the Administration would scale down its proposals for $13.6 billion in tax reductions if Congress rejected substantial parts of the tax reform proposals designed to bring in some $3.3 billion in offsetting revenues.

Dillon particularly emphasized that the Kennedy Administration would feel compelled to seek much smaller reductions in the higher tax brackets if Congress fails to approve limitation of itemized tax deductions to the excess over 5 percent of the taxpayer's income.

Spending Cut Disputed

Wirtz met head-on the argument that tax cuts must be accompanied by reductions in federal spending to avoid a deficit.

"This argument is often put in terms of not passing debts on to the next generation," the labor secretary noted.

"I say in all seriousness that the one debt we simply cannot afford to pass on to the next generation is the debt of its being stunted, blighted by our denying its members the opportunity to work."

The "key fact," Wirtz declared, is that "at a time when the work force is increasing rapidly, there is an actual decrease in the number of job opportunities in many industries, and an ominous slowing up in the rate of growth in job opportunities as a whole."

He cited the loss of 250,000 jobs a year since 1957 in agriculture and mining, 45,000 a year in contract construction, 63,000 in transportation and public utilities, and 85,000 in manufacturing, virtually all of them in the durable goods industries.

He raised the specter of 7 percent unemployment by 1967—5.5 million people out of work——"if we were to do no better in the next five years than we did in the past five."

In the decade of the 60s, he pointed out, the nation faces an unprecedented increase in the supply of manpower because of an "explosion" in the size of the work force, stemming from the high birth rate of the 40s and the rapid acceleration of automation.

"There has to be an equally unprecedented increase in the demand for this manpower," he declared. "This is what a tax reduction offers."

Potential Demand There

The potential demand is there, he said, and the key to unlocking it is "to release purchasing power and to stimulate investment in productive, labor-using enterprise by a tax reduction."

Wirtz said the worsening shortage of job opportunities was leading to proposals which he considered "mistaken" and "unwise," such as the movement for a shorter workweek, which the AFL-CIO has advocated as long as other efforts to combat joblessness prove insufficient and unsuccessful.

A "serious strain on private collective bargaining" has developed, he continued, "which is characterized by new and more serious crises resulting from stalemates over the terms and conditions not of employment, but of curtailing employment.

"We had best face now, instead of too late, the fact that the successful operation of the essential institution of free collective bargaining may well depend—in this age of rapid replacement of men by machines—on there being other jobs available for the people who are displaced."

He told the committee that "there are too many signs that we are getting used to excessive unemployment," and concluded:

"I urge the importance of moving quickly to break this habit, to demand that we make full use of the greatest asset we have, which is ourselves—all of us.

"I see in the President's tax proposals the soundest way to do this—by releasing the full power of consumers to buy the things they want and need, and by increasing the incentive of producers to produce them, with the realization that this will lead to the full employment we seek to achieve."

Action Urged By Kennedy On Youth Jobs

(Continued from Page 1)

crease employment anl job skills of youth, the President made two proposals to extend the areas of service by trained young people to the nation.

He proposed enlargement of the Peace Corps to 13,000 overseas volunteers by September 1964. The corps now has 4,350 volunteers and expects to have 9,000 by the end of the summer. Kennedy said requests from underdeveloped nations for volunteers have been coming in "more rapidly than they can be met."

The President also asked Congress to authorize a domestic version of the Peace Corps—to be known as the National Service Corps—for service "in mental health centers and hospitals, on Indian reservations, to the families of migrant workers, and in the educational and social institutions of hard-hit slum or rural poverty areas."

This would be a "small, carefully selected" group, the President emphasized. Its purpose would be to stimulate volunteer service and not to provide job opportunities. Administration sources said the draft of the proposed legislation will not be ready to send to Congress until mid-session.

School Aid Stressed

In other portions of his message, Kennedy renewed his request for "a comprehensive federal program to meet critical educational needs," asked extension of programs aimed at preventing juvenile delinquency, urged "adequate funds" for child welfare needs, and called for additional appropriations for mass immunization programs, and a drive aimed at "the total eradication" of venereal disease.

The President emphasized that today's problems will be intensified by the rise in population coupled with decreasing job opportunities for the unskilled.

"During the 1960's," he said, "7.5 million students will drop out of school without a high school education, thereby entering the labor market unprepared for anything except the diminishing number of unskilled labor openings. Some 26 million young persons will enter the job market for the first time during this period, 40 percent more than in the previous decade."

Senate Rollcall Vote On Cloture Motion

The Senate voted 54-42 for a cloture motion to limit debate on a motion to call up proposals to strengthen the anti-filibuster rule. The effort failed, however, because the vote for cloture was less than the two-thirds required under the existing rule. Following is the rollcall:

FOR IMPOSING CLOTURE

Democrats 36

Anderson (N. M.)	Kefauver (Tenn.)	Muskie (Me.)
Bayh (Ind.)	Kennedy (Mass.)	Nelson (Wis.)
Brewster (Md.)	Lausche (O.)	Neuberger (Ore.)
Burdick (N. D.)	Long (Mo.)	Pastore (R. I.)
Church (Ida.)	Magnuson (Wash.)	Pell (R. I.)
Clark (Pa.)	Mansfield (Mont.)	Proxmire (Wis.)
Dodd (Conn.)	McCarthy (Minn.)	Randolph (W. Va.)
Douglas (Ill.)	McGovern (S. D.)	Ribicoff (Conn.)
Hart (Mich.)	McIntyre (N. H.)	Symington (Mo.)
Hartke (Ind.)	McNamara (Mich.)	Williams (N. J.)
Humphrey (Minn.)	Morse (Ore.)	Yarborough (Tex.)
Jackson (Wash.)	Moss (Utah)	Young (O.)

Republicans 18

Aiken (Vt.)	Dominick (Colo.)	Pearson (Kan.)
Allott (Colo.)	Fong (Hawaii)	Prouty (Vt.)
Beall (Md.)	Javits (N. Y.)	Saltonstall (Mass.)
Boggs (Del.)	Keating (N. Y.)	Scott (Pa.)
Case (N. J.)	Kuchel (Calif.)	Smith (Me.)
Cooper (Ky.)	Morton (Ky.)	Williams (Del.)

AGAINST IMPOSING CLOTURE

Democrats 27

Bible (Nev.)	Gore (Tenn.)	McGee (Wyo.)
Byrd (Va.)	Gruening (Alaska)	Monroney (Okla.)
Byrd (W. Va.)	Hayden (Ariz.)	Robertson (Va.)
Cannon (Nev.)	Hill (Ala.)	Russell (Ga.)
Eastland (Miss.)	Holland (Fla.)	Smathers (Fla.)
Edmondson (Okla.)	Inouye (Hawaii)	Sparkman (Ala.)
Ellender (La.)	Johnston (S. C.)	Stennis (Miss.)
Ervin (N. C.)	Long (La.)	Talmadge (Ga.)
Fullbright (Ark.)	McClellan (Ark.)	Thurmond (S. C.)

Republicans 15

Bennett (Utah)	Goldwater (Ariz.)	Miller (Ia.)
Carlson (Kan.)	Hickenlooper (Ia.)	Mundt (S. D.)
Cotton (N. H.)	Hruska (Neb.)	Simpson (Wyo.)
Curtis (Neb.)	Jordan (Ida.)	Tower (Tex.)
Dirksen (Ill.)	Mechem (N. M.)	Young (N. D.)

Paired for: Metcalf (D-Mont.) and Engle (D-Calif.). Paired against: Jordan (D-N. C.).

Job Injuries Rise Above Labor Force

Disabling work injuries—in which a worker was incapacitated for at least one day—totaled 1.99 million in 1962, up 60,000 from the previous year, the Dept. of Labor reports.

Fatal accidents rose by 200 to 13,700, and 83,300 injuries resulted in permanent impairment, ranging from partial loss of a finger or toe to complete inability to work at any employment. This was a rise of 2,800 from the previous year.

Most of the increase in job accidents was attributed by the Labor Dept. to a larger work force. During the year, the work force rose 2 percent while the number of disabling injuries went up 3 percent.

2-16-63

Council Presses Congress For Action on Joblessness

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year

Saturday, February 23, 1963 No. 8

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL of the AFL-CIO assembles for its midwinter meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., its agenda emphasizing the increasing concern that joblessness soon may rise above the 6 percent level.

Warns Problem Growing 'Worse'

By Saul Miller

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Unemployment—the nation's "No. 1 domestic problem"—dominated the meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council here and brought renewed demands from the federation for congressional action.

In the opening days of its midwinter session, the council concentrated on high and persistent joblessness, calling on Congress for legislation to aid unemployed youth, extend coverage of the minimum wage, guarantee equal opportunities in employment and establish immediately a system of federal standards for unemployment compensation.

The council is slated to act on statements on the national economy and the Administration's tax program, both geared to the problem of restoring vigor to the sluggish economy and reducing joblessness.

The nation's unemployment rate will be moving above 6 percent "very soon," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference, and may stay there for some time unless action is taken to solve this "No. 1 domestic problem."

Meany, in reporting on discussions with Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz at the council sessions, stressed that the Administration and the AFL-CIO are in "complete agreement" on the seriousness of the joblessness problem.

He added, however, that there is a difference in approach, and that the Administration should make it clearer to the country how serious the problem really is.

"Our only difference with the Administration is on the question of how strongly they feel," Meany said.

Job Lag Deepens

The AFL-CIO president pointed out that the increase in the rate of jobs in the late 1950's was 2 percent a year and is now only 1 percent. The nation did not keep pace in the late 1950's with the demand for jobs, he said, and now the situation is becoming worse.

He noted that unemployment is hitting young people and minority groups harder than any others, with unemployment rates for both of these exceeding 12 percent.

Describing the outlook as "quite dark," Meany emphasized that the nation cannot tolerate "an economic tailspin," especially in view of its role as leader of the free world.

Coupled with the fight against unemployment, the council launched a register-and-get-out-the-vote drive for 1964, with concentration this year on liberalizing and modernizing archaic state registration laws and instituting registration committees in every local union of all AFL-CIO affiliates. (See story Page 3.)

In discussions with reporters on current disputes, Meany said he did not believe that there is enough sentiment in Congress at present to pass legislation setting up compulsory arbitration of labor disputes or to place unions under the antitrust laws.

Current strikes and disputes will not "bring further restrictive legislation any closer," he said. He noted that compulsory arbitration is a "two-edged sword" that compels both workers and employers, not just workers alone.

The key to industrial peace, he added, is "constant contact" between labor and management throughout the period covered by a collective bargaining agreement. Labor and management, he

(Continued on Page 3)

Cornerstone of Broad Program:

Kennedy Offers Expanded Plan For Old-Age Hospital Insurance

By John M. Barry

Pres. Kennedy has proposed an expanded version of hospital insurance for the aged financed under the social security system as "a reasonable and practical solution to a critical problem."

"A proud and resourceful nation can no longer ask its older people to live in constant fear of a serious illness for which adequate funds are not available," the President declared in a special message to Congress.

"We owe them the right of dignity in sickness as well as in health. We can achieve this by adding health insurance—primarily hospitalization insurance—to our successful social security system."

He urged Congress to enact the program promptly to meet an "urgent" need among the nation's 17.5 million elderly persons and described the measure as "our number one objective for our senior citizens."

The social security health insurance proposal was the cornerstone of a comprehensive message covering a wide range of problems of the aged. The President made 36 specific recommendations for administrative and legislative action to improve the lot of elderly persons in such areas as housing, food, income, consumer protection and counseling, tax relief and employment opportunities, as well as health.

The entire program, Administration sources said, would provide nearly $10 billion of benefits to the aged over the next five years, including $3.9 billion in tax savings and $5.2 billion from social security trust funds for hospitalization and higher retirement benefits. They estimated that $626 million would be required from general revenues.

The Administration's hospital insurance bill, immediately introduced after receipt of the President's message, again is sponsored by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.) and Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.).

Key difference from the compromize bill worked out by Anderson and Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N.Y.), which was narrowly defeated in the Senate last year, is that the Administration now proposes that retired persons be given a set of benefit options with varying deductibles, rather than the fixed benefit ceiling of 90 days of hospitalization proposed last year.

The 1963 bill also contains no

(Continued on Page 12)

'Right-to-Work' Drive Falls Short in Maine

Augusta, Me.—A nationwide drive to get the union shop outlawed by state action met a sharp setback in Maine as sponsors of an initiative petition admitted they had failed to collect sufficient valid signatures to force a statewide referendum on their so-called "right-to-work" proposal.

The petition campaign, launched with fanfare last fall by a group calling itself Maine Citizens for Right to Work, Inc., ended with a public squabble among its leaders over responsibility for failure.

To force a referendum, the "right-to-work" group would have had to file 29,272 signatures—10 percent of the number voting in the last general election—by Feb. 16.

Fred I. Merrill, chairman of the group, said he had petitions containing more than 30,000 signatures but did not file them because experience has shown that from 10 to 20 percent of signatures on initiative petitions are invalidated when challenged.

Merrill said his committee had "put too much reliance on one man," Walter F. Tweedie, its executive secretary. He said Tweedie, a former Republican legislator who sponsored a "right-to work" bill in the last legislature and then was defeated for reelection, had "misled" the "work" law sponsors, with overly

(Continued on Page 4)

U.S. Curbs on Job Bias 'Overdue,' Council Says

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Federal legislation to outlaw race discrimination in employment is "imperative" and "long overdue," the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared here.

The council urged Congress to "enact without delay" an Equal Opportunities Act making job discrimination "a crime under statutory as well as under moral law."

Such a law, the council said, "should explicitly apply to employers, unions and employment agencies which control employment in any industry engaged in interstate commerce."

In a separate statement, the Executive Council also directed AFL-CIO state central bodies "to pursue with the fullest vigor" ratification by their states of the anti-poll tax amendment to the U.S. Constitution. To date, 10 of the required 38 states have ratified the proposed amendment and the Mississippi legislature has rejected it.

States which have ratified the amendment are Illinois, Oregon, West Virginia, New Jersey, Montana, Maryland, New York, California, Indiana and Rhode Island.

The council expressed the hope that ratification would be completed this year "so that by the 1964 elections the last legal barrier to the free exercise of the fran-

(Continued on Page 2)

AFL-CIO VICE PRESIDENTS Joseph A. Beirne, left, and Paul Hall exchange comments at midwinter Executive Council meeting. Across the table is Vice Pres. George H. Harrison.

Wirtz in Press Conference:

New Curbs on Labor Called 'Good Deal More of an Issue'

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz told reporters here that restrictive labor legislation is a "good deal more of an issue now" than previously, and that "making collective bargaining work more effectively" is the only way to meet the problem.

He noted that various restrictive bills have been proposed recently, including proposals for compulsory arbitration of disputes in the transportation industry. Some of them, he observed, had the support of management groups.

Wirtz's comments came at a press conference following a 90-minute discussion with the AFL-CIO Executive Council here in which the major emphasis was on the problem of unemployment. Wirtz said that the council and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany expressed a "sense of urgency" and a "great concern" over the high rate of joblessness.

He said he discussed with the council Administration programs on tax reduction and reforms, on manpower training, youth opportunities and other aspects. Major stress is being placed on the tax program, he added, and "strong emphasis" on the Youth Employment Act.

In addition, he said, the Administration is supporting legislation to provide for equal pay for equal work for women, improvements in the unemployment compensation program, extension of the minimum wage law and liberalization of the Davis-Bacon Act.

Under the Administration's tax approach, he emphasized, labor will benefit as the economy as a whole benefits. The stress on the tax program is similiar to the emphasis on the trade expansion program, which was designed to have the effect of benefiting the economy as a whole.

Workweek Cut Opposed

On the shorter workweek, Wirtz reiterated the Administration's position that reduction of the week "by statute would not be a good thing." He noted that the workweek has been gradually cut over the years through collective bargaining involving vacations, holidays and shorter hours in relationship to an increasingly productive economy, and that this sort of evolution toward shorter hours is a different matter than legislation.

On the issue of restrictive labor legislation, Wirtz declared that "the future of collective bargaining depends on labor and management making it work." He said it is necessary to recognize that collective bargaining has suffered "serious blows" from the newspaper disputes in New York and Cleveland and the recent longshire dispute.

Collective bargaining "is on trial" in the New York newspaper case, he told his press conference, and it is bargaining itself, rather than the issues in the case, that is involved. He suggested that the issues might be submitted for determination to an independent body or group and expressed the feeling that the public has been left out of consideration in the dispute.

Meany, questioned about Wirtz's statement that collective bargaining is on trial in the newspaper dispute, said "I don't agree." Because one strike receives national attention, the federation president commented, and continues for a number of months, it doesn't mean that collective bargaining is a failure.

If collective bargaining is on trial in the New York newspaper dispute, he added, it was also on trial in the 1930's and 1940's.

"One instance does not indicate that collective bargaining is ineffective," Meany said, noting that the parties are still meeting in New York and that they are currently closer together than when the dispute started.

U.S. Ban on Job Bias Held 'Long Overdue'

(Continued from Page 1)

chise by all citizens will be cleared away."

In its statement on equal opportunity, the council noted that a century after the emancipation of the slaves "a great new movement is under way . . . toward the final achievement of equal rights for all citizens, in every aspect of their daily lives."

Barriers 'Crumbling'

Through executive action, court rulings and legislation, barriers to voting, equal education, access to housing and public accommodation are "crumbling," the council noted.

"Much has been done" to eliminate employment discrimination, the statement said. It noted that "nearly half the states have adopted legislation, of varying effectiveness, outlawing such discrimination."

The presidential government contracts committee "has done much quiet and effective work" to eliminate discrimination by firms doing business with the government, the council noted, under the "active leadership" of Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson.

"The trade union movement has steadily intensified its internal campaign against racial discrimination and has in countless instances overcome employer resistance to the hiring and upgrading of Negroes," the statement pointed out.

Virtually every AFL-CIO affiliate, it noted, "has subscribed to a solemn pledge . . . to conduct its affairs without regard to race, creed or national origin." The statement added:

"Yet we in the AFL-CIO recognize that these moral strictures are not enough. The sincere convictions of union leaders are not automatically translated into equal employment opportunity, especially when employers almost invariably deny unions any voice in hiring policies . . .

Legislation 'Imperative'

"To insure adherence to the principles we hold, legislative support is imperative."

Labor has "repeatedly" made clear its support of equal opportunity legislation, the council said, pledging:

"We will do our utmost to bring about such legislation and to insure its implementation. Every barrier to full, equal opportunity in America must be eliminated."

'Immediate Passage' Urged for Youth Job Bill

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Unemployment that can result among youth in the next 10 years "is a bone-chilling prospect," the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared in urging immediate passage of the Administration's Youth Employment Opportunities bill.

Terming the measure a "most modest effort," the council said the legislation nevertheless is a "start" on solving a problem loaded with "social dynamite." The country cannot afford any further postponement in this area, the council stressed.

In 1962, it pointed out, nearly 1 million youths between 16 and 21 who were in the market for jobs were unable to find them.

"They represented nearly 25 percent of the total unemployed," the council noted.

In addition, several hundred thousands were compelled to work part-time and tens of thousands more were "not only out of school and out of work," it added, continuing:

"They were also out of the labor force, not even bothering to look for work because they had lost hope of finding jobs."

By 1970, the council said, young people will be flooding the labor market at the rate of 3 million a year compared to the 1950s, when the annual average was 2 million. Thirty percent of the new entrants into the labor force in the 1960s will not have completed high school and another 45 percent will end their education with only high school diplomas in a job market that requires constantly higher skills and education.

The Youth Employment Opportunities bill will provide jobs for 15,000 youths in the first year, the council noted, and up to 60,000 a year thereafter, in outdoor conservation work. In addition it would enable some young people—up to 50,000 during the first year—to enroll for community service work.

Engineers Join in New Training Plan

The Operating Engineers Union and two major contractors' groups have established a National Joint Apprenticeship and Training Committee for Operating Engineers to assure a continuing supply of skilled workers.

Culminating a year of discussions and negotiations, the National Constructors Association, the Associated General Contractors of America and the IUOE have established a nine-man committee of three representatives from each organization to supervise the training program throughout the nation.

The committee has scheduled an organization meeting Mar. 8 in New York City. IUOE members of the group are Reese Hammond, director of organization, research and education; Alan F. Burch, assistant director of research and education; and Frances X. Hanley, assistant to the president.

Apprenticeship standards have been developed to provide for training for journeyman status as universal equipment operator, grade and paving equipment operator, heavy duty repairman and plant equipment operator. Standards for the four classifications have been approved by the federal Committee on Apprenticeship.

Each classification requires a minimum of on-the-job work experience of 6,000 hours and related classroom instruction of 432 hours. Apprentices must be between 18 and 25 and must have a 12th grade education or its equivalent. Equal opportunity for all applicants is assured, the committee declared.

CLC Local Councils At All-Time High

Ottawa, Ont.—Labor councils chartered by the Canadian Labor Congress climbed to a record high of 107 during 1962, according to Tom Ward, CLC director of federations and councils.

Japanese Labor Center, AFL-CIO to Cooperate

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO and Domei Kaigi, a federation of democratic Japanese unions, have pledged their cooperation to achieve "a greater unity and a more vigorous growth of the free and democratic trade union movement" based on the "charter and spirit" of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions.

A delegation from Domei Kaigi met with the AFL-CIO Executive Council here and the two federations issued a joint statement signed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Takeo Katayama, vice president of Domei Kaigi.

The statement declared the American and Japanese groups would work to eliminate "totalitarian and Communist obstacles" that impede the attainment of peace and free, democratic trade unionism. The Japanese group said it will extend its activities and contacts in Asia to help promote free trade unionism on that continent.

"The AFL-CIO and Domei Kaigi," the statement concluded, "will strengthen the spirit of cooperation which now exists between them and seek to maintain effective lines of communication concerning various matters of interest to the AFL-CIO in Japan."

Council Names Kenin To Vice Presidency

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Herman D. Kenin, president of the Musicians, was named an AFL-CIO vice president at the midwinter meeting of the federation's governing body here.

The Executive Council acted after receiving a letter of resignation from Vice Pres. William C. Doherty, retired president of the Letter Carriers, and presently U.S. ambassador to Jamaica.

The council in a special resolution accepted Doherty's resignation "with deep regret" and expressed its "delight at his new honor." The resolution named Doherty to the lifetime position of vice president emeritus of the AFL-CIO.

The resolution noted Doherty's long years of service as a trade union leader and that he was "the first ambassador chosen directly from the ranks of the trade union movement." It praised the "wit and wisdom" and the "dedication and devotion" with which he had served on the Executive Council.

Kenin has been president of the AFM since 1958, when he was elected to the office on the retirement of James C. Petrillo.

A veteran member of the union, he joined its Portland, Ore., local in 1920 while a student at Reed College. Over the next decade he worked as a professional musician, continuing his studies and gaining admission to the Oregon bar in 1931. He engaged in private law practice for the next 12 years but remained active in the AFM, serving as president of the Portland local from 1936 to 1956.

HERMAN D. KENIN

Kenin represented U.S. workers at the first session of the Intl. Labor Organization's advisory committee on salaried and professional workers in 1949 at Geneva and currently is a member of the National Cultural Center's Advisory Committee on the Arts.

Council Urges Congress to Act on Jobs

Prospects for Youth Seen 'Bone-Chilling' stressed, should not meet "to do battle" every two or three years but should be meeting regularly in a continuing attempt to solve the difficult problems of our times.

(Continued from Page 1)

Queried as to whether labor's public image was being injured by current disputes, Meany pointed out that strikes that draw national attention or affect the national economy are always blamed on unions. "We have always had this problem," he said, and "we have always been tagged the 'bad boy' in a strike situation." He said he did not believe that the current disputes will hurt labor's public image any more than similar disputes in past years.

Wirtz in a separate press conference told reporters that restrictive labor legislation is "a good deal more of an issue now" than previously, and said that "making collective bargaining work more effectively" is the only solution to the problem.

He noted that various restrictive bills have been proposed in Congress, including proposals for compulsory arbitration of disputes in the transportation industry. Some of them, he observed, had the support of management.

Collective bargaining itself is "on trial" in the New York newspaper dispute, he said. (See story Page 2.)

Meany, questioned about this statement, said, "I don't agree." The fact that one dispute receives national attention and continues several months, he commented, doesn't mean that collective bargaining is a failure.

If bargaining is "on trial" in New York, he observed, it was also on trial in the 1930s and 1940s.

The council elected Pres. Herman D. Kenin of the Musicians to the Executive Council to replace Vice Pres. William C. Doherty, who had submitted his resignation to the council earlier in the session.

Doherty is presently U.S. ambassador to Jamaica. Last year he retired as president of the National Association of Letter Carriers. Meany said the council did not act on the vacancy existing due to the resignation of Vice Pres. L. S. Buckmaster.

Meany reported to the council that as of Feb. 15, a total of 165 cases was filed under the Internal Disputes Plan and that 97 have been resolved by mediation or mutual agreement between the parties. (See story Page 3.)

The council received a delegation from Domei Kaigi, a federation of democratic Japanese unions, and signed a joint statement with the Japanese group pledging strong cooperation and unity in the fight for free democratic trade unionism. (See story Page 2.)

In its legislative statements the council:

- Said unemployment among youth in the next 10 years is a "bone-chilling prospect" and urged immediate passage of the Youth Employment Opportunities bill. (See story Page 2.)
- Called for extension of the federal minimum wage to the more than 15 million unprotected American workers, many of whom "are among the most blatantly exploited" in the nation's history. (See story Page 4.)
- Declared the "statistics of suffering" makes it imperative that congress give immediate attention to establishing federal standards for unemployment compensation. (See story Page 4.)
- Demanded enactment without delay of a federal Equal Opportunities Act that would make discrimination in employment "a crime under statutory as well as under moral law." (See story Page 1.)
- Directed every AFL-CIO state central body "to pursue with the fullest vigor" the ratification of the anti-poll tax amendment passed by the 87th Congress.
- The council waived the per capita AFL-CIO dues payment of th Newspaper Guild and the Flight Engineers at the request of the unions. The ANG cited current financial problems brought on by the New York and Cleveland newspaper strikes and lockouts. The Flight Engineers are involved in a strike against Eastern Airlines.

Meany said in reply to a query that the Typographical Union had not requested similar action and that the council would certainly consider such a request if it is made.

ANIMATED DISCUSSIONS engage AFL-CIO Executive Council group. Pres. George Meany, center, is flanked by Sec-Treas. William F. Schnitzler at left, Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther at right, with Vice Presidents Albert J. Hayes and David Dubinsky standing behind them.

197 Disputes Filed Under Internal Plan

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council received a report from Pres. George Meany that as of Feb. 15, 1963, a total of 165 cases had been filed under the federation's Internal Disputes Plan and that 97 of these had been resolved by mediation or mutual agreement. Mediation is still in progress in 17 additional cases.

The impartial umpire set up under the plan has handed down determinations in 42 cases, made four fact-finding reports and has four cases pending before him. Of the 42 determinations, violations were found in 31 cases.

The Executive Council subcommittee established under the plan has received 18 appeals from determinations of the umpire and has denied 16. One appeal was withdrawn and one is pending. The subcommittee also received nine complaints of non-compliance and achieved compliance in four cases, found non-compliance in four others and has one case still pending.

The Journeymen Stone Cutters and the National Maritime Union are presently in non-compliance with the Internal Disputes Plan, and sanctions required by the plan are in effect with respect to these organizations.

COPE Gets Early Start On 1964 Voter Drive

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO has launched its 1964 register and get-out-the-vote campaign, with the initial drive aimed at liberalizing and modernizing state laws and setting up registration committees in every local union in the country.

The administrative committee of the Committee on Political Education, meeting here during the Executive Council sessions, reviewed the 1962 campaign, which it found "most encouraging." It set up initial plans for the 1964 drive, however, on the basis of registration statistics indicating that the voting record must be improved for next year's elections.

Noting that there are complicated, restrictive and archaic laws in many states—often designed to hold down the number of people who go to the polls—the committee planned to seek changes in state laws this year, when most legislatures are in session.

The drive to modernize registration laws also includes the AFL-CIO's priority directive to its state central bodies to speed approval of the proposed constitutional amendment banning the poll tax. In addition to the legislative approach, the COPE administrative committee recommended that all international unions amend their constitutions to require a registrar or registration committee in each local union charged with the job of registering members, wives and children of voting age.

The committee noted that over 25 percent of trade union members move every year, and making sure that all are registered properly is a major task. Part of the 1964 drive will be concentrated on getting workers who move to register as quickly as possible in their new locations.

The committee reported that it had collected $657,954 in 1962 for the register-and-vote campaign and had spent $654,091 during the year. The report also stressed the difficulty in getting accurate statistics on registration and said COPE would seek to improve state laws in this respect also.

The major problem with state registration laws, it was indicated, is that the times and places of registration are sharply limited and tend to discriminate against working people. Proposals to make registration easier in terms of time and place are among the major targets of the legislative drive.

The committee noted that a proposal before the Wisconsin legislature urging a system of door-to-door registration is being opposed by the Milwaukee Sentinel, and it observed that while in many areas the daily press urges register-and-vote campaigns, it does not always support them when legislation is proposed.

The COPE administrative committee is composed of members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council as well as representatives of a number of international unions.

Building Trades Seek Faster Action on Jobs

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept. has called on Congress for quick action "to stimulate the national economy and create more jobs."

"From past experience we note that unemployment is America's greatest continuing problem," Dept. Pres. C. J. Haggerty told reporters during a meeting of the department's executive council here. "We urge Congress to give priority consideration to constructive action aimed at restoring full prosperity and full employment."

The department also called on affiliates to "vigorously resist" legislative proposals now before Congress to curb strikes, put unions under the anti-trust laws and impose compulsory arbitration of certain disputes.

In the area of organizing, the presidents of departmental affiliates slated a top-level conference of building trades leaders to plan a coordinated drive in the District of Columbia and Maryland. Other organizing projects were reported under way in Southern Illinois and in the Cape Canaveral, Fla., area.

Sec.-Treas. Frank Bonadio announced that he and representatives of affiliated internationals would study methods of cooperation with national contractors' associations to help union employers get work on national projects, particularly in the Southwest.

The council is investigating a report by William Fillippini of Santa Barbara, Calif., that the Air Force has established a "Ground Electronics Installations Agency" to use Air Force privates on work formerly done by building tradesmen at Vandenberg Air Force Base and other missile installations.

Speakers at the meeting included Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) and Charles Donohue, solicitor of the Labor Dept.

Clothing Union Sets Goals for Negotiations

Miami Beach—Economic gains, job security measures and greater leisure will be major objectives of the Clothing Workers in 1963 contract talks scheduled to open early in March with men's and boys' clothing manufacturers.

The present agreement, negotiated in 1960, expires June 1.

Acting on a report of a special subcommittee named last November to study the needs of workers in the men's and boys' clothing field, the ACWA executive board unanimously adopted a bargaining program containing these major points:

- A wage increase of 25 cents an hour.
- Gradual reduction of the workweek to 35 hours with no cut in pay.
- Improved health and welfare program.
- Severance pay for workers whose employers go out of business.
- A third week of vacation with pay.
- An additional paid holiday.

The ACWA board also heard a report of successful organizing efforts that have added more than 2,500 new members to the union's rolls in the three-month period ended Jan. 31. Initial contracts were signed during that period with 29 companies, the report noted.

Solution to Overtime Sought by McDonald

Miami Beach—Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald has hailed the work of the labor-management Human Relations Committee set up under the union's contract with big steel producers and said he hopes it will come up with a solution to overtime work by some employes while others remain on layoff.

McDonald told newsmen covering a meeting of the USWA executive board here that a Human Relations subcommittee is currently making a plant-by-plant study of overtime practices in the industry.

"Overtime is unnecessary where there are workers either unemployed or on a short workweek," McDonald declared. He said the subcommittee had found some plants on a 48-hour week while others were working only 32 hours.

The joint committee has made "revolutionary" progress in creating a healthy climate of labor-management relations, he said.

The USWA president told newsmen that no decision has yet been reached on whether the union will ask negotiations this spring under the current steel contract, which continues until next year but contains a reopener clause effective May 1, 1963. The decision, he said, will be made by the union's Wage Policy Committee.

Duluth AFL-CIO President Dies

Duluth, Minn. — Pres. Charles Bannister of the Duluth AFL-CIO died of a heart attack while awaiting surgery in St. Luke's Hospital here. He was 47.

He had headed the Duluth AFL-CIO since 1956. He also was a vice president of the Minnesota AFL-CIO, financial secretary-treasurer and business manager of Hotel & Restaurant Employes Local 84.

Surviving are his widow, Roberta; a son, a daughter and three grandchildren. Funeral services were held in the First Methodist Church here.

A RED CROSS citation to the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. for its role in the release of Cuban prisoners is presented to MTD Pres. Paul Hall by Allen Morris, of the board of governors of the American Red Cross. Taking part in the presentation ceremony are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Peter M. McGavin, executive secretary-treasurer of the department.

For 15 Million Now Excluded:

Broader Wage Floor Coverage Demanded

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO has called on Congress to extend federal minimum wage coverage to more than 15 million unprotected American workers, many of whom, it said, "are among the most blatantly exploited in our nation's history."

The federation's Executive Council said it was "keenly disappointed" with the denial of coverage under the 1961 amendments "to such notoriously underpaid toilers as laundry workers and hotel and restaurant workers" and by the special exemption of sawmill operators.

No amount of special pleading can overcome the fact, the council declared, "that a wage of $1.25 an hour provides bare subsistence at best, and any lesser sum cannot adequately meet even the basic items of food, shelter and clothing."

Citing the recent report to Congress by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz, that the higher minimum wage adopted in 1961 "had no inflationary effect" and that employment had risen in industries affected by the increases, the council said:

"It must also be recognized that the coverage of this fundamental statute is still drastically restricted."

It noted that Wirtz' report showed that workers not covered by the wage floor did not benefit, directly or indirectly, from the 1961 increases and that "further extensions of coverage are clearly necessary."

Calling on Congress to extend the coverage, the council also directed the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation to "conduct a major campaign to this goal."

Unemployment Rate 8.3% for Canada

Ottawa, Ont.—Unemployment in Canada soared in mid-January to 541,000, or 8.3 percent of the labor force, according to a joint report by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the Labor Dept.

The figure increased by 127,000 over the previous month to a level the report called "about normal" for the month. Those working declined sharply by 204,000 to 5,956,000 between December and January. The statistical picture was improved by a drop of 7,000 in the labor force.

U.S. Standards Urged For Jobless Benefits

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The "statistics of suffering" make it imperative that Congress give immediate attention to establishing "a system of federal standards for unemployment insurance," the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

The vitally needed reforms in the unemployment compensation system "can only be made by the federal government" setting up uniform standards. To rely on state legislatures now in session to cope with the problem is "unrealistic," the council said.

This is the situation confronting the nation:

- Of the 4.7 million unemployed, 2.2 million, or 47 percent, are not drawing unemployment insurance benefits of any kind.
- These 2.2 million Americans are denied benefits because of limitations in the present jobless pay systems, "which cry out for basic reforms."
- Every week another 40,000 unemployed workers are exhausting their state benefit rights.
- Less than 20 percent of the wages lost due to unemployment are being replaced by the jobless pay program.
- Low jobless benefits "obviously impede" training and retraining programs which are tied to unemployment insurance programs.
- The funds of one-third of the states are seriously depleted because of continuous under-financing and the "depressant effects of experience rating."

The rivalry and competition among the states for industry, the council said, is too great to expect any one state "substantially to increase benefits when such increase would require higher employer taxes."

The statement warned that legislatures are now focusing on ways and means to maintain low tax rates "despite the near insolvency of a number of state funds." There is no concern in any legislature at present about the level of benefits and there are proposals to reduce payments still further in six states, the council declared.

The statement proposed modernization of the program by:

1—Extending coverage to 3 million more workers.

2—Guaranteeing most wage earners a weekly benefit equal to at least half their wage loss in the event they lost their job.

3—Providing additional benefit weeks for the long-term unemployed.

4—Improving fiscal soundness by substantially broadening the taxable wage base beyond the present $3,000.

These improvements can be accomplished within the original intended tax rates established by Congress when the unemployment insurance program was first adopted in 1935, the council concluded.

Sea Unions Honored for Cuban Aid

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The American Red Cross and top U.S. officials have cited the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. for its cooperation in helping to bring freed Cuban prisoners to Florida.

L. Allen Morris, representing the Red Cross presented the MTD executive council with a certificate of appreciation signed by Alfred M. Gruenther, president, and E. Roland Harriman, chairman, for "outstanding cooperation."

"In the first days of our national appeal for help you gave us men to load the 'African Pilot' . . . and in the most cooperative way," Morris said. "Next we asked that you supply us with a crew of skilled marine cooks who might be used on a stand-by shift we had, in case the prisoners could not be returned by air."

Letters of commendation to the department were received from Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy and Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz. Note was also made that Pres. Kennedy had commended the unions for their assistance.

Dept. Pres. Paul Hall reported that moves by the Intl. Longshoremen & Warehousemen, headed by Harry Bridges, to raid established AFL-CIO unions on the West Coast, had been defeated by a coordinated department effort.

The council adopted a resolution by the Boilermakers urging Congress to increase the quota of new merchant and Navy ships for fiscal 1964. The resolution noted that the current federal budget calls for only 17 merchant ships at a cost of $95 million and declared that a minimum of 50 new ships was essential to "modernize and make more competitive" the U.S. merchant marine.

'Work' Petition Drive Falls Short in Maine

(Continued from Page 1)

optimistic reports on the petition drive.

Tweedie later said he had been "fired" from his job with the "work" committee.

State AFL-CIO Pres. Benjamin J. Dorsky hailed the defeat of the drive but issued a "grim reminder" that "work" forces have launched a "second attack" in the legislature through a bill sponsored by GOP Rep. Frank W. Anderson. Hearings by a joint House-Senate committee have been set for Mar. 28.

Governor Blasts 'R-T-W'

Republican Gov. John H. Reed, however, has taken a strong stand against "right-to-work," charging that agitation to ban the union shop has come "from outside the state" and not "from the working people of Maine."

State Commissioner of Labor & Industry Marion E. Martin has also strongly opposed "work" legislation and warned businessmen that it would "upset" the state's "enviable record" of good labor-management relations.

Maine voters rejected "right-to-work" in a 1948 referendum and subsequent efforts to get the legislature to prohibit union shop agreements have been decisively defeated.

The National Right-to-Work Committee had chosen Maine as one of its prime targets, along with Oklahoma and Wyoming, in its current drive. Wyoming earlier this month became the 20th state to ban the union shop. Petitions filed in Oklahoma to force a referendum vote have been challenged as "fraudulent" and the issue is currently before the State Supreme Court.

Under Maine law, no new petition campaign is possible until after the next general election in 1964. The deadline for submission of initiative petitions is 45 days after the legislature convenes.

1,237 Foreign Visitors Welcomed by AFL-CIO

From all parts of the world, a total of 1,237 foreign visitors dropped into AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington for formal briefings during 1962, according to a report by Henry Rutz of the Dept. of Intl. Affairs.

This number does not include members of two classes of the American Institute for Free Labor Development who spent some time in the building; government officials not traveling under official auspices or under exchange programs, or Canadians, who sent no formal teams to the U. S. If the latter groups were counted, Rutz said, the total probably would exceed 1,500.

The bulk of the visitors—527—came from Latin America. These included 392 union leaders, 8 management representatives, 22 political leaders and government officials, 26 editors or educational leaders and 79 in a miscellaneous classification.

Asia and the Middle East sent 371 visitors, while 257 came from Europe and 82 from Africa.

More came from Japan than from any other single country—195, of whom, surprisingly, 55 were union officials compared to 128 business leaders and 12 in other classifications.

Next in rank was Germany, 143 of whose 179 visitors were union leaders. The other countries with more than 50 representatives each were Bolivia with 88 and Mexico with 70.

Briefings were given to representatives of a total of 83 countries: 14 in Europe, 24 each in Asia and the Middle East and Africa, and 21 in Latin America.

PEOPLE-TO-PEOPLE SPORT KITS sent to all parts of the world have been one of the best ways to reach young people, the U.S. Information Agency has determined. Here a young Nigerian softball player steps up to bat for the first time in his life as a Peace Corps volunteer cheers him on from the left. Kits for softball, baseball, volleyball, basketball, soccer and boxing are sent abroad through the People-to-People Sports Committee, 20 Exchange Place, New York City 5.

BLS Preliminary Report:

Negotiated Wage Increases Averaged 3 Percent in 1962

Wages rose an average of 3 percent under major union contracts negotiated in 1962, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported in a preliminary estimate of bargaining results for the year.

About a fifth of the 3.76 million workers covered, however—nearly all of them in manufacturing industries—got no wage increases at all, the BLS figures show.

Among the four-fifths who did receive pay hikes, the median increase was 3.4 percent of straight-time hourly earnings, the bureau reported, noting this was higher than the comparable figure for either 1960 or 1961, but short of the 1959 level.

The 3 percent median increase among all settlements, including those that provided no pay hike, also was slightly higher than in 1961, but BLS explained that the 1961 averages were affected by contract provisions in the automobile industry under which wage increases were lowered to offset management assumption of health insurance premiums formerly paid by the workers.

The bureau's statistics also show that the 1.6 million workers affected by major settlements in non-manufacturing industries on the average received higher pay increases than the 2.1 million workers covered by settlements in manufacturing.

Among workers whose wages went up, the median increase was 4.1 percent in non-manufacturing as against 2.9 percent in manufacturing.

Factory Workers Lag

Only 1.8 percent of the workers in non-manufacturing trades failed to receive any wage increase at all as a result of 1962 negotiations, whereas 33.5 percent of the workers covered by major manufacturing settlements went without a pay hike. BLS noted, however, that the latter group included more than a half-million workers in basic steel and related industries, where contracts provided for increased supplementary benefits which "reportedly increased total expenditures per hour by about 2.5 percent."

The BLS study considered settlements affecting 1,000 or more workers in manufacturing and selected non-manufacturing industries, exclusive of construction, the service trades, finance and government.

It took no account of improved fringe or supplementary benefits, cost-of-living escalator adjustments, wage changes negotiated in earlier years, increases scheduled to go into effect in future years, cases in which contract reopening clauses were not exercised, or negotiations which failed to produce agreements before the end of the year.

Among major contracts still pending as 1962 came to a close were those affecting East and Gulf Coast longshoremen, most New York City newspaper workers and the railroad operating brotherhoods, the bureau noted. The longshoreman contract has since been concluded.

In all, about 4.1 million workers are covered by major agreements—affecting 1,000 or more employes—in which new settlements were not reached in 1962, BLS said. Of this total, it said, about 65 percent are in the electrical equipment, automobile and related industries and received pay hikes negotiated in earlier years.

Among the industries in which major new settlements were reached were aerospace, air line, West Coast, longshoring, maritime, trucking, footwear, petroleum, pottery, electrical utility, retail trade, glass, machinery, copper, paper and pulp and food canning.

SOME OF THE PROBLEMS of retailers were discussed by Blaney Barton (standing), director of labor relations for the American Stores, at a meeting of the Retail Clerks Executive Board in Bal Harbour, Fla. Shown facing the camera are the union's three top officers (from left)—First Vice Pres. Sam Meyers, Pres. James A. Suffridge and Sec.-Treas. William W. Maguire. The RCIA board at the same meeting later proposed a joint labor-management study of the impact of automation on retailing.

Clerks Ask Joint Study Of Changes in Retailing

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A jointly financed union-employer study designed to facilitate technological change while safeguarding job opportunities and the quality of service has been proposed by the Retail Clerks.

Pres. James A. Suffridge announced that the union's executive board has invited "all segments of the retail industry" to join in the study that would "explore all facets of the challenge of modernization."

In addition to easing the way for changes and assuring job security, goals of the study would include a fair day's work for a fair day's pay and maintaining employe morale "free from fear and insecurity brought on by sudden and unanticipated changes in production and distribution."

Suffridge told reporters that leaders and representatives of the major retail chain operations met with the union's executive board to discuss the situation.

The board noted that although retailing has not yet been affected "by major automation," it has felt the "impact of technological innovations." Small stores have virtually disappeared and the chain stores, discount stores and even department stores "are highly mechanized as regards warehousing, inventory control, packaging and many other processes."

This trend "as of now," the board said, has not yet materially reduced total retail employment. The multiplication of outlets "has until now made up for the subtraction of jobs due to self-service and mechanization."

But, the board added, technological changes "may reach an intensity in the near future close to that experienced in heavy industry." "We are deeply concerned, therefore," it added, "about the job security and employment opportunities of our members and retail workers throughout the national economy."

In light of these developments, the board declared, the RCIA "invites management in all segments of the retail industry to join it in a study of new and developing trends."

John Brophy, Veteran Of Labor, Dies at 79

John Brophy, one of the great figures in the American labor movement, died Feb. 19 at his home in Falls Church, Va. He would have been 80 in November.

A union member since 1899, he had been active in some of the bitterest struggles of American workers, rising from a militant rank-and-filer to trusted leader.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, meeting in its midwinter session, adopted a resolution pledging "to carry on the work of the labor movement in the spirit of brotherhood" that Brophy "personified." His work, the council said, "will long stand as a monument to a fruitful life spent in the service of labor, the nation and mankind."

The council designated Vice Pres. James B. Carey as its representative at the funeral, which was held Feb. 22 in St. James Catholic Church, Falls Church. The eulogy was given by Msgr. George G. Higgins, director of the Social Action Dept. of the National Catholic Welfare Conference. Burial was in St. James Cemetery.

He was one of the founders of the Committee for Industrial Organization, forerunner of the former CIO, and was director of industrial union councils until 1950.

Following the AFL-CIO merger he was a special representative in the federation's Industrial Union Dept. until he retired in August 1961.

A Miner at 12

Brophy was born to a coal mining family in St. Helen's, Lancashire, England on Nov. 6, 1883, and nine years later was brought to this country when his family immigrated to central Pennsylvania. When he was 12 his father, Patrick, took him into the soft coal diggings as a full-fledged miner. Four years later, when the Mine Workers reorganized, he joined a local at South Fork.

He worked in the coal mines of Pennsylvania, Michigan and Illinois for 18 years and for three additional years was a check weighman. At all times he was active in the union.

JOHN BROPHY

Elected president of UMW Dist. 2 in 1916, he held the office for 10 years. In 1926, after disagreements with John L. Lewis, he ran for the UMW presidency, was defeated and was expelled but later became a Mine Workers representative again.

He marched on the first picket line when the Rubber Workers struck Goodyear in 1935 and was active in campaigns that led to formation of the Steelworkers, Auto Workers, Glass & Ceramic Workers, Shoe Workers and others. He became a member of the Steelworkers.

He was a member of the National War Labor Board during World War II and of the National Wage Stabilization Board; an advisor at several Intl. Labor Conferences; labor consultant to the United Nations Conference on Trade & Employment at Havana in 1947-8 and a member of the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practices.

He is survived by his widow, the former Anita Anstead; a son, Philip of Falls Church, whose wife is a granddaughter of the late Samuel Gompers, founding president of the AFL; a daughter, Jacqueline, who is associated with the labor education program at Michigan State University; and two sisters, Mrs. Paul Kingston of Pittsburgh and Mrs. Howard Devlin of Ontario, Calif.

Vermont AFL-CIO Opens FEP Drive

Barre, Vt.—The Vermont AFL-CIO will launch a major drive for passage of a state fair employment practices bill, Pres. Ralph E. Williams announced here.

Williams named William Karker, a vice president of the state federation and an international representative of the Ladies' Garment Workers, to head the AFL-CIO committee.

Corporate Profits Rise, All-Time Record Seen

Corporate profits soared to indicated record heights in 1962, despite continued high-level unemployment and sluggish economic growth.

A Wall Street Journal survey estimated fourth-quarter after-tax profits at an annual rate of between $26 billion and $27 billion. The profit rates for the four previous quarters were all close to or above the $26 billion level. A $26 billion total for 1962 would make it the most profitable year in history, more than $1 billion above the 1959 all-time record.

Fourth quarter profits of the first 538 corporations to report earnings were at an annual rate of nearly $29 billion, 11.3 percent above the comparable period in 1961. The Journal said that because the sampling included most industry leaders, a "safer estimate" would be the $26-27 billion rate.

The outlook for the first three months of this year, the Journal said, is for continued near-record profits.

With the exception of steel, virtually every major industry boosted its fourth-quarter profits well above the 1961 level. The biggest gains were for farm equipment companies and airlines, but the auto industry—the nation's largest—showed a 30 percent profit hike, aircraft manufacturing was up 17.3 percent and petroleum products 15.3 percent.

Despite a 42.1 percent drop in profits for 26 steel manufacturers, the net profit increase for 458 industrial companies was calculated at 10.3 percent.

The profit rate for the railroads—which have pleaded financial stringency in connection with proposals for mergers, elimination of service and work rules changes—was more than double that of industrial firms.

Forty-two railroads reported a fourth-quarter profit of $233 million, 25.2 percent above the comparable 1961 figure.

The public utility profit rate was also up. Thirty-eight utilities earned 12.3 percent more after taxes than in the final quarter of 1961.

Industrywide Bargaining Ban Opposed

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The Glass Bottle Blowers have urged Congress to reject consideration of legislation "which would affect industrywide collective bargaining and disrupt harmonious labor relations.

Pres. Lee W. Minton pointed out that the GBBA was one of the first unions to adopt industrywide bargaining in 1902 and that since then "there has not been a single nationwide strike in the glass container industry."

The 60,000-member union, Minton noted, has achieved a record of harmonious relations while productivity has increased in the industry. The union represents members in the glass container, fiberglass, plastics and allied industries.

The executive board, in addition to the legislative statements, voted $150,000 to complete organization of the fiberglass and blown plastic bottle fields, areas in which the union already has a majority of the production workers organized.

The board also adopted a resolution urging the U. S. to renew efforts to create a European Common Market which would include Great Britain and proposed that the Common Market program be eventually extended to Latin America, Africa, and free nations throughout the world.

Pandora's Hucksters

THE PANDORA's BOX which Congress opened 15 years ago—Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act—is still spreading mischief and poisoning labor-management relations.

Most states, if left to themselves, might not see any need to move the clock back to the open shop era of union-busting, but a new profession was born.

There are now people who make their living going from state to state to set up "local" high-powered propaganda and lobbying campaigns for what they misleadingly label "right-to-work" laws. They capitalize on bias and ignorance to sow suspicion and fear of unions.

It can bring only mild satisfaction when these hucksters meet a setback, as in Maine. If experience is a guide, they may be back another year. Meanwhile, they simply move their apparatus to another "target" state. Sometimes, as in Wyoming, after repeated rebuffs, a shift in political control of the executive mansion or the legislature gives them an entering wedge.

One suspects it is not merely the occasional successes of the "work" law promoters that bring a continued flow of funds from a segment of the business community.

One so-called "Right-to-Work" Committee piously declares that it is not against unions, and its U.S. Chamber of Commerce counterpart proclaims it is for what it terms "voluntary unionism."

But the employers who have used the "Right-to-Work" Committee's infamous "Weep" film in an effort to keep their workers from organizing, know better.

An Issue of Perspective

THERE IS A CURRENT, growing concern, voiced by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and others, that collective bargaining is "on trial" because of a number of difficult labor disputes, especially those involving newspapers in New York and Cleveland.

This viewpoint—a reaction to complex and difficult situations involving basic issues of job security—overlooks the background against which collective bargaining has taken place in this country.

David Cole, nationally known arbitrator and mediator and impartial umpire under the AFL-CIO Internal Disputes Plan, put this problem in perspective recently in a series of lectures at Harvard University. He said, in part:

"The right to disagree in industrial disputes and to try and make one's viewpoint prevail are well-established characteristics of our labor-management setting. Our Constitution may be silent on the subject of strikes but it is far too late to question the validity of the strike or its usefulness over the years. There is no doubt that a necessary transformation of attitudes was achieved largely through this instrument. Without it, the doctrine of master and servant would probably still be prevalent.

"But there is another value which the strike and its counterpart, the lockout, have. They serve as the protective techniques to check excesses or extremes in a manner quite compatible with our theory of government. They may lack the orderliness or neatness observable in more authoritarian societies, in which there is no strike problem because there is no real protest voice for labor at all. But neatness was not expected to be one of the virtues of our form of society, political or economic.

"It seems surprising, therefore, that so much alarm is caused by shutdown of operations over labor disputes. As a matter of fact, this very alarm and the steps which are taken because of it seem to balance to prevent more settlements than they achieve."

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	Wm. C. Doherty*
David Dubinsky	David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve
Wm. L. McFetridge	Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson
A. J. Hayes	Joseph D. Keenan	L. S. Buckmaster*
Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph	Richard F. Walsh
Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne	James A. Suffridge
O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller	Paul L. Phillips
Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery	Paul Hall

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, February 23, 1963 No. 8

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

The Traveling Salesman

To Top Undeveloped Resources:

Equal Opportunity for Youth Urged on Congress by Kennedy

The following is excerpted from Pres. Kennedy's special message on the nation's youth sent to Congress on Feb. 14.

THIS IS STILL the greatest nation in the world in which a child can be born and raised. His freedom, his security, his opportunity, his prospects for a full and happy life are greater here than any place on earth. We do not conceal the problems and imperfections which still confront our youth—but they are in large part a reflection of the growing number of youth in this country.

The annual birth rate since 1947 has been 30 percent higher than it was in the 1930's. As a result, the number of youth under 20 rose from 46 million in 1945 to 70 million in 1961, increasing from 33 percent to 39 percent of the total population. At present birth rates, they will number 86 million by 1970.

This on-rushing tide of young persons has overcrowded our education system from the grade schools to the high schools, and is now beginning to overflow our colleges, our graduate schools and the labor market.

This year the number of persons 16 years of age will be more than a million greater than last year, for an increase of 39 percent. And in terms of the number of youth in the potential labor market bracket, ages 14-24, the amount of the increase in this decade over the previous decade—some 6 million—is nearly 15 times as high as the increase which occurred in the 1950's.

Unemployment among young workers is 2.5 times the national average, and even higher among minority groups and those unable to complete their high school education. During the 1960's 7.5 million students will drop out of school without a high school education, at present rates, thereby entering the labor market unprepared for anything except the diminishing number of unskilled labor openings.

In total, some 26 million young persons will enter the job market for the first time during this period, 40 percent more than in the previous decade. Already out-of-school youth, age 16-21, comprise only 7 percent of the labor force but 18 percent of the unemployed. During the school months of 1962 there were on the average 700,000 young persons in this age category out of school and out of work.

Other new or growing problems demand our attention. Our young people are raised in a more complex society than their parents and grandparents. Nearly two-thirds are now reared in metropolitan or suburban settings, unlike the rural and small-town societies of an earlier era. One family in five moves each year. One-third of the labor force now consists of women, 36 percent of whom are mothers with children under 18.

In the last decade, juvenile delinquency cases brought before the courts have more than doubled, and arrests of youth increased 86 percent, until they numbered almost 1 million arrests a year in 1960, 15 percent of all arrests.

WHILE NEW PROBLEMS arise, old problems remain. Young people are particularly hard-hit by the incidence of poverty in this country—where, despite a rapid average increase in disposable income and living standards, the 20 percent of the population at the bottom of the economic ladder still receives only 5 percent of personal income, the same as in 1944.

Rich or poor, too many American children—while taller and heavier than their parents—are still not achieving the physical fitness necessary for maximum performance. Data from the National Health Survey in 1958 show that 4 million children and youth under age 24 had one or more chronic health defects. In a recent survey of 200,000 school children in grades 4 through 12, nearly one-third failed minimum physical achievement tests and over 75 percent failed to reach satisfactory levels in a more comprehensive physical performance test.

Although infant mortality has decreased 75 percent since 1900, the decline has levelled off in the last 10 years and our rate is still higher than that, for example, of Sweden. Some states have an infant mortality rate double that of others.

The lack of adequate medical, educational and cultural opportunity is reflected in the grim statistics on 5 million mentally retarded, discussed in an earlier message, and in the 43 percent rejection rate among Selective Service inductees. Even during the Second World War, when physical and mental standards were not as high, 30 percent, or over 5 million young men, in the 18-37 age group failed their induction examinations.

These figures relate, of course, only to the problems that remain, without stressing the gains. These gains have been very great indeed. All Americans recognize that our children and youth are our most important asset and resource. But there are few resources in this country with a potential so largely undeveloped.

Morgan Says:

Norstad Offers 'Modest' Step Towards World Disarmament

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

ONE OF THE ODD TWISTS of life in our times is that while we are inclined now and then to accuse the military brass of swaggering bellicosity, some of the most distinguished of our generals and admirals turn out to be the most eloquent and insistent advocates of peace. One recalls the passionate public pleas for peace and angry denunciations of war made by Gen. MacArthur shortly after his retirement. Gen. Eisenhower is not a man whom the historians are likely to call a chip-on-the-shoulder president.

Morgan

Perhaps one of the reasons some politicians are more ferocious in their oratorical boldness than mature professional warriors in their reflectiveness is that the military have a more intimate sense of the senselessness of war in the nuclear era and some of them are more willing in the illuminated hindsight of their experience to take more risks for peace than the so-called statesmen sometimes are.

At any rate, now comes the latest of our distinguished military figures to retire, Gen. Lauris Norstad, who, at the ripe age of 55 has given up the twin supreme command of Allied and American forces in Europe and in a significant swan song in his native state of Minnesota, proposed a "first modest step" towards arms inspection and control which he thinks could lead to the bolder eventual move of disarmament. At a homecoming speech in Minneapolis, he said:

". . . The terrible destructiveness of modern war places upon us all a most urgent responsibility for devising means that will discourage and prevent war. The choice before us is immensely difficult and lies within firmly fixed limits: we must reduce the risk of war with all its catastrophic effects but we cannot weaken the guarantees of freedom, we cannot forfeit the means of defending liberty without which we could not live."

And as if to underline the need for patient persistence in searching for a key to unlock this dilemma Norstad picked a wise and moving quotation from our World War II secretary of war, Henry Stimson:

"The sinfulness and weakness of man are evident to anyone who lives in the active world. But men are also good and great, kind and wise. Honor begets honor; trust begets trust; faith begets faith; and hope is the mainspring of life.

"I have lived with the reality of war, and I have praised soldiers; but the hope of honorable, faithful peace is a greater thing, and I have lived with that, too. That a man must live with both together is inherent in the nature of our present stormy state of human progress, but it has also many times been the nature of progress in the past, and it is not reason for despair."

RECOGNIZING towering Russian suspicions about inspection, Norstad proposed to start with essentially a "fact-finding arrangement" which in the beginning would include no reductions in forces, no withdrawals, no disengagements, no limitations on weapons.

Norstad suggested the Soviets and the western powers should draw a line around an area from, say, the Ural Mountains in mid-Russia to the Bay of Biscay on the Atlantic and then exchange blueprints showing all military installations and deployment of forces within that defined land mass. He would then peruse this area by mobile ground inspection; aerial inspection which would be visual, photographic and electronic and by radar.

Here Norstad injected the novelty of "overlapping radar." For example, a NATO radar chain might be established between the Vistula and the eastern Polish border, running north and south and peering into the air space for 150 to 300 miles eastward. In exchange the Soviets might be permitted to peer over a similar radar line along the western border of West Germany and possibly extending into Holland and Denmark.

The first purpose of inspections would be to verify the facts provided in the military blueprints and then the objective would be to keep both sides informed of changes in the military characteristics of the area, thus warning of any preparations for armed attack. The air inspection area would be greater than that for ground inspection and air reconnaissance would pick up any military changes almost immediately.

Undoubtedly the Russians would initially raise objections even against this reciprocal trade in inspections but the effort must not be abandoned to find a way to abate tensions and clear the way for later, more far-reaching agreements. Norstad formulated his views while on high and active service in Europe. As a civilian he could reveal them signifiantly in public for the first time.

According to Newsweek we should be "comforted" by the fact that the total nuclear stockpile in all the world today equals less than one-fifth of one "beach," a term derived from Neville Shute's novel "On the Beach" and meaning "the quantity of fission energy released by nuclear weapons that would produce enough fallout to kill one-half of the world's inhabitants." Well, for Heaven's sakes, let's stop while we're still behind.

Washington Reports:

Blatnick and Saylor See Chance For Passage of Youth Job Bill

CHANCES OF PASSAGE of the Youth Employment Opportunities bill in this session of Congress are excellent, Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.) and Rep. John P. Saylor (R-Pa.) declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations. The bill was the first introduced in each house.

The measure that Pres. Kennedy made the subject of a special message to Congress is needed, Blatnik said, because of excessively high unemployment, with a greater proportion of young people jobless than in any other age group.

Saylor stressed the point that the Youth Employment Opportunities bill will give young people the means of training in some skills and the incentive to continue their education.

As Blatnik explained the bill, one section would set up a modern version of the Civilian Conservation Corps such as the U.S. had in the 30's under Franklin D. Roosevelt. The program would employ 25,000 young men between the ages of 17 and 21 to work in the forests, national parks and soil conservation districts.

"At the end of the year," Blatnik said, "they would have $300, $400, $500 or more saved. They would feel encouraged, having more training and knowing they can handle jobs. We would hope they would go into vocational training schools."

THE SECOND PART of the program would be principally for young people who would be employed in local public services such as libraries and hospitals. They also would get on-the-job training and, in Blatnik's words, "have the wherewithal and the incentive to continue their education."

Saylor said that the legislation was not intended to be a complete answer to youth unemployment.

"There is no one single answer," he asserted.

Blatnik, who served in the CCC, said that this kind of service improves a person mentally as well as physically and gives young men "new high morale."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE WAY TO GET THE FACTS about the relative costs of the federal government is to look at the record, as cited by Sen. Lee Metcalf of Montana in a newsletter to his constituents.

The record shows, it has many times in the past decade and a half, that the activities and debts of state and local governments are increasing at a far more rapid rate than federal activities, despite the terrific impact of defense requirements.

Metcalf cites the 1962-63 edition of Facts and Figures on Government Finance, published by Tax Foundation, Inc., to show that federal government employment was only slightly increased in 1961 above its level of 1946, but that state and local government employment had skyrocketed.

Federal employes in 1946 numbered 2.434 million. The number dropped by nearly 400,000 by 1949, then climbed again during the Korean War and the full development of the Cold War. In 1961, the number was 2.484 million—a 2 percent increase in 15 years.

During this same period, the number of state government employes jumped from 804,000 to 1.627 million—an increase of 102 percent.

The total number of local government employes rose from 2.762 million in 1946 to 4.990 in 1961—an increase of 81 percent.

* * *

VIEWED IN RELATION to the growth in population, the contrast is even more striking. In 1946 the nation's population was 146 million. The number of federal employes per thousand of population was 18. In 1961, the population had risen sharply to 184 million, and the ratio was only 13 federal employes to each 1,000 persons.

During these same years, the total number of state employes climbed from a ratio of 5 per thousand of population to 9 per thousand. The ratio of local government employes zoomed from 19 to 27 per thousand.

In 1946, federal employes were 18 out of a total of 42 government employes per thousand; in 1961 it was 13 out of a total of 49 per thousand.

The record on government debt reveals a comparable pattern.

The gross federal government debt in 1946 was $257 billion and it climbed in 15 years to $289 billion. But because of the increase in population, says the Tax Foundation, "the per capita federal debt burden decreased."

The gross debts of state and local governments during the same period rose 300 percent in the same period. The total jumped from $24.1 billion in 1946 to $75.4 billion in 1961, thus rising in the per capita burden as well as in total. The increase in population was about 33 percent, but the total state and local accumulated government debt tripled.

The debt burden on the states and municipalities is so crushing that legal bonding and borrowing limits have had to be evaded and avoided as well as directly increased. Every state governor is searching for ways to increase revenue; every city faces mountainous financial demands to meet the costs of school construction, teacher salaries, recreation and renewal projects.

This is why mayors of both Republican and Democratic affiliation tend to support federal programs that help meet the problems; the federal government has greater resources to meet the bills.

* * *

REP. FRANK THOMPSON OF NEW JERSEY, who also writes a newsletter to his constituents, recently regaled them with a tale of how he attended a reception given by the New Jersey Chamber of Commerce, but went home instead of remaining for the formal hotel banquet.

His only loss, he mused, is that he "missed about an hour and a half of fascinating speeches." Besides, he notes, the chamber's reception and dinner have become more "sedate." "Gone are the days when U.S. senators jumped up and down on the graves of deceased Presidents." The "senators are much more civilized, more sophisticated these days. It's just not as much fun."

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES BILL, first measure introduced in each house this year, will aid America's jobless youth to be better trained and improve in morale and health, Rep. John P. Saylor (R-Pa.), left, and Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.) declared on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

High Pressure Boys Exploiting Boom in Demand for Seat Belts

By Sidney Margolius

HIGH-PRESSURE SELLERS are exploiting the growing interest in car safety belts by selling substandard equipment for as little as $3.

The substandard sellers trying to take advantage of the belt boom include at least one heavily-advertising accessory chain and also some independent cut-rate service stations and accessory shops.

One of the major tricks, this department has learned, is to label the equipment "Meets SAE Standards," when actually only the bolt or other components may meet the standard of the Society of Automotive Engineers and not the webbing itself.

This department learned that the problem of substandard "safety" belts that aren't really safe has arisen because of the lack of adequate policing of the sale of such equipment. A number of states now have laws providing that belts must meet adequate standards. But it is difficult to police the many hundreds of manufacturers, distributors and retailers in the booming new industry.

A bill recently introduced by Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts (D-Ala.), would set standards for seat belts shipped or sold in interstate commerce. In testimony before Roberts' Health & Safety subcommittee, James K. Williams, director of the Office of Highway Safety of the Bureau of Public Roads, had warned that substandard seat belts are being sold.

Seat belts, on the whole, have been recommended by most authorities as a valuable safety device. In fact Vice Pres. P. L. Siemiller of the Machinists, labor representative on the President's Committee for Traffic Safety, has advised union safety committees throughout the country to encourage members to have the belts installed, and a number of consumer co-op organizations similarly are encouraging use of the belts.

Until the Roberts bill is passed, and even after because of policing difficulties, car owners who want to install belts need to make sure that they meet standards set by the General Services Administration and SAE.

The SAE standard specifies that the webbing should be able to withstand stress of not less than 4,000 pounds, and should not be less than 1⅞ inches wide. The belts should be attached with 7/16-inch bolts using reinforcing plates.

These are the basic specifications. But most of the good quality belts on the market exceed these specifications, and are tested to exceed 5,000 pounds of strain. All-nylon is considered the superior webbing.

TWO TYPES OF BUCKLES are available—metal on metal, and the cam type in which the belt is threaded into the buckle. While some good belts do have the cam type, in general the experts consider the metal on metal superior. This type is considered stronger and also provides for quick release with one hand. In the cam type you would need to thread the webbing out of the buckle in an emergency.

Because some belts have been criticized as inferior, the American Seat Belt Council also has instituted a testing program. Belts made by its members are labeled accordingly. However, some manufacturers of good-quality belts do not belong to the council. Their belts will not carry the council seal but will be labeled as meeting the GSA and SAE specifications.

Can you really get adequate seat belts installed for as little as $3.33 each, as one chain recently advertised? Most experts we consulted think otherwise. Most of the standard-quality belts cost in the neighborhood of $10 plus installation. A few large sellers offer belts meeting government and SAE specifications for as little as $6.

Installation, even in pre-1962 cars, preferably should be done by professional mechanics, to make sure you don't drill into a brake line or wiring, and also to make sure, on older cars, that there is a sizable amount of uncorroded metal available for secure anchorage.

Prices charged by car manufacturers for seat belts ordered as optional equipment are reasonable. Even if you pay full list, the price usually is $17-$18 for two front-seat belts, or about $35 for four belts, including two in the rear seat. The belts ordered with a new car usually cost less than buying and installing them later.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

CAMPAIGN POSTER for the Federal Service Joint Crusade is previewed by Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz at a reception he gave for more than 200 fund-raising executives. The campaign, which benefits CARE, Radio Free Europe and the American-Korean Foundation, will be held in Washington from Mar. 1 to Apr. 15.

Tax Savings Cited:

Homemaker Service Expansion Proposed

THE AMERICAN TAXPAYER is being hit with a dollars and cents loss because homemaker service isn't available to every family that needs it.

That is what Mrs. Katherine B. Oettinger, chief of the Children's Bureau, said in recommending that cities and states spur the development of homemaker service so it will be readily available in every community.

"It costs much less to keep five children at home, if their mother is ill, than to put them in shelter care," she pointed out. "But where homemaker service doesn't exist, public welfare often foots the bill for the shelter care which is the community's only alternative.

"Not only from a dollars and cents standpoint, but from an emotional standpoint, it is much less costly to put a homemaker in a home, even for five years if necessary to give young children the care they need, than to choose an alternative plan of care away from home. The chances are better than average that the homemaker would be able to hold together a family threatened by social or economic disruption.

"We also know that many mothers in public or other low-cost housing projects who are recent arrivals to urban areas simply don't have the know-how to manage the household.

"If they let their housing units get in bad repair they may face eviction. Many homemakers could be used to teach these women—most of them mothers—how to live more adequately in our complex urban society. These mothers want and try to be good mothers, but their children will be short-changed at a critical time in their lives if for example the mother doesn't know how to make good use of modern food processes and doesn't have a chance to learn more about the essentials of child-rearing."

Mrs. Oettinger pointed out that there has been expansion of homemaker service agencies since 1958, but that the number of services now existing is only a fraction of what is needed.

In 1958, there were 145 homemaker services in the country, compared with 208 at the end of 1961. The number of public welfare agencies giving homemaker service nearly doubled during this period (from 34 in 1958 to 66 in 1961) and the number of voluntary agencies went up from 111 to 142.

"We hope that this growth is going to stimulate more interest in the use of homemaker services to preserve and maintain family life," Mrs. Oettinger said.

The 1962 public welfare amendments emphasized the need to expand coverage of child welfare services. In addition, states may use child welfare service grant funds in stimulating the development of these services. Current appropriation to the Children's Bureau for child welfare grants to the states is $25 million.

"For generations our business has been built around the all-day sucker."

From Soup to Nonsense:

Just a Few Hints on Acquiring The Ability to Adjust to Reality

By Jane Goodsell

THE FOLLOWING multiple-choice test is designed to measure your ability to face up to reality. Check one answer to each:

1. You are alone in the house at four in the afternoon, and you decide to take a long, luxurious bubblebath. Just as you sink into a sea of warm, fragrant bubbles, the telephone rings. After momentarily weighing the pros and cons of letting it ring, you leap from the tub and dash to answer it, leaving a trail of soapsuds in your wake. The phone call turns out to be:

a) The emcee of a TV quiz program, offering to pay you $10,000 if you can recall the name of President Kennedy's little daughter.

b) Your next-door neighbor, just calling up to pass the time of day.

c) Your dentist's receptionist, calling to remind you of your 9 a.m. appointment tomorrow.

2. After living for three days on diet wafers and black coffee, you step on the scales to discover that:

a) You have lost five pounds.

b) You weight exactly the same as you did three days ago.

c) You have gained a pound and a half.

3. After being told repeatedly by your husband that you aren't strict enough with the children, you decide to leave the discipline up to him. A couple of days later, Junior is sent home from school for drawing a funny picture of the teacher on the blackboard. You send him up to his room, warning darkly that Daddy will punish him when he gets home. When Daddy walks in the door, you explain the situation and:

a) Daddy marches straight up to Junior's room and gives him a sound thrashing.

b) Daddy pokes his head in Junior's room, tells him not to do a thing like that again, and comes downstairs to announce that he's given the boy a good, stern lecture that he'll never forget.

c) Daddy chuckles that boys will be boys, and spends half an hour closeted with Junior in his room, during which he regales Junior with a sentimental account of a peashooter-teacher episode in his own boyhood, and gets talked into buying Junior a racing bike.

4. Upon arriving home from the hospital after making a miraculous recovery from pneumonia, during which your life hung in the balance for several days, you are greeted by your children who:

a) Smother you with kisses and proclaim their great joy over your recovery.

b) Say, "Hi, Mom! We had hamburgers every night while you were gone!"

c) Run to the door to greet you, shouting, "Did you bring us a present?"

Federal Supervision:

Tentative Rules Set On Drug Advertising

The Food & Drug Administration has issued tentative regulations which spell out terms of government supervision over prescription drug advertisements directed to physicians.

The regulations—subject to modification before becoming final—are based on the Kefauver-Harris pure food and drug law amendments passed by Congress last year after the nation's narrow escape from the baby-deforming thalidomide drug peril.

The AFL-CIO gave strong endorsement to the Kefauver-Harris measure.

Drug manufacturers advertising in professional journals or by direct mail to physicians will be required to give a "fair balance" of information on the hazards and side effects, as well as advantages, of new drugs. Where these hazards are serious, the FDA is given authority to review the advertisements in advance of publication.

Previously, prescription drug advertising was virtually unregulated. The Federal Trade Commission, which normally acts against "misleading" advertising, was barred by law from regulating ads directed solely to physicians.

The FDA said the new regulations include provisions designed to prohibit "artful 'wordsmithing' on labels or in prescription drug advertising which may be misleading, such as use of fanciful names for ingredients . . . or the use of trade names which because of similarity of spelling or pronounciation may lead to confusion with trade names or the established names of other drugs or ingredients."

If advertisements are "seriously misleading," the government would be empowered under the proposed regulations "to remove all stocks of the drug from the market."

Proposed regulations were also announced to cover registration of drug manufacturers and provide inspection and reports on clinical experience.

FIRST CONTRACT believed worked out between an Army installation and a union is signed by Memphis Army Depot officials and representatives of the Operating Engineers and its Local 117. From the left are Lt. Col. H. R. Lovell, post operations officer; Lt. Col. Clyde O. Boring, maintenance officer; Gerald L. Smith, civilian personnel officer; Col. Shelby L. Gillette, post commander; Pres. T. H. Stewart of Local 117; Dominic J. Aiello, committee member; H. E. Miller, IUOE regional director.

Engineers, Army Sign First Pact

Memphis, Tenn.—Operating Engineers Local 117 has signed what it describes as the first labor contract with a Dept. of the Army installation, covering employes of the Engineers Depot maintenance shop here.

The one-year agreement, which has been forwarded to Army headquarters in Washington for approval, was worked out in two months of negotiations following the local's recognition under terms of Pres. Kennedy's executive order, as exclusive bargaining representative for the maintenance shop.

IUOE Regional Dir. H. E. Miller and Gerald Smith, civilian personnel officer for the depot, led negotiating teams for both sides.

Highlights of the contract, in addition to exclusive recognition, include:

- A grievance procedure with arbitration as a final step, backed up by a recognized steward system.
- A basic workweek of five 8-hour days, normally Monday through Friday, with regular starting times and advance notification of shift changes.
- Application of seniority to overtime assignments and choice of vacations.
- Temporary supervisory appointments from the top of the appropriate promotional register.
- Consultation on job reclassifications.
- A joint safety committee.

Ford Foundation Gives $200,000 Grant to ILO

The Ford Foundation has made a $200,000 grant to the Intl. Labor Organization to enable its new Intl. Institute for Labor Studies in Geneva to hold additional international training courses and to conduct special research on labor-management problems in developing countries.

In other developments, ILO Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse announced that:

- The Ivory Coast will contribute $12,000 to the endowment fund of the international institute, according to word from Kouassi Kouadio, secretary-general of the Presidency of the republic and minister of foreign affairs. The gift raises to 38 the number of ILO member-governments that have contributed to the institute.
- Dr. Luis Alvarado, Peruvian diplomat and lawyer, has been appointed ILO liaison officer in Washington for Latin American activities with responsibility for coordinating ILO operations in that area with the technical cooperation activities of such agencies as the Organization of American States, Inter-American Development Bank, Alliance for Progress, Intl. Bank for Reconstruction & Development, Intl. Monetary Fund, Intl. Development Association and the U.S. Agency for Intl. Development.

Alvarado was the first Latin American to be chairman of the ILO Governing Body, serving in 1947-8. From 1949 to 1958 he was an ILO assistant director-general, later becoming Peruvian ambassador to Bolivia and minister of labor and of foreign affairs. He was elected president of the 44th ILO session in 1960.

The Ford Foundation gift will enable the international institute to hold two study courses in 1964 instead of one as in 1962 and 1963, according to Dir. Hilary A. Marquand.

The institute will now consider holding regional study courses, he said; the holding of a research conference on industrial relations and economic development in 1964 with participation by experts from countries in all stages of development; and the institution of other research projects.

The 1963 program includes:

- A seminar on problems of planning the labor force and its employment, organized jointly with the Institute of National Planning in Cairo.
- A round-table conference of ministers from African nations who will attend the 47th Intl. Labor Conference in Geneva in June.
- A conference on the problems of employment in economic development, scheduled for Geneva and to be held in cooperation with the Intl. Economic Association.
- The second study course, to be held in Geneva Sept. 16-Dec. 6.

Local Labor Council Pulls Blood Bank Out of a Hole

Here is a case study of how the Lawrence County (Ind.) United Council of Labor pulled the community blood bank out of a hole with spectacular success. The information came in a letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany from Robert Delphia, chairman of the county blood program, and the Rev. J. Nuel Ellis, chairman of the county Red Cross chapter.

Lawrence County has a population of 36,500 persons who need 1,407 pints of blood a year. The collecting is done by a mobile unit out of the regional blood center in Louisville, Ky., making 10 trips a year.

The labor council, which like the Red Cross has its headquarters in Bedford, first offered in January 1960 to sponsor one bloodmobile trip a year, and agreed to recruit at least 141 pints, the minimum for a visit. The unit set up its equipment in the Auto Workers Hall and each year the council has exceeded its all-union quota—178 pints the first year, 154 pints in 1961 and 169 pints in 1962.

An honor roll of donors was kept by the council with a star representing each donation. Each year solicitation letters were sent out to those who had contributed in the past, asking them to give again.

This year the visit was set for Jan. 24. The Red Cross was falling farther and farther behind in collections. The labor council was notified of the increasingly desperate situation early in November 1962 and told that at least 205 pints would be needed to reach parity.

"All of the many unions connected with the labor council pitched in to help," the two officials reported. "A spot in front of a vacant store building in downtown Bedford was secured and donations from a local lumberyard were made available to the Carpenters Union, which erected a blood donor pledge booth. On the Friday and Saturday before Christmas members of all local unions took turns manning this booth. The theme was 'Pledge a Christmas Gift Now to Your Community.' The local newspapers and radio station pitched in with excellent coverage and a total of 126 pledge cards was signed. At the same time, pledge cards were sent to the various business agents to be distributed to their members."

The campaign was intensified during the week before Jan. 24, with another mailing of letters to past donors. Then, at the last minute, it looked as if the elements had entered into a conspiracy to spoil everything—on Jan. 22 the county had 6 inches of snow on top of a coating of ice. On Jan. 24 the temperature was 17 degrees below zero when most Bedfordites got up. The driving was the most hazardous in years, and the bloodmobile was two hours late arriving.

"In spite of this unfortunate turn of events," the two chairmen advised Meany, "and in only four hours, a total of 235 pints of blood was collected.

"We are telling you this story in detail in the hope it will help some other labor council somewhere team up with its local Red Cross chapter in this vital service. Several of our bloodmobile visits have various sponsors, but none are nearly so efficient and willing as the United Labor Council.

The blood bank and Red Cross chairmen joined in praise for the cooperation of the three labor council presidents with whom they have worked since the bloodmobile began its visits—Joseph Bowie the first year, then Robert Southern, who is now a member of the Red Cross board of directors, and, currently, Lonnie Goff.

Min and Bill Matheson Honored At Wyoming Valley Farewell

Wilkes-Barre—In an unprecedented display of community appreciation, approximately 800 persons representing management, labor and civic leaders of the Wyoming Valley honored Min and Bill Matheson, husband-wife team of the Ladies' Garment Workers, at a farewell dinner in Wilkes College gymnasium here.

The affair was a demonstration by the people of Wyoming Valley of the high esteem and appreciation for the couple's years of service.

Mrs. Matheson, manager of the ILGWU's Wyoming Valley Dist., has been named director of the union's Label Dept. and will move to New York City. Her husband, ILGWU educational director here, will continue his educational activities in that department in New York.

The community's feelings toward the Mathesons was summed up by the message that was printed on table folders that bore a picture of the honored couple. It read:

"Over the years you have reached out and helped the handicapped and afflicted . . . you have extended a warm hand of understanding to families in crisis . . . your arms have encircled many times the neglected child, the orphaned youngster . . . you have always been loyal, concientious and devoted.

"To you, Min and Bill, who have done all these things, we give our appreciation and our love."

Laudatory telegrams were read by Dr. Eugene Farley, Wilkes College president, who was program chairman. Among the telegrams were those of ILGWU Pres. David Dubinsky, Senators Joseph S. Clark and Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, Dir. David Gingold of the ILGWU's Northeast Dept., and Charles Zimmerman, general manager of the Dressmakers' Joint Council.

Mayor Frank Slattery of Wilkes-Barre presented the symbolic keys of the city to the Mathesons and a citation acknowledging their many years of work for the Wyoming Valley United Fund was presented by Roy E. Morgan, fund president.

In delivering the principal address, Rep. Daniel J. Flood lauded the Mathesons for their achievements in the community life of Wyoming Valley as well as in the union movement.

In responding to the tributes, Matheson discounted reports that Min's leaving would "seriously affect" the garment industry in Wyoming Valley. He said the real problem was to get young people to take jobs in local industry.

Mrs. Matheson told how the ILGWU "is a way of life" which has always made itself a part of every community in which it was born, and added that the community's tribute was also a tribute to the union and its members.

The Mathesons came to the Wilkes-Barre area in 1944, when there were only five out of approximately 100 shops that were organized. Today there are more than 150 union shops with a total membership of more than 10,000.

Jodoin Urges Anti-Bias Law Enforcement

Montreal, Que.—A call for enforcement of laws "which strike at age-old prejudices" was sounded by Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress in accepting a plaque from the Jewish Labor Committee.

The committee honored Jodoin for his long fight against racial and religious discrimination and to focus attention on efforts of the Canadian labor movement in the promotion of human rights.

Jodoin recalled early joint efforts of the committee and the then divided labor movement to help solve the problems of discrimination and prejudice. This led eventually for a campaign for legislation which, he said, "has been successful to a degree unmatched in any other country."

However, enforcement of such laws, Jodoin pointed out, has proved difficult.

"Government departments require more staff to do the work," he said. "The part-time personnel require more background and experience. There are too many delays in processing complaints. The public at large has not yet been drawn into the work in advisory committees.

"Not enough is being done in the way of a public education program to inform people of the existence of the protective legislation. Of what use is an FEP law to an Indian citizen in Manitoba, or to a Negro citizen of Nova Scotia, if he neither knows that there is a law to protect his rights, or knows where to file a complaint? A broad educational program is required to let the people know their rights.

"Our task now is to make certain that the laws which have been passed will become living, working realities rather than mere words gathering dust."

Union Names Scholarship For Meredith

New York—Harvey Gantt, who enrolled recently as the first Negro at Clemson College in South Carolina, is the recipient of a $1,115 scholarship grant from Community & Social Agency Employes Local 1707 of the State, County & Municipal Workers.

The scholarship, designated specifically for a Negro student seeking an education in an integrated school in the South, was established in the name of James Meredith, the Negro who has braved mobs, physical attacks and indignities to remain at the University of Mississippi.

Gantt, who has not been subjected to the same treatment, wrote Local 1707 expressing gratitude for the award and declaring that he would "try hard to make it profitable."

He was chosen for the scholarship by a selection committee composed of Harry Bell, chairman of the local's civil rights committee; Mrs. Constance Baker Motley, assistant director of the legal defense and education fund of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and Richard Plout, director of the National Scholarship Service & Fund for Negro Students.

Ford Local 600 Buys Israeli Bonds

Detroit—Ford Local 600 of the Auto Workers has bought $50,000 in Israeli bonds in what Financial Sec. Ross Reilly described as the largest purchase of the securities by an individual local in any international union.

73 YEARS OF MEMBERSHIP in the Typographical Union is behind the secret ballot William A. Rose casts in the ITU referendum, which carried by a 3-1 margin, for a 3 percent assessment to continue benefits for striking and locked-out members of Local 6 in New York. Harold Hicks, left, benefit clerk of the local, checks off Rose's name from the roster of retired "Big 6" members.

Chemical Workers Ask Tight Radiation Control

Akron, O.—The Chemical Workers have urged the federal government to take a "new approach" to eliminating atomic radiation hazards to workers by "pinning down" responsibility to a single agency and adopting the "linear" concept that any amount of radiation is harmful.

Declaring that the present system results in "practically no control at all," ICWU Pres. Walter L. Mitchchell called on the government to establish a single authority for control of radiation hazards under the U. S. Public Health Service. This, he said, would replace the present division of responsibility among the Atomic Energy Commission, the Labor Dept. and several state agencies.

"We're talking about thousands of lives, not just a paper kingdom," Mitchell declared.

The secrecy of the government's atomic energy operations and the division of responsibility have combined to prevent "any real action" to eliminate unsafe working conditions, Mitchell asserted in a statement.

"No one has complete information," he said, "and no one has complete control. No single agency feels responsible, and because bits and pieces of the problem are scattered through various agencies, little is being done to halt the deadly effects of radiation exposure."

Limited Exposure Hit

He attacked the "tendency to accept" the so-called "threshold concept" of radiation control, under which a worker is permitted to undergo certain measured doses of radiation before steps are taken to reduce exposure.

Mitchell called instead for more effective controls under the "linear concept," which finds danger in any amount of exposure to radiation and calls for immediate countermeasures.

The ICWU president noted that a resolution advocating the linear concept had been approved by some 400 members of the union at the Dow Chemical Co. plant operated for the AEC at Rocky Flats, Colo. The resolution, which calls for establishment of a National Radiation Authority under the Public Health Service, has been endorsed by a number of other ICWU locals at atomic energy installations.

"An end to radiation hazards is one of our union's major goals," he emphasized. "Our members risk their lives daily to keep our country out front in atomic energy, and government must let them know they're not the 'forgotten men' of this generation."

The ICWU's suggested solution to the problem of radiation controls—the linear concept administered by a central authority—was adopted at a meeting of its executive board in January with Leo Goodman, atomic energy specialist with the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., who also was a major speaker at the union's convention last October.

Talks Continue in New York:

3 Newspaper Unions Agree in Cleveland

Tentative settlement have been reached by three of the unions involved in Cleveland's newspaper shutdown, but talks continued in New York City, where eight dailies are suspended, with no further reports of progress.

The Newspaper Guild's Cleveland local, which struck the Plain Dealer and the Press & News, reached tentative agreement with the papers on two-year contracts providing wage increases of $7.50 to $10, plus higher night differentials and clauses guaranteeing maintenance of membership. Ratification votes were scheduled by both units Feb. 22.

Earlier, the Pressmen and the Paper Handlers voted to accept two-year packages containing $10 in pay hikes plus improved vacation and manning provisions.

Four other unions—Typographical, ITU Mailers, Machinists and the unaffiliated Teamsters—still are on strike, however, and two more—the Photo Engravers and the Stereotypers—also are bargaining on new contracts.

In New York, Pres. Bertram A. Powers of the Striking ITU Local 6 cautioned that the parties were still "far apart" on key issues despite a report by Mayor Robert F. Wagner earlier that a number of the areas of dispute had been resolved in talks at City Hall.

Wagner's latest mediation effort was a meeting between representatives of the publishers and the nonstriking crafts to discuss the shorter workweek, reportedly one of the stumbling blocks in the path of a settlement, along with higher wages and the contract termination date.

The printers are seeking a reduction of 15 minutes a day in scheduled working time to cut the standard workweek from 36¼ hours to 35 hours, a ceiling which has been in effect under ANG contracts for several years.

Meanwhile, in Colorado Springs, Colo., ITU Pres. Elmer Brown announced that union printers had voted 3-1 in an international referendum to assess themselves 3 percent of earnings to continue benefits for striking and locked-out members in New York and Cleveland. The official results, Brown said, were 62,913 for the assessment, 21,869 against.

In Washington, the Guild's international executive board adopted a resolution strongly supporting the ITU strikers in New York, urging the publishers to enter into "genuine collective bargaining" and calling on the city's unstruck dailies to resume full publication.

The New York printers struck four newspapers on Dec. 8—the News, Times, Journal-American and the World-Telegram & Sun—whereupon four others voluntarily shut down—the Mirror, Post, Herald Tribune and Long Island Star-Journal—and the Long Island Press halted circulation of its New York City edition.

Striking Woodsmen Agree on Arbitration

Toronto, Ont.—After 33 days the tragedy-marred strike of northern Ontario loggers came to an end on Feb. 16 with the acceptance of arbitration of the issues in dispute by the union and companies.

The toll included three strikers killed and nine wounded and a heavy economic loss. The walkout was called by the Lumber & Sawmill Workers Union, a division of the Carpenters, in order to win from Spruce Falls Power & Paper Co. and Kimberly-Clark the settlement pattern achieved earlier at Abitibi Power & Paper Co. The basis for ending the strike was worked out in Toronto during a marathon session in the offices of the Ontario Labor Dept.

Joseph LaForce, president of the union's Kapuskasing local, said he accepted arbitration unhappily and only because the alternative would have been arbitration by legislation.

"It means that in future disputes, management will hold back and let the government have arbitration or legislation," he said. "God help the trade union movement if this is to be forced down our throats every time there is a serious dispute."

The decision to accept arbitration came after every other effort to reach a settlement in the talks in Toronto had failed.

With the strike over, the rush was on to move pulpwood out of the bush before the frozen muskeg melts into bogs.

Awaiting trial on charges of noncapital murder, after the shooting of the three strikers, are 19 independent woodcutters who homestead on government-granted land.

The police have also charged 237 strikers with rioting as a result of the clash that resulted in the death of the strikers under gunfire from the homesteader-loggers.

Hotpoint Unit Gives GE 'Lesson in Boulwarism'

Chicago—The Hotpoint Division of General Electric Co.—for 56 years a non-union holdout in the Chicago-Cicero area—can give its parent corporation a lesson in "Boulwarism," according to the Sheet Metal Workers.

The union, which won bargaining rights for 2,500 workers last May, has filed unfair labor practice charges with the National Labor Relations Board and asked the Board to seek a court order compelling the company to bargain in good faith.

Hotpoint has not budged from its original contract proposal in the course of 40 negotiating sessions, and its offer provides no immediate wage increases or other economic benefits, the union said. In addition, management proposed a grievance procedure in which the company would have the final say. This is the so-called "Boulware formula," a spokesman charged.

The union said it "has made every effort to reach an agreement, including scaling down original proposals and offering numerous concrete counter-proposals." Its statement continued:

"The company, following its preconceived policy of not bargaining in good faith, has responded to the union's counter-proposals with a monotonous unchanging negative position.

"The company's record is stuck on 'no' and the union has been unable to budge management from its groove."

Among the specific unfair labor practices charged by the Sheet Metal Workers are "refusal to recognize union stewards in grievance handling, failure to furnish the union with information about the GE pension plan, refusal to furnish the union with time and motion data, and refusal to permit the union to use company bulletin boards."

Union members overwhelmingly voted strike authorization at a special meeting Jan. 20. A later poll of Hotpoint workers backed the union position by a better than 4-1 margin.

Edward J. Carlough, SMW director of organization, charged management with attempting "to force a strike."

In a letter to the Illinois congressional delegation and members of the House and Senate labor committees, he termed the company's refusal to agree to arbitration of disputes arising under a contract as "incredible" and "in keeping with the Stone Age." His letter concluded:

"I am sending this communication in the hope that the next time you hear or read a comment about 'strike-happy' labor unions, you may remember the 2,500 working men and women employed at Hotpoint plants in Chicago and Cicero, Ill., and the choice they are being forced to make."

Supreme Court Unanimous:

NLRB Denied Power Over 'Flags of Convenience' Ships

The Supreme Court has ruled that U.S. labor law does not apply to the foreign crews of foreign-flag vessels even though the ships are owned by U.S.-controlled companies or do substantial trading in U.S. ports.

Congress could have extended the scope of the Taft-Hartley Act to cover such crews but did not do so, said the court's 8-0 opinion written by Justice Tom C. Clark.

In the absence of specific action by Congress, there is no basis for applying U.S. law in the face of treaties and the "well-established rule of international law that the law of the flag state ordinarily governs the internal affairs of a ship," the court said, adding:

"We conclude here that the arguments should be directed to the Congress rather than to us."

The effect of the high court's decisions in two similar cases is to overturn the National Labor Relations Board's assertions of jurisdiction and deny the use of NLRB machinery to American maritime unions attempting to organize the crews of the so-called "runaway ships."

These are vessels owned directly or indirectly by U.S. firms but registered under "flags of convience" of foreign nations to avoid U.S. taxes, maritime regulations and wage rates.

The unions have charged that government policies permitting such foreign registry have resulted in serious shrinkage of the U.S. merchant fleet and a consequent loss of thousands of jobs once held by American seamen.

Pres. Paul Hall of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. and of the Seafarers, commenting on the decision, said the maritime unions would continue their fight against "runaway-flag" shipping.

Merchant Marine Threatened

"The runaway device," Hall declared, "is one of the major factors which threaten the existence of an adequate U.S. merchant marine."

Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union said the NMU's efforts to organize seamen and win union contracts on the runaway-flag ships "will not stop" in spite of the high court's decision.

The decision makes it necessary for the government to "give new consideration to its policies in the maritime field," he added, because the runaway ships cannot be considered a part of the merchant marine for defense purposes.

Although the eight justices taking part in the case were unanimous in their ruling (Justice Arthur J. Goldberg did not participate), Justice William O. Douglas said he concurred because his views had been rejected in an earlier case but was "not without some misgivings."

"For the practical effect of our decision," Douglas observed, "is to shift from all the taxpayers to seamen alone the main burden of financing an executive policy of assuring the availability of an adequate American-owned merchant fleet for federal use during national emergencies."

Leading Case Decided

In the leading case decided by the court, the NLRB had ordered an election sought by the NMU among seamen on a fleet of freighters operated by Empresa Hondurena de Vapores, a wholly-owned Honduran subsidiary of the United Fruit Co. The company's ships had Honduran papers and Honduran crews represented by a Honduran union, the Sociedad Nacional de Marineros de Honduras, but were, the NLRB held, an integral part of the United Fruit fleet.

The U.S. 2nd Circuit Court of Appeals enjoined the NLRB regional director from conducting the election and the Honduran union obtained another injunction against the board members in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

The Supreme Court decided the case by upholding the latter injunction.

The second case involved two Liberian-registered cruise ships owned by an Italian firm, Incres Steamship Co., Ltd., which operated chiefly between New York and the Caribbean. When one of the ships was picketed by the Intl. Maritime Workers Union—formed by the NMU and the SIU to organize the crews of foreign-flag vessels—Incres obtained an injunction against the picketing in a New York State court and brought action for damages.

On the same day, the IMWU filed unfair labor practice charges against the company with the NLRB. The injunction later was reversed by the State Court of Appeals on the ground that the NLRB had exclusive jurisdiction.

The basic issue in the Incres case, however, is the same as in the Sociedad Nacional—the application of U. S. labor law—the Supreme Court ruled in reversing the New York Court of Appeals.

In the United Fruit case, the high court said that the NLRB's system of "balancing" a ship's foreign contacts against its American contacts to determine whether the board had jurisdiction might ultimately require "that the board inquire into the internal discipline and order of all foreign vessels calling at American ports."

"Such activity would raise considerable disturbance not only in the field of maritime law but in our international relations as well," the Supreme Court declared.

At any rate, the Supreme Court noted, in an earlier case it had searched the language and legislative history of the Taft-Hartley Act and concluded that this history "inescapably describes the boundaries of the act as including only the workingmen of our own country and its possessions."

If the sponsors of the original act or of its amendments "conceived" of its application to crews of vessels registered under foreign flags, "they failed to translate such thoughts into describing the boundaries" of the act, Clark wrote.

"We find no basis for a construction which would exert United States jurisdiction over," the court said, the "internal management and affairs of the vessels flying the Honduran flag, contrary to the recognition long afforded them not only by our State Dept., but also by Congress."

"Our attention is called to the well-established rule of international law that the law of the flag state ordinarily governs the internal affairs of a ship," it added: ". . . The possibility of international discord cannot therefore be gainsaid."

AFL-CIO Staff Retiree Dies at 69

Ruth Purcell, an employe of the AFL-CIO and the predecessor AFL for 47 years prior to her retirement at the end of 1961 and a noted beauty in her youth, died suddenly at her home in Washington. She was 69.

Miss Purcell began work for the former AFL in 1914, when Samuel Gompers was president. She was employed in a local union section and in the file room, and later worked with the late Florence Thorne in what has been described as labor's pioneer research effort. She was assigned to the AFL research department when Miss Thorne retired and continued in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research until her own retirement.

A winner in one of the country's first beauty contests, Miss Purcell went to Hollywood under a film contract as a young girl. She served as a model for several magazine covers drawn by the late Howard Chandler Christy, noted painter of beautiful women.

There were no survivors. Funeral services were held in St. Matthew's Cathedral, Washington, with burial in Mt. Olivet Cemetery.

20,000 Detroiters Line Up For 60 Post Office Jobs

Detroit—Twenty thousand persons lined up at the federal building here to apply for 60 jobs the Post Office will fill through a three-hour competitive examination.

Many of them had been searching for months for jobs which private industry couldn't supply; some had been out of work for years. A Detroit Free Press reporter wrote:

"In some instances, whole families came. Unemployed fathers with their sons. Mothers with their sons and daughters. Husbands and wives."

A mother of four children, subsisting on an aid to dependent children grant, told the reporter:

"I'll be a clerk. I'll work the night shift. I'll drive a truck. I'll do anything . . . If I can carry my kids and my groceries and carry a sofa all the way to the basement alone, I can carry a sack of mail."

Others echoed the refrain: "I'll take anything."

The secretary of the Civil Service examining board commented:

"We're pleased with a large turnout. If you're looking for the most qualified, this will do it."

Local Broadens Scholarship Plan

New York—Hotel & Club Workers Local 6 has voted to expand its Gertrude Lane Memorial Scholarship program for the children of union members and to continue the college counselling service inaugurated last year, and has authorized a study of the possibility of extending scholarship aid to members of the local themselves.

The scholarship program honors a pioneer organizer and secretary-treasurer of the local who died a decade ago. For 1963, it will consist of one award of $1,000 a year for four years and two others of $500 a year for four years.

THIS LICENSE PLATE happens to carry the pet slogan for next year's presidential race of its elated owner, Sam Priven, a member of Carpenters Local 25 in Los Angeles and a veteran participant in the work of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

Heywood Broun Award Won by Kelsey Story

The Washington Post story of Dr. Frances O. Kelsey's struggle to keep the baby-deforming drug thalidomide off the American market has won the Newspaper Guild's 1962 Heywood Broun award for Reporter Morton Mintz.

Mintz's story, credited as a major factor in enactment of strengthened federal drug controls, was selected from more than 100 entries in the 22nd annual competition, established as a memorial to Broun, the late New York columnist who helped found the Guild and served as its first president.

ANG Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson presented the $500 cash award and citation to Mintz during a meeting of the ANG executive board in Washington.

The award-winning reporter is immediate past chairman of the Guild unit at his paper. Earlier this year he was nominated for another ANG award in recognition of outstanding local Guild leadership.

In submitting Mintz's story for the journalism competition, Post Managing Editor Alfred Friendly cited the far-reaching effects of the article in arousing the public and Congress to the dangers of thalidomide, the drug responsible for thousands of birth deformities in Europe.

"By universal acclaim and acknowledgment," Friendly said, "it was this article, following a few tentative and sterile forays by other reporters, that brought the 'thalidomide story' to national attention and set in train the profound and far-reaching protective measures that ensued.

"The passage of the theretofore doomed Drug Industry Act of 1962, the reorganization of the Food & Drug Administration, the appointment of Dr. Kelsey to be principal watchdog for the FDA, and the root-to-branch review of the American drug industry and its marketing procedures were among the principal consequences."

The Mintz article was the unanimous choice of the judging panel, composed of Rep. Leo W. O'Brien (D-N.Y.), a Guild member and former newspaperman; James M. Minifie, Washington correspondent for the Canadian Broadcasting Corp.; and J. R. Wiggins, editor of the Washington Post.

First honorable mention went to Charles L. Roach of the Denver Rocky Mountain News for an article exposing the arrest of a Hungarian refugee for failure to pay a milk bill owed by another.

Also receiving honorable mention were stories by Ted Dinsmore of the Toronto Telegram, Charles McGregor of the Toronto Telegram, Richard Hurt of the Boston Globe, and Don Marshall of the Jersey Journal, Jersey City, N. J.

State High Court Gives Strikers Vacation Pay

Madison, Wis.—The Wisconsin State Supreme Court has ruled that members of Auto Workers Local 180 are entitled to the vacation pay denied them while they were on strike against the J. I. Case Co. in Racine during the summer of 1960.

The 4-3 decision reversed a lower court ruling that since the union contract had expired, there was no contractual obligation for vacations and that the workers couldn't have taken the vacations anyway because they were on strike.

The high tribunal, in a majority decision written by Justice Thomas Fairchild, ruled that the deciding question was not whether there was a contract, but "when were these vacations earned?"

"The facts were that they were earned the year before," the ruling said. "In fact, all vacations are earned before they are taken. Therefore, it made no difference whether the employes were working or whether they were on strike; this was money they were entitled to."

The high court sent the case back to the lower court for further proceedings, including setting the amount of vacation pay due the workers.

The Case strikers sued the company through their UAW local for nearly $800,000, plus interest, representing the amount denied them for vacations during the period from June 1 to Sept. 1, 1960. They had struck the farm equipment manufacturer on Mar. 9 of that year and returned to work on Sept. 19.

Senate Tempers Flare:

Congress Steps Up Committee Activity

The 88th Congress moved into its seventh week with signs of stepped-up committee activity, but litle other visible evidence of its legislative labors to date.

In the Senate, the aftermath of an unsuccessful effort to strengthen the anti-filibuster rule found sharp words exchanged amid public charges of "retaliation" in committee assignments and "deals" made by the Republican-Southern Democratic coalition. Both Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield and GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen denied the charge.

While the House met in only token and infrequent sessions, three major Administration bills were being considered in commitee hearings.

The Ways & Means Committee remained in session on the President's tax cut and tax reform proposals; the House Education & Labor Committee continued hearings on the omnibus Federal aid to education bill, and one of its subcommittees heard testimony on the Youth Employment Opportunities bill.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz was scheduled to testify on behalf of the youth bill before the House subcommittee Feb. 25—while on the same date a Senate Labor subcommittee planned to open hearings on the bill, which Pres. Kennedy has termed "a measure of the first priority."

Another House Labor subcommittee will take up on Feb. 26 a labor-backed bill to include the value of fringe benefits in determining prevailing wages that must be paid by contractors under the Davis-Bacon Act.

Sen. Joseph S. Clark (D-Pa.) lashed out at his colleagues on the 15-member Democratic Steering Committee for refusing to increase the size of the conservative-dominated Senate Finance Committee to give the Democrats representation proportional to their strength in the Senate.

The effect, he said, is that Kennedy's tax and medical care programs will be "stalled" in an unfriendly committee.

Mansfield (Mont.) told the Senate he had sought to enlarge the committee but abandoned the effort because a combination of Republican and southern Democratic votes would have been able to block the measure. He voiced regret at "washing our dirty Democratic linen in public."

During an acrimonious afternoon of debate, Sen. Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.), leader of the southern forces, sharply denounced reports that southerners and Republicans had agreed to keep the Finance Committee at an 11-6 party ratio so as to ensure a seat for Dirksen (Ill.), while raising the Democratic majority on the important Appropriations Committee from 17-10 to 18-9.

This had the effect of bumping Sen. Jacob K. Javits (N. Y.), a member of the GOP's liberal wing. Javits had opposed both Dirksen and the southern bloc on the filibuster rules issue.

Clark blocked an immediate vote vote on the committee size and membership and submitted a series of amendments to enlarge three committees which were to be voted on Feb. 25.

EXPANDED PROGRAMS of organization and education were approved by Western Hemisphere affiliates of the Intl. Metalworkers Federation at their recent inter-American meeting in Santos, Brazil. Shown at one of the sessions are, left to right (in front of table), Rudy Faupl of the Machinists; Dean Clewes and Alberto Garca of the Steelworkers, and USWA Vice Pres. Howard Hague; (behind table) William Mahoney, USWA Canadian director; Kermit Mead of the Auto Workers; Ben Segal of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; UAW Canadian Dir. George Burt; Victor G. Reuther of the UAW, and Vernon Jirikowic of the IAM.

Reuther Urges Speed In $10 Billion Tax Cut

A four-point program to attack the problems of high unemployment and retarded growth through a "massive expansion" of consumer demand has been urged on the Joint Economic Committee of Congress by AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

"The most important deficit we face is not the budget, but the deficit on the job front," declared Reuther, who is chairman of the AFL-CIO Committee on Economic Policy.

In a statement filed with the congressional committee, now conducting hearings on Pres. Kennedy's Economic Report, Reuther called for:

- An immediate tax cut of $10 billion concentrated in the lowest income brackets "where it will do the most good and generate the maximum economic thrust."
- A "major increase" in federal spending "to meet our social deficits in such fields as education, health, housing, urban renewal, mass transportation, and resource conservation and development, together with a substantial increase in international economic aid."
- "A dynamic and positive wage policy designed to increase private consumer demand by increasing wages and salaries" to make up for the lag in real wages behind productivity.
- Machinery to apply the force of public opinion "as a restraining influence on administered price abuses" and give "maximum effect to demand-producing measures."

Reuther attacked the "negative and restrictive" influence of conservatives who insist on a balanced budget and declared that:

"In comparison with the total size of our economy, the share of our wealth devoted to public spending has been sharply reduced and our national debt has become steadily less burdensome. Yet we continue to deny ourselves essential services that can only be provided through public spending, and to deny the economy the needed increase in demand that would flow from that spending."

Distillery Union Officer Dies

Lawrenceburg, Ind.—Vice Pres. Mabel J. Lutherbeck of the Distillery Workers, financial secretary of Local 6 here, died in Orlando, Fla., en route to a meeting of the union's general executive board.

Miss Lutherbeck had been an international vice president since 1946 and financial secretary of her local since 1942. Since April 1960 she had been one of the three labor trustees of the union's social security fund.

Pres. Mort Brandenburg delivered a brief eulogy at funeral services here and called for a 30-day period of mourning during which all affiliates will drape their charters in black. Miss Lutherbeck was survived by a sister, Ruth.

Four Freedoms Appoints Ramage

New York—Executive Sec. Chet Ramage of the King County (Wash.) AFL-CIO has been named to the national advisory committee of Four Freedoms, it has been announced by William R. Steinberg, president of both Four Freedoms and the American Radio Association.

Metal Unions Plan Drives In Americas

Santos, Brazil — Programs to broaden organization and educational activities were adopted by delegates to the second interAmerican conference of the Intl. Metalworkers Federation here.

The meeting was held in this booming city to encourage and help the Sao Paulo Federation of Metal Workers, which recently affiliated with the IMF on behalf of its 350,000 members and which has been under fire from the Communists.

Major conference programs were drawn up by committees on organization and education, economic development, and collective bargaining.

Delegates representing unions in General Electric Co. plants in Brazil, Canada, Chile, Colombia, Mexico, the United States and Uruguay were found at a sector meeting for the electrical industry. Meetings also were held for the automotive, iron and steel, and mechanical and metal products industries.

A two-day labor education seminar followed the IMF regional session. Sessions were conducted by Kermit Mead of the Auto Workers; Alberto Garca of the Steelworkers; Ben Segal of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, all of the U.S.; Fritz Hauser of the German Metalworkers Union, and Karl Casserini, IMF research director.

Others attending from North America included Vice Pres. Howard Hague, Canadian Dir. William Mahoney and Dean Clewes of the USWA; Rudy Faupl and Vernon Jirikowic of the Machinists; and Canadian Dir. George Burt and Victor G. Reuther of the UAW.

Paid Voting Time Restoration Asked

Albany, N. Y.—The New York State AFL-CIO has asked the legislature to restore the right of workers to two hours off with pay to vote in elections.

Donald Berger, a legislative representative of the state federation, told a joint legislative committee that a 1960 amendment which curtailed this right was "an attempt to block the effectiveness of labor at the polls."

The Republican-sponsored amendment limited the time off to workers who otherwise would be unable to get to the polls before they closed. The result, the state federation said, is that "the purpose for which the original law was enacted, to encourage voting, has been frustrated."

New Health Care Plan Adds Benefit Options

(Continued from Page 1)

provision to permit the use of private insurance carriers or for administration of the plan by private organizations such as Blue Cross. Both points were part of last year's compromise and also are contained in a new bill just introduced by Javits and four other GOP liberal senators.

As outlined by the President, the new Anderson-King bill would provide:

- Up to 90 days hospitalization for each illness with a minimum deductible of $20 and a maximum of $90 based on $10 a day for the first nine days.
- Or, 45 days of hospitalization with no deductible.
- Or, up to 180 days of hospitalization with the patient paying the first 2.5 days of average costs.
- Up to 180 days of nursing home care after transfer from a hospital.
- All costs above the first $20 for hospital out-patient diagnostic services.
- All costs of up to 240 home health-care visits a year by visiting nurses and physical therapists.
- Coverage of all social security and railroad retirement beneficiaries, with costs borne by an increase of one-fourth of 1 percent in payroll contributions of both workers and employers, plus an increase from the present $4,800 to $5,200 in the ceiling on annual earnings against which the contributions are levied.
- Coverage of about 2.5 million persons over 65 not eligible for social security, with costs borne from general revenues during a "transitional" period. Administration sources said this provision would cost about $360 million over a five year period.

Effective 1965

Both the benefits and the increases in contributions and wage base would go into effect Jan. 1, 1965.

Kennedy called the option on hospitalization benefits and deductibles a "major improvement" over previous bills. He said it would allow an elderly person to select the kind of insurance protection "most consistent with his economic resources and his prospective health needs."

The President emphasized that the program would pay only the costs of hospital and related services and would not interfere "with the way treatment is provided" or in "the freedom of choice of doctor, hospital, or nurse."

The President's message also noted that the proposed increase in the ceiling on the social security wage base, from $4,800 to $5,200 a year, would automatically boost the maximum monthly retirement benefit for millions of workers from the present $127 to $134, and for families from $254 to $268.

Major Needs of Aged

In presenting the program to Congress, Kennedy cited statistics showing that major illnesses strike most often beyond the age of 65, when most persons have limited resources.

He noted that the Kerr-Mills program of federal-state aid to the medically indigent has proven inadequate as a total solution to the problem, since half the states have not put it into effect and benefits vary widely in the others.

Highlights of other proposals to aid the aged, apart from those mentioned in previous messages, include:

- A five-year program of aid to states and voluntary agencies for construction of recreation centers for senior citizens and development of services and training projects of benefit to the aged.
- Improvements in the federal-state old age assistance program to reduce residency requirements gradually to one year, permit protective payments to third parties, provide minimum housing standards, and improve substandard medical care limitations.
- Expansion of employment opportunities for older persons through a five-year program of grants for experimental and demonstration projects, utilization of skills in the proposed National Service Corps, and federal-state action to combat age discrimination in hiring.
- Assurance of adequate housing through expansion of direct federal housing loans to elderly persons, new emphasis on group residential facilities and amendments to the National Housing Act.

2-23-63

Council Warns of Dangers To U. S. Economy, NATO

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII — Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year — Saturday, March 2, 1963 — No. 8

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

PRES. ROMULO BETANCOURT of Venezuela addresses a breakfast meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council members at Miami Intl. Airport on his trip home after seeing Pres. Kennedy in Washington. Seated, left to right: AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, Pres. Jose Gonzalez Navarro of the Venezuela Confederation of Labor, and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany. (See story Page 2 and Betancourt interview Page 7.)

Partisanship 'Hampering':

President Defended By Council on Cuba

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The intense partisanship injected into the Cuban debate by Administration opponents is seriously hampering the government's efforts to destroy the effectiveness of the Soviet base in Cuba, the AFL-CIO declared.

The federation's Executive Council expressed its "considerable concern" over the "blind political partisanship" that is tending to divide the American people "when there is every reason for unity" and support of Pres. Kennedy's policies.

Praising the President's "courageous and capable leadership," the council pleaded for an end to all partisanship. Such partisanship as has been displayed in recent weeks, it said, can only hurt the nation's prestige and its effectiveness in eliminating entirely the Soviet exploitation of Cuba as a base for Communist subversion in Latin America.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany underscored the statement with a press conference comment that the President should not be hampered by "wild statements" from members of Congress who show no responsibility.

"I personally resent very much," he said, that the Secretary of Defense was forced to expose on television our intelligence methods. The result was unnecessarily to give "a lot of information to the enemy," he said.

In a companion statement, the council declared the situation in Cuba represented "a most serious threat and the gravest danger to the unity and stability of the inter-American system and its institutions as well as a threat to the welfare of the people of the Western Hemisphere."

The council saluted "the enslaved workers and others inside Cuba who continue to fight for freedom and the thousands of freedom-loving Cubans who have been forced to flee from their homelandfl.

It called on the government and the people of the U.S. "to support with all means at their disposal the heroic efforts of the Cuban people to retain their liberty by freeing themselves from a Communist dictatorship."

The council pointed out the "par-

(Continued on Page 5)

Council Sees Shifts Needed In Tax Bill

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Changes in the "timing, distribution and structure" of Pres. Kennedy's tax program "are essential" if his objectives of reducing unemployment and achieving a more equitable tax system are to be achieved, the AFL-CIO declared.

Federation Pres. George Meany at a press conference here noted that Kennedy himself has now said a $10 billion tax cut, even without reforms he had urged, is the "first

(Continued on Page 4)

Organizing Gains Hailed By Meany

Bal Harbour, Fla. — Labor is "going to do better this year than last year" in organizing the unorganized, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told a press conference here.

Commenting on a report by Organization Dir. John W. Livingston on the development of the Los Angeles "pilot" organizing campaign, and on National Labor Relations Board election figures, Meany made these points:

- NLRB figures show "we're beginning to make some progress." AFL-CIO organizing efforts, he

(Continued on Page 4)

N.Y. Post to Print; Cracks Solid Front

New York—A wide crack developed in the solid front of the New York Publishers Association with the announcement by Dorothy Schiff, publisher of the New York Post, that she had resigned from the association and that her paper would resume publication Monday, Mar. 4.

Bertram A. Powers, head of the striking and locked-out printers, stood behind Mrs. Schiff as she made the announcement shortly before the AFL-CIO News went to press. The Post was not struck by the union, but suspended publication along with three other non-struck dailies.

Earlier story on Page 11.

Sees Steady Gains Against Race Bias

By Saul Miller

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A deepening concern over a possible recession at home and a weakening of the Atlantic Alliance abroad emerged as the major theme of the midwinter meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council here.

The theme was reflected in the statements mapping the federation's program on domestic and foreign problems, stressing the need for urgent action to prevent any worsening of the present outlook.

Internally, the council meeting directed its attention to the promising prospects held out by early reports on the Los Angeles pilot organizing drive and the improvement in National Labor Relations Board election results.

It noted also, in the words of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, the slow but steady progress in eliminating "discrimination from our ranks," and the relative absence of disputes between affiliates.

The major emphasis centered on the domestic economy, where the council warned that the nation is headed for another recession in 1963 if present economic trends continue unchanged.

The council urged a wide-ranging program designed to add vitally needed purchasing power to the economy through a $10 billion tax cut for low and middle-income taxpayers, increased federal expenditures for critically needed programs, a "positive wage policy" to bolster consumer demand and a reduction in the basic workweek to 35 hours as a tool to combat unemployment. (See story Page 4.)

In the international field, the Council assailed the intense partisanship injected into the Cuban debate and its adverse effect on the American people, and called for government support of the efforts of the Cuban people to regain their liberty.

It assailed also proposals to withdraw U. S. troops from Europe as increasing the possibility of a world war. It called for a strengthened NATO and admission of Britain to the Common Market. (See stories Page 2.)

The council also warned that some of the new Asian and African countries are seeking to transform their rising trade unions into "mere vehicles" of the government or the dominant political party. "Trade unions cannot protect the workers' democratic rights," or fight effectively for their "just share of the benefits of economic progress" under such conditions, the statement said. It pledged continued AFL-CIO efforts to help the workers of such countries build their own "powerful free trade union movements." (See story Page 2.)

Meany at a press conference reviewed with reporters prospects for improved organizing programs, making these points:

- The multi-union Los Angeles "pilot" organizing drive is reflecting a sense of cooperation among AFL-CIO affiliates and holds the possible pattern for future campaigns. Experience and success gained in Los Angeles "will point the way" in other areas, he said, basing his comment on a report to the council by Organization Dir. John W. Livingston.

- National Labor Relations Board figures show "we're beginning to make some progress." AFL-CIO organizing efforts have been affected in past years both by exposures isolated by the McClellan special Senate committee and by federation support of the Supreme Court's decision on school desegregation. The im-

(Continued on Page 3)

Case for 35-Hour Week Seen 'Even More Valid'

Labor's arguments for reducing the basic workweek to 35 hours are, if anything, more valid now than they were last August when the AFL-CIO Executive Council decided unanimously to press its campaign, Pres. George Meany declared in the introduction to a new AFL-CIO pamphlet on shorter hours.

Making that points is "hardly a satisfaction," Meany said.

"For the nation's sake, and our own, we would rather have been wrong," he added.

The pamphlet, titled "Shorter Hours: Tool to Combat Unemployment," was adapted from a series of articles in the American Federationist, the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine, which were prepared by the Dept. of Research. An appendix contains the text of the Executive Council's August statement on the shorter workweek, the text of the 1961 AFL-CIO convention resolution on reduction of hours, and a table showing trends in employment and unemployment over the last decade.

Publication of the pamphlet is "especially appropriate" at this time, Meany said in his introduction.

"It is apparent from the government figures issued in January," he observed, "that we are heading into our sixth straight year of substantial unemployment—that is, with 5 percent or more of the labor force out of work. And, unfortunately, the most reasonable prediction is

(Continued on Page 5)

A DELEGATION OF VISITORS from Domei Kaigi, a federation of democratic Japanese unions, visited the AFL-CIO Executive Council and signed a joint statement pledging strengthened cooperation to promote free trade unionism in Japan and on the Asian mainland.

Attacks on Labor in New Nations Held Negation of Political Liberty

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Forces seeking "arbitrary rule" in some of the new Asian and African countries are attempting to transform the unions into "vehicles" of the government or dominant political party, the AFL-CIO Executive Council charged at its meeting here.

"Experience has shown that when that happens," the council said, "trade unions cannot protect the workers' democratic rights or fight for their just share in the benefits of economic progress.

"No bona fide trade union can, of its own free will, accept such repressions on the ground that they are temporarily necessitated by the exceptionally difficult tasks of economic development faced by the new nations. The abolition or piecemeal elimination of trade union rights breeds the danger of total tyranny."

The council singled out for specific condemnation the "high-handed and repressive measures" recently taken against unions in Algeria, Lybia and Tanganyika.

It cited protests by the African Regional Organization of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and the general council of the African Trade Union Confederation.

The benefits of freedom from foreign domination "would be largely negated" if another form of oppression were allowed to follow, the council observed.

"The fight for expanding human freedom and social justice," it asserted, "does not end but only enters a new and more complex stage after the colonial yoke has been removed or destroyed. The full friuts of colonial emancipation can be secured only by expanding democracy, only by building democratic institutions like trade unions or agricultural cooperatives free from domination by forces outside their membership."

It added that no one in a newly-freed country "can have a stronger interest" than the unions in promoting economic growth, because the workers are "in the most urgent need of better conditions of life and labor" and are prepared "to work as hard for freedom from poverty as they fought for freedom from foreign oppression."

"They cannot do so if their democratic rights are suppressed," the council commented.

U.S. labor has never sought to impose any particular structural pattern on the trade union movement of another country, the council recalled. Three years ago, the AFL-CIO specifically acknowledged that such labor movements were bound to develop their own forms of organization.

The council pledged U.S. labor to "continue to lend moral and material support" to the unions of emerging countries.

"The difficulties and repressive measures encountered by the workers in the newly independent nations will only steel our determination to help them build powerful free trade union movements," the AFL-CIO leadership declared.

"Our colleagues in these countries, inspired by their victories over foreign oppression, will, in time, triumph over all arbitrary government action and bitter employer resistance."

Labor Hails Betancourt At 'Airport Breakfast'

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Top AFL-CIO leaders had an "airport breakfast" with Venezuelan Pres. Romulo Betancourt and praised the South American leader for his efforts in behalf of democracy and free trade unionism.

Betancourt, in turn, acclaimed the U. S. labor movement for opposing Venezuelan Dictator Perez Jimenez at the same time the American Dept. of State was supporting him. Jimenez is now in jail in Miami on charges of defrauding his country.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said that "Betancourt is a champion of human liberty, an advocate of free trade unionism who has been waging a couregeous fight." He "sets an example for the other nations of the hemisphere," Meany declared.

A number of Venezuelan labor leaders flew to Miami to join Betancourt for his meeting with AFL-CIO officials. The Venezuelan chief executive was on his way home after meeting Pres. Kennedy in Washington and visiting New York.

Betancourt told the AFL-CIO officials that democratic Venezuelan labor leaders were either in exile or in jail during the Jimenez regime. He said that Communists are being weeded out of leadership of Venezuelan unions and now have no important posts. At one time they were powerful in oil, iron, radio, press and television unions.

The Venezuelan president has embarked on a program of land and industry reform which has the warm support of the union leaders of his country.

Labor Unit to Aid Mrs. FDR Memorial

Bal Harbour, Fla.—An Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Fund Committee has been established by the AFL-CIO to solicit the "broadest possible support" for the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, including "efforts to raise funds" needed to carry on her "unfinished work."

The Executive Council urged all AFL-CIO affiliates "to call upon their membership to contribute one hour's pay or $1" to the fund.

Labor has a particular obligation, said the statement, to honor Mrs. Roosevelt's memory and to help carry on her "unfinished work of achieving a world of peace, freedom, social justice and human brotherhood."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany appointed to the Memorial Fund Committee the following AFL-CIO vice presidents: Joseph D. Keenan, chairman; Jacob S. Potofsky; Walter P. Reuther; David Dubinsky; Paul Hall; Al J. Hayes; David J. McDonald; Richard F. Walsh; Joseph Curran; Lee W. Minton.

Staff Men Named By Rubber Workers

Akron, O.—Pres. George Burdon of the Rubber Workers has appointed two new international field representatives.

They are former Pres. Louis J. Castellano of Local 22, representing workers at the General Tire & Rubber Co. plant in Jeannette, Pa., and Charles D. Newkirk, former vice president of Local 7 at the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. here.

Warning on Europe:

Danger of War Seen In Troop Pull-Out

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The withdrawal of American troops from Europe at present would mean "the collapse of NATO" and would "enormously increase the danger of a world war," the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared.

Striking out at proposals that U. S. curtail its contributions to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the council urged the government to strengthen NATO and pursue the achievement of Atlantic partnership.

Discord in Allied ranks in Europe can only benefit the Soviet Union, the council warned, and any weakening of the political, economic and military bonds which tie together the Atlantic Community would "endanger the security and freedom of the West."

Noting that labor's hopes for complete European integration and a stronger NATO received a "grave setback" in France's denial of British admission to the Common Market and its rejection of a multinational nuclear striking force, the council urged the Administration to:

- Improve further our defense posture.
- Urge our European allies to increase their military contributions to NATO.
- Establish a multilateral nuclear force.
- Reorganize NATO leadership so that the western European nations will be equal partners in planning and executing Atlantic strategy.
- Continue full support of British efforts to enter the Common Market.
- Encourage and help Britain and our European friends to achieve full European unity on a truly democratic basis.
- Follow a policy of closer economic association with Europe as provided for in the Trade Expansion Act of 1962.
- Obtain from our European allies greater participation in a common and more adequate western program of aid to developing countries.

The council warned that any belief the Soviets are ready to abandon their expansionist goals "is an illusion which would prove fatal to the free world."

"It would be equally fatal to believe that a Europe of the six [Common Market] nations could insure its own protection without the military assistance of the rest of the NATO members," it added.

It is understandable, the council commented, that in view of the "many sacrifices" by the U.S. in the post-war years to aid European fredom, the rift in the western alliance has caused "bitter disappointment among the American people."

This disappointment and resentment, it stressed, must not be allowed to weaken the West against the continuing Communist threat.

Aid-to-Education Bill Supported by Council

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council praised Pres. Kennedy for having "rightly resumed the battle for comprehensive federal aid to education" and pledged labor's continued support.

The council emphasized that the "sweeping improvements" needed can't be obtained at "bargain rates" and called on Congress to appropriate double the amont of money requested by the Administration for school aid. The President has asked a $1.2 billion first-year program.

Massive federal education assistance is needed, the AFL-CIO statement said, "if truly equal opportunity is to be achieved for all Americans, and if America is to develop the human resources upon which the survival of liberty depends."

The President's proposals for elementary and secondary school aid should be "strengthened," the Executive Council said, by providing "as much assistance as is constitutionally possible" to private, non-profit schools.

"No American, whatever his religious beliefs, can fail to realize the extent to which non-public schools carry a large share of the burden of educating the young," the council said. "These non-public schools face many of the same crises confronting the public schools."

Vocational Training

Specifically, the council continued, there should be a "considerable expansion" of the National Defense Education Act program, which includes loans to private non-profit schools for laboratory and other teaching equipment for science, mathematics and language classes. English and social studies should be included in the program, the Executive Council said, and loans should be made available for construction of classrooms for these subjects.

In a separate statement, the council endorsed vocational education improvements asked by the Administration, urged that the $73 million budgeted for the program be increased "to at least $150 million."

Care should be taken, the AFL-CIO said, to relate training to employment opportunities and not to conflict with apprenticeship programs.

'Notable Contribution'

The council said the Administration made "a notable contribution to public understanding" by submitting its education aid proposals as an omnibus bill, adding:

"Whether the omnibus pattern survives in Congress is not important; it has already served its purpose by stressing the unbreakable inter-relationship of elementary, secondary, undergraduate, post-graduate, vocational and adult education."

In addition to endorsing the Administration's college aid proposals, with some suggested improvements, the council gave its backing to the "Cold War GI Education bill" sponsored by Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.). The council statement declared:

"The opportunities for higher education made available by the original GI bill to veterans of World War II and the Korean War did a great deal for democratic higher education in America. College education for the first time became a real possibility to thousands of working class young people. It is a matter of simple justice to extend the same opportunity to the veterans whose lives have been disrupted by the draft."

Dangers Seen to U.S. Economy, NATO

Council Urges Prompt Action On Wide Range of Social Issues

(Continued from Page 1)

pact of these issues is "not as important now as a year or two ago," he said; "the effect is wearing off."

● AFL-CIO membership has shown a gain, and there has been "progress" but not a real breakthrough in white collar organizing. Internal disputes have involved an "inconsequential" number of workers and have not hampered organizing. (See story Page 1.)

Sec. 14b Repeal to Be Sought

The AFL-CIO president stressed also that the federation would continue to fight for repeal of Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act, which permits states to enact so-called "right-to-work" laws that impair the freedom of collective bargaining. (See story Page 5.)

In the area of broad social and community service and welfare legislation, the council took these actions:

● Praised Pres. Kennedy for having "rightly resumed the battle for comprehensive federal aid to education" and pledged labor's continued support of "long overdue" legislation. The council observed, however, that the "sweeping improvements" needed in the educational system cannot be obtained at "bargain rates" and urged Congress to double the funds requested by the Administration. (See story Page 2.)

● Adopted a broad legislative program on federal, state and local levels to meet an expanding demand for high-quality hospital care.

The council at the same time urged affiliated unions, in bargaining on health coverage of their members, to give "first priority" to group-practice medical plans, in which physicians' services are provided directly to members. (See story this page.)

● Declared the vast majority of Americans "will support with enthusiasm" prompt enactment of the Administration's "sound, practical proposal of hospital insurance for the aged" under social security, despite "sloganeering" and scare tactics of "irresponsible opposition." In a statement commending Pres. Kennedy for his message on the aged and aging, the council termed the need "imperative" and the time for action "now." (See story this page.)

● Strongly reiterated AFL-CIO support of federal legislation to assure equal pay for equal work by women, declaring there is "no excuse for further delay." Such a law is "essential" for all workers, the council said, calling equal pay rates "a simple matter of justice" for women and "a protection for men's rates as well." (See story this page.)

● Endorsed the collective bargaining and legislative goals of unions representing federal employes. A resolution noted "with considerable satisfaction" the "great improvement" in federal labor-management relations following issuance last year by the President of an executive order on union recognition. (See story Page 9.)

● Called for a model state bill to regulate the sale of subdivision property and require truthful advertising and for federal legislation to prohibit misleading and fraudulent land advertising in interstate commerce. (See story Page 5.)

● Called for approval of the President's proposal for a "domestic peace corps," declaring that such a federal service would stimulate state and local community action and "give heart to our less fortunate countrymen." (See story Page 12.)

● Emphasized in three statements on transportation issues that controversies must be resolved with adequate protection of the public and of workers. Transportation systems covered included airlines, railroads and commuter traffic, and the council specifically endorsed legislation for federal grants to urban areas for mass commuter facilities. (See story Page 4.)

● Heard a report on civil rights by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, chairman of the Committee on Civil Rights, showing that 122 unions have signed the fair practices pledge set up by the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

Meany said the committee is working with the few small unions that have not yet signed. He said also the AFL-CIO is "moving forward" on the civil rights front and that "slowly but surely we are eliminating whatever discrimination remains in our own ranks."

● Established an Eleanor Roosevelt Memorial Fund Committee to solicit the "broadest possible support" for the Eleanor Roosevelt Foundation, including "efforts to raise funds" needed to carry along her "unfinished work." (See story Page 2.)

Hotpoint, Shell Strikes Backed

The council acted also to support strikes of the Sheet Metal Workers against the Hotpoint Division of the General Electric Co. in Chicago and the Oil Workers against the Shell Co. in Pasadena, Tex.

On disputes, the council referred to Meany for discussion with the parties in terms of settlement cases involving the Retail Clerks and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers. The council rejected a request by the Marine Engineers to impose further sanctions against the National Maritime Union.

The council set its next meeting for St. Louis starting May 14.

MEMBERS OF THE PRESS covering the Executive Council's midwinter meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., get a briefing from Pres. George Meany on proceedings of the sessions.

Legislative Program For Hospitals Proposed

Bal Harbour, Fla.—A broad legislative program to meet the expanding public need for high-quality hospital care at reasonable cost—starting at the community planning stage—was adopted by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its midwinter meeting here.

The council also urged affiliated unions, in bargaining on health coverage for their members, to give first priority to group medical practice plans in which physicians' services are provided directly to subscribers.

Next in order of desirability, the council said, would be plans which provide comprehensive services from physicians, surgeons and hospitals as against restricted services, followed by insurance plans which provide in terms of service rather than cash indemnity.

Tracing the growth and importance of hospitals as "the focal point for good health care of the American people," the council statement noted that in the last half-century the number of U.S. hospitals has grown by 50 percent and the number of hospital beds by 400 percent.

Despite this growth, it observed, high-quality hospital care has been hampered by a number of serious problems, including the sharp and progressive rise in costs, lack of community planning for hospital needs, and the inability of many hospitals to provide an adequate range and quality of specialist services.

The council called for legislation to permit the establishment of hospital planning councils on state, regional and community levels, with representation of both governmental and voluntary interests. Such councils, the statement said, would have the responsibility of developing systematic plans for construction of new hospitals and the expansion or relocation of existing facilities in accordance with present and future needs.

Community planning also would serve as a check on costs through policies promoting optimum utilization of hospitals and distribution of patients, the statement added.

It also called for legislative action at the appropriate government level to:

● Require hospitals to make annual reports of their finances and services.

● Set minimum standards of service, organization and records in the licensing of hospitals.

● Abolish remaining restrictions on insurance plans associated with group medical practice and safeguard the right to establish such plans.

● Provide low-cost federal loans for construction and equipment of non-profit group practice facilities.

● Provide hospitalization and related insurance programs for the aged.

● Establish the principle that payments by governmental agencies to hospitals be on the basis of the full cost of service.

● Amend the Hill-Burton program of federal aid for hospital construction to prevent discrimination in staff appointments and accommodation of patients, limit grants to projects meeting the approval of state and local plans, and require majority representation of the public on state advisory councils.

The Executive Council also called for establishment of an AFL-CIO Medical Advisory Committee to advise affiliates on hospital, medical and related matters.

It urged local unions to seek representation on hospital and Blue Cross boards, to launch systematic education programs for selected members and officers on the problems of hospitals and health insurance, and to pool their efforts under unified policies in dealing with hospitals, doctors, Blue Cross and insurance companies.

Legislature in N.M. Split on 'Work' Bill

Sante Fe, N.M.—The New Mexico House killed—and the Senate promptly revived—a so-called "right-to-work" proposal.

The House on Feb. 27 voted 36-27 against a bill to place a proposition outlawing the union shop on a statewide referendum ballot.

One day later, the Senate took up a companion bill—and passed it, 17-15. The bill now goes to the House, despite the body's rejection of an almost identical measure.

Public Seen Backing Kennedy Health Plan

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The vast majority of Americans "will support with enthusiasm" the prompt enactment of the Administration's "sound, practical proposal of hospital insurance for the aged," despite the "sloganeering" and scare tactics of "irresponsible opposition," the AFL-CIO declared.

In a statement commending Pres. Kennedy for his message on the aged and aging, with top priority on hospital insurance, the federation's Executive Council termed the need "imperative" and the time for action "now."

'Only Practical Way'

Reviewing the legislative and public battle of the past few years on the issue of health insurance, the council declared that "the only practical way to finance hospital insurance for the aged is based on the social security principle" with benefits for those not covered by social security or railroad retirement "financed out of general revenues."

Public welfare medical assistance is only acceptable "as a second line of defense," the statement said, stressing the President's position that welfare medical assistance can help people get health care "only if they first accept poverty and then accept charity."

Private insurance, the council pointed out, "can make a major contribution by supplementing the basic hospitalization plan." This insurance can be expected to expand as it supplements basic hospitalization coverage through social security "just as other private insurance grew after the passage of the original Social Security Act."

The council urged Congress "to implement with its prompt action" other portions of the President's message on the aged dealing with housing, income, employment, taxes, special facilities and services.

In a companion statement on the President's health message, which the council called "unprecedented in its scope and vision," prompt enactment of legislative proposals was urged.

Group Practice Endorsed

The council found of particular significance the President's proposals encouraging group practice, combatting mental illness, coping with mental retardation, increasing the number of physicians and other trained health personnel and improving health facilities.

Encouraging the spread of group practice, the council said, "would do much to make high quality medical care more readily available to all Americans."

The Administration's proposals in the mental health field could be expected within a generation "to reduce the number of patients under custodial care by at least half . . . and to reduce profoundly the misery which mental illness now entails for millions of American families."

On increasing the number of physicians and other health personnel, the council declared that the need for legislation to provide federal assistance to medical, dental, public health and nursing education is "so compelling, so well-documented and so immense that it is impossible to justify further hesitation or delay."

The statement called for extension and revision of the Hill-Burton program of hospital and medical facilities construction to meet "changing conditions" and specifically supported extension of the act for five years plus amendments to authorize modernization and replacement programs and higher appropriations for non-profit nursing homes.

Council Urges Equal Pay For Women

Bal Harbour, Fla.—There is "no excuse for further delay" in enacting federal legislation assuring equal pay for women, the AFL-CIO Executive Council declared here.

The council termed fair wage standards for women "essential to the maintenance of fair standards for all workers."

"For women," the statement declared, "the rate for the job is a simple matter of justice. For men, protection of women's rates is a protection for men's rates as well."

The only beneficiaries of discriminatory pay policies, the council said, are "employers attempting to gain unfair advantage, at the expense of their workers, over their more enlightened business competitors."

The statement urged Congress to adopt an "enforceable, effective bill," and declared:

"A pious statement of principles, shot through with exceptions of application and obstructions to enforcement, will not be acceptable, nor will any shabby attempts to equalize women's wages by reducing those for men be acceptable."

Equal pay legislation, the council said, would be "concrete evidence of this nation's good faith in attempting to insure justice for all its citizens."

LABOR SEC. W. WILLARD WIRTZ met with the Executive Council to discuss economic and legislative issues now attracting attention. He is shown, second from right, with Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

AFL-CIO Urges Shift in Tax Bill, Priority on Low-Bracket Slash

(Continued from Page 1)

priority" to spur the lagging economy to faster growth.

"We are in agreement," said Meany. "The important thing is a sizable tax cut to keep the economy from slipping into a recession this year."

Kennedy's statement, made in Washington at a symposium on growth sponsored by the American Bankers Association, indicated clearly that he would accept a straightout $10 billion tax cut, without his proposed reforms and offsets, if Congress preferred.

Close to AFL-CIO Stand

"If we've got to err, I would certainly err on the side of a big enough tax cut," he declared, to get the economy moving fast.

In commenting on the Kennedy program as sent to Congress, the AFL-CIO Executive Council noted that the size of the proposed tax reduction was "close to the recommendation" the federation had urged.

But it urged the following approach to which it pledged "vigorous support":

1. A one-package tax program should be carried through in two steps—first priority to a substantial tax cut for low-income and middle-income groups retroactive to Jan. 1, 1963: this to be followed by "thorough-going" loophole-closing, revision and reform concurring with-across-the-board cuts in individual and corporate rates.

2. The first-bracket tax rate should be cut to 12 percent on the first $1,000 and 15 percent on the second $1,000. The Administration's proposals for a minimum standard deduction should be expanded to $400 for an individual plus $200 for each dependent.

3. No reduction in the top-bracket 52 percent corporate rate can be justified without concurrent loophole closing.

4. The Administration's proposed structural changes should be revised and extended. Hardship-relieving proposals to aid working mothers, to provide income-averaging, to reduce the tax burden on workers moving to new locations, and to extend tax relief for the elderly "are all highly commendable, yet they need to be strengthened."

Proposed reforms to close loopholes and broaden the tax base "point in the right direction," but only a few of the "most glaring loopholes actually would be closed."

The statement commended the Administration's program to tax capital gains on transfer at death or by gift and the proposal to "end tax favoritism for dividend recipients" and other plans to reduce the use of capital gains gimmicks.

But it noted that the tax rate on capital gains would actually be cut; there is no provision for a reduction in excessive depletion allowance rates; no proposal is made to end tax-free interest on state and local bonds; and the Administration did not renew its 1962 plan for tax withholding on interest and dividend payments.

The council praised the plan to reduce the tax rate from 30 to 22 percent on the first $25,000 of corporate profits as an aid to smaller corporations but urged that the present 52 percent corporate rate on profits above $25,000 should not be cut below 49 percent. (The Administration proposes a decrease to 47 percent in 1964.)

Council Cites Need of New Jobs:

Nation Seen Moving Towards Recession

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The nation is headed for another recession in 1963 "if present economic trends are permitted to run their normal course," the AFL-CIO warned.

The Kennedy Administration's proposed tax cut of less than $3 billion in 1963 "may temporarily curb these trends," the council declared in a statement on the national economy, "but it is altogether inadequate to reduce the large gap between sales and the economy's rapidly increasing ability to produce."

There is nothing in recent business developments or in Administration programs, the council stressed, "to provide confidence that substantial improvements are on the way, even in the next few years."

Only a "comprehensive program of job-creating efforts—much bolder and more adequate than the Administration's proposals"—can get the nation on the road to full employment, its statement said.

The present state of the economy, the council said, shows the following developments:

- The unemployment rate for adult men has been moving up since October while joblessness among young people and women has remained at high levels.
- Manufacturing and construction jobs have been in a declining trend since last summer; for more than a half-year factory working hours have tended to move down.
- Business investment in new plants and machines is declining and is expected to increase at a slow pace later in the year.
- Home building shows no signs of rising above 1962 levels.
- Total wage and salary payments of private business have remained almost stationary since July and the buying power of factory workers has not changed very much over the year.
- Radical technological change is spreading through the economy.

In face of these developments, the council urged the following program:

1. A tax cut of $10 billion this year, retroactive to Jan. 1, 1963, and concentrated among low and middle-income taxpayers.

2. Appropriation of actual funds for $500 million in "accelerated" public works, authorized last year but not appropriated for, and a continuation of the program for a second year.

3. Adequate federal standards for unemployment compensation.

4. An improved youth employment opportunities bill.

5. Extension of the minimum wage to millions of workers now unprotected.

6. "A positive wage policy that will encourage increasing buying power to provide the economy with the needed thrust of growing consumer demand."

7. A "rapid reduction of working hours with no cut in take-home pay as a necessary supplement to other measures that are needed to create job opportunities."

8. Positive action to reduce interest rates on long-term loans and a sufficient supply of lendable funds in the nation's banking system.

British Jobless Rate Jumps to 3.6 Percent

London — Unemployment in Great Britain rose sharply by nearly 250,000 between mid-December and mid-January to more than 800,000, or 3.6 percent of the civilian labor force.

Gen. Sec. George Woodcock of the British Trades Union Congress pointed out that the increase was "well over twice as much as usually occurs at this time of year." In some long-depressed areas, such as Merseyside, the unemployment rate neared 7 percent.

The unemployment rate has been below 3 percent most of the time in recent years.

Council Asks Upset Of B&O-C&O Merger

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Protection of the rights of workers and the public was emphasized by the AFL-CIO Executive Council in three statements on transportation issues involving airlines, railroads and commuter traffic.

A council statement endorsing legislation for federal grants to help urban areas develop mass transportation facilities emphasized:

"The need for such programs is obvious. Equally obvious, however, is the need for the protection of collective bargaining rights and for fair and equitable arrangements to protect employe interests adversely affected as a result of such programs."

A statement on the air transport industry warned that American-flag airlines are steadily losing international traffic to and from the United States to foreign carriers "owned and subsidized by their governments and paying wages below U.S. standards."

In another action, the council adopted a resolution protesting approval by a majority of the Interstate Commerce Commission of the acquisition by the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway of control over the Baltimore & Ohio.

Noting that the Railway Labor Executives' Association and the Maintenance of Way Employes have asked the federal courts to void the ICC approval, the council urged the Justice Dept. to "protect the public interest" by joining in the court challenge to the ICC action.

The council resolution declared the ICC majority acted "on the basis of an inadequate record" which ignores both the interest of other railroads in the area and "the effect of proposed mergers on the economy of the communities affected."

Meany Cites Gains in Organizing, Sees New Advances for AFL-CIO

(Continued from Page 1)

said, had been affected in past years both by exposures before the McClellan special Senate Committee and by federation support of the Supreme Court's decision on school desegregation. The impact of these issues is "not as important now as a year or two ago," he said. "The effect is wearing off."

- The Los Angeles campaign is reflecting a sense of cooperation among AFL-CIO affiliates and holds the possible pattern for future organizing campaigns. The experience and success gained in Los Angeles "will point the way" in other areas, Meany said.
- There has been a net gain in AFL-CIO membership, with nearly every area growing except manufacturing, where automation is taking its toll of jobs of union members.
- There has been definite "progress" in the white collar area but no real breakthrough in the "resistance" to organization by white collar workers.
- The organizing campaign planned by the Industrial Union Dept. is based on the Los Angeles pattern and is "all to the good, the more effort we have the better," Meany said, if the Los Angeles pattern is followed.
- There is no evidence that failure to organize in past years has been caused by disputes between AFL-CIO affiliates. Meany said the experience under the Internal Disputes Plan shows that the number of persons involved in such disputes has been "inconsequential."

Livingston's report on the Los Angeles project said that the program is now "an operating entity" and that as of Feb. 25, 39 of the 56 participating AFL-CIO unions have paid their allotted share for the first quarter's operations. Participating unions have an organizing staff of 158 persons on the project.

The campaign was launched Jan. 2 with 400 non-union plants as the initial targets. Franz Daniel, AFL-CIO assistant director of organization, is heading the drive in the sprawling two-county area which has some 750,000 unorganized workers.

The Los Angeles-Orange Counties Organizing Committee, Livingston reported, has been involved in 25 organizing situations involving decisive NLRB elections or card checks. Eighteen involving 1,500 workers have resulted in union victories. Four involving 250 people were lost and three election results involving 850 workers are still undetermined.

"The program," said Livingston, "has had a generally favorable beginning. The high degree of cooperation that has marked every step of the project continues on the local level . . . The campaign is well under way but it will be spring at least before there can be any sustained showing of substantial results."

Livingston reported also that unofficial but complete NLRB figures covering the period from July 1, 1961, through June 30, 1962, show that:

- AFL-CIO unions won 53.5 percent of the 5,049 collective bargaining elections in which they participated. "This is the highest such figure achieved by the AFL-CIO since the NLRB fiscal report for 1959."
- AFL-CIO unions won bargaining rights for units having 190,858 employes. "That is the largest number won by AFL-CIO unions in any full NLRB fiscal year since the merger."
- AFL-CIO unions filed 6,036 petitions for collective bargaining elections during the period, "the highest such number of the last five NLRB reporting years."

Company Coercion Charged:

Executive Council Support Voted Hotpoint, Shell Strikes

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO, in two resolutions adopted at the Executive Council meeting here, voiced strong support for strikes by the Sheet Metal Workers at General Electric's Hotpoint Division and by the Oil Workers at the Shell Co.'s Pasadena, Tex., plant.

Declaring that Hotpoint "has forced its employes to strike" for basic security and working conditions, the council accused the company of "a sham and a fraud" in expressing "alleged concern" for the welfare of its employes in the Chicago-Cicero area.

The SMW struck the company for an initial contract covering some 2,500 workers. Forty bargaining sessions had failed to budge management from its refusal to provide "a single penny" in immediate wage or fringe benefit improvements, or to agree to grievance arbitration, the council noted.

"GE wanted this strike," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany commented at a news conference here, declaring that the company is "more or less setting its policy in labor relations now" for negotiations later in the year with other unions.

The council said it was "proud indeed" to support the Sheet Metal Workers in the dispute and called on Hotpoint "to demonstrate a real concern for the welfare of its employes" by abandoning its unreasonable bargaining attitude and making "decent" contract proposals.

The Oil Workers' six-month-long strike against Shell is one of a series of walkouts occurring in the industry over the past four years, brought on, the council charged, by a major management drive to wipe out job security guarantees.

OCAW Local 4-367, representing about 2,500 workers, struck Shell's oil and petrochemical installation at Pasadena last Aug. 19 to protect contract provisions in effect for as long as 25 years.

The council noted that the strike has continued without a single defection despite difficult conditions, with management maintaining considerable production in the highly automated plant through the use of supervisory personnel.

The resolution accused Shell of a "concentrated effort" to break the strike and force an agreement giving management "full unilateral control over job assignments, manning of equipment, scheduling of work and other items which are vital to the protection of the workers."

The council said Shell's stand was "the spearhead of a united industry effort to emasculate union contracts under the guise of promoting 'management rights' and seeking 'flexibility of operations.'"

Warning that every union in the industry, if it has not already encountered the problem, would soon be confronted with it, the council declared that a union loss in the Shell strike would be a loss for all labor.

The resolutions called on AFL-CIO affiliates to give all possible support to the SMW and the OCAW in their efforts to win satisfactory settlement of the two disputes.

AS HOTPOINT WORKERS in Chicago struck in sub-zero weather for a first contract, Pres. James Crouch (right) of Sheet Metal Workers Local 571 made the rounds of pickets at the company's five plants. Hotpoint is a division of General Electric.

Case for 35-Hour Week Seen 'Made More Valid'

(Continued from Page 1)

that matters will get worse in the months ahead."

Meany summarized the AFL-CIO's case for the shorter workweek, as presented in the pamphlet, in these terms:

"First, there is nothing sacred about the 40-hour week; a periodic cut in working hours has been part of the American experience for the last century and has been proceeding even since the 40-hour standard was set.

"Second, no one—certainly not the AFL-CIO—maintains that under ordinary circumstances 40 hours a week are excessive on grounds of health, safety or undue restriction of leisure time. On the contrary, the labor movement would be delighted if 40 hours of work were available to all who wanted them.

"Third, it seems clear beyond question that 40-hour jobs will not be available to all Americans under presently foreseeable circumstances. This means a continuation of the intolerably high unemployment we have suffered for five full years.

"Fourth, a cut in hours to 35 hours a week, while troublesome in some industries and occupations, could generally be handled without great difficulty and without a profoundly inflationary effect."

These points, documented in the pamphlet, Meany went on, "lead us to believe that a 35-hour week, with increased penalty pay to discourage overtime, is essential to the present and future economic health of the United States and therefore of the free world."

"Our campaign is unique," he said, "in that it is based wholly upon the intellectual grounds of the public welfare. It includes no horror stories of exploited, exhausted wage earners dropping beside their machines. These may still be with us but the 40-hour week is not to blame.

"We argue only that the prosperity of the United States must be based upon full employment and we believe full employment is possible only if the standard workweek is cut.

"The recognition and acceptance of this argument will be proof of America's maturity in meeting its own problems and those it must shoulder in the world of today."

Council Backs Laws to Curb Housing Gyps

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO has called for a model state bill to regulate the sale of subdivisions and require truthful advertising of real estate, and for federal legislation to prohibit distribution of misleading and fraudulent land advertising in interstate commerce.

The Executive Council adopted a report of its Committee on Housing assailing the "shocking disclosures of widespread misrepresentation and of flagrant, fraudulent and dishonest practices in the marketing of land subdivisions and other real estate in some states, including nationwide as well as local advertising."

The public must be protected against such practices, the report declared, urging all AFL-CIO state central bodies to press for enactment of model legislation.

The report reviewed the housing situation and said a "first and indispensable step" to start housing and renewal programs moving was the creation of a federal Dept. of Housing & Urban Development.

The committee commended Pres. Kennedy for his selection of former Gov. David Lawrence (D-Pa.), as chairman of the President's Committee for Equal Opportunity in Housing.

It called also on all affiliates and local central bodies to press for enactment of local ordinances "assuring equal opportunity in housing in order to reinforce Pres. Kennedy's national initiative in this field.

Maritime Committee Moves Headquarters

Headquarters of the AFL-CIO Maritime Committee were moved Mar. 1 from 123 Third Street, S.E., to the Letter Carriers' Building at 100 Indiana Avenue, N.W., both in Washington. The new telephone number is 347-5980.

'One-Way Bargaining' Met by Hotpoint Strike

Chicago—Twenty-five hundred workers struck five Chicago area plants of General Electric's Hotpoint Division after eight months of "one-way bargaining" by the Sheet Metal Workers for a first contract.

The union charged that the company forced the strike by refusing to consider any immediate increase in wages or benefits and then illegally offered premium pay to strikebreakers in an unsuccessful effort to break the picket lines.

An unfair labor practice charge filed by the union with the National Labor Relations Board accused the company of having promised, in telegrams and phone calls, to pay time-and-one-half rates "for all hours worked" during the strike.

Despite this inducement, the Sheet Metal Workers said, the number of workers crossing the picket lines dropped from 50 on Feb. 22, first day of the strike, to 15 to 20 a day thereafter. This company had claimed that a fourth of its work force had reported.

SMW Local 571, which won bargaining rights last May after the company had operated as a nonunion stronghold in the area for 56 years, appealed for public support of the workers with a leaflet distribution at local discount and department stores. The leaflets urged consumers not to buy Hotpoint products.

Federal mediators sought unsuccessfully to bring about a settlement, but the union said management negotiators remained adament during some 40 bargaining sessions. On the eve of the strike, the local reported, company negotiators went through the formality of meeting with federal mediators but refused to sit down at the same table with the union bargaining team.

In addition to rejecting any first-year improvement in wages or fringe benefits, the company has also turned down arbitration of grievances and impartial determination of incentive pay standards.

Fight to Kill Sec. 14b Pleged by AFL-CIO

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council pledged an unceasing campaign to win repeal of Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act which permits and encourages the "evil" so-called state "right-to-work" laws.

The council adopted a statement declaring that supporters of "right-to-work" legislation are "active today on a wider scale than ever before."

The anti-union-shop forces, the council said, appear to have "unlimited funds" and are supported by antilabor organizations such as the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Reviewing the announced intention of "work" lobbyists to campaign in the 30 states that have so far resisted anti-union-shop legislation, the council directed AFL-CIO officers "to broaden and intensify their efforts" in educating the American people "to the true meaning and intent" of such laws "so that true freedom of collective bargaining can once again be restored."

The council added:

"We do not forget that these evil laws are permitted and even encouraged by Sec. 14b of the Taft-Hartley Act. . . . The AFL-CIO will never rest until the nefarious Sec. 14b is repealed."

Noting that Wyoming recently became the 20th state to adopt an anti-union-security measure, the council reported also that the threat of such legislation is "imminent" in Oklahoma, that it has been deferred but not removed in Maine, and that in 20 other states "serious drives" for "work" bills are under way.

The council declared that "right-to-work" is a catch phrase "designed and utilized to ensnare the gullible and defraud the worker." It pledged that the federation will continue to assist its state organizations and like-minded groups of citizens in combating the spread of the legislation and in seeking the repeal of those laws now on the statute books.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told reporters that the prospects for repeal of Sec. 14b are "not too bright," but that the AFL-CIO will "continue to fight" to repeal what is a "bad law."

In other actions, the council:

- Referred to Meany the disputes case involving the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and the Intl. Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers with the understanding that he would get the parties together to solve the dispute.
- Heard a report on civil rights by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, chairman of the Committee on Civil Rights, showing that 122 unions have signed the fair practices pledge set up by the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity. Meany said the committee is working with the few small unions that have not yet signed. The AFL-CIO is "moving forward" on the civil rights front, he added, and that "slowly but surely we are eliminating whatever discrimination remains in our own ranks."

The council set its next meeting for May. 14 in St. Louis, Mo.

President Wins Support On Cuba

(Continued from Page 1)

ticularly heavy" responsibilities that are falling on the President in the Cuba situation and that "destructive criticism" can only add to his enormous difficulties.

'Blind Political Partisanship'

"Only blind political partisanship can disparage the great significance and beneficial results of Pres. Kennedy's courageous and decisive action in forcing the Soviet Union to dismantle and withdraw its emplaced rockets from Cuba," the council said.

Such "shortsighted" political partisanship "tends to spread confusion and distrust among the people." The best interests of the nation are "not helped but hampered" by such attacks, the council said.

Playing with the Cuban problem "as if it were a political football," the statement added, undermines the unity of "freedom-loving Cubans everywhere," and weakens their confidence in the U.S.

The council declared that the Administration is engaging in "effective aerial surveillance of Cuba," that Kennedy's "unrelenting pressure" for troop withdrawal is beginning to "show results," and that economic measures taken by the U.S. against Castro "are dealing his dictatorship telling blows."

Political Chauvinism

LAST OCTOBER Pres. Kennedy, with great skill and courage, forced the Soviet Union to dismantle its rockets and missiles and withdraw them from Cuba. The nation and the free world applauded Kennedy's blunting of the Soviet's aggressive thrust into the hemisphere.

Coming a few weeks before the November congressional elections, the President's action brought some early criticism from Republican campaign committees. Kennedy's motives were questioned and the action was described by some GOP spokesmen as designed to salvage the election for the Democrats.

Since November Republicans have sought desperately to turn the Cuba issue on Kennedy, first by exhuming the Bay of Pigs invasion tragedy and more lately by giving currency to all sorts of unverified intelligence reports purporting to show that the President has not been successful in wiping out the Soviet aggressive threat in Cuba.

The resulting confusion finally forced the President into having Defense Sec. McNamara place in front of the public, via a two-hour television program, the proof-certain gathered by American intelligence that the Soviet threat in Cuba had been thwarted and was abating.

The Republican critics of the Administration have not been satisfied, primarily because their target is not the Soviet Union, the threat of Communist infiltration in other parts of the hemisphere or necessarily the Castro regime. It is Pres. Kennedy's popular appeal and political power they are shooting at, with an eye to their own contests in 1964 and inevitably the re-election bid of the President.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council has described the "blind political partisanship" over Cuba as playing with a "political football." This is the true significance of the Republican attack, an attack designed to sap public confidence in the Administration.

How Mediation Works

IN THE SLIGHTLY over one year that the AFL-CIO Internal Disputes Plan has been in effect, it has chalked up the remarkable record of resolving 60 percent of the cases by mutual consent of the parties without use of the impartial umpire.

If the 17 cases in the mediation stage as of Feb. 15 are resolved by consent, as is entirely likely, the figure for voluntary settlements will climb to nearly 70 percent.

The record sharply underscores the point that early mediation in a dispute by experienced union officials can resolve most cases and that the percentage of cases going to the impartial umpire can be kept to a low level.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has made the point that many of the disputes involve relatively small numbers of workers and that unions in reality are not constantly involved in claiming one another's members.

The report made to the winter meeting of the Executive Council is documented evidence that the plan so carefully put togther at the 1961 AFL-CIO convention has been a major factor in preventing minor disputes from flaring into bitter controversies and in demonstrating that the federation can effectively handle and minimize its internal problems so that its efforts can be channeled into the vital battles on the economic, political and social fronts.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, Harry C. Bates, Wm. C. Birthright, James B. Carey, David Dubinsky, David J. McDonald, Emil Rieve, Wm. L. McFetridge, Joseph Curran, M. A. Hutcheson, A. J. Hayes, Joseph D. Keenan, L. S. Buckmaster*, Jacob S. Potofsky, A. Philip Randolph, Richard F. Walsh, Lee W. Minton, Joseph A. Beirne, James A. Suffridge, C. A. Knight, Karl F. Feller, Paul L. Phillips, Peter T. Schoemann, L. M. Raftery, Paul Hall, Herman D. Kenin

* Resigned

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, March 2, 1963 No. 9

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Down With Castro!'

Gruening Baffled:

Truth-in-Lending Bill Blocked By Powerful Small-Loan-Lobby

SEVERAL DAYS AGO Sen. Ernest Gruening (D. Alaska) stood on the floor of the Senate and informed his colleagues he was baffled.

"It is sometimes a puzzle," he said, "why an excellent legislative proposal, thoroughly designed to serve the public interest and of a type that could scarely be considered controversial, has so much difficulty getting approval."

He was referring to the "truth-in-lending" bill which Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) first introduced in 1961 and this year has dropped in the hopper again with an even larger number of co-sponsors.

It's a simple bill. All it does is to require those who sell on credit to state on the face of the contract precisely what the interest rates and other finance charges are.

To assume that such a proposal would have clear sailing is to ignore the fact that a small but very powerful, well-entrenched group has a vested interest in the bill being blocked.

The proposal would hit the small loan companies, particularly those who take advantage of the unknowing buyer and gouge him with finance charges that can and do run as high as 36 or 42 percent per year. Many an installment buyer thinks he is paying 6 percent a year but, in fact, is paying six or seven times as much.

Most people in this country buy on the installment plan when they purchase a car, a TV set, a dishwasher, house furnishings, etc. And most of the people are being soaked far more than they realize in carrying charges.

When Gruening said he was "puzzled" that the "truth-in-lending" bill had not passed other Congresses he knew well that the reason had nothing to do with the merit of the legislation itself. Rather, it was that the collective lobbying effort against the bill was carefully organized, heavily financed, and startlingly successful.

In a recent issue of Harpers Magazine, Julius Duscha of The Washington Post analyzed this lobby in a most revealing article entitled, "Your Friendly Finance Company and Its Friends on Capitol Hill."

He put together the pieces. First he started out with the finance companies. They have some natural allies in auto dealers—particularly the used car operators—and these have powerful national state and local associations.

"They were joined," Duscha wrote, "by furniture stores and other retail establishments which have discovered a bonanza in 'revolving' credit (the poor man's charge account which permits him to be permanently in debt to the vender—at a price)."

The group, Duscha says, needed to broaden its base and gain some respectability against charges of crude self-interest. It sought the backing of the American Bankers Association, the American Bar Association and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

THESE GROUPS apparently had no basic objection to the Douglas bill but there were other considerations, Duscha reports:

"For one thing, bankers need the support of finance companies in state capitols where laws regulating banking are enacted. For years the small-loan people have assiduously—and profitably—cultivated state legislators to protect their own state-regulated business interests. In many states harmonious relations are assured by the fact that lawyers who serve in state leigslatures are also attorneys for loan companies. Furthermore, small-loan companies are often big customers of banks and like all businessmen, bankers want satisfied customers to come back for more.

"As for the American Bar Association, its committees concerned with credit problems are usually made up for the most part of lawyers with close ties to lenders."

The Chamber of Commerce is always ready to protest interference of "big government" unless, of course, it is directed against organized labor.

Other groups were part of the lobby. One is the National Merchants Association which this year is headed up by Harold H. Bennett, a prominent Salt Lake City businessman. His brother, Sen. Wallace F. Bennett (D-Utah), is a Salt Lake City auto dealer and former president of the National Association of Manufacturers. He is a close associate of Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D-Va.), whose subcommittee bottled up the Douglas bill last year.

Two small-loan organizations are operating to further their interests—the National Foundation for Consumer Credit and the National Consumer Finance Association—and they established the command post to oppose the "truth-in-lending" bill.

They realized that they had to keep it pigeonholed in Robertson's subcommittee and they did, by a split 5-to-5 last year.

"Should the proposal ever get out of the subcommittee into the full Banking Committee and onto the Senate floor it would undoubtedly find overwhelming support," Duscha says. (PAI.)

Morgan Says:

Improvement in Race Relations Holds Promise in North Carolina

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

THERE IS A NEW ZEST to the atmosphere in North Carolina and it cannot be accounted for entirely by the faintly unfolding promise of spring after a raw and bitter winter.

It is an ingredient of hope and modest progress in the atmosphere of human relations. People are breathing it more deeply and, perhaps more importantly, they are talking about it more freely—the problem of racial equality, that is—and whereas there are still raw and bitter feelings harbored by both the wihte and Negro populations, thoughtful people on both sides and in the middle are stimulated by this fresher ring to the air.

Morgan

Severe problems and acrid situations remain. The legislature has just moved into a brand new, radically modern, $6-million General Assembly building designed by the world-famous architect, Edward D. Stone, but this has not prevented some assemblymen from reverting to their 19th Century approach to reality.

A representative named Ed Wilson from the rural county of Caswell rose in the new House chamber and solemnly vowed to "exert every legal and honorable method" to end the integration which has just come to Caswell's public schools and which in his eyes "threatens to destroy" the educational system. Hardly had his words stopped echoing from the modernistic walls before one of the chamber's elder statesmen took the floor and said with a mixture of realism and sadness, "My heart bleeds for you but there is nothing you can do about it."

Another rural legislator named John Kerr at a hearing before the Joint Appropriations Committee threatened the president of a state Negro school, the Agricultural & Technical College at Greensboro, with a cut-off of funds if his students didn't "behave."

Greensboro is where the nationwide sit-in campaign against segregation in eating places began and it was an A&T undergraduate who began it. "And you come down here," Kerr said accusingly to Pres. Lewis Dowdy, "begging the white folks to give more money to your school."

Kerr seemed to have forgotten that Uncle Tom's Cabin is no longer a best seller, but the responsible press of North Carolina has not forgotten it. Immediately the legislator was scored by a number of newspapers. "Mr. Kerr," said the Winston-Salem Journal, "is presuming that state government is of, by and for white citizens. The truth is that North Carolina's legislature is by white citizens—no Negro sits in the General Assembly. The government however is of an electorate which includes a growing number of Negro voters, and certainly the government is for all citizens," and the Negro colleges are "not begging the white folks for money."

"Let no student or academic institution," warned the University of North Carolina's Daily Tar Heel, "be intimidated by that inevitable hot air" from Rep. Kerr. At last reports none of the editors had been expelled for that forthright opinion and no officer of the university had been summoned to any legislative investigation of subversion on the campus. Nor will they be.

Gov. Terry Sanford has been attempting to spread this improvement in the atmosphere statewide. He has made a series of public statements declaring that racism is a drag on the progress of the state and he has appointed a biracial "good neighbor" committee to improve relations.

THE NEGRO population is heartened by these developments but it is not exactly swooning over the tangibility of progress.

Now that desegregation of the schools has been recognized as the law of the land, now that the federal government has demonstrated—though not yet fully enough—it intends to protect a Negro's rights to the white men's education, to assemble without hindrance in public places, to vote and have his ballot counted because he too, surprisingly enough, is human, the Negro is turning to battles still unwon or even unrecognized.

A major battlefront in North Carolina is for jobs. As the Negro is being increasingly prepared for the white collar jobs that were beyond his reach if not his rights only a figurative moment ago, what good does this preparation do him if he is denied opportunity to work in the area for which he was trained? This is the question the Negro is asking with increasing insistence in North Carolina and elsewhere.

"We are in a state of readiness," a Negro banker told me in Durham, indicating Negroes were prepared to meet the challenge but for the country to have a satisfactory deal in desegregation on the economic front, they must be met halfway.

Washington Reports:

Castro's Brand of Communism Losing Out, Betancourt Says

PRES. ROMULO BETANCOURT of Venezuela told the National Press Club in Washington that Fidel Castro's brand of communism is losing its influence in Latin America, but he warned that "there is a breeding ground [for Communism there] if we do not fight vigorously against poverty, backwardness and the economic underdevelopment of Latin America."

In his talk, carried later on the more than 500 radio stations of the AFL-CIO-sponsored public service program, Washington Reports to the People, Betancourt admonished the U.S. press for playing up Communist terror tactics in his country while neglecting to report on advances made in agrarian reform and education.

The Latin American president said that in four years, "more than 3.5 million acres have been distributed among landless farmers and more than $100 million has been invested in agrarian reform; the number of primary schools has been increased by 88.7 percent, and the number of pupils from 750,000 to 1.5 million. . . . while 1.3 million persons have been taught to read and write, reducing the adult illiteracy rate to 16 percent."

PRES. KENNEDY, in welcoming Betancourt to Washington, earlier praised his administration's work and said it had set an example for the other countries in Latin America. In a news conference, quoted on the program, Kennedy had called Latin America the "most critical area in the world today."

The Venezuelan president said in a question period after his speech that his country "could and will, at any time, put down with no problem any possible Communist uprising." A recent attempt at revolution was ended within 24 hours, he said with the aid of peasants "carrying their machetes and shotguns." He declared that the Communists in Venezuela "are completely finished as far as the union movement and the rural population are concerned."

"In addition, their influence among the students is decreasing daily," he went on. "They have been reduced to a small gang of terrorists."

A blockade of sea or air movement between Cuba and Latin America was advocated by the Venezuelan head of state to halt "shipment of funds which are used to promote disturbances throughout the hemisphere, and the transportation of activists and saboteurs who receive training in Cuba."

"Finally," said Betancourt, "we should assist and stimulate democratic resistance against the Communist regime on the island itself. We should continue constantly and unremittingly our actions against this regime in Cuba—to encircle it, to cut it off, without ceasing and without failing."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

SEN. MANSFIELD OF MONTANA, the Democratic floor leader, showed his displeasure plainly when Sen. Clark of Pennsylvania carried to the floor his fight to enlarge the Senate Finance Committee to make it more responsive to Pres. Kennedy's proposals on taxes and social security health protection. But Clark's open eruption—though considered untactful by those he stung—had considerable educational value.

The existing Finance Committee lineup—now as in the 87th Congress—is 11 Democrats and 6 Republicans, with a clear majority basically hostile to Kennedy's economic programs. The Democrats won a net increase of three seats last November, giving them a 67-33 margin in the entire Senate. This is slightly more than 2-1 and entitles Democrats to a 2-1 ratio on committees.

Clark proposed the addition of three Democrats and one Republican, to make the party lineup 14 Democrats and 7 Republicans—the 2-1 ratio.

Clark also proposed that the Appropriations Committee be enlarged from 27 members (17 Democrats, 10 Republicans) to 29 members (19 to 10), which would approach the 2-1 ratio.

The Democratic Steering Committee, which makes the decisions subject to ratification by the Senate, turned Clark down on this, too, and changed the committee to 18 Democrats and 9 Republicans—establishing the 2-1 ratio without increasing the membership. The effect was to "bump" the Republican with least seniority, Sen. Javits of New York.

* * *

NOW THE INTERESTING THING is that Clark was both logical and consistent; he was just defeated by a coalition of Republicans and southern Democrats, plus a few senior allies, which he labeled the "Senate Establishment."

Mansfield himself made these disclosures on the floor:

- He favored Clark's proposals, personally.
- He was informed by the Republicans, however, that the proposals would get no GOP support whatever—that all 33 votes would go against them.
- A check requested by Mansfield showed that, at maximum, Clark's proposals would have "between 40 and 42 votes" if Mansfield himself waged an all-out floor fight for them.
- "Certain members" of the Finance Committee and "other senators" informed him, "We do not want the membership of the Committee on Finance to be increased."

* * *

WHAT DO THESE interesting revelations suggest?

They plainly show that rather than vote to enlarge the Finance Committee, thus paving the way for enlargement of the Appropriations Committee, the Republicans were willing to sacrifice Javits.

They also plainly show that Mansfield could not have got the southern Democrats to go along with the "40 to 42 votes" from northern and western Democrats.

Where did Clark lose his battle? He lost it in the Democratic Steering Committee, despite the fact that Mansfield supported him. Why? Because the 13-member Steering Committee is made up of seven southerners plus two southwestern senators (Hayden of Arizona and Bible of Nevada) who on organizational issues usually honor the ancient alliance between cotton and silver states.

The Steering Committee gladly increased the membership of various committees and raised the Democratic margin on others. Its hierarchy felt no compulsion to be consistent.

Mansfield's castigation of Clark for ventilating this situation publicly was sharp—but isn't the public entitled to the facts on how the Senate is run?

1962 HEYWOOD BROUN AWARD presentation by the Newspaper Guild turned into a family affair for Washington Post Reporter Morton Mintz, his wife, Anita, and their three children. Roberta, 8, examines the $500 award check being presented to her father by ANG Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson as Margaret, 12, looks over her shoulder. Mintz, who won the award for breaking the thalidomide story, holds the youngest member of the family, 17-month-old Daniel.

How to Buy:

Job-Education Tax Deductions Offer Saving to Worker Families

By Sidney Margolius

IF YOU KNOW HOW to use it, the job-education deduction permitted by the federal income tax laws can be valuable aid. It can help you or other members of your family improve your work skills, with part of the expense paid by Uncle Sam in the form of a tax saving.

Commerce Clearing House, national reporting authority on tax law, points out that you can deduct vocational training and educational expenses on your federal tax return if you can show that your intent is to "maintain or improve" skills needed in your job.

This does not mean that any vocational training course qualifies. The additional training must be needed for your present job.

For example, a youngster going to college or a trade school could not take this deduction. Nor could you take it if your purpose simply is to improve your general educational level. Nor even could an unskilled worker going to school evenings to learn a skilled trade take it. But if you go to school or take a correspondence course to meet added requirements of your work, and you had met the job's previous minimum requirements, the chances are good that you can deduct the cost.

This would be so even if you got an increase in pay or an advancement as the result of the additional training so long as the main need for the course involved your present job.

Here are examples cited by CCH and the Internal Revenue Service to show when such expenses are deductible:

- An auto mechanic takes a course in the study of automobile transmissions. The cost is deductible, since the purpose primarily is to maintain or improve skills needed in his work.
- Say your daughter is a stenographer. She feels she could improve her skill in typing and shorthand by learning advanced methods. The cost of the training is deductible because it is intended to improve skills required in her present job.

EDUCATIONAL EXPENSES which meet these requirements are deductible whether or not your employer has said you must take the course. However, a letter from him saying the training is needed always is a helpful form of documentation.

If your employer pays part of the expense, then you can deduct your share. Otherwise you deduct it all. Among the expenses you can include in your deduction are tuition, fees, books, supplies and other necessary items.

The IRS points out that a machine operator whose employer has acquired new machines requiring new operating methods, and who has to take a course in another city, would be able to deduct all expenses including board away from home.

You can deduct vocational-education expenses only if you itemize your deductions on page 2 of Form 1040. If you take the standard 10 percent allowance, you can't deduct tuition, literature and incidental expenses, but still can deduct for any travel and lodging costs away from home incurred in taking a course.

If you already had such qualified educational expenses in 1962, you can go ahead and take this deduction on your tax return. But the main value of this potential deduction, in our view, is the encouragement and financial assistance it gives wage-earners to keep up with new skills in this period of rapidly-advancing technology.

Also keep in mind that if you itemize deductions, you also can deduct the cost of any technical or trade magazines and books, whether or not you take a formal school course.

Wage-earners also often have a number of other deductible expenses. These include union dues; costs of small tools and supplies, and repair and depreciation of the more expensive tool; cost and repair of safety clothing such as safety shoes, headgear, goggles, special work gloves and aprons, oil clothes and rubber boots.

Otherwise work clothing is deductible only if it is of a special nature and can be used solely on the job.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

GREATER UNION participation in rehabilitation in case of disaster was assured after a "disaster workshop" sponsored by the Community Services Committee of the Greater Springfield (Mass.) AFL-CIO and the local Red Cross chapter. Shown during one of the sessions are, from left: Samuel G. Simons, Red Cross board member; Samuel R. Walker, CSC representative, and George Hital and Edward Johnston, CSC members.

Mills Follow Suit:

Monsters of Metal Replace Woodsmen

This article from Canadian Labour, written by C. Grant MacNeil, regional public relations director of the Woodworkers, describes technological change and job displacement in the forest-products industry:

MECHANICAL MONSTERS are now replacing a hardy breed of loggers whose remarkable skill once harvested the towering British Columbia timber from which 70 percent of Canadian lumber is processed. In plywood plants, the effects of automation are more pronounced in terms of producton and job security.

The 35,000 workers who man the forest products industry are stunned by the facts compiled by a four-man labor-management wage revision committee engaged in fixing new job rates. Strides in mechanization, preliminary to automation, present an ever-increasing displacement of workers whose skills are not elsewhere in demand.

The spectacular "high lead" logging techniques have largely disappeared. Now, high-powered road construction equipment drives a network of roads into logging aeras over mountain terrain formerly inaccessible. The agile and daring "high rigger" who once climbed, topped and rigged 120-foot spar trees is a vanishing breed. When required, a moblie steel spar, lowered and raised by hydraulic jacks, can get action on the work site with 10 times the Whole categories of workers are disappearing because of the introduction of the windrow machine. This towering, mobile and powerful crane moves along the newly-constructed roads and picks up large and small logs for 200 feet on either side of the road, placing them in windrows at the roadside as easily as hay is harvested.

It is followed by powered and mobile loading machines, with mechanical grapples or air tongs, which can deftly pick up the largest of the windrowed logs and place them on trucks with high side stakes.

Where a crew of as many as 50 men was once employed to "yard and load" in one "setting", as few as eight men can now handle twice the number of logs with much greater speed.

The present production methods are a far cry from those employed when the first plywood plant was opened on the banks of the Fraser River in 1913. Techniques are being constantly streamlined with the aid of electronics and automatic controls. Manual work is being steadily replaced with machine supervision.

Output was small in the early days. But by 1950 the production of a few mills had reached an annual total of 300,000 square feet. In 1961, 14 plants made a production record of 1.39 million square feet, which gained the industry a major place in Canadian manufacturing.

In a plywood plant, now the peeler logs are first sorted in the mill boom ground, bucked to length in multiples of eight feet, plus a cutting allowance. These log lengths or blocks are now barked in a matter of seconds with the aid of raceways and precise control of cranes and lifts.

The newly-installed lathes for peeling are fed with an automatically-controlled charger, using an electronic sighting device to establish the symmetrical centre for rotation against the lathe knife. No more juggling with a crane suspension. The operator can speedily place the block in the lathe chucks from his push-button panel.

The lathe operator has panel control of a back roll which reduces vibration inrotation of the block, and retractable chucks which enable peeling with a smaller residual core. He also controls the discharge and breaking of the long peeled sheet of veneer into automatically controlled trays.

From the lathe the sheet of veneer enters into a maze of processes, featured by automatic clipping into required lengths, an automatic drying process with mechanized feeding and off-bearing, patching, glue-spreading, core-laying, a cold press to facilitate the hot press operation, skinner saws, sanding, frequent stages of inspection and grading, final patching, and final grading and sorting, wrapping and shipping.

The transfer of material from unit to unit is not automatic, but is accomplished with a speed and ingenuity which is impressive. The manual work of feeding machines and off-bearing is being reduced by mechanical devices.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Vagaries of Weather Explained As a Meteorologist Never Could

By Jane Goodsell

THE WEATHER ISN'T nearly as difficult to understand as meteorologists pretend it is. They make it seem complicated by fussing around with weather maps, and babbling about high-pressure areas and slow-moving cold fronts. No wonder their predictions are so miserably inaccurate. All that scientific hocus-pocus is pure nonsense.

In truth, weather is a very simple subject to understand once you grasp a few fundamental facts, all of which are based solidly on the Law of Cause and Effect.

Okay. Let's get down to business.

What is rain? Rain is drops of water discharged by the clouds. Rain is caused by overnight camping expeditions, by golf tournaments, Sunday school picnics, garden weddings, patio suppers and laundry hanging on outdoor clotheslines. Dry days can be assured by wearing your raincoat and galoshes to work, and long rainy spells are directly attributable to two-week vacations.

Snow is frozen particles of vapor in the atmosphere in the form of white feathery flakes. Another variety of snow is particles of grease, mud and ice in the streets in the form of slush.

Snowfalls are caused by householders who decide they can safely postpone putting anti-freeze in the car for another week or so. Several inches of snowfall annually can be expected in northern locales with the exception of the year the kids get a new sled for Christmas. Snow usually occurs during the winter months, but freak spring blizzards are the fault of housewives who store the winter woolens in mothballs before June.

NOW LET'S examine wind. Wind is air in motion, caused by ladies wearing flowered hats, by slippery-fingeerd children carrying helium-filled balloons and by hairdos fresh from the beauty parlor.

Wind is a sometime thing that comes and goes in sudden gusts. It can be depended on to blow up a squall at picnic suppers, upsetting paper plates and wafting away paper napkins. On the other hand, a high wind may quiet down suddenly, leaving a stillness in which not a leaf stirs. Predictably, this will occur at the precise moment that you have panted your way to the top of a windy hill, and are now ready to unfurl your kite.

Heat waves are the direct result of air conditioners going on the blink, and cold snaps are caused by flats of petunias that have just been transplanted.

Fog is caused by motorists driving home from parties at which they had martinis and by expeditions to scenic spots to show Aunt Henrietta the lovely view.

That'll do for a first lesson. Now, honestly, doesn't this make more sense than all that silly business about pressure areas and cold fronts? I thought so!

CPI Rises to 106:

Higher Food Prices Boost Cost of Living

The consumer's cost of living rose in January, pushed upward mainly by higher food prices, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The Consumer Price Index jumped by two-tenths of 1 percent to 106 percent, the department said. This means the market basket of goods and services which cost $10 in the base period of 1957-59 now costs $10.60.

The rise was due mainly to an increase of 1.2 percent in retail food prices, the report noted, "primarily because of sharply higher prices of fruits and vegetables which resulted from freezing weather in mid-December and from the East and Gulf Coast dock strikes."

The January CPI, at 106 percent was up by 1.4 percent compared to a year ago.

Cost of living allowances for some 1 million auto, farm equipment and aerospace workers will remain unchanged since the January CPI is at the same level as last October's. About 13,000 workers in small industries, the report added, will receive 1-to-3 cents an hour hikes based on semiannual or annual reviews.

In a companion report, the Labor Dept. said the average spendable earnings of factory production workers dropped from December's record level.

The decline in weekly take-home pay was due partly to reduced factory workweeks, since average hourly earnings remained unchanged. The social security tax rate increase starting in January also affected take-home pay, the report added.

It said weekly take-home pay—gross earnings minus social security and federal income tax deductions—totaled $85.78 for a factory worker with 3 dependents and $78.11 for the worker without dependents. In each case, these earnings were about $1.25 lower than in December but $1.60 higher than a year ago.

Purchasing power—take-home pay related to increases in the CPI—dropped the spendable earnings figure by $1.35 from the December record high.

Over the year, the report pointed out, real earnings were up by 40 cents as a workweek increase of 24 minutes and a small hike in hourly earnings were partially offset by a 1.5 percent rise in the CPI.

BONDING REGULATIONS for large employe welfare and pension plans was the subject of testimony by AFL-CIO representatives at this hearing conducted by Frank M. Kleiler, left, director of the Labor Dept.'s Office of Welfare & Pension Plans. At right are: Wesley Reedy, assistant to AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, and Richard Shoemaker of the federation's Dept. of Social Security.

Labor Asks Flexibility In Welfare Plan Bonds

The AFL-CIO has urged the Labor Dept. to set bonding requirements on larger welfare and pension plans—those involving $5 million or more a year—on a case-by-case basis rather than a fixed scheduled to assure "maximum safety for the plans coupled with maximum benefits for the beneficiaries."

Wesley Reedy, assistant to AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, at a hearing before Frank M. Kleiler, director of the Labor Dept.'s Office of Welfare & Pension Plans, traced back to pre-merger days, the record of labor support for disclosure legislation, which he said reflected a natural concern for the safety and solvency of such plans.

"We want the workers who are covered by the plans to have the greatest possible assurance that the benefits which they expect will in fact be paid when due," Reedy said.

The price for this, he noted, is the additional administrative cost represented by bonding, which reduces the amount of money available for benefits.

"We believe that as a practical matter, a reasonable balance must be reached between cost and risk," he continued. "Too little protection would jeopardize the safety of funds; that would be intolerable. Too much protection would unduly restrict benefits; that would be unfair."

The Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act of 1962, which the AFL-CIO supported, set the amount of bonding required for smaller plans—those involving less than $5 million a year—at 10 percent of the funds handled, but authorized the Secretary of Labor to prescribe the amount of the bond for larger plans.

Reedy said the AFL-CIO favored the case-by-case approach for the larger plans, rather than simple extension of the 10 percent rule, because of the "tremendous variation" in their administration and because they are usually subject to greater internal control and audit.

He noted that more than 125,000 plans are now on file with the Labor Dept., reflecting a high degree of diversity. At one extreme, he said, is the plan in which a single large employer periodically submits a single check to a corporate fiduciary or trust company, which handles all further administrative details, including investments and payment of benefits. At the other end would be the large multi-employer, self-trusteed plan, "receiving many checks from many sources and making disbursements to beneficiaries whose work records are equally diverse."

Such variation, Reedy said, "makes it impossible to devise a fixed schedule, which would protect all these plans yet not impose excessive costs on some of them."

He suggested the following criteria for setting the bonding requirements for a large plan:

- Greater emphasis on actual physical contact with funds of the plan in determining the amount of the bond and whom it covers.
- The degree of fiscal control through internal measures.
- The degree of protection by alternate bonding arrangements and by evidence of financial responsibility.

2 CLC Unions Vote to Merge In September

Toronto, Ont.—The executive boards of the National Union of Public Employes and the National Union of Public Service Employes have ratified the basic terms and conditions of a merger into a new Canadian Union of Public Employes.

Unification is scheduled to be completed at a founding convention scheduled for Winnipeg, Man., Sept. 24-26, following separate conventions of the two unions on Sept. 23. The merger is the largest between affiliates of the Canadian Labor Congress since it was created in 1956.

In a joint statement, NUPE Pres. William Buss and NUPSE Pres. Stanley A. Little predicted that the membership, which now totals about 85,000, will have risen to "around 90,000" by the time of the merger convention. This would make it the largest dues-paying union in the CLC.

Rubber Workers Act To Open Major Pacts

Akron, O.—The Rubber Workers have served notices to open negotiations on companywide contracts with three major producers in the industry—Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. and B. F. Goodrich Co.

All three contracts, covering a total of about 50,000 members of the union, expire Apr. 20. The contract with U.S. Rubber, other member of the Big Four tire companies, does not expire until June 1.

URW Pres. George Burdon said dates and sites for negotiations will be set by mutual agreement between the union and each firm.

Major elements in the URW bargaining program include a "substantial general wage increase" supplemented by a plan for sharing of gains in economic productivity, establishment of companywide committees to seek solutions to automation problems, and a schedule of "sabbatical" vacations with full pay every seven years ranging from two months in the seventh year of seniority to 12 months in the 42nd year.

Negotiations with Goodyear will cover about 20,000 workers at plants in Akron; Gadsden, Ala.; Los Angeles; Jackson, Mich.; St. Marys, O.; Muncie, Ind.; Lincoln, Neb.; Windsor, Vt.; New Bedford, Mass.; Topeka, Kan., and North Chicago.

The Firestone talks will affect some 17.500 workers in plants at Akron; Los Angeles; Noblesville, Ind.; Memphis; New Castle, Ind.; Fall River, Mass.; Des Moines, and Pottstown, Pa.

Goodrich negotiations will cover about 12,500 workers in plants at Akron; Los Angeles; Clarkesville, Tenn.; Marion, O.; Oaks, Pa.; Miami, Okla.; Tuscaloosa, Ala., and Riverside, N. J.

Mail Cancellation Hails Labor Dept.

Letters mailed in the nation's 15 largest post offices—ranked by volume of mail—will carry special cancellation markers on their envelopes reading: "U.S. Dept. of Labor, 1913-1963, 50th Anniversary."

The cancellations are being used in Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Boston, Detroit, St. Louis, San Francisco, Washington, Cleveland, Kansas City, Mo., Brooklyn, Dallas, Minneapolis, Atlanta, New York.

100th Red Cross Drive Given Backing by Meany

The American Red Cross marks its 100th anniversary and goes into its March fund-raising campaign with the full support of the AFL-CIO, Pres. George Meany said in a letter to ARC Pres. Alfred M. Gruenther.

"The members of organized labor reaffirm their support of the American Red Cross," Meany declared in his letter. "This we do because we know of the very important job being done by the Red Cross here at home and throughout the world . . . Our communities are better because of the voluntary agencies, of which the Red Cross is the acknowledged leader. Our nation is stronger because of outlets for good citizenship offered by the Red Cross."

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, chairman of the Community Services Committee and president of the Communications Workers, reported that union members are getting deeper into the task of helping the Red Cross do its job. He called for support of the annual Red Cross drive where it is not tied in with a local united fund.

Beirne also urged local unions to expand their community services programs through greater participation in the Red Cross where, he declared, "they will find an avenue of service of very, very great value to their community, nation and world."

Ship Line Agrees To Obey Rules

The Labor Dept. has issued a "cease and desist" order against Grace Line, Inc., of New York for violation of the maritime safety provisions of the Federal Longshoremen's & Harbor Workers' Compensation Act.

In proceedings before a federal hearing examiner, the company admitted the violations and agreed to abide by the regulation in the future, the Labor Dept. said.

The Grace Line was charged with three separate violations of a safety requirement that hatch beams left in place during cargo operations be lashed or locked, the Labor Dept. reported, noting that over the years unsecured hatch beams have resulted in numerous fatalities and serious injuries to longshoremen.

Federal Unions Get Bargaining Support

Bal Harbour, Fla.—Collective bargaining and legislative goals of unions representing federal employes were given a hearty welcome and endorsement by the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its mid-winter session here.

A council resolution noted "with considerable satisfaction" the "great improvement" in labor-management relations after Pres. Kennedy issued his executive order on union recognition last year.

The council said the order has "stimulated a healthy growth of membership" in affiliated unions and has enabled them to have "greater participation" in shaping personnel policies and working conditions in the government service.

A five-point legislative program endorsed by the Executive Council called for these benefits:

- Optional retirement with full benefits after 30 years of service, regardless of age.
- Higher contributions by the government to the health and life insurance programs for government workers, and retention of at least 50 percent of life insurance coverage after the age of 65. Coverage now drops to 25 percent of the policy's face value.
- Checkoff of union dues at the employe's request.
- Adoption of a 35-hour workweek.
- "Elimination of speed-up practices" and full overtime pay for substitute workers in the postal service.

"Enrollment of all unorganized federal workers is essential if federal employes and the government as employer are to achieve maximum benefit from union recognition and collective bargaining," the statement emphasized.

Major 88th Congress Committees

Senate

Labor & Public Welfare

Democrats

Lister Hill (Ala.), chairman
Pat McNamara (Mich.)
Wayne Morse (Ore.)
Ralph W. Yarborough (Tex.)
Joseph S. Clark (Pa.)
Jennings Randolph (W. Va.)
Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (N. J.)
Quentin N. Burdick (N. D.)
Claiborne deB. Pell (R. I.)
Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.)

Republicans

Barry Goldwater (Ariz.)
Jacob K. Javits (N. Y.)
Winston L. Prouty (Vt.)
John G. Tower (Tex.)
Len B. Jordan (Ida.)

Finance

Democrats

Harry Flood Byrd (Va.), chairman
Russell B. Long (La.)
George A. Smathers (Fla.)
Clinton P. Anderson (N. M.)
Paul H. Douglas (Ill.)
Albert Gore (Tenn.)
Herman E. Talmadge (Ga.)
Eugene J. McCarthy (Minn.)
Vance Hartke (Ind.)
J. William Fulbright (Ark.)
Abraham A. Ribicoff (Conn.)

Republicans

John J. Williams (Del.)
Frank Carlson (Kan.)
Wallace F. Bennett (Utah)
Carl T. Curtis (Neb.)
Thruston B. Morton (Ky.)
Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.)

Banking & Currency

Democrats

A. Willis Robertson (Va.), chairman
John J. Sparkman (Ala.)
Paul H. Douglas (Ill.)
Joseph S. Clark (Pa.)
William Proxmire (Wis.)
Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (N. J.)
Edmund S. Muskie (Me.)
Edward V. Long (Mo.)
Maurine B. Neuberger (Ore.)
Thomas J. McIntyre (N. H.)

Republicans

Wallace F. Bennett (Utah)
John G. Tower (Tex.)
Jacob K. Javits (N. Y.)
Milward L. Simpson (Wyo.)
Peter H. Dominick (Colo.)

Judiciary

Democrats

James O. Eastland (Miss.), chairman
Estes Kefauver (Tenn.)
Olin D. Johnston (S. C.)
John L. McClellan (Ark.)
Sam L. Ervin, Jr. (N. C.)
Thomas J. Dodd (Conn.)
Philip A. Hart (Mich.)
Edward V. Long (Mo.)
Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.)
Birch Bayh (Ind.)

Republicans

Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.)
Roman L. Hruska (Neb.)
Kenneth B. Keating (N. Y.)
Hiram L. Fong (Hawaii)
Hugh Scott (Pa.)

Foreign Relations

Democrats

J. William Fulbright (Ark.), chairman
John J. Sparkman (Ala.)
Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.)
Mike Mansfield (Mont.)
Wayne Morse (Ore.)
Russell B. Long (La.)
Albert Gore (Tenn.)
Frank J. Lausche (O.)
Frank Church (Ida.)
Stuart Symington (Mo.)
Thomas J. Dodd (Conn.)
George A. Smathers (Fla.)

Republicans

Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Ia.)
George D. Aiken (Vt.)
Frank Carlson (Kan.)
John J. Williams (Del.)
Karl E. Mundt (S. D.)

House

Education & Labor

Democrats

Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. (N. Y.), chairman
Carl D. Perkins (Ky.)
Phil M. Landrum (Ga.)
Edith Green (Ore.)
James Roosevelt (Calif.)
Frank Thompson, Jr. (N. J.)
Elmer J. Holland (Pa.)
Johns H. Dent (Pa.)
Roman C. Pucinski (Ill.)
Dominick V. Daniels (N. J.)
John Brademas (Ind.)
James G. O'Hara (Mich.)
Ralph J. Scott (N. C.)
Hugh L. Carey (N. Y.)
Augustus F. Hawkins (Calif.)
Carlton R. Sickles (Md.)
Sam M. Gibbons (Fla.)
Thomas P. Gill (Hawaii)
George E. Brown (Calif.)

Republicans

Peter Frelinghuysen, Jr. (N. J.)
William H. Ayres (O.)
Robert P. Griffin (Mich.)
Albert H. Quie (Minn.)
Charles E. Goodell (N. Y.)
Donald C. Bruce (Ind.)
John M. Ashbrook (O.)
Dave Martin (Neb.)
Alphonzo Bell (Calif.)
M. G. Snyder (Ky.)
Paul Findley (Ill.)
Robert Taft, Jr. (O.)

Ways & Means

Democrats

Wilbur D. Mills (Ark.), chairman
Cecil R. King (Calif.)
Thomas J. O'Brien (Ill.)
Hale Boggs (La.)
Eugene J. Keogh (N. Y.)
Frank M. Karsten (Mo.)
A. Sydney Herlong, Jr. (Fla.)
Willam J. Green, Jr. (Pa.)
John C. Watts (Ky.)
Al Ullman (Ore.)
James A. Burke (Mass.)
Clark W. Thompson (Tex.)
Martha W. Griffiths (Mich.)
Ross Bass (Tenn.)
W. Pat Jennings (Va.)

Republicans

John W. Byrnes (Wis.)
Howard H. Baker (Tenn.)
Thomas B. Curtis (Mo.)
Victor A. Knox (Mich.)
James B. Utt (Calif.)
Jackson E. Betts (O.)
Bruce Alger (Tex.)
Steven B. Derounian (N. Y.)
Herman T. Schneebeli (Pa.)
Harold R. Collier (Ill.)

Banking & Currency

Democrats

Wright Patman (Tex.), chairman
Albert Rains (Ala.)
Abraham J. Multer (N. Y.)
William A. Barrett (Pa.)
Leonor K. Sullivan (Mo.)
Henry S. Reuss (Wis.)
Thomas L. Ashley (O.)
Charles A. Vanik (O.)
William S. Moorhead (Pa.)
Robert G. Stephens, Jr. (Ga.)
Fernand J. St. Germain (R. I.)
Henry B. Gonzalez (Tex.)
Claude Pepper (Fla.)
Joseph G. Minish (N. J.)
Charles L. Weltner (Ga.)
Richard T. Hanna (Calif.)
Bernard F. Grabowski (Conn.)
Charles H. Wilson (Calif.)

Republicans

Clarence E. Kilburn (N. Y.)
William B. Widnall (N. J.)
Eugene Siler (Ky.)
Paul A. Fino (N. Y.)
Florence P. Dwyer (N. J.)
Seymour Halpern (N. Y.)
James Harvey (Mich.)
Oliver P. Bolton (O.)
William E. Brock III (Tenn.)
Robert Taft, Jr. (O.)
Joseph M. McDade (Pa.)
Sherman P. Lloyd (Utah)
Burt L. Talcott (Calif.)

Judiciary

Democrats

Emanuel Celler (N. Y.), chairman
Francis E. Walter (Pa.)
Michael A. Feighan (O.)
Frank Chelf (Ky.)
Edwin E. Willis (La.)
Peter W. Rodino, Jr. (N. J.)
E. L. Forrester (Ga.)
Byron G. Rogers (Colo.)
Harold D. Donohue (Mass.)
Jack Brooks (Tex.)
William M. Tuck (Va.)
Robert T. Ashmore (S. C.)
John Dowdy (Tex.)
Basil L. Whitener (N. C.)
Roland V. Libonati (Ill.)
Herman Toll (Pa.)
Robert W. Kastenmeier (Wis.)
Jacob H. Gilbert (N. Y.)
James C. Corman (Calif.)
William L. St. Onge (Conn.)
George F. Senner, Jr. (Ariz.)

Republicans

William M. McCulloch (O.)
William E. Miller (N. Y.)
Richard H. Poff (Va.)
William C. Cramer (Fla.)
Arch A. Moore, Jr. (W. Va.)
George Meader (Mich.)
John V. Lindsay (N. Y.)
William T. Cahill (N. J.)
Garner E. Shriver (Kan.)
Clark MacGregor (Minn.)
Charles McC. Mathias, Jr. (Md.)
James E. Bromwell (Ia.)
Carleton J. King (N. Y.)
Pat Miner Martin (Calif.)

Foreign Affairs

Democrats

Thomas E. Morgan (Pa.), chairman
Clement J. Zablocki (Wis.)
Omar Burleson (Tex.)
Edna F. Kelly (N. Y.)
Wayne L. Hays (O.)
Armistead I. Selden, Jr. (Ala.)
J. L. Pilcher (Ga.)
Barratt O'Hara (Ill.)
L. H. Fountain (N. C.)
Dante B. Fascell (Fla.)
Leonard Farbstein (N. Y.)
Charles C. Diggs, Jr. (Mich.)
Lindley Beckworth (Tex.)
Harris B. McDowell, Jr. (Del.)
William T. Murphy (Ill.)
Cornelius E. Gallagher (N. J.)
Robert N. C. Nix (Pa.)
John S. Monagan (Conn.)
Donald M. Fraser (Minn.)
Ronald Brooks Cameron (Calif.)

Republicans

Frances P. Bolton (O.)
E. Ross Adair (Ind.)
William S. Mailliard (Calif.)
Peter Frelinghuysen, Jr. (N. J.)
William S. Broomfield (Mich.)
Robert R. Barry (N. Y.)
J. Irving Whalley (Pa.)
H. R. Gross (Ia.)
E. Y. Berry (S. D.)
Edward J. Derwinski (Ill.)
F. Bradford Morse (Mass.)
James F. Battin (Mont.)
Vernon W. Thomson (Wis.)

Rules

Democrats

Howard W. Smith (Va.), chairman
William M. Colmer (Miss.)
Ray J. Madden (Ind.)
James J. Delaney (N. Y.)
James W. Trimble (Ark.)
Homer Thornberry (Tex.)
Richard Bolling (Mo.)
Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. (Mass.)
Carl Elliott (Ala.)
B. F. Sisk (Calif.)

Republicans

Clarence J. Brown (O.)
Katharine St. George (N. Y.)
H. Allen Smith (Calif.)
Elmer J. Hoffman (Ill.)
William H. Avery (Kan.)

AFL-CIO Backs Bill:

Youth Job Needs Labeled 'Critical'

The need for youth employment legislation is "urgent . . . immediate . . . critical," the AFL-CIO declared in testimony before two congressional committees.

Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair said labor strongly supports the Administration's bill to set up a Youth Conservation Corps and a parallel "home town corps." He warned that "unless we act quickly," the "explosive" unemployment problem among untrained, out-of-school youth will threaten "the moral and ceonomic future of our society."

Fair testified before Labor subcommitees of both House and Senate which are holding overlapping hearings on the Humphrey-Perkins youth bill, which Pres. Kennedy has termed "a measure of the first priority."

Emphasizing the importance put on the bill by the Administration, five Cabinet members—representing the departments of Labor, Agriculture, Interior, Justice, and Health, Education & Welfare—testified in person before one or both of the subcommittees.

Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz said the legislation is "needed immediately" because unemployment among young people "is and has been for some time much too high." Unless the problem is attacked "vigorously," he said, the number of unemployed young people "may well be one-third greater in 1970 than it is today."

The "basic answer," Wirtz said, is a higher growth rate for the economy "which will mean more jobs through private employment." But "Special measures are needed," he emphasized, to give unemployed youngsters "opportunities for learning work disciplines and skills,

'Sound Investment'

The AFL-CIO testimony termed the proposed Youth Conservation Corps "a sound, national investment in conservation of natural resources and human resources."

Fair said the AFL-CIO considers plans for training and educating boys enrolled in the conservation corps "a vital and essential part" of the program.

Labor's only criticism, he said, is that the scale of the proposed conservation corps is "far too small." While the bill sets maximum enrollment at 15,000 young men the first year and 60,000 a year thereafter, the need is for an enrollment of at least 150,000, he said.

He expressed hope that Congress will provide funds for "at least the 40,000 'home town youth corps' members" requested by Pres. Kennedy in his budget for the 1964 fiscal year."

Labor's support of the program was emphasized also in a statement filed with the House subcommittee by Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers and in testimony before the Senate unit by Mrs. Mildred Jeffrey, Auto Workers director of community relations.

Idleness Factor in Delinquency

Beirne said the "frustration caused by continuing unemployment" among youth is a factor in juvenile delinquency and mental illness.

"Youth will cooperate in a society that is interested in its future," he emphasized.

Mrs. Jeffrey pointed out that unemployment among youth is "substantially greater" than in the general population and highest of all among members of minority groups faced with "additional discrimination both in their educational opportunities and at the employment office."

2 Win Scholarships in Morgan Essay Contest

Carla Lipsig, a 17-year-old freshman student at Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass., and Richard C. Frazier, a 32-year-old married senior attending night school at Queens College in Flushing, N. Y., have been judged winners of the 1962-63 Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest, it was announced by Pres. Robert R. Pauley of the ABC Radio Network.

The two top winners will receive graduate school scholarships and a visit to Washington, where they were to be guests at a dinner Mar. 4 celebrating the Dept. of Labor's 50th anniversary. Also on their schedule were meetings with leading policy-makers in government, labor, education and broadcasting.

Runners-up, each of whom will be awarded a 24-volume set of the new Colliers Encyclopedia, are: Mary Treacy, College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, Minn.; Sandra Lee Miller, San Francisco State College, San Francisco, Calif.; Richard J. Cassidy, Sacred Heart Seminary, Detroit; Dock (CQ) Burke, Jr., Texas A & M College, College Station, Tex., and Terry Segal, Amherst College, Amherst, Mass. They have been invited to attend regional functions celebrating the Labor Dept.'s birthday.

Topic for the essay competition was "Youth Challenge in the Labor Market of the 60s."

Judges for the 1962-63 contest were Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz; Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg; former Labor Sec. James P. Mitchell; former Labor Sec. Frances Perkins; Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.); AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany; Pres. John McConnell, the University of New Hampshire and former dean of Cornell University's School of Industrial & Labor Relations; ABC Newsman Edward P. Morgan himself; and Pauley.

Miss Lipsig wants to become a labor lawyer. Her parents live in New York City. She has a recorded IQ of 173, and was graduated from Columbia Grammar School and Hunter College Elementary School before starting at Brandeis.

Frazier is majoring in education, with heavy emphasis on history and political science. He completed two years at Princeton University and currently attends night school. During the day he is assistant manager of the mail order department at Tiffany's in New York City. He is married to the former Dorothy Reaser, a legal secretary.

ABC radio and the AFL-CIO, sponsors of the network's Edward P. Morgan and the News, were joined this year in their association with the contest by the Dept. of Labor. Wirtz has commented that efforts like the essay contest "encourage thoughtful consideration by American youth of their own contribution to our nation's goals."

Edward P. Morgan and the News is broadcast out the ABC radio network Monday through Friday from 7 to 7:15 p.m. (EST).

Labor Replies to Kennedy:

Wagner to Resume Newspaper Talks

New York—Mayor Robert F. Wagner has announced that a "last-ditch" effort will be made to resolve the New York City newspaper shutdown through direct negotiations between the publishers and the striking and locked-out Typographical Union, with the mayor and ITU Pres. Elmer Brown joining the talks.

Wagner said that examination of reports from both sides on their 10-hour bargaining session earlier in the week revealed "some slight glimmer of hope" for settlement of the dispute without resort to the third-party recommendations he had proposed.

Both the publishers and ITU Local 6, the mayor reported, had told him they preferred to settle the dispute through negotiations and asked him to refrain from drafting an independent settlement proposal at this time but to continue in his role as mediator.

The mayor said he then called Brown at union headquarters in Colorado Springs, Colo., and the ITU president agreed to fly to New York immediately for resumption of the talks. Wagner said he would schedule the negotiation sessions after meeting with the parties following Brown's arrival.

He had announced his plan to propose settlement terms following a suggestion by Pres. Kennedy. At his news conference Feb. 21, the President called on the publishers, printers and other unions to submit their differences to "independent determination" of some kind.

In an unusual statement commenting on a labor dispute which he acknowledged is not in the national emergency category, Kennedy said the New York newspaper dispute had "passed the point of public toleration" and declared that Local 6 and Powers were "attempting to impose a settlement which could shut down several newspapers in New York and throw thousands out of work."

Replies to President

The President's remarks drew immediate response from labor spokesmen.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, asked to comment during a news conference at the Executive Council meeting in Bal Harbour, Fla., observed that New York City "does not have to be without newspapers."

"The Intl. Typographical Union agreed without reservation to publish five newspapers at the old wage rate and agreed not to ask for retroactive wage increases," he said.

"The union has acted in good faith and if the publishers had equally acted in good faith and had not five newspapers locked out their employes to support the four on strike, the city would have newspapers today."

In response to another question, Meany said he would be "willing to serve in any capacity whatsoever" to help settle the New York dispute, but noted that the consent of both parties would be necessary.

79 Strikeless Years

Powers, describing the President's remarks as "ill-advised," also pointed out that the local had struck only four of the dailies and "had gone to considerable lengths to prevent the so-called marginal newspapers from going out of business."

Recalling that Local 6 had voted 2,003 to 47 to strike the four papers, Powers said that any implication that he as local president was seeking to drive certain newspapers out of business "is patently erroneous."

The fact that this is the local's first strike in 79 years, and the first against the Publishers' Association, he added, "should indicate that we are a responsible organization and that, if we are now forced to engage in a strike as a last resort, there must be good and sufficient reason for such an action."

Brown Hits Publishers

ITU Pres. Elmer Brown commented that the publishers, not Powers and the local, were guilty of obstinacy.

"It takes two parties to make an agreement," Brown said. "I spent two days and two nights back there urging the employers to make an offer we could negotiate on, and they wouldn't do it. And if that isn't obstinateness, I don't know what is."

Powers announced in a letter to the Washington Post that the ITU local has asked Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy for a federal grand jury investigation of the "callous lockout" and suspension of publication by four of the non-struck dailies.

His letter protested a Post editorial condemning the strike and declaring that "the right of people to enjoy a free press is involved."

He expressed gratification at the Post's concern for press freedom and regret that the publishers of the non-struck dailies "have chosen to deny New York a free press—placing their monetary interest above the public good."

He pointedly commented that "intense conflict of interests" lay behind the Post editorial in that the Washington paper also is involved in negotiations with its own printers, who had just rejected an offer "inferior in some respects" to the initial offer of the New York publishers.

JOINT APPRENTICESHIP COMMITTEE formed by the Operating Engineers and two major contractors' groups is shown at founding meeting which climaxed a year of discussions and negotiations. Standing are IUOE Pres. Hunter P. Wharton, left, and Sec.-Treas. Frank P. Converse. Seated, from left, are W. C. Naumann of M. M. Sundt Co., Alan F. Burch and Francis X. Hanley of the IUOE, Hugh C. Murphy of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training, Ken Molleur of Stearns-Roger Corp., Reese Hammond of the IUOE, Robert J. Cunningham of United Engineers & Constructors, Inc., B. K. Soby of the John Dieseth Co. and T. L. Cronin of the Lummus Co.

State Court Blocks Rail Clerks' Strike

San Francisco—A strike called by the Railway Clerks against the Southern Pacific over the issue of job security was blocked—at least until Mar. 8—by a temporary restraining order issued by a state judge.

The railroad obtained the court order on the day of the strike deadline from Judge James O'Keefe of the San Mateo County Superior Court, some 60 miles from here. The hearing was already under way before union attorneys, given less than an hour in notice, raced to the courtroom.

The Railway Clerks first sought protection against job slashes in 1958 and the dispute has moved slowly through the procedures of the Railway Labor Act, including appointment of a presidential emergency board. The board last December 31 recommended a series of job protection measures but the union said the railroad, under pressure from other carriers, has balked at an agreement "within the framework of the report."

Meanwhile, in two other rail disputes:

- A federal court put off a decision on a request by the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen for an injunction requiring the Southern Railway to halt "gross violations of the Railway Labor Act." The union says the railway has failed to live up to its contractual obligation to use firemen-helpers on its locomotives.

U. S. District Judge Leonard P. Walsh in Washington, D. C., set Apr. 12 as a deadline for filing briefs by both sides. The union is under a temporary restraining order barring a strike over alleged violations of its agreement with the railway.

- Union leaders on the struck Florida East Coast Railway reported that "not a single employe" other than supervisors has crossed the picket line since the strike began Jan. 23. Nonoperating unions on the railroad are striking to get the company to agree to the 10.3-cent wage increase granted last year by all other railroads in accordance with recommendations of a presidential emergency board.

The railroad has been running two trains a day staffed by supervisory officials.

Shoe Workers Register Wide Gains at 60 Plants

Wide-ranging improvements in wages and other benefits have been registered by the Shoe Workers in contracts covering employes of 60 New York City and New England firms.

The USWA also announced that it had been chosen bargaining representative for employes of the Savage Shoe plant in Galt, Ont., one of the 13 factories owned by Savage, which in turn is owned by the Intl. Shoe Co. of St. Louis. Result of the election, conducted by the Ontario Labor Relations Board, was 108 for USWA, 58 for no union.

New two-year contracts covering workers at 54 slipper and playshoe companies were ratified at a rally of 3,000 USWA members in Manhattan Center, reported National Dir. Fileno DeNovellis, who led the union bargaining team.

The agreements provide:

- A general increase of 5 cents an hour effective Feb. 15, with minimum rates at $1.25 to start, $1.30 after four months, $1.35 after eight months and $1.40 after a year.
- Vacation pay improvements to guarantee a full 40 hours after one year of service and 80 hours after five years for employes working at least 1,000 hours a year, with proportionate benefits for those working less than 1,000 hours.
- An increase in the maximum pension benefit to $40 a month, up from $35, and provisions for voluntary retirement at age 62 and disability retirement at age 55 or later.
- Improvements in hospital, medical and surgical insurance, with employer payments to the welfare fund increasing to $9.50 per month for each worker, and to $10 if necessary to cover the new terms.
- Thirty days advance notice to the union of technological changes in the manufacturing process.

The six New England agreements, National Dir. John Giderian reported, all provide hourly increases of 3 cents effective Jan. 1 this year and again next year. Other gains include higher minimum rates, an eighth paid holiday and improved health and welfare programs.

One of the settlements—with the Dover Shoe Co. of Somersworth, N. H.—was reached only after a six-day strike. The other five companies are Allied Shoe and Universal Shoe, Springvale, Me.; Sanford Shoe, Sanford, Me., and Evangeline Shoe and Salvage Shoe, Manchester, N. H.

Negotiations still are in progress with Somersworth Shoe Co. and Somersworth Wood Heel Co.

A. Miller Dead; ACWA Pioneer

New York—Vice Pres. Abraham Miller of the Clothing Workers, a pioneer in early struggles to unionize the men's clothing industry, died of leukemia at the age of 76.

He was a leader in the historic 1912 strike of New York tailors against sweatshop conditions and helped form the nucleus of the ACWA. When the union was established he became trade manager of the New York Pantsmakers Board, then served briefly as manager of the Boston Joint Board and worked as an organizer in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania before becoming secretary-treasurer of the New York Joint Board in 1922. He held that post until his death.

He is survived by his widow, Molly; a daughter, Ruth, education director of the ACWA Southern California Joint Board; and two sons, Morris and Nathan. Funeral services were held in Riverside Chapel.

Wool Import Curbs Urged By TWUA

New York—The Textile Workers Union of America has called for regulation of woolen and worsted imports without further delay, despite a recommendation of the Cabinet Textile Advisory Committee that the subject be postponed for additional study.

TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka said in a telegram to Pres. Kennedy that the union was "appalled" by the recommendation of the cabinet committee in the light of the depressed condition of the industry. He urged the President to reject the committee's advice and "take steps to negotiate voluntary international agreements" regulating woolen and worsted imports.

"We regard it as sheer folly to undertake further study of imports," Chupka said. "Facts are thoroughly known and leave no doubt of need for regulation.

"Since the start of 1963, six more woolen and worsted plants employing 1,100 workers have announced liquidation. Every indication is that, unless some restrictions are placed on imports, they will increase and accentuate hardship of this industry's workers. They will create new pockets of unemployment and increase unemployment where it already exists."

NABET Wins 8% In Television Pact

Hamilton, Ont.—An 8 percent wage increase spread over two years has been won in a contract, retroactive to Jan. 1, between the Broadcast Employes and the Niagara Television Co., operators of CHCH-TV here.

NABET also signed a first contract covering news writers and news photographers at CKLW-TV in Windsor, Ont., where it already represented the technical staff.

The Best Teaching Isn't in the Lessons

Jack Sessions of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education, just back from interviewing possible winners of AFL-CIO scholarships, reported visiting a high school in Tulsa, Okla.

On the blackboard in a drafting room, he found the following message neatly lettered on a blackboard:

"You must learn a skill or you won't know what kind of work you are out of."

Kennedy Asks Strong Voting Rights Bill

Pledges Further Steps To Wipe Out Bias

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Kennedy has sent to Congress a civil rights legislative program keyed to protection of the right to vote and has pledged to use the "full force of executive authority" to wipe out discrimination in employment, education, housing and public accommodations.

The President renewed his request for legislation barring discriminatory literacy tests for voting and establishing a sixth-grade education as proof of literacy for all federal elections. A similar bill, strongly supported by the AFL-CIO, was killed in the Senate last year after a southern filibuster.

In an indirect reference to proposed legislation outlawing race discrimination in employment—which the AFL-CIO Executive Council at its just concluded meeting termed "imperative" and "long overdue"—Kennedy said such measures "will be favorably commented on and supported, as they have in the past—and they will be signed if enacted."

Kennedy asked also for legislation to remedy "major defects" in voting rights laws enacted in 1957 and 1960 including the "long delay . . . between the filing of a lawsuit and its ultimate conclusion."

To remedy this, he asked that "interim relief" be provided while voting suits are pending in court. Temporary federal voting referees should be appointed, he said, to pass on voting qualifications when lawsuits are pending "in any county in which fewer than 15 percent of the eligible number of persons of any race claimed to be discriminated against are registered."

This provision, Kennedy said, is needed "to prevent a successful case from becoming an empty victory, insofar as the particular election is concerned."

The President also proposed an amendment specifying that civil rights voting suits be given "expedited treatment" in federal courts.

He asked Congress to enlarge the scope of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, enabling it to serve "as a national civil rights clearing house providing information, advice and technical assistance" to both public and private agencies. He asked also that the life of the commission be extended "at least four years."

Reciting the record on executive action in the civil rights field, Kennedy declared that "more progress has been made . . . than in any comparable period in our history."

Justice Dept. suits have made it possible for thousands of Negroes to register and vote, "many of them in counties where no Negroes had ever voted before," he said.

Government action, he declared, has helped bring about school desegregation both through "persuasion" and legal steps. Starting next September, the President announced, school facilities will be set up at all military bases where community schools are still segregated.

Through the efforts of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity, "hundreds of companies—covering 17 million jobs—have agreed to stringent nondiscriminatory provisions," Kennedy said.

Lauds Union Agreements

He praised agreements "calling for an affirmative attack on discrimination in employment" signed by the overwhelming majority of AFL-CIO unions and major employers.

Kennedy declared that in cases before the NLRB involving charges of racial discrimination against union locals: "I have directed the Dept. of Justice to participate in these cases and to urge the National Labor Relations Board to take appropriate action against racial discrimination in unions. It is my hope that administrative action and litigation will make unnecessary the enactment of legislation with respect to union discrimination."

Despite progress, much remains to be done, he emphasized. He added:

"The Negro baby born in America today—regardless of the section or state in which he is born—has about one-half as much chance of completing high school as a white baby born in the same place on the same day—one-third as much chance of completing college . . . twice as much chance of becoming unemployed—about one-seventh as much chance of earning $10,000 a year—a life expectancy which is seven years less—and the prospects of earning only half as much."

WEST VIRGINIA GOVERNOR W. W. Barron is shown in 1863 garb—a reminder of the state's centennial observance—as he and Mrs. Barron welcomed to the governor's mansion a group from the State COPE Women's Activities Dept. attending a State AFL-CIO legislative conference. Pictured left to right are: Mrs. Jean Brown, Parkersburg; Glenna Shires, White Sulphur Springs; Mrs. Wilma Bonar, Moundsville; Mrs. Dathel McCoy, Beckley; Mrs. Gayle Miller, Moundsville; Mrs. Patricia Sleeth, State WAD director; Mrs. Clara Reece, Charleston; Barron; Mrs. Lelia Davis, Fairmont; Mrs. Barron; State COPE Dir. Glenn Armstrong; Mrs. Helen Leon, Clarksburg; Mrs. Dorothy Orange, Huntington; Mrs. Mary Walls, Fairmont; Ruth Hanley, Wheeling; Mrs. Pauline Bonham, Beckley.

Senate Rejects Proposal by Clark To Liberalize Finance Committee

The Senate squelched an effort to enlarge key committees so as to dilute the power of the conservative chairmen and improve prospects for the Administration's legislative program.

Sen. Joseph S. Clark, who led a revolt against what he termed the "Senate Establishment," saw his motion to increase the size of the powerful Finance Committee defeated 68-17, followed by a 70-12 rejection of enlargement of the Appropriations Committee.

The Senate then approved committee assignments which Clark and others had charged "reward" senators who had opposed a stronger anti-filibuster rule and punish several backers.

The White House stayed aloof from the battle, although Clark's key argument was that the President's program for tax cuts and social security health care faced emasculation in a Finance Committee headed by Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) and dominated by conservatives of both parties.

Although the committee's 11-6 Democratic ratio is out of line with the 67-33 Democratic majority in the Senate, Byrd had opposed any increase in the size or Democratic ratio of the committee.

Mansfield Rebukes Clark

Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.) sharply rebuked Clark for carrying his fight to the full Senate and defended the committee assignments "even though I did not vote with the majority on all of the selections."

Democratic gains in the Senate, and an increased party ratio on several committees, tended to make most liberal-controlled committees a bit more liberal and most conservative-dominated committee somewhat less so. Observers considered the changes likely to have only a marginal influence on prospects for legislation referred to these committees.

On the Finance Committee, freshman Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff (D-Conn.) was named to replace the late Robert S. Kerr (D-Okla.). Ribicoff, former secretary of health, education and welfare, is a strong supporter of social security health care while Kerr was a vigorous opponent. Nevertheless 11 of the 17 committee members last year voted against the Anderson-Javits measure on the floor. On the Republican side, GOP Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) will move into the committee vacancy left by another Republican conservative, former Sen. John Marshall Butler (Md.).

Democrats changed the party division on the Appropriations Committee from 17-10 to 18-9 without increasing the committee's size. The effect was to bump the GOP's junior member, Sen. Jacob K. Javits, a leader of the party's liberal wing. Javits, with GOP Senators Kenneth B. Keating (N. Y.) and Clifford P. Case (N. J.), voted with Clark to enlarge the committees.

Kennedy On Labor Unit

The Senate Labor & Public Welfare Committee remains almost the same as in the 87th Congress, with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.) named to the only vacancy.

On the basically-conservative Judiciary Committee, headed by Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), the party ratio was changed from 9-6 to 10-5 Democratic. Two northern Democrats, Kennedy and Birch Bayh (Ind.), were named to replace former Senators John A. Carroll (D-Colo.) and Alexander Wiley (R-Wis.).

The Government Operations Committee, headed by Sen. John L. McClellan (D-Ark.), was enlarged from 6-3 to 10-5 Democratic, making room for four liberal Democrats and two conservative Republicans.

A change in ratio from 9-6 to 10-5 also came on the Banking & Currency Committee, headed by conservative Sen. A. Willis Robertson (D-Va.). New Hampshire's Thomas J. McIntyre got the added Democratic spot.

Replaced Strikers Win California Jobless Pay

Los Angeles—The California Supreme Court has ruled unanimously that strikers who have been "replaced" are entitled to draw unemployment compensation.

The decision upheld a ruling by the state's Unemployment Insurance Appeals board in a 1958 strike by the Chemical Workers against the Ruberoid Co. here.

The company had won a reversal of the ruling in Los Angeles Superior Court, arguing that the strikers had forfeited their rights when they refused to return to work after the company informed them they faced permanent replacement.

State law stipulates that an unemployed person is not eligible for benefits "if he left his work because of a trade dispute."

In reversing the lower court, the Supreme Court held that although the strikers were not eligible for benefits initially because of the strike, they became eligible when their employer replaced them.

"At that moment," said the court, "the act of the employer became the direct cause of unemployment."

The State AFL-CIO had supported the payment of benefits in a "friend of the court" brief.

Warsaw Massacre To Be Remembered

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO Executive Council expressed its appreciation to the Jewish Labor Committee and its chairman, Adolph Held, for its planned commemoration of the 20th anniversary of the Battle of the Warsaw Ghetto.

The JLC is planning a commemoration on Apr. 19 in New York City, the council noted, as a memorial to the courageous Jews of the Warsaw Ghetto.

'Domestic Peace Corps' Gets AFL-CIO Backing

Bal Harbour, Fla.—The AFL-CIO has called for approval of Pres. Kennedy's proposal for a "domestic peace corps," declaring that such a federal service will encourage state and local community action and "will give heart to our less fortunate countrymen."

Approval of the program was contained in a report of the Community Services Committee to the Executive Council, which contained these additional points:

- Presentation of the 1964 Murray-Green Award to Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) "for his pioneering work in heading a congressional investigation into the drug industry."
- Establishment of a National Citizens Committee on Public Welfare to help raise the level of public understanding of the need for adequate public welfare programs. The purpose of the committee would be to carry on an educational campaign.
- Exploration of the possibility of developing a non-profit voluntary debt-counseling service to consumers.
- Appropriation of $4,000 to the National Travelers Aid association for a mobile unit designed to serve highway users on an experimental basis.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, March 9, 1963 | No. 10

Unemployment Hits 6.1%, Highest Rate in 15 Months

PRES. KENNEDY LEADS tribute to the Dept. of Labor at 50th anniversary dinner in Washington, held in two hotel ballrooms to accomodate overflow crowd of 3,100. Seated, from left: Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson, Sec. of State Dean Rusk, the Vice President, and AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, chairman of the dinner committee.

Tax Cut Need Is 'Desperate'-Meany

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's unemployment picture worsened in February as the jobless rate jumped to 6.1 percent—its highest level in 15 months—the Labor Dept. has reported.

Unemployment, chiefly among family breadwinners and teenagers, rose by 250,000 from the January total, although little change had been expected over the month, the report said.

In an immediate comment, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared the increased joblessness represents "bitter poverty and human despair" for the victims and proves that action is urgent to "prevent 6 percent misery from becoming 100 percent catastrophe."

He once more called on Congress to enact "an immediate, substantial tax cut in the low and middle-income brackets to create the consumer buying power so desperately needed to revive the national economy."

"Our economy today is simply not expanding fast enough," said Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

"Unemployment can be expected to increase in the coming months unless Congress acts quickly on the President's proposals to stimulate the economy and help the present unemployed," he continued.

The total unemployed at 4.9 million was up by 400,000 compared with February a year ago—the first over-the-year rise for any month since October 1961, Labor Dept. Manpower Expert Harold Goldstein noted.

The key jobless rate, adjusted to account for seasonal influences, hit 6.1 percent after hanging at about the 5.5 percent level throughout 1962 and moving up to 5.8 percent in January.

For postwar Februarys, the current 6.1 percent rate compares to the high of 7 percent during the

(Continued on Page 2)

Rails Again Bargain on Work Rules

The railroad work rules dispute moved out of the courts and back to the bargaining table, at least temporarily.

The Supreme Court tossed the five-year-old dispute back to the parties by upholding a lower court's refusal to enjoin the railroads from unilaterally putting into effect drastic, job-slashing work rules changes.

The court, however, made it pointedly clear that it rejected an appellate judge's opinion that union refusal to agree to management proposals had reduced negotiations to "sterile discussion" which justified the railroads in breaking off talks and taking unilateral action.

No Bad Faith

"There is nothing in the record," the Supreme Court said, to indicate "bad faith" on anyone's part. "Any contrary implication in the opinion of the Court of Appeals is disapproved."

Meanwhile rail management agreed, for the first time since last summer, to sit down at the bargaining table with the five operating unions. A meeting was

(Continued on Page 3)

Budget Slashers Attacked:

Kennedy Leads U.S. in Hailing Labor Dept. 50th Anniversary

By David L. Perlman

Pres. Kennedy led the nation in a celebration of the 50th anniversary of the U.S. Dept. of Labor, and used the occasion to strike out sharply at budget critics who seek to slash funds for key programs administered by the department.

"I don't know why it is that expenditures which deal with the enforcement of the minimum wage, the problem of school drop-outs, of retraining workers . . . are always regarded as the waste in the budget, and why expenditure for defense is always regarded as the untouchable item," the President declared.

Kennedy and a galaxy of head table notables shuttled between two huge ballrooms at Washington's Sheraton-Park Hotel to address more than 3,100 persons attending the anniversary dinner.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, chairman of a dinner committee which included the entire AFL-CIO Executive Council, said the department is faced with "the nation's largest single domestic problem," the shortage of jobs. (See text of Meany's remarks, Page 4.)

New approahes are necessary, Meany said, so that "sweeping technological advances bring to all Americans not unemployment and despair, but security, prosperity and the satisfaction of performing useful work."

The years ahead, he declared, "will demand genuine, close and wholehearted cooperation among labor, management and the government on an unprecedented scale—a scale that has not previously been acceptable to any of them."

Addressing the anniversary gathering, largest of a series of observances being held throughout the nation, were Vice Pres. Lyndon B. Johnson, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and the three living former secretaries of labor—Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg, James P. Mitchell, and Frances Perkins.

Madame Perkins, who will be 81 next month, said the occasion was for her "a day of beautiful and joyous reunion" with old friends in the department she headed longer than any other secretary—from 1933 to 1945.

When she took office, she noted, there were 15 million jobless and 20 million on relief.

Kennedy, who followed her, commented that the New Deal programs, "which we now take

(Continued on Page 6)

New Mexico House Again Kills 'R-T-W'

Sante Fe, N. M.—The New Mexico House rejected a so-called "right-to-work" bill for the second time in a week, apparently killing the measure for the session.

After the first House turndown of a bill to put a proposition outlawing the union shop to a referendum, the Senate passed an almost identical bill by a 17-15 vote.

The House then, by a 31-26 margin, refused to print the Senate-passed bill and voted to postpone its consideration indefinitely. The House then recessed briefly and on reconvening nailed down the decision by defeating a motion for reconsideration.

Court Urged to Upset State Utility Strike Ban

The AFL-CIO has urged the U.S. Supreme Court to strike down Missouri's law outlawing strikes against public utilities and providing for compulsory arbitration, and thus to prevent the "erosion of the national labor relations policy of free collective bargaining."

In a brief filed with the high court in support of Bus Drivers Div. 1287 in Kansas City the AFL-CIO warned that if Missouri's King-Thompson Act is not found invalid, "other states will undertake enforcement of their public utility anti-strike laws . . . [and] the way will have been opened for the states to apply their own dissonant labor laws to disputes covered by the federal act."

The brief declared that the AFL-CIO is "opposed both to banning strikes and to compulsory arbitration and we regard such laws as the King-Thompson Act as a grave threat to free collective bargaining and a free economy."

The Missouri statute creates a state board of mediation to handle labor disputes affecting public utilities and gives the board the power to set up compulsory arbitration. If either side refuses to accept recommendations for settlement, or if a strike threatens, the

(Continued on Page 2)

TWO COLLEGE STUDENTS, winners of the Edward P. Morgan Essay Contest, were commended for their writing ability by Pres. Kennedy, himself a Pulitzer Prize winning author, at a White House meeting. Shown from left are George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, which sponsors Morgan's radio program; Richard C. Frazier, of Queens College, Flushing, N. Y., and Carla Lipsig, of Brandeis University, Waltham, Mass., the winners; Kennedy, Morgan, and Pres. Robert R. Pauley of the American Broadcasting Co. radio network, which broadcasts the program.

Jobless Rate Rises in February To 6.1%, Highest in 15 Months

(Continued from Page 1)

worst of the 1960-1961 recession and to a low of 2.6 percent in 1953.

The February rate means 61 of every 1,000 Americans were actively seeking jobs and could not find them.

On the employment side, the Labor Dept. reported an increase of about 500,000 in nonfarm jobs to a total of 62.3 million, a new high for the month.

Total employment rose to 66.4 million as the nonfarm increase was partly offset by a counter-seasonal drop of 150,000 in farm jobs. Counted among the total employed were 2.2 million nonfarm workers on short workweeks for economic reasons, about the same as in January, although a rise had been expected.

The total labor force—which includes all the employed and unemployed and the armed forces—increased by 700,000 over January to a total of 74 million in February, the report said. This was a rise of about 1 million since a year earlier.

Meany's full statement on the darkened job picture bluntly recalled his previous warnings that the economic picture was ominous.

"It is no surprise that unemployment has passed 6 percent, but it is no less a tragedy on that account," he said.

"Six percent is a statistic; what it represents—six idle workers out of every hundred, most of them family breadwinners—is bitter poverty and human despair.

"There is further evidence, where none was needed, that the time for debate has passed and the time for action is long overdue. Congress must move at once to prevent 6 percent misery from becoming 100 percent catastrophe.

"And the place to start is an immediate, substantial tax cut in the low and middle-income brackets to create the consumer buying power so desperately needed to revive the national economy."

The summary job report for the first time included a key economic statistic which showed 7.1 percent labor force time lost in February through unemployment and underemployment in part time work. This loss totaled 6.8 percent in January, 6.6 percent in December and 6.7 percent in February 1962.

"This rate of 7.1 percent (for February) means that the economy was using 93 percent of the available work time," Goldstein pointed out.

Goldstein also noted there has been "a slow inching-up of the unemployment rate for adult men since last fall."

Adult men, who accounted for about half the January-February jobless rise, had an unemployment rate of 4.3 percent last October, 4.8 percent in January and 5.1 percent in February.

The jobless rate for teen-agers also has swung upward since last fall. It was 12.9 percent in December, 13.9 percent in January and 15.6 percent in February; a year ago, it was 14.3 percent. The report observed that teen-age unemployment often varies widely from month to month.

The February report showed an expected seasonal increase of 150,000 in the longterm unemployed—those jobless 15 weeks or longer—to a total of 1.3 million.

Kennedy Hails Clerks At Diamond Jubilee

The Retail Clerks have "established an enviable reputation of service to the men and women who serve the public," Pres. Kennedy has told the union marking its diamond jubilee year.

In a letter to RCIA Pres. James A. Suffridge appearing in the union's monthly publication, the Retail Clerk Advocate, the President congratulated the union on its 75 years of existence and added:

"The nation is indebted to the pioneers of the RCIA and other unions which have expanded our traditional political democracy into the economic field. Through collective action in the fields of social and legislative problems all our institutions have been made more sensitive to human values."

Suffridge, in an editorial in the magazine, reviewed the history of the union from its Mar. 1, 1888, birth date when a number of the "Early Closing Societies applied to the AFL for federal charters." From the 288 founders, the union has grown to its present membership of about 400,000.

Suffridge noted that the "union began its steady climb to its present strength and influence" in 1944 and that a recent study of the union financed by the Ford Foundation predicted "by the end of the 60s it may well be that the RCIA will be one of the two or three largest . . . labor institutions in the United States."

This prediction will not come true, he added, "by wishing for it."

"It will take hard work and dedication on the part of every member and officer of the RCIA."

But if the 75th anniversary "is made a time of dedication," Suffridge said, "realizing that we are the possessors of a proud heritage with a responsibility to pass it on to future generations of retail clerks, this prophecy cannot fail to be realized."

'Protection of Rights' Clauses Ruled Illegal

In two unanimous decisions the National Labor Relations Board has ruled that "protection of rights" clauses in two areawide Teamsters' contracts make them unlawful under "hot cargo" provisions of the 1959 Landrum-Griffin Act amendments.

The cases involved unfair labor practice charges brought by the Patton Warehouse, Inc., of Columbus, O., against Teamsters Local 413 and the Central States Drivers Council, and by the Brown Transport Corp., Atlanta, Ga., against Drivers Local 728 and the Southern Conference of Teamsters.

The employers were struck early in 1961 when they refused to sign contracts entered into by the locals and other area employers. They charged that neither union members nor other employers would drive or transfer their loads under the "protection of rights" language in the new agreements, and asserted this was an illegal boycott.

The decision was one of a series of rulings outlawing Teamsters' contract language aimed at legalizing "hot cargo" agreements. The board ruled in the latest cases that even though the disputed clauses state that an employer agrees to handle the goods of another employer by using supervisors or other means when Teamsters refuse to work, this does not make legal an illegal intention.

Wirtz Reports to Congress:

700 Projects Train 25,000 for New Jobs

More than 700 training projects involving about 25,000 unemployed and underemployed workers were approved in the first six months of the Manpower Development & Training Act, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has reported to Congress.

Praising local and state agencies for prompt response in getting training underway, Wirtz noted that projects have been approved in 48 states, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico.

Funds to implement the act were first made available in late August 1962. By the end of December, the report noted, about $19 million had been obligated for 430 training projects—$11 million for training allowances and $8 million for the costs of facilities and instruction—at an estimated average cost of $1,178 per trainee.

The secretary's report, required under the act at the end of each calendar year, stressed the cooperation of the Labor Dept. and the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare in laying the foundation for the program. While it is still too soon to reach firm conclusions on the program's results, early experience has indicated that it is a sound and economical method of restoring the unemployed to full-time jobs, Wirtz said.

Seventy percent of the 1,143 trainees who had completed courses by the end of the year had been placed in jobs, he noted.

Wirtz said he expected the MDTA program to "swing into high gear" during the coming year with the cooperation of local and state agencies.

"If available grassroots resources can be brought to bear on our manpower problems," he concluded, "there is no doubt in my mind that new ideas and programs will be set into motion which will go a long way toward reducing unemployment and achieving full utilization of the American labor force."

Under the MDTA, the Labor Dept. is responsible for determining the skill requirements of the economy, promoting diversified training programs to supply those skills, selecting unemployed workers to undergo occupational training and paying them allowances during the retraining period. The provision of training facilities, instruction and related services falls to H-E-W.

In keeping with its responsibilities, Wirtz reported, the Labor Dept. has undertaken research in such subjects as automation, labor mobility, manpower development and utilization, manpower requirements and resources.

He also reported that a number of special projects have been initiated for unemployed youth, migratory farm workers, and adults in the "hard-core" of long-term unemployed.

Wirtz's report gave these characteristics of trainees selected so far:

- One out of five has been out of work for 52 weeks or longer and 47 percent have come from the ranks of long-term jobless, those unemployed for 16 weeks or more.
- One out of 10 had a grade-school education or less and 45 percent of the men and 28 percent of the women had not completed high school.
- Three-fourths of the men and one-third of the women are heads of families or households.
- Two out of three are being trained for skilled jobs or white collar work.

Sign People Sign No-Stoppage Pledge

New York—A no-strike, no-lockout pledge for the duration of the New York World's Fair and construction relating to it has been adopted by three AFL-CIO affiliates whose members make the signs that turned Broadway into the "Great White Way," and the Electric Sign Board of New York, representing 71 employers.

The unions involved are Local 3 of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Sheet Metal Workers Local 137 and Painters Local 230. They and the employers adopted for the settlement of possible disputes the same procedures already in effect at the fair for the building and construction industry.

Court Urged to Upset State Utility Strike Ban

(Continued from Page 1)

governor is empowered to seize the utility. The law prohibits a strike against the utility while in the hands of the state and both the union and employes are subject to severe penalties for violations.

The provisions of the act were invoked in November 1961 against Div. 1287 when the bus drivers struck Kansas City Transit, Inc., after prolonged negotiations for a new contract. A state court enjoined the union from striking and was upheld by the Missouri Supreme Court. The union appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

'Worst Features' Combined

"In our view," said the AFL-CIO brief, "the King-Thompson Act embodies the worst features of both anti-strike legislation and compulsory arbitration."

In reality, the brief added, the act provides for "compulsory arbitration for the union and not for the employer" and its "naked strike ban merely legislates the continuation of the status quo" to the benefit of the employer.

The brief cities the arguments of the late Sen. Robert A. Taft (R-O.) during the debate on the Taft-Hartley Act, that "we did not feel that we should put into the law, as a part of the collective-bargaining machinery, an ultimate resort to compulsory arbitration, or to seizure, or to any other action. We feel that it would interfere with the whole process of collective bargaining."

The King-Thompson Act was enacted in 1947. In 1951 the U.S. Supreme Court held invalid a Wisconsin law which forbade employes of public utilities to strike and provided for compulsory arbitration.

Since that decision, the brief declared, various state public utility anti-strike laws "have usually been regarded as invalid and in most states have become dead letters."

Attempts to secure high court review of state decisions upholding the Missouri statute have been frustrated in the past by the court's "stringent rule on mootness," the brief said.

Meany Cites Automation Inroads:

Fear of Job Loss Viewed As Key Factor in Strikes

A major factor in the New York newspaper strike has been a fundamental "feeling of insecurity" on the part of the workers that has pervaded the whole structure of American industry in recent years as automation has grown, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared on the National Broadcasting Co.'s morning television program, Today.

Behind every strike of any importance in the last two or three years, Meany said, has been "fear of losing a job—not losing it temporarily, but losing it permanently," as thousands of workers already have.

Meany appeared with Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and H. Ladd Plumley, president of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, in a symposium on the Mar. 4 Today program marking the Labor Dept.'s 50th aniversary. They were questioned by NBC's Hugh Downs and Martin Agronsky.

Time was, Meany noted, when American labor welcomed the introduction of new machines without fear and with the knowledge that they would expand production, widen markets and lead to more jobs, not less.

"However, in the last 10 years, with the tremendous advances in mechanical science, we have now reached the point where this doesn't happen, where the machines come in and actually replace manpower, and replace it permanently," he observed.

If this pattern is allowed to continue to the ultimate degree, he suggested, "the machine, instead of being a boon to mankind, would be a curse."

He related the continuing high rate of unemployment, which has been over 5 percent for five years, to such specific industries as automobiles—where the Auto Workers had 50 percent more members in 1947 than they have with a much higher rate of production now—and basic steel—where some 60,000 steelworkers have been permanently displaced in recent years.

The AFL-CIO president acknowledged that the Kennedy Administration has taken steps to combat joblessness, but said such measures as area redevelopment and manpower retraining are "only scratching the surface."

He urged individual employers to accept the problem as one that is national in scope, affecting the entire economy, and to help meet it by avoiding technological layoffs and permitting normal attrition to function.

Meanwhile, Meany said, labor would continue to press for reduction of the workweek to 35 hours as a means of providing more jobs and for concentration of a sizable tax cut—$10 billion—in the lower income brackets to stimulate consumer demand.

He dismissed the contention that a standard 35-hour workweek would prove too costly and lead to more joblessness, noting that the same argument was used against the 40-hour week, and before that against the 44 and 48-hour weeks.

Unmet Needs Cited

Wirtz argued that the "unsatisfied needs" of the nation in such areas as schools, highways and recreational facilities offer the opportunity for enough work to create a manpower shortage under the 40-hour week. He suggested, however, that government does not bear the sole responsibility for moving to meet these needs.

"The needs of the 30 million people in the lowest income brackets I hope will be satisfied better, at least, when we put into the economy the consumer purchasing power which will be the one basic stimulant," he said.

Plumley, agreeing with Meany that American industry is successfully competing in the world market, nevertheless argued that automation presents an "opportunity" rather than a problem in that it enables manufacturers to reduce unit costs to meet their domestic and foreign competition.

He acknowledged the need "to take care of the demand side," but called for tax revision with emphasis on plant and equipment research and development, and for depreciation schedules that permit faster modernization with resulting unit cost reductions.

Meany replied that he would be for tax reductions to promote greater profits if he could be shown this would provide more jobs.

Business, he said, has "not shown me or anyone else, as far as I know, just how these profits are going to make the jobs."

Newspaper Strike Issues Narrowed

New York — A further "narrowing of the issues" in the New York newspaper strike and lockout was reported in talks between Typographical Union Local 6 and the Publishers Association, renewed at the request of Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

Neither side was optimistic over prospects for an early settlement, despite the break in the publishers' lines that occurred with resumption of publication by the New York Post—one of five dailies not struck by the local.

Meanwhile, the Stereotypers joined the printers and the unaffiliated Deliverers in formal strike action against the Times, Daily News, Journal-American and World-Telegram & Sun.

NEW YORK POST PUBLISHER Dorothy Schiff shakes hands with Pres. Bertram A. Powers of Typographical Local 6 after announcing that she had resigned from the Publishers Association and would resume publication of her paper, opening a crack in the employer alliance which had kept nine major dailies closed for 83 days. The Post was one of five dailies not struck by the printers. Four of them shut down completely along with the struck papers, however, and another—the Long Island Press—suspended its New York City edition.

Bargaining Resumed In Rail Rules Dispute

(Continued from Page 1)

scheduled for Mar. 13 in Chicago. There was no indication that the railroads had changed their previous position that any agreement must be within the framework of a 1962 Presidential Railroad Commission report—which the unions have rejected.

Before the dispute reaches a strike stage, Pres. Kennedy is expected to use the last remaining provision in the Railway Labor Act—appointment of an Emergency Board, which would freeze existing conditions during 60 days of hearings, mediation, recommendations and negotiations.

In other major developments on the railroads:

- Mediation efforts in the Railway Clerks dispute with the Southern Pacific on the issue of job security brought hopes of an agreement. A strike originally scheduled for Feb. 26 had been halted by a state court injunction but the injunction was lifted by a federal court after agreement of all parties for a new round of mediation and direct negotiations.
- Rail labor's fight against job-and-service-curtailing mergers of competing railroad lines received support from a Senate Anti-Trust subcommittee headed by Sen. Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.). The committee majority recommended that Congress order a moratorium on rail mergers pending a thorough investigation of railroad problems.

The subcommittee's report was based on hearings held last year on a Kefauver bill which would have imposed a temporary moratorium on merger approvals by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Kefauver has introduced an identical bill this year but it was tangled in jurisdictional claims as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

- A strike by non-operating employes on the Florida East Coast Railway continued through a sixth week as the company refused to meet the 10.3 cent hourly increase granted last year by all other Class I railroads.

White Collar Unions Getting More Votes

Unions improved their showing in white collar representation elections held by the National Labor Relations Board during 1962, participating in more elections for units of clerical, technical sales and professional employes and winning a greater percentage.

The number of workers involved was small—fewer than 6,000—but the Bureau of National Affairs termed the improved union victory record an indication that "accelerated union efforts to organize white collar workers were beginning to pay off."

The bureau is a highly respected independent agency publishing specialized reports in various fields.

The NLRB tally, as compiled by BNA, does not include major breakthroughs in the government employe field or recognition granted without a labor board election. It shows:

- Unions won 273 of the 462 white collar elections held in 1962. This was a 59 percent victory record, compared with 45 percent in the 395 elections during 1961.
- The number of employes voting for union representation rose from 4,660 in 1961 to 5,880.
- AFL-CIO unions won 174 of the 301 white collar elections in which they participated. The Office Employes scored the largest gain in terms of workers involved, winning 26 elections in units totaling 1,120 employes.

AFL-CIO Convenes Nov. 14 in N.Y.C.

The fifth constitutional convention of the AFL-CIO will open Nov. 14 in New York City at the Americana Hotel, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has announced.

The first and founding convention of the AFL-CIO was held in New York City in December 1955. Since then the biennial sessions have been held in Atlantic City, San Francisco and Miami Beach.

'Don't Buy Hotpoint,' Union Asks Consumers

Sheet Metal Workers in 12 target cities pressed a consumer boycott against General Electric's Hotpoint Division in support of 2,500 Chicago area workers striking for a first contract.

Union Pres. Edward F. Carlough said more than 1,500 union members responded to a call for volunteers and on Mar. 2 distributed half-a-million leaflets urging customers of department, discount and appliance stores not to buy Hotpoint products.

Many of the union members were joined by their wives and children in the leaflet distribution, Carlough said. Their ranks were swelled by members of other unions and central body officials who volunteered to help out.

The strike, at five Hotpoint plants and a warehouse in the Chicago-Cicero area, was "solid" as it entered its third week, union officials reported. Despite company appeals to the strikers to return to work, "not a single production line has been operating," the union said.

Strikers and their wives have received phone calls, the union said, urging them to abandon "those freezing picket lines" and return to work in the company's "nice, warm plants."

A negotiating session on Mar. 6 called by federal mediators broke up, the union reported, when the company rejected all proposals for a settlement. The strike was called following eight months of negotiation when the company offered no first-year wage increases or other economic benefits and refused to agree to standard arbitration provisions. The union had lowered its major demands before the walkout was called to a 3.5 percent general wage increase and an effective arbitration procedure.

Carlough declared that the consumer boycott informational campaign will continue until the company "recognizes its legal and moral duty to bargain collectively in good faith." He added:

"It is now deadly apparent to all that the General Electric Co. is the sinister and moving force behind the decision of its Hotpoint division to completely flaunt and disregard good faith bargaining."

Hotpoint, he charged, has adopted GE's labor relations policy of "Boulwarism."

The leaflet distributions were held in Atlanta, Chicago, Cincinnati, Dayton, Denver, Kansas City, Los Angeles, Minneapolis-St. Paul, Milwaukee, New York City, Philadelphia, and the San Francisco-Oakland area.

The target list is being expanded, the union said, to include distributions in Birmingham, Boston, Chattanooga, Indianapolis, Knoxville, Portland, Ore., and Seattle.

CWA Gains $2 to $7 For 24,000 in New York

New York—Basic wage increases ranging from $2 to $7 per week for some 24,000 telephone plant workers, plus job and town job upgrades worth up to an additional $5 per week for thousands in the unit, were established in a new agreement between the Communications Workers and the New York Telephone Co.

The total package averages 17.7 cents per hour and lifts top craft wages in the group to $143.50 per week—highest in the Bell System.

When CWA took over representational rights in the bargaining unit just two years ago, New York telephone workers had fallen behind the industry top in basic wages.

In newspaper, radio and television ads, and in handbills, CWA argued for public support in its drive to put "New York out front again, where it belongs." Stressing the fact that the New York operating company is "the largest and wealthiest in the Bell System," CWA's public announcements called for a substantial wage package to wipe out inequities built up over the years.

When negotiations seemed at the stalemate point, New York City's Mayor Robert F. Wagner summoned union representatives to his home where he asked for—and received—a pledge that CWA would prolong negotiations another 48 hours. The catch-up package was hammered out in a final bargaining session lasting nearly 24 hours.

The Need Is Jobs

FIFTY YEARS AGO, when the U.S. Dept. of Labor was born, the typical workweek was 60 hours made up of six days of 10 hours each. Some skilled union workers had shorter hours, working an eight or nine-hour day. In the unorganized steel and textile industries, workweeks ranged from 72 to 84 hours.

As the department marks its golden anniversary a new campaign is under way to establish a 35-hour workweek with no reduction in take-home pay. But the issue is no longer a reasonable period of rest and leisure for exploited workers—the issue that triggered the eight-hour day campaigns of yesteryear. The issue today is jobs.

Some of the more articulate critics of the current drive for a shorter workweek argue that to reduce working hours to provide more jobs is a formula for sharing scarcity. They argue that the goal is a prosperous and abundantly endowed nation with every American willing and able to work on the job 40 hours a week.

These critics of the shorter hours campaign point to the nation's great unmet needs, unemployment and unused plant capacity and maintain that until all Americans are fully employed, plants operating at full capacity and schools, highways, hospitals, libraries and other public needs built, there is no need for a reduction in working time.

★ ★ ★

BUT WHAT ARE the prospects for a reduction in the high, persistent rate of unemployment, of plants operating full blast, of government-financed programs to meet public needs?

On the basis of the Administration's own estimate of economic activity in 1963, unemployment was likely to increase to 6 percent or more. The Council of Economic Advisers has declared flatly that even if all of the Administration's policies are adopted the unemployment rate will not drop to 4 percent before 1965 or 1966. And a 4 percent unemployment rate is not acceptable as a definition of a full-employment economy.

Job loss and displacement is spreading as automation moves into offices, warehouses and even retail trade and more and more businesses and industrial operations replace older plants and equipment with new, automated or technically advanced plants and machinery.

Add the third ingredient—a sharply expanding labor force growing at the rate of 1.4 million a year—and the outlook for a full employment economy with everyone working 40 hours a week grows dimmer.

★ ★ ★

THE PROBLEM FACING the nation is not one of sharing scarcity but of providing jobs. A sharply stimulated economy generating purchasing power into the pockets of the low and middle income groups, a wage policy geared to shoring up buying power, can help.

But these are not enough. A full employment economy at this point in the nation's development is possible only if the standard workweek is cut.

Without a reduction in working hours, tax reduction and other programs, the economy will probably continue to slide along at its present pace, generating a higher rate of unemployment and moving towards a new recession.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, March 9, 1963 No. 10

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'Many Happy Returns'

Meany Hails Labor Dept.:

Sees 'Whole Structure of Work' In U. S. Undergoing Revolution

Following is the partial text of AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany's address to the U.S. Labor Dept.'s 50th anniversary dinner Mar. 4 in Washington:

LET ME BEGIN by formally extending to the Dept. of Labor the "happy birthday" wishes of its largest single constituent—the AFL-CIO—on its 50th birthday.

At this age, the department should be in the prime of life. We certainly hope so, because this country is faced with some man-sized problems which the department must play a part in solving. In fact, it's no exaggeration to say the nation's largest single domestic problem is right now on the doorstep of the Labor Dept.—and it's a problem that none of us can afford to ignore.

The whole pattern, the whole structure of work in America is undergoing a revolution. The new methods of factory production, the new techniques in offices, in stores, even in construction, not only wipe out jobs; they require different kinds of people. Old skills become useless, and for the unskilled there will soon be no place at all.

But workers do not change as easily as machines. A new kind of steel mill may be built in a year. A new kind of man may take a generation.

It is especially important, therefore, that all of us—labor, management and government—keep in the forefront of our thinking the principle we all acknowledge: that machines are made to serve men, not the other way around.

Our problem is to adapt the revolution in work methods to a work force that is made up, by and large, of the same people as before. This is not an easy job, and up to now we have not been doing very well at it.

But it is a job that must be done. We must broaden our horizons, revise our methods, amend our laws so that the changing economy, the sweeping technological advances bring to all Americans not unemployment and despair, but security, prosperity and the satisfaction of useful work.

This is why I have said that the years ahead will demand genuine, close and wholehearted cooperation among labor, management and government on an unprecedented scale—a scale not previously acceptable to any of them.

There would be reason enough for this if only our own domestic well-being were involved. But as you know, the stakes are even greater. We need to eliminate poverty and unemployment not only for humanitarian reasons but to assure the very survival of human liberty on earth.

Consider this occasion. We in the labor movement are paying tribute to an agency of government—an agency that was established to "foster, promote and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment."

WE ARE NOT SUMMONED here by an all-powerful state. We are here as representatives of free, independent trade unions—unions that run their own affairs, establish their own policies, fight their own battles. We are free to criticize our government, and we often do. We are free to agitate and to oppose.

We even have the right to be wrong. I would remind those who think that the labor movement is wrong most of the time, and who want all sorts of corrective legislation to curb us, that the right to be wrong is one of the basic distinctions between free men and slaves.

In a communist society, tonight's affair would be to pay homage to the masters. Faithful bureaucrats, labor commissars, perhaps, whose duty was to keep the workers in line, to make sure they obey the decisions of the state—they would be here posing as union officials but kneeling before their masters.

Such a day will never come in America unless we bring it upon ourselves. And we can bring it upon ourselves only if, out of shortsightedness, narrow self-interest, blind prejudice or mere sluggishness, we fail to meet the problems of our own society that change has thrust upon us.

It seems to me that the purposes of the Dept. of Labor, which I quoted earlier, must be the purposes embraced by all Americans—not because wage earners deserve or should have greater benefits than others, but rather because the welfare of wage earners is the key to the welfare of all.

When their "opportunities for profitable employment" are advanced, so are the profits of business and the earnings of the professionals and the other self-employed. When "opportunities for profitable employment" are available to all, poverty will be banished from America, and the multitude of social problems that arise from poverty will finally be solved.

It is in this spirit that I greet the Dept. of Labor tonight; and it is in this spirit that I hope the nation will attack the great tasks before us.

Morgan Says:

How Can 20 Million Negroes Get the Jobs They Trained For?

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

IN AN IMPORTANT SPEECH in Memphis, a significant preliminary to Pres. Kennedy's special message to Congress on civil rights, Commerce Sec. Luther Hodges came candidly and courageously to grips with one of the most urgent and one of the most neglected economic problems of the American society: the disgraceful waste of human resources due to the lack of training of citizens coming from minority groups and the lack of job opportunities when they get the training.

Morgan

Hodges addressed the general problem but he emphasized the plight of the Negro and this, coming from a former governor of North Carolina and directed specifically to Southerners from a platform in a major city of a border state, was in itself significant.

With an increasingly solid legal floor to stand on provided by Congress, the White House and the courts, Negro leaders are now turning to concentrate on winning equal treatment for their talents in the market place of employment. Slowly but surely the long-neglected Negro population is beginning to get the unseparated and equal public education to which it is entitled and to move and mingle without restraint.

But now the overriding question becomes: what do 20 million Negro American citizens do with these rights as they become secured? Their high school diplomas, their college degrees, their graduate doctorates are going to have to be put to better use than to provide the subject of conversation in a desegregated bus or on a city park bench as Negroes exchange information on their unemployment.

This problem is society's responsibility and there is a special responsibility here for management and labor. Though the AFL-CIO's declared policy is against discrimination, the fact is that some individual unions still discriminate against Negroes and so do a number of employers. Negroes are still the last to be hired and the first to be fired—not just in the South but everywhere in the land.

In Durham, N. C., I interviewed the heads of the largest Negro banking, mortgage and insurance institutions in the country. They confidently emphasized they were quickening the drive to boost the Negro up the economic ladder. Festering prejudices notwithstanding, this effort in the long run will benefit not just a minority group but the nation as a whole.

In his speech Hodges recalled an observation of Clarence H. Poe, a southern leader of 50 years ago. 'The prosperity of every man," Poe said, "depends upon the prosperity of the average man. . . . Every man whose earning power is below par is a burden on the community; he drags down the whole level of life, and every other man in the community is poorer by reason of his inefficiency, whether he be white man or Negro."

THEN HODGES himself warned: "We cannot continue to waste the talents of our Negro citizens if we ever hope to raise the South to its full economic potential." He might well have substituted "country" for "South" because the problem is nationwide.

"We cannot let the talents of a Negro engineer," he went on, "be wasted in sweeping floors, in sorting mail, or in digging ditches. We cannot use trained stenographers as maids. We cannot make trained electricians rake yards, or use as construction laborers men who have the training to be draftsmen."

The current rate of unemployment among Negroes is more than 12 percent of the Negro work force—more than twice the national rate. And here is a statistic to stagger you: less than one-half of the Negro families in the U.S. are headed by persons with full-time, year-round jobs.

"Instead of benefiting as a nation from the energies and innate abilities of these potential workers," Hodges warned, "we will have to bear the social and economic costs of their idleness, their frustration, and in many cases their bitterness and hostility. . . ."

But the yeast of social change has an interesting new ingredient which may hasten the process of adjustment. More federal money is becoming available for college scholarships in science and other fields, and for some assistance programs in higher education. The eligibility of colleges and universities for these funds is depending increasingly on the need to show they are giving qualified Negro students an even break. Negro educators have already been approached by department deans from institutions like Duke to recommend likely Negro applicants for scholarships.

Negro leaders are grimly amused at this materialistic recognition of their bid to be counted as full-fledged human beings but they are cooperating with it, knowing that moral values don't cut much ice these days unless they are tied to practicality and it is becoming more practical to recognize their rights every day.

Washington Reports:

Rusk Predicts People of Cuba Will Win Back Their Freedom

SEC. OF STATE DEAN RUSK declared "There is no question in my mind whatever that the Cuban people will again be free," as he was interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports to the People.

"There is evidence of great and growing discontent on the island," he said. "The fact that a couple of hundred thousand Cubans have given up all their material possessions and left Cuba to seek freedom abroad would indicate that Cuba is not a satisfactory place to live. Our information is that several hundred thousand more want to leave, if possible."

Washington Reports is heard on more than 500 radio stations across the country.

Rusk asserted that Cuba's "economic situation is grim."

"Cuba's trade with the free world," he said, "has fallen off as much as 90 percent since the beginning of 1961. At the same time, the regime has mismanaged agriculture practices. The result is that from one of the most prosperous economies in the hemisphere, Cuba has dropped to a typical Communist satellite economy."

An added result has been, said the Secretary of State, that Fidel Castro's regime has been badly damaged in prestige and stability. It was further and even more seriously hurt, he reported, by the missile crisis revelation that Castro "is just one more tool of Moscow."

"ALL THESE THINGS don't mean that Castro is about to be overthrown today or tomorrow, but they do serve to lessen his strength and increase his weaknesses so that I have do doubt he will eventually go," Rusk summed up.

The secretary called the veto of Great Britain's admission to the Common Market a "temporary difference of opinion" that will not interfere with "continuation of the great stream of western policy."

"I think they realize, as do we," Rusk declared, "that the defense of Europe and North America is indivisible and that, economically, our prosperity and growth are closely linked."

Rusk said he hoped that Great Britain will eventually become a member of the Common Market.

"We will continue to move forward in economic, financial, trade and aid cooperation, and NATO will remain the backbone of our military defense and will be strengthened to perform its function better," he asserted.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

A RECENT CONTROVERSY involving two members of the Federal Power Commission, both appointed by Pres. Kennedy, has an unfortunate effect in that it tends to obscure the deterioration of that commission as a regulatory agency. For this deterioration, both Congress and the recent Eisenhower Administration bear responsibility. And it may be that the Kennedy Administration will fail to reverse the trend.

More than 10 years ago the Senate served notice that it looked with disapproval on strict price regulation of the interstate natural gas industry; it did this by the expedient of refusing confirmation of Leland Olds, who had served two distinguished terms on the commission and was reappointed by Pres. Truman.

The next step came when another strong commissioner, Thomas Buchanan, stepped aside at the end of his term; it was so obvious that the Senate would refuse to confirm him that Mr. Truman did not bother with a reappointment.

Mr. Eisenhower signaled the next step when his first Secretary of the Interior, the late Douglas McKay, withdrew the department's intervention in the Hells Canyon case. The FPC—having been warned by the Olds and Buchanan incidents that Congress was friendly toward the utilities—proposed to allow the Idaho Power Co. to preempt the Hells Canyon site on the Snake River.

A final decision was checked while Mr. Truman remained in office, but the accession of Mr. Eisenhower meant the utility got its way. Meantime, Congress itself refused to pass a bill directly authorizing federal development of a Hells Canyon high-level multiple-purpose dam and power facility. The FPC began losing longtime staff experts; it abdicated its regulatory functions so brazenly that in one major decision the Supreme Court reversed the commission and told it, in effect, that the law required greater effort to protect consumers.

Between Mr. Kennedy's FPC appointees—Howard V. Morton, who says he will not accept reappointment, and Chairman Joseph C. Swidler—there may be clashes of personality as well as other matters. Still, if the political temper of the country has changed, a thorough-going new inquiry into the rates, profits and operations of the utilities would seem in order.

* * *

THE SUPREME COURT upheld, with a minimum of discussion, the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that the railroads, as of this moment, have a legal right to institute unilateral work rules changes affecting the jobs of tens of thousands of their workers. In a unanimous unsigned opinion (Mr. Justice Goldberg not participating) the court pointed out, however, that appointment of an emergency board under the Railway Labor Act might delay matters for at least 60 days.

The opinion is of interest because in two places—not just one—the court pointedly commented that there was no evidence of bad faith by either the railroads or the rail brotherhoods, and specifically stated that "any contrary implication" in the decision of the appellate court "is disapproved."

Appellate Judge Elmer J. Schnackenberg, in his opinion, had ranted broadly to the effect that the rail brotherhoods were "ill advised" to raise an "unnecessary threat of a strike of such magnitude as to amount to a national transportation paralysis." He had orated that through Congress "the people" could "assert their superiority" when faced with such a "threat."

The AFL-CIO News said editorially at the time that Judge Schnackenberg had uttered a "gratuitous commentary on national labor policy." It said that the "right of the rail unions to strike" was not an issue before him, and that his "judicial intervention in this area" was "irrelevant almost to the point of abuse of function."

The Supreme Court apparently agrees. "There is nothing in the record to indicate that either party acted in bad faith," it said. And again, "there is no question of bad faith or misconduct on the part of either party." The high court's unusual unsigned opinion, indeed, might suggest that the only reason the court agreed to review the case was to rebuke the circuit court for thrusting itself gratuitously into an area where it had no business.

SEC. OF STATE DEAN RUSK, right, declared that Fidel Castro is on his way out in Cuba, according to estimates of the situation in that Communist satellite country. Rusk was interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People, by Harry W. Flannery, the federation's radio coordinator.

Labor Dept. Marks 50th Anniversary

Unions Prod Six Nations On Britain

London—A plea that the Common Market governments continue negotiations with Great Britain until the latter is accepted as a member was again voiced by union leaders from all the market countries at a meeting with the Economic Committee of the British Trades Union Congress.

They recalled that earlier they had reminded the Council of Ministers of the European Economic Community and the six governments that the labor movements of the Six from the beginning had favored Britain's entry.

"The delegates noted with regret," they said after an all-day meeting here, "the difficulties that had arisen in the course of the negotiations between the United Kingdom and the EEC, and there was unanimous agreement that the governments concerned should continue their negotiations with a view to the UK becoming a full member."

"They agreed that whatever the effect of those difficulties on the current discussions, it would not hinder consultation and cooperation between the national trade union centers concerned for the attainment of shared policies and objectives."

Workers' interest in raising living standards both in Europe and elsewhere, they said, would be served by planned policies for economic expansion in European nations.

"They [the delegates] took the view," the statement concluded, "that the negotiations should concentrate on reaching agreement on outstanding issues and decided that discussions between the trade union centers should continue."

Record Being Sold To Help Refugees

An "all-star festival" phonograph record, produced under the auspices of the United Nations, has gone on sale throughout the free world to help in resettlement and rehabilitation of the more than 10 million homeless refugees, victims of totalitarianism, racialism and colonialism.

The long-playing recording of popular songs features as soloists Bing Crosby, Louis Armstrong, Maurice Chevalier, Nat "King" Cole, Ella Fitzgerald, Edith Piaf, Doris Day, Patti Page and Mahalia Jackson, all of whom contributed their talents gratis. Yul Brynner, special consultant to the UN High Commissioner for Refugees, headed the artists' selection panel.

The record—$3.98 monaural, $4.98 stereo—is on sale in the U.S., Europe, Asia and the Middle East, Africa. In the U.S. the record is being promoted by the U.S. Committee for Refugees.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is a vice president of the committee.

AFL-CIO Vice Presidents Joseph A. Beirne and Jacob S. Potofsky are members of the board.

The Musicians, composers and copyright owners have all waived royalties. The record industry pressed and distributed it at cost. The U.S. Committee for Refugees has established a central point for direct mail orders: REFUGEES, P.O. Box 1000, Grand Central Station, New York 17, N. Y.

NEED FOR "wholehearted cooperation among labor, management and government" was emphasized by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany in address to 50th anniversary dinner of the Labor Dept. Applause is led by Pres. Kennedy, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, and Frances Perkins, who headed the department longer than any other secretary in its half-century history.

IUE Parley Delegates Greeted by President

Delegates to a Washington conference of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers shook hands with Pres. Kennedy at a reception in the White House rose garden, heard him salute their union and in turn promised "redoubled efforts" in support of the Administration's health care bill.

Kennedy told 160 delegates to an IUE Full Citizenship conference that their union has fought for the best interests of the nation and for a "strong, American free trade union" for 15 years.

Lauding the IUE and its leaders for their role in the battle for civil rights, the President said "no group of Americans should feel more satisfaction" than the delegates and their leaders, IUE Pres. James B. Carey; Pres. Earl Riley of the union's New England district conference; Ben Segal, IUE education director; and Ed Rovner, IUE civic affairs director.

For almost four days, IUE members from 14 states were briefed by leading governmental, political and labor spokesmen and attended workshop sessions on equality of employment opportunity, political education, combating discrimination, right-wing political propaganda, state and local government, social insurance, education and other subjects.

Here are excerpts from some of the speakers:

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz: "The country apparently is getting used to" persistently high unemployment and as a result "not enough is being done about it." Saying the Labor Dept. attaches its highest priority, next to the tax bill, to the Youth Opportunities bill, he urged, "Let's start building America the Beautiful instead of just singing about it."

Sen. Harrison A. Williams (D-N. J.): "We need to speed up construction of public and private housing, and wide scale planning to meet the problems of urban renewal, humane removal of people, and transportation."

Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.): We must have "more sunlight" on dishonest or sharp practices in money-lending and installment-buying. He urged support of his "truth-in-lending" bill. The union urged locals to get information on members' experiences with loan-sharks and be prepared to testify at local hearings.

Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Oreg.), interviewed by a labor press panel: "No one in this room will live to see cloture in the Senate unless you make clear" that you will support legislators "when they act properly" and will "oppose them when they doublecross you."

Executive Sec. Roy Wilkins, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People: "What is 5 or 6 percent unemployment for the nation is 13 percent for Negroes" and a "recession for white workers is a crisis for Negro workers."

Rep. Frank Thompson (D-N. J.): Federal aid to education is the nation's most important problem. States and communities, he said, have reached the limit of their ability to improve their education systems without further federal tax aid.

Gosser Retains Inactive Status

Detroit — Richard Gosser, vice president of the Auto Workers, has been continued on indefinite leave of absence without pay by the UAW's executive board.

Gosser was convicted in Toledo, O., last month of conspiring to obtain confidential Internal Revenue Service records and was sentenced to three years in prison. He is free on $10,000 bond pending his appeal.

He was relieved of active duties in December, following his indictment, with his functions being assumed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Sec.-Treas. Emil Mazey. The union executive board pointed out at the time that the charges involved personal and not union issues. On Mar. 5, the board said that the "best interests of the union would be served" by continuing him in inactive status and on leave and "by his severance from the payroll" at this time.

Harry S. McIlvaigh Retires in Tacoma

Tacoma, Wash.—Harry S. McIlvaigh, who has spent 52 of his 75 years in the labor movement, has resigned as secretary-treasurer of the Pierce County Central Labor Council after 30 years in the post.

Kennedy Strikes Out At Budget Slashers

(Continued from Page 1)

for granted in both political parties," were regarded as "dangerous and revolutionary" at the time.

Wirtz told the gathering that the anniversary observance "is not the department's day."

"It belongs," he said, "to the men and women of the American trade unions, for they have created the industrial democracy of this country."

Johnson emphasized the "great progress" that has been made in promoting equal opportunity as a result of Kennedy's executive order on government contracts which, he noted, "couldn't be passed in Congress."

Referring to the late Philip Murray's aspiration for American workers to have "music in the home, pictures on the wall, carpets on the floor," Johnson said that all workers still don't have these amenities "but we're working toward it."

'Security in Abundance'

Goldberg told the group that the nation's needs require "finding our own security in abundance, not in a sharing of scarcity."

The only "lasting security," he said, is in "dedicated work at fair wages, in more sales at fair prices."

An "expanding economy," he declared, is necessary to combine technological advances with protection of human values.

Mitchell, secretary during more than seven years of the Eisenhower Administration, said past dedication to the department's mission of "fostering and promoting the welfare of the working men and women" must continue in the years ahead. He added:

"While by any standards we are a prosperous nation, there are millions of Americans . . . who are still denied the basic minimum standards which law should guarantee."

These include, he said, "the migratory farm worker, those in industries uncovered by the minimum wage, the hundreds of thousands who live a pinched and deformed life in our rural and urban slums."

The former secretaries of labor, with Wirtz and Meany, are co-chairmen of the President's Committee for the Dept. of Labor 50th Anniversary Year, set up in a proclamation by Kennedy to plan activities honoring the department's contributions "to the welfare of our workers and their families and to our nation."

The dinner was preceded by a reception given by the AFL-CIO. A birthday cake from the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers was on display and music was with the compliments of the Musicians. An elaborate entertainment program, including such stars as Victor Borge, Allan Sherman and Leslie Uggams, alternated between the two banquet halls.

'Refreshing' Parleys Settle Missile Pact

Detroit—The Auto Workers have reached "extremely satisfactory" settlements with the Martin-Marietta Co. covering employes at missile bases in California, Arizona, Kansas and Arkansas, UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock announced in a statement praising management of the aerospace firm for its "forthright" bargaining.

New contracts provide wage increases of 5 to 25 cents an hour in the first year of a three-year term; a union shop provision at Vandenberg Air Force Base; and improvements in vacations, holidays, sick leave, health insurance, shift differentials and other benefits.

The agreements cover 400 highly-skilled members of UAW Local 617 at Vandenberg AFB, Santa Maria, Calif.; and more than 1,200 other newly-represented missile workers in Tucson, Ariz., Local 1112; Wichita, Kan., Local 1302; and Little Rock, Ark., Local 1197, who voted to join the UAW late last year.

Woodcock said the negotiations were notable because "bargaining was consistently forthright" in contrast with negotiations at other space firms last year "when delay and confusion was the order of the day." The UAW found it "refreshing" to sit across the table from Martin management, he said.

The union listed the value of the Vandenberg settlement as more than 20 cents an hour this year, plus at least 10 cents additional in 1964 and 1965. The new contracts at Tucson, Wichita and Little Rock were valued at 25 cents this year, and 10 cents more in 1964 and 1965.

Tucson, Wichita and Little Rock workers are not covered by a layoff benefit program but will be covered by the full UAW-Martin pension plan, the union said.

Ohio Workers Collect Unpaid $1.3 Million

Columbus—Ohio employers who failed to meet legal minimum wage and overtime standards paid more than $1.3 million to 7,414 workers as a result of inspections by the Labor Dept.'s Wage-Hour & Public Contracts Division, the annual report showed.

W. B. Taylor Dies; Staff Organizer

William B. Taylor, AFL-CIO staff member assigned to help the Government Employes with their organizing, died suddenly at his home in Alexandria, Va., Washington suburb. He was 58.

A native of Ottawa, Ont., he was a leader in organization of the Chrysler plant in Detroit, was an Auto Workers international representative from 1935 to 1945, and for a time was assistant director of organizing drives in the Ford plants and the aircraft industry. He joined the staff of the former CIO and helped organize in the oil industry and in 1946 was named regional director for Kentucky, serving until 1955. At that time he went to Indonesia as labor adviser to the republic for the former Intl. Cooperation Administration, joining the AFL-CIO staff upon his return in 1957 and acting as assistant regional director in Philadelphia until his assignment to Washington a few months ago. He was a member of the State, County and Municipal Workers.

He is survived by his widow, Madeline, and two sons, Thomas and Brian. Burial was in St. Mary's Cemetery, Alexandria.

Collective Bargaining Report:

Demand for Strike Curbs Blamed on 'Mythical' Crisis

Cries for action to curb strikes are a response to a mythical "crisis," the AFL-CIO has declared, because in reality "labor peace is the norm in America today."

"Strikes: Myth vs. Reality," an article in the March issue of the AFL-CIO American Federationist, warns that free collective bargaining is endangered because the "crisis" talk could bring hasty action to restrict labor's strike weapon.

"The facts do not support the crisis theory," the article notes.

"Headlines play up strikes because they are unusual. Strikes involved about 2 percent of all America's collective bargaining agreements last year. Two-tenths of 1 percent of total U.S. worktime was lost by strikers. Three hours per person available to work in 1962 was the price of strikes in time lost in strike idleness.

"About 50 times as much time was lost from unemployment. Yet few people seem as excited about joblessness."

'Sound Reasons'

While no one thinks strikes as such are good, the article contends, there are "sound reasons" for maintaining the right to strike.

"Without that right," it continues, "labor has no effective weapon when reasonable negotiations break down. It must continue to work on management's terms."

As challenges to the right to strike persist, the article points out, the public, the government and management and labor will have to decide the value of this right in a free society.

The article, a Collective Bargaining Report prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, presents background information on the problem from government, business and academic sources. It deals with the extent, kind, duration of and reasons for strikes as well as their effects on the economy and the public.

In comparing economic losses, the article quotes the U.S. Dept. of Labor as reporting for 1962 a total of 3,550 work stoppages (strikes and lockouts) involving 1.3 million workers and a loss of 19 million man-days of worktime.

This total of 19 million man-days lost sounds high, the article emphasizes, until it is compared to the 850 to 900 million man-days lost because of unemployment—a loss 50 times as great.

The article quotes a comment of Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz last December:

"We have lost more man-hours of production in this country in the last 11 months from unemployment than we have in the last 35 years from strikes. That simply illustrates the difference between the public's reaction to these two things."

Most Strikes Short

On the popular notion that strikes involve many workers shutting down many plants, the article notes that 99.6 percent of all strikes in 1961—the latest data available—involved fewer than 10,000 workers. The 195 strikes involving 1,000 or more workers accounted for only 5.8 percent of all strikes. These larger stoppages accounted for 71 percent of workers on strike and 62.3 percent of total lost time.

The article also observes that most strikes are short ones. In 1961 about 70 percent of strikes called under the terms of a contract were settled within a week.

The report says most walkouts occur over "bread and butter" issues—wages, hours and working conditions. But strikes over job security—"the ugliest problem of the 1960s"—are on the increase.

On the decision to strike, the article observes it is a last-resort action usually requiring a two-step approval—often a secret ballot by the local membership and then approval of the parent union.

On the contract provisions on strikes, the article reports that almost all pacts contain some type of "no-strike clause," usually accompanied by an employer "no-lockout" pledge. This reflects a mutual desire to settle problems and grievances peacefully, it was asserted.

Each Situation Differs

On the real origin of strikes, the article quotes an exhaustive academic study which found in each bargaining situation circumstances of which most people know very little, the study disclosed.

On the "public interest," the article quotes experts who observed there is more than one "public" and more than a single "interest" in disputes and the terms of settlement.

The article concludes by pointing out that a strike is merely a symptom of a problem and not the problem itself. It quotes a National Planning Association study of industrial peace noting that the interests of a union and an employer are interdependent rather than identical.

James Duffy Dies; Headed Potters

East Liverpool, O.—James M. Duffy, president of the Operative Potters from 1927 to 1953, died here of cancer after a long illness. He was 73.

He joined the union here as an apprentice in 1909 and became active in union affairs immediately. During most of his career he was a member of Buffalo Local 76 but at the time of his death belonged to Local 31 in East Palestine, O. He held a wide range of labor, government and community posts, including membership on Pres. Truman's Labor - Management Conference Committee in 1948, and was a vice president of the Union Label & Service Trades Dept. He represented the former AFL at the Intl. Labor Conference in Geneva in 1937, and served as a director of the Union Labor Life Insurance Co.

Solemn requiem mass was held in St. Aloysius Church here, with burial in East Liverpool. He was survived by his widow, Kathryn Geon Duffy; a daughter, four sons, four sisters, three brothers and 24 grandchildren.

CLC Fund to Aid Shooting Victims

Ottawa, Ont.—The Canadian Labor Congress has undertaken a fund-raising appeal among its affiliates for the benefit of the victims of the shootings at Resor Siding, Ont.

The prime purpose of the fund is to help the families of the three slain members of the striking Lumber & Sawmill Workers—Leo and Joseph Fortier and Armand Drouin. Aid also will be extended to the nine wounded men should they be permanently incapacitated.

The 12 were felled in a fusillade from settlers who hoped to sell wood they had cut on crown lands to the struck Spruce Falls Power & Paper Co.

THE CENTURY MARK was passed for the first time by a Ladies' Garment Workers pensioner when Nathan Sorkowitz (who claims he's actually 102), second from left, marked his 100th birthday. He is shown at the annual meeting of Cloak & Suit Industry Retirement Fund trustees in New York with his retiree-son, Jacob (second from right), who's only 82; Vice Pres. Henoch Mendelsund (left), general manager of the union's New York Cloak Joint Board; Joseph L. Dubow (right), director of the New York Coat & Suit Association. The elder Sorkowitz was a member of Cloak Finishers Local 9 and retired 15 years ago. His son retired from Cutters Local 10 in 1957.

Decertification Urged For Segregated Locals

A trial examiner for the National Labor Relations Board has recommended that the joint certification of two locals of an unaffiliated union be rescinded because the division is based on racial lines.

"Where a union segregates members or excludes or denies full-membership status to applications, on racial grounds, it is violating its duty of fair representation to all members of the unit and should not be permitted to hold a certified status," Trial Examiner Frederick U. Reel wrote.

Reel urged further that the NLRB make "inexorably clear" that it "will not tolerate" racially discriminatory practices by conditioning any new certification at the plant—the Hughes Tool Co., Houston, Tex.—on non-discrimination by the union.

The trial examiner's report was released on the same day that Pres. Kennedy, in his civil rights message to Congress, announced that he had directed the Justice Dept. to take part in NLRB cases involving charges of racial discrimination against local unions.

Legislation Unwanted

"It is my hope that administrative action and litigation will make unnecessary the enactment of legislation with respect to union discrimination," the President said. On the international union level, he noted that a majority of AFL-CIO affiliates, along with a number of major employers, had signed voluntary agreements pledging an affirmative attack on discrimination.

The Hughes Tool case arose between two locals of the Independent Metal Workers Union. Local 2, representing only Negro workers, filed unfair practice charges last May 23 against Local 1, composed solely of white workers, accusing it of refusing to process the grievance of a Negro employe denied the right to bid on an apprenticeship opening. Later, the Negro local also urged the board to rescind the joint certification on the ground that Local 1 had discriminated against Negro workers in refusing to represent them fairly.

Meanwhile, the Steelworkers, who at one period in the past had been the certified bargaining agent, petitioned for representation rights.

The NLRB trial examiner upheld the unfair practice charges against Local 1 and recommended that bargaining rights be revoked because the local had not fulfilled "its statutory duty to represent fairly all employes in the unit."

Because of the "long history" of racial discrimination at the plant —in which, Reel said, the Steelworkers and the company also had played "something more than acquiescent roles"—he urged the board to require any union certified in the future to post a pledge that it will not discriminate against any employe.

The Steelworkers lost bargaining rights to the "independent" segregated locals in 1946 after a long strike. When they attempted to regain representational rights in 1950, it was for a single unsegregated local—an issue used by the "independents" in the campaign.

Cancer Campaign Backed by Meany

The $40 million educational and fund-raising campaign of the American Cancer Society, to be held in April, has been endorsed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

"Many members of the labor force who are stricken with cancer will live to return to work because of the American Cancer Society," Meany wrote Ralph Edwards, TV producer and campaign chairman. "They will join the 1.2 million Americans who have been cured of this terrible disease. Still, some 88,000 cancer victims will die this year because their condition was not diagnosed in time. . . .

"I am confident that American workers will, as they have in the past, assist the society in its life-saving efforts."

MEBA Calls Convention for Nominations

New York—Delegates from all ports organized by the Marine Engineers were scheduled to meet here in special conventions starting Mar. 11 to nominate candidates for president succeeding Edward N. Altman, resigned.

Delegates to the special assembly have the power of delegates to any national convention and may decide, a union spokesman said, to transact all convention business now instead of waiting for the regularly scheduled convention in May. That business includes plan for conducting a referendum on officers.

After three years as president, Altman resigned to devote full time to his post as Washington representative of the American Maritime Association, representing 178 firms with 475 ships. He had been on leave of absence, he said, since the association was formed in 1961 and his new job represents "no change in philosophy."

Bill 'Too Long Delayed':

AFL-CIO Urges Fast Action To Add Fringes to Davis-Bacon

The AFL-CIO has called for "speedy action" on a "too long delayed" bill to include the value of fringe benefits in determining prevailing area wages which government contractors must meet under the Davis-Bacon Act.

The bill, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared, is needed to "end the present intolerable situation whereby non-union contractors have a substantial discriminatory advantage over union contractors on federal work."

Meany's letter to a House Labor subcommittee headed by Rep. James Roosevelt was presented by Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.

Backed by Employers

Haggerty, testifying on behalf of the department's 18 affiliated unions, said the proposed amendment to the Davis-Bacon Act is strongly supported by "fair employers" as well as by unions.

He pointed out that an identical measure, approved 22-7 by the House Education & Labor Committee last year, had died in the Rules Committee with the adjournment of the 87th Congress.

It is "urgent," Haggerty said, "that the relief provided by the bill be afforded at this session of Congress."

He said the Administration-supported bill is "entirely consistent" with the "original intent" of the Davis-Bacon Act, which was passed when fringe benefits were a "rare exception."

Much of the opposition to the bill, Haggerty charged, comes from those who would really prefer to repeal the act entirely.

In other congressional developments:

- Pres. Kennedy expressed "hope" that the Administration's Youth Employment Opportunities bill "can be enacted before the Easter recess."

He declared at his Mar. 6 news conference that the program is needed because "1 million of our youth are out of school and out of work, creating an explosive social situation in nearly every community."

Other Administration bills he listed as prospects for early action dealt with aid to medical and dental schools and their students, and measures "to combat mental illness and mental retardation."

- The House Merchant Marine Committee opened hearings on a labor-opposed, Administration-opposed bill sponsored by its chairman, Rep. Herbert C. Bonner (D-N. C.), which would authorize the President to bar strikes and impose arbitration in maritime disputes.

Endorsed by Shippers

The first witness, Board Chairman John M. Franklin of the United States Lines, endorsed the bill although saying, "I don't like compulsory arbitration."

- Pres. Kennedy resubmitted to Congress two transportation bills, which would remove minimum rate regulation on railroad transportation of various bulk commodities. No action was taken on similar measures last year.
- Congress passed its first major bill of the session—a $508 million supplemental appropriation to the Agriculture Dept. to cover expenses of the surplus commodity program.
- The House sharply cut the budget of its Education & Labor Committee, voting a one-year appropriation of $200,000. This was $100,000 less than the committee received last year and $148,500 less than it had requested for 1963. Only $50,000 would be under control of the committee chairman, Rep. Adams Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.); the remaining $150,000 was earmarked for the six standing subcommittees.

U.S. Urged to Tighten Federal Credit Policy

A presidential committee headed by Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon has recommended a tightening of government credit operations and policies which could lead to higher interest rates on both direct government loans and government-insured loans.

The report proposed that the government make direct loans only when private credit is not available, and then at rates "comparable to those that would prevail in efficiently functioning private markets."

Under no circumstances, the committee said, should the interest rate be below the cost to the government of borrowing money, administering the loan program, and making an allowance for losses on bad loans.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its recent meeting, urged Congress "to reject proposals that would increase long-term interest rates."

While making no direct reference to the report, the council warned that "job-creating efforts can be nullified by a tightening of the money supply and an increase in interest rates."

It urged the Federal Reserve System "to take positive action to reduce interest rates on long-term loans in order to encourage the expansion of sales, production and employment."

Many of the Dillon committee's recommendations could be carried out only through changes in existing laws—such as the present 2 percent interest charge under the direct loan program of the Rural Electrification Administration.

Pres. Kennedy gave no indication that he will seek such legislation. He passed the report on to government agencies as a guide in administering existing lending programs "and especially in proposing any new or expanded credit authority."

The committee said federal agencies such as the Federal Housing Administration should continue to have the power to set interest ceilings on private mortgages they insure but should avoid imposing ceilings "outside the range of reasonable market rates." It opposed having Congress set interest ceilings on government-insured loans.

In addition to Dillon, the committee members were David E. Bell, who was budget director at the time of the study; Walter W. Heller, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, and William McC. Martin, Jr., chairman of the Federal Reserve System board of governors.

New Booklet Spells Out Case for Shorter Hours

Organized labor's case for shorter hours as a tool to combat unemployment is now available in a carefully prepared and documented 56-page illustrated booklet.

The new publication, "Shorter Hours: Tool to Combat Unemployment," is based on a series of articles that appeared in the AFL-CIO American Federationist. The material has been completely updated and new tables, figures and economic analyses added. The original articles and the new material were prepared by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

In an introduction Pres. George Meany writes that the "prosperity of the United States must be based upon full employment and we believe full employment is possible only if the standard workweek is cut."

Single copies of the booklet, AFL-CIO Publication No. 129, are available free. Up to 100 copies the cost is 35 cents per copy; the price is $30 per hundred for orders of 100 copies or more.

The booklet can be obtained by writing the Pamphlet Division, AFL-CIO Dept. of Publications, 815 Sixteenth Street, N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

Rhode Island Joblessness 9.2 Percent

Providence, R. I.—Unemployment in Rhode Island rose to 32,500 in January, equal to 9.2 percent of the state's labor force, the Rhode Island Labor Dept. reported.

In all 10,300 jobs disappeared in the one month, 2,500 of them in factories. Part of the decline was in seasonal (Christmas) employment.

Since October, the high point of last fall's employment, total jobs have dropped by 11,000, with 4,400 lost in manufacturing plants, the state Labor Dept. said.

At 286,900, the total employed was 2,400 under a year ago.

There has been a steady drop in manufacturing in the state, continuing for a number of months, that was led, and still is, by textiles. Total textile jobs numbered 24,700 in January. That was a loss of 500 jobs in the month and 2,800 from a year ago, a drop of 10.2 percent.

WAD Leader Named United Drive Aide

San Diego, Calif.—Mrs. E. P. Alcaraz, chairman of the Women's Activities Division of the San Diego County AFL-CIO, has been appointed chairman of the women's section of the county United Community Services.

The Women's Division of the labor council received one of the top awards for outstanding community service.

SERAFINO ROMUALDI

ANDREW C. McLELLAN

Romualdi Takes Leave, McLellan Given Post

AFL-CIO Inter-American Rep. Serafino Romualdi has taken an extended leave of absence in order to devote full time to directing the Institute for Free Labor Development, the training school for young Latin-American union leadership.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany announced that Romualdi's post with the federation will be filled by his chief assistant, Andrew C. McLellan.

McLellan was born in Scotland 51 years ago and moved to Canada in 1926. As an apprentice union painter he had participated in British labor's general strike of that year. He went to California in 1934, joined the Meat Cutters, and after three years of service with the Army in the Southwest Pacific moved to Texas.

He learned Spanish while working with the Texas Federation of Labor from 1947 to 1956. In the latter year he was assigned to Guatemala as a representative of the Inter-American Regional Organization of Workers (ORIT) and served full-time in Latin America until called to work with the AFL-CIO in 1960.

Romualdi, 62, was forced to migrate from Italy in 1923 because of his opposition to Fascism. In this country he entered the labor movement as an editorial and publicity assistant with the Ladies' Garment Workers. During World War II he served in Latin America with the U.S. Coordinator of Latin-American Affairs and in Europe with the Office of Strategic Services.

The former AFL in 1948 engaged Romualdi to establish contacts with Latin-American unions, a role that led to the establishment of the Inter-American Confederation of Workers, for which he became international relations secretary.

Assistant at ORIT

He served as assistant secretary of ORIT after establishment of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions and as editor of the Inter-American Labor Bulletin. He has frequently represented the United States as a delegate to conferences in or about Latin America.

He retained his AFL-CIO post after being named executive director of the institute when it was set up last year. The institute trains young labor leaders from Latin America and the Caribbean area in union fundamentals, democratic processes, defense tactics against infiltration by totalitarians or racketeers, and on the role of the union in the community.

Labor Backs Extension Of Export-Import Bank

The AFL-CIO has urged "prompt enactment" of an Administration bill to extend the life of the Export-Import Bank and raise the ceiling on its lending authority.

AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger termed the measure "important to America's strength at home and abroad."

In a statement to the House Banking & Currency Committee, Goldfinger said the bank has helped create business and jobs by financing and guaranteeing loans for the purchase of U.S. equipment, materials and services by foreign governments and private firms.

The bank's functions are especially important, Goldfinger noted, "at a time of national large-scale unemployment." He added:

"Thousands of U.S. manufacturers and exporters have received overseas orders because of this organization. That means U.S. jobs were created or continued . . . This issue of employment concerns every American."

In addition, he pointed out, Export-Import Bank loans "have helped developing nations finance water supply and irrigation projects" and undertake other measures to "improve their economic strength."

The bill, introduced in the House by Committee Chairman Wright Patman (D-Tex.), would continue the bank for an additional five years and increase its lending authority from the present $7 billion ceiling to $9 billion.

In his Budget Message last January, Pres. Kennedy praised the bank's operations since it was started in 1934 and said it has made a "significant contribution to the expansion of our foreign trade."

Goldfinger told the committee that the AFL-CIO "has consistently favored effective means of expanding U.S. trade overseas . . . American business and American jobs are created by expanded trade, and friendly foreign nations benefit from economic development projects."

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, March 16, 1963 | No. 11

Meany, Congressional Unit Press for Bolder Tax Cut

WHITE HOUSE LUNCHEON guests of Pres. Kennedy Mar. 12 were members of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, shown above at table with the President. Also present were Dept. of Labor officials.

Urge Faster Slash To Prod Economy

Organized labor and the top congressional committee on economic policy joined in urging faster and sharper tax reduction in 1963 than the Administration proposes. (See stories below.)

Pres. Kennedy himself, terming the high rate of joblessness the nation's No. 1 economic problem, sent a report on manpower to Congress which he said finally commits the nation to implement the goal of full employment. (See story this page.)

'Pious Statements' Hit:

Kennedy Bids Congress Act To Promote Full Employment

By Robert B. Cooney

Pres. Kennedy, assailing mere "pious statements" about the high rate of joblessness, has sent Congress a manpower policy report which he said, finally commits the nation to implement the goal of "full employment."

In immediate terms, the President declared, "unemployment is our number one economic problem."

The 5.5 percent or higher jobless rate of the past five years has been due to a slowdown in economic growth, he said, and it cannot be tolerated. In February, the jobless rate swung upward to a 15-month high of 6.1 percent.

The President urged prompt action on his tax proposals "to inject additional demand and provide increased incentives to fuel an upsurge in production and employment."

"Tax reduction," he stressed, "will provide the single strongest push possible to move the economy toward achievable full employment."

"For too long a time, we have contented ourselves with pious statements about the waste of our human resources.

"With the issuance of this report, however, we have committed ourselves to a national policy designed to provide all Americans with the opportunity to develop and use their talents and energies to the maximum of which they are capable."

Calls on Congress

He called on Congress for programs to cope with "the predicament faced by men whose jobs have been eliminated by machines;" with "inadequately prepared" younger workers; with Negro workers suffering a jobless rate twice that of other workers; with "the plight of workers in depressed areas, skilled men standing idly by, waiting for an economic miracle;" with workers whose skills are being outdated.

The 204-page volume is the first annual report on "manpower requirements, resources, utilization and training" submitted to Congress in compliance with the Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962.

That law also mandated a major national effort to improve the functioning of the labor market and

(Continued on Page 10)

Council of Churches Endorses Equal Pay

Denver—The general board of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. has endorsed a policy of equal pay for women.

The proposal had been recommended earlier by the executive board of the council's Dept. of the Church & Economic Life to which it had been presented by the Rev. Charles C. Webber, who recently retired as AFL-CIO representative for religious relations.

It declares that the principle of equal pay for equal work is a matter of economic justice which has been accepted throughout the world, and urged member-churches "to support this principle in their own employment practices, and to encourage a climate of acceptance of the principle by their churches and church members."

Administration Schedule Held 'Too Slow'

By Saul Miller

A $6 billion tax cut in 1963 concentrated in the lower income brackets has been urged by the Joint Economic Committee of Congress to stimulate the economy toward full employment.

The Democratic majority on the House-Senate committee declared itself in agreement with Pres. Kennedy's program of a $10 billion tax cut over three years, but said his proposed schedule is "too slow."

"The largest doses [of tax relief] should be given when the patient is sickest—not when he is almost well," the committee said after an extensive diagnosis of the nation's poor economic health.

The Republican minority suggested a one-year tax cut of $7 billion to $8 billion "as possibly appropriate," but tied it to a $95 billion ceiling on federal spending—a $4 billion cut in the President's budget.

Points Made

The Democratic majority flatly opposed a ceiling or a GOP-proposed $10-billion to $15-billion slash in government expenditures, declaring such a cut would "severe-

(Continued on Page 11)

AFL-CIO Asks Low-Bracket $10 Billion Cut

By John M. Barry

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany urged Congress to enact an immediate $10 billion tax cut in the lowest personal and corporate brackets to "get the economy moving" and provide needed jobs through a quick boost in consumer buying power.

Meany called for the tax cut as the first stage of a two-step approach to tax reduction and reform which he urged the House Ways & Means Committee to adopt, postponing the more complicated reform questions until "a genuinely thorough job can be done . . . without the pressure for speed which arises from the current economic circumstances."

"The economy is in trouble," the federation president declared, "and getting it out of trouble should be the first concern of us all."

In response to questioning by committee members, Meany agreed that Pres. Kennedy's tax cut proposals "are a step in the right direction." He stressed, however, that "changes in the timing, distribution and structure of the Administration program are essential if

(Continued on Page 11)

Railroad Management Walks Out On New Work Rules Negotiations

Chicago—Railroad management continued on a collision course with unions representing 200,000 operating employes, breaking off negotiations after less than two hours at the bargaining table.

An industry spokesman said the carriers will go ahead with their plans unilaterally to rewrite the work rules and put them into effect. He told newsmen that "one way" of averting a nationwide shutdown when that takes place would be "passage of legislation prohibiting strikes against railroads."

The brief bargaining session was the first since June 22, when company negotiators broke off the talks and charged the unions with 'stalling."

Pres. H. E. Gilbert of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen said the refusal to continue negotiations demonstrated "a complete lack of public responsibility" by the railroads.

He told a news conference called by the five operating unions that his union had put on the bargaining table a "fair and reasonable offer" involving a willingness to reduce the number of firemen in yard service and on certain branch lines through attrition.

"We found that the carriers don't want to hear anything about a negotiated settlement," Gilbert said. "They are more interested in congressional pressure."

A Supreme Court decision which cleared the way for the railroads to put into effect their work rules proposals—with the unions still free to strike, if necessary, in protest—is expected to be implemented by a lower court order this month.

It is generally expected that before a final showdown comes, Pres. Kennedy will name an emergency board to seek to mediate the dis-

(Continued on Page 4)

SHEET METAL WORKERS in 21 cities have been volunteering their Saturdays to distribute leaflets urging a consumer boycott of Hotpoint appliances until the company, a division of General Electric, agrees to union contract. This distribution, in Chicago, is by members of Local 73.

Farm Bureau Sharply Assailed On Bid to Legalize Child Labor

A proposal by the American Farm Bureau Federation to "liberalize" the child labor law by permitting children 14 and 15 to work in factories has has been challenged by Assistant Labor Sec. Esther Peterson, who urged instead that the law be broadened to protect the children of migrant farm workers.

"I don't see anything liberal," Mrs. Peterson said, about increasing the exploitation of children."

She suggested there is too much exploitation already. "In many states children much younger than 14 work from sunrise to sunset alongside their parents in the fields," she went on. "Their living condition are disgraceful and they have little or no opportunity for schooling."

Mrs. Peterson, a leader in the long battle which resulted in the child labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act—the minimum wage law—gave her views in a broadcast on "As We See It," AFL-CIO program heard on the ABC radio network.

The labor aide said she was "distressed" by a Farm Bureau policy statement alleging that "regulations relating to the employment" of minors aged 14 or 15 in industry are "so restrictive that they virtually eliminate employment of such minors, with socially undesirable consequences."

Child labor laws, she said, "aren't nearly as restrictive as we are led to believe" because the laws permit children to work after school. The Farm Bureau's position she called "ridiculous" because "socially undesirable consequence come about when children are in factories."

As for the children of migrant workers, she said many of them are in effect "condemned to a whole life of migrant farm work since they have no chance to learn anything else."

"That is a socially undesirable consequence," she said, "which ought to concern the Farm Bureau and all citizens, but unfortunately there is a feeling" that such conditions do not exist.

Mrs. Peterson agreed with interviewer Harry W. Flannery that the country's basic economic problem is lack of jobs for untrained and unskilled workers "and not laws that keep the 14 and 15-year-olds out of jobs."

Asked about equal pay legislation, the Labor Dept. official said a bill supported by the Administration and many groups, including labor, has been introduced in Congress and that hearings are scheduled.

"Whoever performs the job would get the rate for the job," Mrs. Peterson related. "It doesn't make any difference whether a man performs the job or a woman.

"I think we have a good chance of getting that passed this year."

Labor Dept. Clinics Set On Pension Plan Laws

The Labor Dept. has scheduled a series of clinics throughout the country, opening Mar. 19 at Baltimore, to promote better understanding of the requirements of the Welfare & Pension Plans Disclosure Act and its 1962 amendments.

Frank M. Kleiler, director of the department's Office of Welfare & Pension Plans, said "thousands of inquiries" had been received about the 1962 amendments, with interest centering on requirements for bonding of persons handling funds or other property of the plans.

He said his office hopes to bring the clinics to 40 major cities by the end of the year as an aid to administrators of the employe benefit plans, insurance and pension consultants, accountants, actuaries, attorneys, corporate trust officers and union officials.

The clinics will consist of two presentations, one on bonding and one on reporting, with time allotted for questions and answers.

In addition to the Baltimore session, the schedule includes:

New York, Mar. 25; New Haven, Apr. 2; Washington, Apr. 18; Hartford, Apr. 23; Philadelphia, Apr. 25; Houston, May 7; Dallas-Fort Worth, May 9; Atlanta, May 21; Charlotte, N. C., May 23; Indianapolis, June 4; Cincinnati, June 6; Kansas City, Mo., June 17; St. Louis, June 19; Milwaukee, July 23; Detroit, Aug. 6; Toledo, O., Aug. 8; Louisville, Sept. 26; Chicago, Oct. 8; and Cleveland, Oct. 10.

Dates have been tentatively set as follows:

Syracuse, N. Y., July 9; Buffalo, July 11; Minneapolis-St. Paul, July 25; Oklahoma City, Aug. 12; Denver, Aug. 14; Seattle, Aug. 16; Portland, Ore., Aug. 19; San Francisco, Aug. 21; Los Angeles, Aug. 23.

Also, Richmond, Aug. 27; Providence, Aug. 29; Boston, Sept. 10; Pittsburgh, Sept. 12; Memphis, Sept. 24; Birmingham, Oct. 22; New Orleans, Oct. 24; Jacksonville, Nov. 5; and Miami, Nov. 7.

ACWA Asks 25c Increase, 35-Hour Week

New York—The Clothing Workers have asked a 35-hour workweek, a wage increase of 25 cents an hour, and other improvements in contracts covering 125,000 workers in the men's and boys' clothing industry.

At the first negotiating meeting here between ACWA and the Clothing Manufacturers Association of the United States, Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the union asked for wage hikes and these additional benefits in a new agreement effective June 1:

- Gradual reduction in weekly working hours to 35 with no decrease in wages.
- An improved health and welfare program.
- Severance pay for workers whose employers go out of business.
- A third week of paid vacation.
- One more paid holiday for a total of eight.

Potofsky said the industry should be willing to recognize the merit in these proposals. Pres. John D. Gray of the association said it would oppose any reduction in hours and added that they intend to submit their own demands for contract changes.

Negotiations will be carried on by smaller committees, the two groups agreed.

The Advance, published by the union, reported that one major manufacturer who normally follows the pattern set in ACWA-CMA negotiations supports the union stand on a shorter workweek.

Labor's 'Immediate Objective':

Wider Wage-Hour Coverage Sought

Legislation to extend the federal minimum wage law to some 4 million workers not now covered is an "immediate objective" of the labor movement, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller declared in a radio interview.

Many of the workers not now covered—including employes of restaurants, hotels, laundries and hospitals — receive "scandalous wages" of as little as 40 cents an hour, he said.

Because "the lowest paid worker is the last person to get any attention," it will be a "hard fight" in Congress, Biemiller said, adding:

"The labor movement has dedicated itself to this fight and we intend to throw everything we have into it."

Biemiller was interviewed on Labor News Conference, the AFL-CIO public affairs program carried by the Mutual radio network. Rejecting the argument that extension of wage-hour coverage would price some low-paid workers out of jobs, Biemiller said the effect of raising substandard wages would be to reduce unemployment.

"The primary weapon in fighting unemployment in the United States is to increase purchasing power," he declared.

An expansion of coverage would bring about greater purchasing power, he said, just as the 1961 amendments to the wage-hour act added some $500 million in buying power to the economy.

Biemiller said assignment of first priority to extension of the minimum wage coverage doesn't mean abandonment of hopes for achieving a 35-hour workweek through legislation.

"We are realists," he said. "We don't gain many of our legislative goals the first year we go after them. We intend to keep the pressure up.

"Our immediate objective is to extend coverage to those workers who need the coverage very badly.

"Secondly, we must educate people on the necessity for cutting the hours of work.

"And thirdly, we will get around to the question of raising the minimum wage. The basic minimum wage might be raised as part of a real drive for the 35-hour week, so as to make sure that a reduction in hours does not result in any dimunition of take-home pay."

Biemiller pointed out that low wages of uncovered workers is a serious problem in all sections, although "it's worst in the South." While 74 percent of the untipped employes in Atlanta restaurants earn less than $1 an hour, so do 37 percent of comparable workers in Indianapolis, Biemiller emphasized.

Food Stamp Plan to Aid 40,000 Alabama Needy

Birmingham, Ala.—Praise for citizens of Alabama's largest county who came to the rescue of 40,000 needy persons faced with the loss of surplus foods has been voiced by Dir. Leo Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

County residents who had been receiving surplus food supplied by the federal government were in danger of being cut off when the Birmingham City Commission voted to halt funds for distribution of the food.

Public support of the federal food stamp program, replacing the old plan, was secured after a county-wide campaign coordinated by Sec. Homer Harper of the Jefferson County Citizens Committee on Surplus Food, the local representative of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

Perlis said Harper performed a valuable service to his community and added:

"Because he and many other fine citizens were interested in the welfare of others, hundreds of people in Jefferson county will not go hungry."

City commissioners, according to local officials, decided to cut off funds for food distribution to demonstrate their objection to a boycott of downtown stores by Negroes here, though surplus food recipients had no part in the boycott campaign.

The food stamp plan, under which needy persons get their food at cooperating stores on presentation of food stamps, has been put into effect, and will bring $2.5 million into the local economy while feeding the needy, according to Harper and the committee.

PUBLIC SUPPORT for the federal food stamp program was rallied by these Birmingham, Ala., men and other members of the Jefferson County Citizens Committee on Surplus Food when 40,000 needy were threatened with cutoff from the surplus food program by action of the Birmingham City Commission. Left to right, they are County Personnel Board Dir. Ray Mullins, Homer Harper of the Citizens Committee, and County Commission Pres. W. D. Kendrick. Harper is AFL-CIO Community Service Activities representative

ITU Hails 'Victory':

Newspaper Unions To Vote on Pacts

New York—Efforts to solve New York's long newspaper dispute focused on the Newspaper Guild and unresolved craft contracts as members of the striking and locked-out Typographical Union prepared to vote on a settlement hailed by their negotiators as "a major victory."

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, the Guild's administrative committee was considering an offer by the publishers to add an average of $4.13 in wages to earlier settlements in exchange for a five-month extension of the contract to Mar. 31, 1965.

This would remove the major barrier to a common expiration date for all 10 unions involved in the dispute, a key provision sought by ITU Local 6 and contained in the settlement proposed by Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

The additional wage hike offered the Guild would be effective Nov. 1, 1964, and when added to the $8.50 settlement reached last Oct. 31, would bring the total Guild package into parity with the proposed ITU economic settlement of $12.63.

Guild units are scheduled to vote on the offer Mar. 17 and 18.

Wagner also announced tentative agreement by the striking Stereotypers on a package providing wage increases comparable to those offered the printers, plus a fourth week of vacation after a year of service.

Still to be worked out are new contracts covering the striking ITU Mailers, the unaffiliated Deliverers, Pressmen, Paper Handlers, Photo Engravers, Machinists and Electricians.

Local 6 Pres. Bertram A. Powers, who is recommending acceptance, predicted the settlement would be ratified at a general membership meeting set for Mar. 17. The local scale committee and the international union executive council also recommended acceptance.

In addition to the common expiration date, Wagner's proposed ITU settlement calls for:

- Wage and fringe benefit gains totaling $12.27 over two years, including pay hikes of $8 for the day shift, $10 for the night shift and $12 for the lobster shift, a higher pension contribution, two additional days of sick leave and additional benefits for extra and substitute personnel.
- A 35-hour workweek for the day and night shifts and 33¾ hours for the lobster shift in the second year of the contract, accomplished by cutting 15 minutes off daily washup time as proposed by the printers. The publishers estimate this will cost an additional 36 cents a week in higher overtime pay.
- The use of automatic punched tape to set stock tables, with guarantees sought by the ITU that union members will share in any resulting cost savings and present personnel will be protected against loss of their jobs. No change was recommended in the present rules requiring resetting of local advertisements supplied to the paper in matrix form—so-called reproduction, which the publishers sought to abolish.

Phony SAG Agents Enters Guilty Plea

Santa Monica, Calif.—William George Stockton pleaded guilty to a felony count of grand theft-bunco in Superior Court following a complaint by the Screen Actors Guild that he had defrauded aspiring actors and actresses by promising them jobs in a fake television movie series.

Detective Sgt. Pat Shields said Stockton told Lili Deon Wigg of Woodland Hills, Calif., that he was going to make her a movie star and got from her $350 which he said was to pay SAG initiation fee and dues. The SAG filed a complaint with the sheriff. Stockton was captured in Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Union Foes to Continue Maine 'Work' Campaign

Augusta, Me.—Continuation of the so-called "right-to-work" campaign in Maine, despite failure of a referendum petition campaign, is part of "a campaign of attrition against labor," State AFL-CIO Pres. Ben Dorsky has charged.

Dorsky said the continued drive, which he charged has been largely financed by "money from outside the state," is aimed at keeping unions "preoccupied" with defending themselves against the drive to outlaw the union shop.

Walter F. Tweedie, who still carries the title of executive secretary of the Maine Citizens for the Right-to-Work despite having been "fired" by the president of the group after the petition campaign failed, announced recently:

"We will seek to enact 'right-to-work' into law at every session of the legislature. We will continue until the bill passes and the governor signs it into law, if it takes 10 years."

Tweedie, a former Republican legislator defeated for re-election after having sponsored an unsuccessful "work" bill last year, was "rehired" by a "reorganized" state organization made up of about half the directors of the original "right-to-work" committee.

Frank Rowe, executive secretary of the Maine Citizens Committee for Economic Progress, which opposes a "work" law, declared:

"Our organization had hoped that the failure to secure the necessary signatures for a referendum vote on the issue would settle matters. The good sense of the people of Maine, we thought, had been admirably demonstrated.

"Instead, the people's desire is now flouted by the outsiders who have decreed that labor-management relations shall be placed under continued hampering attack.

"The purpose of the continued campaign can only arise out of a rule or ruin policy. Labor, management and the citizens of Maine deserve better treatment."

UPWA Wins Vote After 5-Year Drive

Chestertown, Md.—The Packinghouse Workers climaxed a five-year organizing drive in this Eastern Shore community with an election victory at a Campbell Soup Co. chicken processing plant.

Only two of the 551 eligible workers failed to vote. The Packinghouse Workers received 285 ballots against 264 for no union. Several previous elections have been held at the plant, including a runoff vote which was set aside.

BOLD ACTION, not "mere resolutions," is needed in the civil rights fights, Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes told the New York City AFL-CIO Council's civil rights parley. Also shown at the head table during a luncheon session are, from left, Sec. Morris Iushewitz; New York Mayor Robert F. Wagner; Louis Simon, chairman of the council's civil rights committee; William Bowe, treasurer, and Pres. Harry Van Arsdale.

Label Show May 17-22 In St. Louis

The AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show will be held May 17-22 in the St. Louis Arena, Sec.-Treas. Joseph Lewis of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. has announced.

It will follow on the heels of a three-day meeting of the AFL-CIO Executive Council, most of whose members are expected to stay on for the opening of the show.

The council meeting in turn will follow AFL-CIO departmental meetings. Tentatively scheduled are these of the Building Trades Dept., May 7, 8 and 9; Metal Trades Dept., May 10 and 13; and Maritime Trades Dept., May 13. The Union Label & Service Trades Dept. will meet May 16.

"While the opening ceremonies of our Union-Industries Show have always been honored with the participation of many outstanding leaders of the labor movement, who join with leaders of government and management in getting the show under way," said Lewis, "the turn-out of union officials for the occasion is at its peak when the Executive Council meets in the show city."

Lewis also encouraged national and international unions to consider scheduling executive board meetings in St. Louis around show time.

"This will make it possible," he said, "for many union leaders to see the show, since the heavy press of their duties many times makes it impossible for them [otherwise] to be on hand for the exhibition."

Admission to the show is free and is open to the general public. The only attendance restriction is that minor children must be accompanied by an adult. Nothing is sold or offered for sale, but souvenirs and gifts valued at close to $100,000 are given away.

Big Stoppages Boost Lost Working Time

Seven major work stoppages in January helped set a time-lost mark of 23 one-hundredths of 1 percent of potential working time. This has been exceeded only twice since 1947, according to a Bureau of Labor Statistics report.

Strikes and lockouts in January resulted in 2.34 million man-days of idleness, the highest monthly level since 1962 and the highest January since 1950, the BLS said. It cited disputes involving employers and longshoremen, New York City newspapers, Philadelphia transit workers, Shell Oil Co. workers, and others. Several of these were settled later.

Administration Seeking Aid in Civil Rights Fight

New York—The Kennedy Administration will press for civil rights legislation incorporating reforms in voting, education and assistance to areas and organizations undertaking desegregation, Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy declared at the third annual civil rights conference sponsored by the New York City Central Labor Council.

Kennedy asserted that the national Administration needs help if it is to succeed in winning action on its legislative program. He called racial discrimination at the polls and in education the greatest internal problem facing the nation.

"We cannot go to the outside world when we have people in many parts of our country who are denied the right to vote," he told 603 delegates attending the conference. "If we don't do what is right in this regard, we cannot meet our responsibilities in the rest of the world."

Sullivan, president of the Building Service Employes, a member of the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee, told the conference that bold action, and not "mere resolutions and conferences," is needed if organized labor hopes to help extend civil rights.

He suggested that every local union should "take seriously its commitment to meaningful civil rights," and called on every central labor body in the nation to follow the example of the New York AFL-CIO in pressing for stronger measures.

Kennedy held that "deep-seated" segregation exists in the North as well as in the South.

"Racial discrimination is a national, not a regional, problem, and it cannot be solved by individual instances of federal action on behalf of freedom riders or a single college student," he said.

He reported that the Justice Dept. hopes to speed up legal processes by persuading Congress to authorize preference for voting suits on court dockets so such suits can be tried in an expedited manner.

Action not Talk

Other speakers joined in calling for action, rather than words, on the civil rights front. They included New York's Mayor Robert F. Wagner; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of the city labor council; Morris Iushewitz, council secretary; Boris Shishkin, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights and George Fowler, chairman of the New York State Commission for Human Rights.

Wagner cited discrimination in employment and education as a "corrupting and degrading force which poses the challenge of the hour." He expressed the opinion that the nation is "getting closer" to the civil rights problem, and at the same time he called for an expanded program of education and training in those skills which can lead to empoyment in areas where there are shortages of labor.

Iushewitz deplored New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller's proposal to charge tuition fees for students enrolled in city colleges and universities as a method of raising additional state revenue. The conference unanimously adopted a resolution calling on the Rockefeller administration to withdraw this proposal.

Youth Role Stressed

The conference included panel sessions on education of youth, training of youth and youth in the community. Prominent New York educators, experts in social welfare organization and trade union officers participated in these panels, which were marked by animated floor discussion.

Chairman of the conference, whose theme was "Equal Opportunity for Youth," was Louis Simon, head of the labor council's Civil Rights Committee and manager of the Laundry Workers Joint Board of the Clothing Workers. He was assisted by William Bowe, New York City Labor Council treasurer and an international representative of the Sleeping Car Porters.

A message praising the council for its efforts in the civil rights struggle was sent by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Erin Go Bragh Sholem Aleichem

Newark, N. J.—The Essex County Israel Bond Committee has chosen as its "labor man of the year," Richard P. Donovan, AFL-CIO Community Services Activities staff representative.

"Through the success of the state of Israel," said Donovan, preisdent of the Essex-West Hudson Labor Council, "Jews throughout the world can feel a profound sense of pride just as every Irishman can take pride in the fact that today, after 600 years of subjugation, Ireland enjoys freedom."

FIFTY YEARS OF MEMBERSHIP in Pipe Fitters Local 597, Chicago, won honors for 185 veterans at a gala celebration. Shown are, from left, Business Mgr. F. X. McCartin of the local; Assistant Pres. John J. McCartin of the international; William J. Ostrom, one of those honored, and Assistant Sec.-Treas. Martin J. Ward.

Pipe Fitters Hail 185 In Local for 50 Years

Chicago—The young honored the old in an evening of recollection by Pipe Fitters' Local 597 here.

Distinguished guests were 185 members of the local with at least 50 years of membership.

Their association with the local covers the same span of time as the union's affiliation with the United Association of Journeymen & Apprentices of the Plumbing & Pipe Fitting Industry.

Local 597 was founded in 1885, when the wage scale was 17.5 cents an hour. The scale will go to $4.65 an hour starting June 1, plus welfare and pension benefits.

Local 597 is the largest in the union with 8,500 members in Cook, Lake, Will and McHenry counties in Illinois and Lake, Porter and La Porte counties in Indiana.

Business Manager Francis X. McCartin of Local 597 presided.

A message hailing Local 597's contributions was sent to the 2,500 members at the meeting by Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, who was grounded in Washington by the weather.

Mayor Richard J. Daley lauded the union and employers in the industry for maintaining a 63-year strike-free record.

"You have made an important contribution to the state," said Robert R. Donnelly, director of the Illinois Dept. of Labor, in citing the work of Local 597 in the field of job safety.

Stephen M. Bailey, business manager of Plumbers Local 130, said the cooperation between Local 597 and the Plumbers was developed through good will between officers and members of both organizations.

A message from Pres. George Meany of the AFL-CIO said the union's record of labor-management peace was a reminder to the nation that strikes are the exception in the labor movement.

Rails Bolt Parley on Work Rules

(Continued from Page 1)

pute. This would freeze existing conditions for at least 60 days.

A chief issue of contention has been whether negotiations should be confined to the "framework" of a Presidential Railroad Commission report—which the unions rejected — or should include counter-proposals made by the unions for overtime and holiday pay, shift differentials and other benefits.

Before the latest breakup of negotiations, the unions had expressed optimism that the dispute could be settled, declaring there was "a wide area for bargaining."

Unions involved in the work rules impasse, which deals with management proposals for changes in pay, mileage and jurisdiction rules as well as elimination of most firemen-helpers, are the Trainmen, Switchmen and Locomotive Firemen, all AFL-CIO affiliates, and the unaffiliated Locomotive Engineers and Conductors & Brakemen.

Senate Confirms Doherty as Envoy

The Senate has unanimously confirmed the appointment of William C. Doherty, president-emeritus of the Letter Carriers and vice president-emeritus of the AFL-CIO, as U.S. ambassador to Jamaica.

Doherty was nominated for the post by Pres. Kennedy last fall and has been serving under a recess appointment.

Community Program Urged:

COPE Calls for Counterattack On Anti-Union Right Wing

The AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education has outlined a broad community action program to counterattack the "new and ominous challenge" to trade union security from right-wing organizations.

A new COPE leaflet, "The Target Is You," traces the interlocking leadership of such extreme right-wing groups as the John Birch Society and the Manion Forum, management organizations such as the National Association of Manufacturers and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, and propaganda outfits such as the National Right to Work Committee.

All told, the COPE leaflet notes, more than 1,000 right-wing organizations have sprung up across the country, espousing such goals as the "impeachment" of Chief Justice Earl Warren, destruction of the United Nations, repeal of the graduated income tax, maintenance of rigid segregation, prevention of new social welfare legislation and weakening of existing laws.

One goal common to all the rightists, COPE warns, is enactment of further laws "aimed at the ultimate destruction of strong, effective trade unions."

The very phrase "right to work," the leaflet points out, was blown up as a slogan against the union shop by a professional right-winger, Vance Muse, who with the aid of big business funds played an important role in enactment of compulsory open shop laws in Florida in 1944 and Arkansas in 1947.

Also active in the Arkansas RTW campaign, COPE observes, was George S. Benson, president of Harding College in Searcy, Ark., a "fountainhead" of rightist films and literature. Benson's chief aide for 12 years, Glenn A. Green, an acknowledged member of the Birch society, joined the National Right to Work Committee in 1961 as vice president and director of information.

'Close and Permanent Ties'

Commenting on the NRTWC's "close and permanent family ties" with the NAM and the CofC, the leaflet notes that one-fourth of the members of the chamber's Committee on Voluntary Unionism are directly connected to the "work" group.

It also outlines the role of local Birch society leaders in "work" law drives in Kansas, Missouri and Indiana.

Thus, COPE finds, the pattern is clear: "The right wing is entranched in the so-called 'right-to-work' movement" and "has roots, too, in other anti-union vendettas."

Trade unions, COPE declares, "must respond to the threat by reaching out into the community and working with other like-minded organizations to overcome the onslaught from the right."

The leaflet urges local union officials to arm themselves with the facts through their state and local central bodies, then help set up local coordinating committees to combat the propaganda from the right, enlisting the aid of church, school and civic organizations to:

- Alert the local press and radio through press releases and fact sheets, to the right-wing operation.
- Alert the public through radio broadcasts, letters-to-the-editor, concerned community leaders and clergymen, and a pool of well-informed, readily-available speakers to address local groups.
- Challenge the generalities and expose misinformation from speakers at right-wing meetings that are open to the public.
- Counter right-wing literature on the shelves of community and school libraries by making sure that material expressing labor and liberal viewpoints is equally available.

Court Tells 'Runaway' To Pay Back Benefits

New York—The State Court of Appeals has ruled that an employer cannot "run away" from a Clothing Workers union contract by changing from a partnership to a corporation. Advance, the official union publication, termed the ruling a "landmark decision" in this state.

As a result an arbitrator directed the Williams Sportswear Co. to pay $11,492 to the insurance, retirement and vacation funds of ACWA Local 169, Washable Clothing, Sportswear & Novelty Workers. The arbitrator named by the State Board of Mediation was Maurice C. Benewitz.

The award represents sums due since 1958 from the company and its successors under the terms of a contract between management and Local 169.

The company has fought arbitration on these grounds:

- The contract was void because management changed from a partnership to a corporation after it was signed.
- The union had released it from contract obligations when the company incorporated.

Local Manager Tom Flavell disagreed—and fought the case to a final ruling with the aid of ACWA Counsel Jacob Sheinkman and his assistant, C. D. Reznicek.

"The court's decision and the arbitrator's award," Sheinkman said, "can be of immeasurable value in enforcing our agreements with employers attempting to evade their contract obligations."

Detroit Labor, Industry Hunt 'Permanent Peace'

Detroit—Six men representing labor and six from industry met here in off-the-record session to seek permanent peace, or a truce, in what some have termed a long "cold war'" between management and unions here.

After the first meeting in a downtown hotel of what has been called the Detroit Labor-Management Committee for Civic Progress, a union man said "great progress" was made in clearing the air.

The group named two co-chairmen and agreed to take up specific problems at future meetings. The two co-officers are Alex Fuller, vice president of the Wayne County AFL-CIO, and Edward L. Cushman, vice president of American Motors Corp. Wayne Stettbacher, manager of the Employers Association of Detroit, is the secretary.

Cushman said he first proposed the idea of ending the labor-management "war" in a talk before the Church-Industry group of the employers' association. He said he expected a cordial reaction from the clergy and was "delighted" when the association agreed to take the lead in seeking harmonious relations.

The first meeting of the new committee was called by Lucas S. Miel of the employers' group.

"It's a lot better," Fuller said later, "to talk over problems during the year" instead of waiting until they explode.

"As long as you keep talking," he added, "you don't fight."

Cushman, top management negotiator in meetings on the Auto Workers' contract which produced a profit-sharing plan, said leaders of management and labor must do some "genuine soul-searching" in facing problems impeding economic growth and exploring means of achieving full employment for Detroit workers.

Other labor representatives on the committee are Pres. Marion Macioce and Sec. Thomas McNamara of the Detroit Building & Construction Trades Council; Irving Bluestone, administrative assistant to UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther; Pres. Al Barbour of the Wayne County AFL-CIO; and Douglas Fraser, UAW executive board member.

Management representatives besides Cushman and Miel, president of the Commercial Steel Treating Co., are Chester A. Cahn, Detroit Tooling Association; Harold K. Daniels, Parke Davis & Co.; Vice Pres. David K. Easlick, Michigan Bell Telephone Co.; and Vice Pres. Fred Mosdale, National Bank of Detroit.

Wirtz Moves To Strengthen Skill Training

Two moves designed to strengthen and broaden apprentice training programs in the United States have been announced by the Dept. of Labor.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said Under Sec. John F. Henning will head a newly created Advisory Committee for Equal Opportunity in Apprenticeship & Training. He announced also that supervision of the District of Columbia apprenticeship staff has been transferred from regional supervision to that of the Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training to "provide a more effective federal role" in developing equal employment opportunity practices in the U.S. capital.

Henning's new committee, to include representatives of labor, management, education, minority groups and the public, will review, develop and promote "more effective programs and policies" for equal opportunity in occupations requiring high levels of skills.

One of its first tasks, Henning said, will be to help start a new apprenticeship information center in Washington, D. C.

Tyler Named Assistant By Dubinsky

Miami—Pres. David Dubinsky at a meeting of the executive board of the Ladies' Garment Workers here announced the appointment as assistant president of Gus Tyler, a union staff member since 1934.

Tyler will retain three major union posts—director of the Political Dept., where he has served since 1947; director of the Training Institute, since 1957, and director of the Education Dept., which he has headed since 1961.

An authority on labor political action and reapportionment, Tyler is 51 and is a veteran of the Air Force during World War II. He is a graduate of New York City schools and of New York University, where he was elected to Phi Beta Kappa.

He edited the Socialist Call from 1936 to 1938. He has been a member of the planning committee of the American Veterans Committee, is a director of the National Recreation Association and is vice chairman of the Trade Union Council of the Liberal Party of New York.

Tyler is widely known as a writer and speaker, and has made frequent television appearances. He is the author of Organized Crime in America, published last year by the University of Michigan, and of A New Philosophy for Labor, a Fund for the Republic Study, and is editor of the Spring 1963 issue of the Annals of the American Academy of Political & Social Sciences.

On Mar. 4, 1913, in one of his last official acts before turning over the presidency to Woodrow Wilson, Pres. William Howard Taft signed a bill establishing the U.S. Dept. of Labor "to foster, promote, and develop the welfare of the wage earners of the United States, to improve their working conditions, and to advance their opportunities for profitable employment."

Pictured on this page are some of the highlights of 50th anniversary celebration in the nation's capital, capped by a dinner attended by more than 3,100 persons from government, unions and public life. Comparable dinner celebrations are being held in many cities.

A committee named by Pres. Kennedy was charged with planning the observance of the department's golden anniversary. Its co-chairmen are the Secretary of Labor, the three living former secretaries, and the president of the AFL-CIO.

It was "a day of joyous reunion" for Frances Perkins, who served as Secretary of Labor from 1933 to 1945. Pres. Kennedy and Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz lead ovation for her (above) at the anniversary dinner in Washington. At the left is the birthday cake from the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers.

Golden Anniversary of the Labor Dept.

SEC. OF LABOR W. Willard Wirtz cuts the ribbon opening the new Labor Museum at the department's headquarters building. Exhibits trace the history of workers in America.

CONVERSATION GROUP at Labor Dept. anniversary dinner includes, from left, Sen. Barry M. Goldwater (R-Ariz.), ranking GOP member of the Senate Labor Committee, Treasury Sec. Douglas Dillon, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther.

NATIONAL GALLERY of art was one of several institutions with special displays keyed to Dept. of Labor's anniversary. This early design of a sewing machine was one of the exhibits.

VICE PRES. and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson, right, are welcomed to the 50th anniversary dinner by AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. and Mrs. William F. Schnitzler. The AFL-CIO was host to guests at a pre-dinner reception.

FOUR SECRETARIES OF LABOR, with combined Cabinet service of 21 years, took part in the anniversary program. From left, James P. Mitchell, who headed the department during seven years of the Eisenhower Administration; Frances Perkins, secretary throughout the FDR years, and the two Kennedy appointees, Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg and incumbent Sec. W. Willard Wirtz.

Economic Know-Nothings

THE FISCAL know-nothings in Congress once again have mounted the oratorial barricades and fired off their hoary cliches about slashing federal expenditures and balancing the budget to restore "fiscal sanity" and prosperity.

The annual barrage from the balance-the-budget-at-any-cost forces serves to emphasize the enormous gap that has developed between the natural sciences and the social sciences. Congress this year will appropriate billions—and properly so—for space programs, accepting the scientists' theoretical assumptions on flights to the moon, Mars, etc., without question.

But faced with the carefully-documented analyses of expert economists that the American economy of the 1960s is not the same as the economy of the 1900s and that the federal treasury and the family pocketbook do not operate on the same principles, the fiscal know-nothings push aside the evidence and roll out the bromides of another century.

The analogy between family finance and government finance is perhaps the most misapplied "homely wisdom" ever to be inflicted on the nation. James Tobin, a former member of Pres. Kennedy's Council of Economic Advisers and presently a professor of economics at Yale, wrote recently:

"If John Jones on Maple Street is spending $8,700 a year but taking in only $8,000, the remedy is clear. All Mr. Jones need do to balance the family budget is resolutely to live within his income, either spending some $700 less or working harder to increase his earnings. Jones can safely ignore the impact of either action on the incomes and expenditures of others and the possible ultimate feedback on his own job and income.

"The situation of John F. Kennedy on Pennsylvania Avenue, spending $87 billion a year against tax revenues of $80 billion is quite different. Suppose he spends $7 billion less, or tried through higher tax rates to boost federal revenues by $7 billion. He cannot ignore the inevitable boomerang effect on federal finances.

"These measures will lower the sales, payrolls and profits of business firms, whether they were selling aircraft to the government or pleasure boats to taxpayers. These business firms will in turn spend less for new machinery; their employes and stockholders will spend less on vacation trips. This chain is not endless. But before it ends, it will shrink total spending and income in the economy by a multiple of the original $7 billion.

"The federal tax base shrinks correspondingly. In the end the federal deficit will be reduced by much less than $7 billion; perhaps it will even be increased."

Or as hearings before the Joint Economic Committee disclosed, to balance the federal budget for fiscal 1964 it would take either a tax increase of $20 billion or a cut in government expenditures by the same amount. Either course would increase unemployment by about 1.5 million workers and raise the unemployment rate to between 8.5 and 9.5 percent of the civilian labor force.

It is difficult to believe that this is what the budget-balancers and cut-spending advocates are after. Yet, until there is some indication that the economic myths are discarded and the realities of the economics of the 1960s are given the same respect and hearing as the space scientists, the solutions to America's economic ills will be thwarted by a shameless demagoguery.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, March 16, 1963 No. 11

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Working on the Wrong Book

Trial by Polygraph:

Science Bears Out What Unions Have Said About Lie Detectors

MANAGEMENT LATELY has been turning to all sorts of tests, questionnaires and psychological gimmicks that are supposed to lay bare the soul of the unsuspecting victim who frequently finds himself "convicted" out of his own mouth and heartbeat without quite knowing what is going on.

In recent years management has been turning more and more to polygraph or "lie detector" machines that are supposed to be 95 percent accurate, about 4 percent inconclusive and only 1 percent in error.

The "lie detector" gimmick was an especial favorite of Sen. Joseph McCarthy, who loved to challenge anyone who disagreed with him to take a "lie detector" test, although it was not always clear just what the test was supposed to prove.

Organized labor has always strongly opposed the use of lie detector tests by corporations anxious to run down petty thievery, union activities or any one of a dozen sins of their employes. The reason is simply that organized workers do not believe suc htests are either fair or accurate and do believe that great damage can be done to innocent men and women.

Strong scientific support for this suspicion has now been provided in a study published by the Harvard Business Review for November-December 1962. Called "Don't Trust The Lie Detector," it concludes that polygraphic measurements are not valid, that the results obtained are not reliable and that "trial by polygraph" involves serious moral questions.

The study was made by two professional psychologists who have done extensive research in the field, and a graduate student at Massachusetts Institute of Technology who has studied corporation activities in the use of lie detectors.

They point out that more than 500 companies in major cities are in the "lie detection" business and their income has been growing steadily. In the light of this increase in the use of polygraphs which measure psysiological changes such as heart beats, blood pressures and perspiration, we ought to know something about the machines' accuracy.

The article points out in the first place that the training of those who use the machines "is often less than adequate." The operator, they say, "may simply have read a book on the subject, or taken a course lasting from a day or two to six months."

How accurate is the information that even top-notch operators get? The study declares that the commercial polygraph can record physical changes in a person but that "it cannot record lies, thoughts, feelings or anything but psysiological activity. The physiological changes must be interpreted and that depends on the standards set by the operator, which may be too low, which makes too many 'guilty,' or too high, which makes too many 'innocent'."

SUCH FACTORS as anxiety about the test processes, feelings about the electrodes, reactions to the operator, physical activity before the test, the degree of fear which different persons may feel, all have influence on reactions and invalidate any claim of "scientific" accuracy that may be made.

"The use of polygraphic techniques either to detect or to avoid hiring certain persons constitutes a subversion of judicial processes to 'trial by polygraph'," the study says. "An individual is persuaded by social pressure to testify against himself through a distorted, error-ridden medium; he may be denied the right to work without ever knowing the reason why; he may be 'convicted' of certain 'tendencies' without having committed an illegal act; and he has no defense against the operator's report.

"Don't Trust the Lie Detector" has long been the attitude of American workers toward this management gimmick, but it is good to have scientific refutation of the extravagant claims that have been made for it. (PAI)

"Hey, Clifford, Can I Use Your Home Workshop a Minute?"

Morgan Says:

Military-Power Industrial Elite Battens on Public Indifference

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

THE CAVERNOUS Senate caucus room, whose marble-trimmed expanse has been the scene of some of the most dramatic public hearings on Capitol Hill, was almost empty. Though an investigation was opened there, no microphones or red-eyed television cameras were in evidence and only a handful of reporters showed up. Indeed the only senator in the room most of the time was Russell Long of Louisiana, chairman of a Senate Monopoly subcommittee.

Morgan

But his inquiry involved nearly $15 billion of taxpayers' money and the growing problem of what Gen. Eisenhower has called the danger of domination by a military-industrial power elite. The lack of interest in the hearing appeared an accurate reflection of public lassitude in face of the problem but the more the public doesn't care the less the problem is likely to go away.

The nub of the difficulty is how to handle the patents on inventions spawned by research and development on which the government will spend $15 billion in the next fiscal year—mostly in the military and space fields. The government itself is split on the issue. The Justice Dept. as Deputy Atty. Gen. Nicholas Katzenbach testified, holds generally that "when the government finances a project at public expense the public should be entitled to all fruits of the research."

This means the government would retain title to inventions produced under government contract so the ensuing products could be made widely available for the maximum benefit of everybody. But the Defense Dept. permits the contractor to retain title to any patents he produces. The only string is a royalty-free license to the government to use the product. The Pentagon argues this is necessary as an "incentive" to the outfit contracting to do the research. NASA, the space agency, proposes to do the same thing.

It was this concept that was under major attack before the monopoly investigators. Long himself called the practice an "outrageous giveaway to giant private corporations" for their exclusive use of the benefits of research paid for entirely by the taxpayers. If there was a political flair to his charge, the testimony of non-political experts was even stronger.

Horace M. Gray, University of Illinois economics professor, accused the federal government of a muddled and equivocal policy in handling the results of government-financed research under which it already has been "whipsawed and pressured by private interests into giving away . . . discoveries worth untold billions . . ."

"SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH," he added, "has become public business and its products have become public domain" but ironically the policies of the Pentagon could hasten a "completely monopolized national economy."

Richard J. Barber, assistant professor of law at Southern Methodist University, went into more devastating detail. Estimating that the government is already spending an average of $35 million a day in research and development, and will spend $41 million a day next year, Barber charged that never "has so much . . . been spent by the government with so little consideration for its ultimate social and economic consequences."

He drew the analogy of the government's hiring a contractor to build a bridge across a river at a profit and then turning around and giving the bridge to the builder and allowing him to charge motorists a toll for crossing the span.

Barber proposed a two-pronged remedy: first, required all federal agencies and departments to take title to patents on all inventions stemming from research and development the government pays for unless the contractor can show he made the primary contribution to the patentable inventions; second, create an inventions development authority to collect, analyze and develop scientific information which the gargantuan R&D effort is now generating.

Whether the erection of still another government agency is the tidiest answer, there is little doubt that the existing practice is the wrong one. Ironically, most of the government's R&D money goes for engineering applications of existing knowledge in the fields of defense and space. Less than 10 percent of our national research is for basic inquiry. For example, Barber argues impressively, we can spend $20 billion to reach the moon but almost nothing for economic or educational or transportation research.

The picture is so patently cock-eyed we could well spend a dollar or two researching what was in our ever-loving minds to let it get so out of focus.

Washington Reports:

Dillon Hits 'Meat Ax' Approach To Budget Cuts as Unrealistic

SEC. OF THE TREASURY Douglas Dillon criticized those who would "make a meat-ax slash" in the budget because of the proposed tax cut as he was interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program heard on more than 500 radio stations.

Dillon said that those who propose a cut in expenditures equal to the amount of the tax reduction are not realistic.

"We do think we should not undertake any expenditures that aren't demonstrably necessary in the national interest," he declared. "The President has said that a substantial proportion of the increased income that would be expected from a fast-moving economy would be used to reduce the budget deficit. But to try to make a meat-ax slash at this time would be totally inconsistent with our national needs."

As Dillon saw it, the $10.5 billion proposed tax cut would increase purchasing power, give greater incentives to investment, and thus increase business and jobs. He quoted the Dept. of Labor as saying that the cut may "mean somewhere between 1 million and 2 million additional jobs over and above those necessary to give work to people who will be newly entering the labor force over the next three or four years."

Dillon acknowledged that the tax cut will not do the whole job. He mentioned the Youth Employment Opportunities bill as one of the other first necessary steps, in addition to what is being done and needs still to be done under area redevelopment and accelerated public works programs.

THE TAX CUT, said the Secretary, nevertheless is the only way to achieve a balanced budget.

"We have very little likelihood of achieving permanent balance or anything like it with an economy that is operating below capacity with a lot of wasted human talents and wasted physical resources," he asserted. "The only way to achieve a balance is to have a fully operating economy. We think that with the lower tax rates we have suggested, a fully operating economy will produce more revenue."

Dillon discounted polls that showed some persons against the cut. He said that although $100 or $200 may not seem much to some individuals, what counts is the effect of the aggregate on the economy.

"There is another factor that is important here," he declared. "There are areas of the country which don't feel the unemployment very much. They are relatively prosperous. They don't realize the problems faced by industrial areas of the Northeast and Midwest."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE TROUBLE with most of the budget-balancing talk by Republicans is that it has become more of a game than a practical proposal.

This was demonstrated when Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinois, the GOP floor leader, announced he would rally his troops to fight an outdoor recreation bill. It was time, he declared, for a "bare-your-teeth" approach.

Suddenly Dirksen discovered that he had no troops willing to rally. Republican Sen. George Aiken of Vermont pointed out the bill was based on the report and recommendations of an advisory group set up in 1958 by former Pres. Eisenhower. It would be a slap at Eisenhower, not Pres. Kennedy, he remarked, for the GOP to make the bill a party-line, budget-slashing issue.

There was almost no debate, there was no demand for a rollcall, and the bill went through the Senate on a voice vote. It is small wonder that the Democratic leader, Sen. Mansfield of Montana, remarked that the "falseness" of the budget issue had been exposed, and that the GOP should stop talking about cutting $10 billion or $15 billion from appropriations "until they have demonstrated how and where they can do this without wrecking our security and our economy."

At the same time, the House pushed through a weapons-purchase measure authorizing $500 million in expenditures over and above the sum requested by Mr. Kennedy—once again in an effort to force the Executive Dept. to spend the money for a warplane it does not believe in, the RS-70 that the Air Force is promoting. House Republicans split 93-77 in favor of approving this expenditure.

* * *

IT IS NOT POSSIBLE to doubt the sincerity of both Republican and Democratic conservatives in being apprehensive about government expenditures.

Most leaders of Congress are well along in years, orthodox in their approach to fiscal policy, and firmly entrenched in the conviction that they know what the people want better than any President—particularly one younger than they are. They are having a difficult time trying to adjust themselves to the economic lessons history is now teaching them.

Yet the inherent contradictions in their view are exposed also when a Senate subcommittee, even one dominated by Democrats, begins exposing a one-sided version of decisions in the Defense Dept. that led to a rich contract award to the General Dynamics Corp. instead of the Boeing Co.

Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara reached a conclusion that what Boeing proposed was essentially two separate airplane types for the Air Force and the Navy. Rightly or wrongly, he imposed a solution that would compel the two services to use the same basic plane, and rightly or wrongly he decided—on his own discretion—that General Dynamics offered to build it faster, cheaper and better.

House Republican Whip Leslie C. Arends of Illinois promptly paid tribute to McNamara as a "dedicated public servant" but reiterated a complaint that the Defense secretary should not overrule the Armed Forces but should let the generals and admirals overrule him.

This is not possible to accept.

An award of a huge government defense contract has such an impact—on company profits, on regional prosperity, on the size of the work force and who gets jobs and who gets layoffs—that urgent and natural pressures arise. Still it is the business of able civilian chiefs in the Defense Dept. to make the decisions on major policy.

If McNamara doesn't decide, the wrangling military leaders will take their arguments to the President. The secretary, a brave man, says too many things go to the President already. (Mr. Eisenhower told Mr. Kennedy, during the interim before inauguration, that he would get "no easy problems," because the "easy" ones are settled at a lower level.)

It is not "dictatorship," but proper civilian control, that places the authority in the hands of a secretary ready and willing to exercise his responsibility.

SEC. OF THE TREASURY DOUGLAS DILLON declared a $10.5 billion tax cut must be passed by Congress this year to restore the nation's economic health. Dillon was interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

New Drug Regulation Act Seen Money-Saver for General Public

By Sidney Margolius

THE RECENTLY-ENACTED Kefauver-Harris drug regulations have been hailed as providing additional safety against hazardous effects. But experts tell this department that the public does not yet realize the potential savings in buying medicines also made available by this law, if consumers and doctors understand all its provisions. As well as a safety law, this is a money-saving law even though all the provisions Sen. Kefauver had sought to reduce high prices of medicines were not granted by Congress.

The big financial benefit is that doctors and pharmacists no longer have to worry about the safety of non-brand name drugs. As you know, the same medicine sold under its "generic" or comman name often costs half or less the price charged under a brand name.

As just one of the many examples found by Kefauver's Senate Anti-Trust subcommittee, McKesson & Robbins, a large drug wholesaler, charged pharmacists only 2.1 cents a pill for prednisone, an arthritis medicine, under its generic name. But major manufacturers charged pharmacists 17 cents for prednisone sold under their patented brand names. Thus, the public paid about 3 cents a pill under the common name but 28 cents under the brand name.

But the problem up to now has been to get the doctors to prescribe by generic name rather than by advertised brand names. Many doctors and pharmacists have felt safer with the branded products of the large drug manufacturers. They felt, quite sincerely in most cases, that there is closer quality control of brand-name drugs.

But under the new law, doctors and pharmacists have greater assurance than ever before that the quality of non-brand name medicines will be reliable. For one thing, the FDA now has more power even than it had sought to inspect factories and control the manufacture of drugs to assure their safety, identity and purity.

The new law also requires that each drug factory and repackager must be registered with the FDA and must be inspected by FDA at least once every two years.

Not only does FDA now have more power to assure satisfactory quality of medicines, whether sold under generic or brand name, but it now also has more money to employ the necessary staff.

Thus, the fear of inferior quality is no longer a valid reason for buying a brand-name drug instead of its much lower-priced generic equivalent. In fact, it never was a wholly valid reason.

You yourself may have to call your doctor's attention to the valuable quality-control provisions of the new law. You can't depend on the American Medical Association or the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association to educate the doctors in prescribing lower-cost medicines. They fought against the Kefauver investigation and the resulting law.

Another encouragement to your doctor in prescribing by generic name is that the new law provides that all advertising and labeling tell the generic name of the medicine as well as the brand name, and in type at least half as large as that used for the brand name.

MOREOVER, THE FDA is authorized to provide a generic name for a drug if the manufacturer doesn't, and—very importantly—can require that generic names be simple and easy enough for doctors to use. Sometimes manufacturers have given drugs long, complicated generic names.

Among other provisions which will help reduce drug costs as well as improve safety, are those relating to advertising. There has been evidence that advertising to doctors sometimes exaggerated the effectiveness of specific medicines, or omitted important vital information about side effects.

Experts we consulted estimate that the new controls potentially can do about half the necessary job of reducing drug prices to more reasonable levels.

One important Kefauver proposal that could further cut prices was omitted by Congress, for one reason because the Administration did not back it. This was a proposal that manufacturers be required to license others to produce their patented drugs. This requirement would encourage price competition, while assuring the company originating a new drug that it still will collect handsome royalties.

That provision is what Kefauver will seek in the current session of Congress if he can get sufficient public support to get the bill past those Senators who had opposed any drug controls at all until the thalidomide scandal erupted.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

From Soup to Nonsense:

East Is East and West Is West And Ever the Twain Shall Meet

By Jane Goodsell

SOME PEOPLE regard money as embarrassingly dirty stuff to have around, and they can't wait to exchange it for something nice like a new fishing rod or a filet mignon or the prettiest hat in town.

Other people view money—be it stocks, bonds, greenbacks or 20 cents in change—as the loveliest thing life has to offer. They like to make money, count money, save money and discuss money. The only thing they don't like to do is spend money.

The first group are the best-is-none-too-gooders, and the second group are plenty-good-enoughers. Plenty good-enoughers quote statistics proving that hamburger is just as nutritious as prime ribs, and that lapin is just as warm as mink. They ride streetcars and organize car pools to save tires and gas, and they make a hobby of tracking down stores that sell mayonnaise for two cents off.

They can—and do—tell you down to decimal points how much gas mileage they get from their cars, and which cereals give you the most nutritive value for your money, and how much it costs to burn a 60-watt light bulb for three hours.

They insist they prefer beer to champagne—unless somebody else is paying the check. They count their change and save string and insist on itemized bills. They look forward to budget discussions with happy anticipation.

If you are sick, best-is-none-too-gooders send you a dozen long-stemmed roses, while plenty-good-enoughers bring a stack of old magazines.

THEY NEVER PHONE long-distance if they can wire, and they never wire if they can write—often sending their letters postage-due. And don't think they didn't plan it that way.

Spendthrifts enjoy nothing more than eating the thickest steak on the menu at the most expensive restaurant in town; and thrifty people get just as much kick from staying at home, thinking smugly of the money they saved.

Thrifty people insist that the best things in life are free, and that money can't buy happiness. Extravagant people insist that they prefer to be unhappy in luxury.

All in all, it's probably a good thing that there are both kinds of people in this world, but why do they have to marry each other?

"WONDERFUL JOB" in helping the Salvation Army reach its campaign goal last year won recognition for Fort Worth, Tex., unions at the army's annual Appreciation Dinner. Thanks were extended by Maj. Burl Wyatt (second from left), the army's local commanding officer, to Pres. Ken Foeller (left) of Musicians Local 72; Business Agent Eddie Larson of Bricklayers Local 6, and Vice Pres. W. J. Rogers (right) of Typographical Local 198.

Despite 'Real Efforts':

Classroom Shortage Still Plagues Schools

EVERY YEAR the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, on the basis of detailed reports from state and local communities, says that despite the real efforts that have been made locally during the past five years to build new classrooms, "little headway has been made in reducing the large backlog."

The same is true for the period opening with the fall session of the 1962-63 school year. Reports from 50 states and the District of Columbia show a slight but clearly unsatisfactory improvement of the overall situation—fair improvement among elementary schools but actual retrogression on the secondary level.

The United States last fall had a shortage of 121,200 public school classrooms. This compares with 127,300 in the fall of 1961, or an improvement of less than 5 percent.

But this is only part of the story. Most of the newly built rooms have been swallowed up by steady increases in enrollment and to replace rooms that have been abandoned.

This means that on the elementary level there has been a small but totally inadequate improvement in the percent of excess enrollment—from 56.9 percent in 1961 to 54.9 percent in 1962. But it also has meant a loss on the secondary school level where excess enrollment in 1961 was 43.1 percent and rose to 45.1 percent in 1962.

While the excess of total enrollment in elementary schools to classroom capacity has shown fairly good improvement since 1954, dropping from 81.3 percent to 54.9 percent, the secondary school record is shocking. Excess enrollment in this category was 18.7 percent nine years ago. It is now 45.1 percent.

The worsening of the classroom shortage on the high school level is particularly tragic. Each year educators and the U.S. Dept. of Labor go out of their way to get boys and girls to finish high school. They point out the importance of at least a high school education in today's highly technical society where even the simplest of jobs calls for greater and greater education and skills.

In 1954 the excess of students over the normal capacity of secondary schools was 439,188. Since then this excess has climbed to 730,231 in 1961 and 752,201 in 1962.

Unfortunately, this retrogression in the quantitative classroom shortage has been paralleled by a similar retrogression in the quality of the education offered on the secondary level. In 1954 the percentage of teachers with substandard certificates in secondary schools was 19.1 percent. Today it is 32.5 percent.

As H-E-W points out, "the effects of the high postwar birth rate are being felt increasingly in high schools, where enrollment is increasing more rapidly than in elementary schools."

The picture is clear: Approximately 1.66 million pupils last fall were "attending school in overcrowded classrooms, makeshift quarters and rented facilities and under similar emergency arrangements."

In addition, an estimated 1.7 million children were going to school "in obsolete and unsatisfactory facilities."

The fact remains that several million American children are not getting the educational advantages that they deserve (PAI).

UNION LABEL AND SERVICE TRADES DEPT., AFL-CIO

Worker Attends Key Meeting:

Libyan Government Yields To ILO on Rights of Labor

Geneva—Constant pressure by the Intl. Labor Organization has forced the Libyan government to recognize the right of workers to choose their spokesmen freely.

The appearance at a session of the ILO's Governing Body here of Salem Shita, Libyan labor leader, marked the successful culmination of a long battle in defense of human and trade union rights.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany played a key role in the fight to persuade Libya to abide by its obligations as an ILO member-state by permitting Shita to fulfill his mandate as a worker delegate to the ILO.

Meany helped steer the adoption at last year's ILO conference of a resolution condemning the Libyan government's refusal to permit Shita to attend ILO sessions. The right of workers to be represented by their elected spokesmen is an "essential guarantee" of the ILO's independent functioning, Meany said in urging adoption.

Shita took his seat among the worker delegates on the last day of the four-day session that the Governing Body, or executive committee, has just concluded here. He was not given a passport in time for the session's start despite assurances previously obtained by ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse from the Libyan government.

Jean Moeri, Swiss chairman of the worker delegates, told the Governing Body at the outset that he wished to protest "in the strongest manner" over Shita's absence. Morse assured him that every effort was being made to get the Libyan government to act.

A highlight of the session was the unanimous decision to establish an international center for advanced training in Turin, Italy.

Starting with about 600 students a year, the center will provide technical and vocational courses to be supplemented by practical experience in European industrial plants.

In 3 Languages

Training will be offered to skilled workers, technicians, instructors, foremen and management, and in teaching methods for technical cooperation experts. Instruction will be given in English, French and Spanish.

Teaching in the non-profit center will be objective and independent of any political or commercial considerations. General management of the institute will be in the hands of a board which will report annually to the Governing Body.

To Instruct Others

To make sure that newly-developing countries get the greatest possible benefit from the new venture, it was specified that the students they send should undertake to serve as instructors when they return home. This provision was included on the recommendation of a committee that included Rudolph Faupl, U.S. worker delegate to the Governing Body.

Before proposing the go-ahead sign for the center, the committee personally visited the site and the buildings in Turin that were offered for the project by the Italian government. Italy is also offering to contribute $7.5 million over 10 years toward the center's operation and to provide 300 fellowships annually for trainees from underdeveloped countries.

Speaking for the workers' group, Faupl stressed that in no way should the center become a "substitute" for the ILO's regular and other apprenticeship programs. At the same time the American worker spokesman recalled that the center must be financed exclusively by voluntary contributions.

There must be "no calls on the ILO budget" for it, Faupl said, because there can be no slowing down in the standard setting and other tasks for improving the lot of workers the world over that comprise the ILO's special field.

Budget Raised

The Governing Body approved a budget of slightly more than $16 million for 1964, an increase of over $2 million above that of the current year. Final action on the budget will be taken by the ILO conference that meets here in June.

George L-P Weaver, U.S. assistant secretary of labor, was applauded by the Governing Body for his work as chairman of a committee that drew up a program for "vigorous international and national action" against discrimination in employment.

One of the measures calls for the use of technical assistance to provide governments with advice on ways to eliminate discrimination.

ACWA Housing Co-op Hailed on 35th Birthday

New York—The first union-sponsored cooperative housing development in the United States, which opened for occupancy on Christmas 1927, celebrated its 35th anniversary with a banquet Mar. 2.

The development is the Amalgamated Cooperative Houses in New York's Bronx, sponsored by the Clothing Workers. The union also sponsored two cooperatives on New York's Lower East Side, one named in honor of the late Sidney Hillman, first ACWA president, and is currently constructing another in Brooklyn.

ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky was toastmaster of the affair. Speakers included Abraham Kazan, president of the Amalgamated Housing Corp. and a nationally known figure in the field of cooperative housing; Robert Szold, an attorney who pioneered with Kazan and the Amalgamated in the construction of cooperatives; and James W. Gaynor, New York State Commissioner of Housing, who called the ACWA houses "unique in history."

The success of the ACWA, he said, had made it possible to convince other community-minded groups that cooperative housing "is feasible and beneficial—that people can live together in brotherhood.

Potofsky gave a brief history of the original union cooperative housing development and recounted how difficult it was to get New York State to pass the necessary legislation providing for tax exemption and low-interest mortgage money.

"But the law was finally passed, and we qualified as the number one project," Potofsky said.

"In our developments, cooperative living has become a way of life. Delinquency is practically unknown in Amalgamated projects, and this is a boon to the community. Ours is an integrated community. We have combined good management and idealism—and we are proud of both."

Potofsky recalled that the ACWA venture into cooperatives was born in a convention resolution adopted at the 1924 convention.

"Sidney Hillman had a vision of a labor movement rising beyond wages and hours," he said. "His concept of a higher living standard was to provide adequate and decent housing for those who needed it."

'Hunger' Week Set For Foundation

Pres. Kennedy has proclaimed Mar. 17 through 23 as National Freedom from Hunger Week and has urged all citizens to work together to free the world from hunger.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice Pres. Walter P. Reuther are trustees of the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation, Inc.

The program includes special religious observances, participation in an "unseen guest" luncheon Mar. 21; and other events planned by the foundation. A later event is the World Food Congress to be held in Washington June 4-18 with 1,200 delegates from 100 countries discussing food supply and distribution.

Anti-Bias Goal Outlined for New ILO Unit

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization's new Committee on Discrimination, which is headed by Assistant Sec. of Labor George L-P Weaver of the United States, was charged with strengthening the action of the ILO in its worldwide fight against bias in employment and occupation.

The committee will seek to secure full application of the convention and recommendation against job discrimination passed at the 1958 ILO meeting, said Weaver, who is assistant labor secretary for international labor affairs. The ILO, he pointed out, is the only international forum active in the area.

"As a result of the establishment of the committee," he said, "the ILO will become a world repository or clearing-house for information and techniques in combating discrimination affecting working people all about the globe."

Weaver recalled that in his special message to Congress on civil rights, Pres. Kennedy pointed out that racial discrimination in employment "is injurious both to its victims and to the national economy, for it results in a great waste of human resources and creates serious community problems."

"The ILO's activities in combating this type of discrimination," Weaver added, "will be a service not only to other nations but to our own, as well, where such discrimination is still a very serious problem."

PEACE CORPS VOLUNTEERS Roger Hord, left, and William P. Gold pause for a picture on a reconstruction project in Comilla, East Pakistan. Hord, a member of Bricklayers Local 1 in Portland, Ore., is in charge of bricklaying on the Peace Corps Hostel, so named in recognition of the American workers. Gold is a carpenter from Oak Harbor, Wash., and also a volunteer. The hostel, part of the Pakistan Academy for Village Development, had been destroyed by fire.

Skilled Workers Seen Need of Peace Corps

Don Hord, a third-generation union bricklayer from Portland, Ore., has been put in charge of construction on a hostel in Comilla, East Pakistan, the Peace Corps has announced.

Hord is a volunteer whose talents have helped transform the face of the Pakistan land with skills that Americans take for granted.

The corps says it can use nearly 2,000 more volunteers like Hord on construction and vocational projects scheduled to begin this summer in Latin America, South Asia, Africa and the Far East.

The young supervisor is a member of Bricklayers Local 1 in Portland. He went to East Pakistan more than a year ago to help build a village for homeless refugees in Decca, and now is "on loan" to the Pakistan Academy for Village Development.

When a hostel burned in Comilla, Hord and other U.S. volunteers took charge of the reconstruction, so the completed building will be called the Peace Corps Hostel in recognition of their services.

With Hord and other instructors showing how, the academy has cleared 35 miles of old canals and drainage channels, built 15 miles of embankments, worked on seasonal crops and trained new leaders among the native workers.

Another U.S. worker on the hostel project is William P. Gold, carpenter from Oak Harbor, Wash.

Dir. Jules Pagano of the Corps' Professional, Technical & Labor Div., Washington 25, D. C., said he needs volunteers to give on-the-job instruction or teach in auto mechanics, sheet metal work, machine shop, carpentry, bricklaying, woodworking, electrical installation, plumbing and refrigeration, TV repair, motor repair, welding, masonry and construction supervision.

Pennsylvania Labor Hits Credit Abuses

Philadelphia—The Pennsylvania AFL-CIO has called on the legislature to crack down on consumer credit abuses which hit hardest the state's low-income families.

Pres. Harry Boyer, testifying before a State Senate Banking subcommittee, urged state regulation and maximum interest rates as well as a state consumer counsel.

Boyer pointed out that about one-half of Pennsylvania's 3 million families have annual incomes of $5,000 a year or less. Almost 500,000 families, he added, have incomes of less than $3,000 a year. Of the total population, some 1.2 million people rely on their social security and old age payments.

While organized labor recognizes that installment buying has helped make possible a higher standard of living and helps create jobs through greater sales, it also adds to the cost of the product or service and decreases the value of the consumer's dollar, Boyer said.

Where the cost of such credit gets out of hand "due to lack of regulation, abuse, fraud or deception," he added, the impact on the economy may be inflationary and the abuses socially dangerous.

"From our own experience," Boyer declared, "the more limited the income of a family, the more vulnerable they are to such [credit] exploitation and the less prepared such families are to obtain the necessary legal protection against such exploitation."

Boyer urged these reforms:

A ban on the bailment lease, under which the installment buyer has no cash equity in his purchase until the final payment; a ban on the practice under which financing companies take over contracts from merchants without assuming the vendor's obligations; an end to the legal but "usurious profit" reaped by small loan companies in the way they apply repayments on a loan; regulation of the "vast no-man's land in installment buying"; creation of a consumers' counsel.

Phil Delaney Named Aide in State Dept.

George P. (Phil) Delaney, former AFL-CIO international representative who has been special assistant to the Secretary of Labor, has been named coordinator of international labor affairs in the State Dept.

For 10 years Delaney, a member of the Molders, was U.S. worker delegate to the Intl. Labor Conference. In his new post he will have the title of special assistant to Sec. of State Dean Rusk.

Seasonally Adjusted Unemployment Rate, 1947-62

Supreme Court Asked to Resolve U. S.-State Labor Law Conflicts

The AFL-CIO has asked the U. S. Supreme Court to reconsider a five-year-old precedent which it says permits state courts to regulate conduct covered by federal labor law, contrary to the "mainstream of current preemption theory and . . . the practical requirements of uniform national labor policy."

In a "friend of the court" brief which it sought leave to file, the federation urged the high court to repudiate a doctrine set forth in its 1958 decisions in Machinists v. Gonzales and a companion case, Automobile Workers v. Russell.

In the Gonzales case, which the brief focused on, a state court was allowed to include lost wages and punitive damages in an award to a worker who sued the union over his expulsion on the ground that it was a violation of his contract of membership. In Russell, the high court upheld an award of $10,000 in damages—only $500 of which represented lost wages—to a non-striker whom a state-court jury found had been illegally prevented from working by a picket line.

"When the state court reinstated Gonzales to union membership it was, we will assume, validly enforcing a contract in accordance with state law," the AFL-CIO brief said.

"When it proceeded to award damages for lost job rights, however, it was invading a federal domain by regulating labor relations, again in accordance with state law. To characterize what took place in any other fashion is to engage, as the Chief Justice remarked in dissenting in Gonzales, in 'a game that is played with labels.'"

Furthermore, the AFL-CIO suggested, preservation and extension of the Gonzales-Russell doctrine could lead to suits against unions which are technically over membership rights, but which carry the "very genuine possibility" that the remedy will include severe damages not only for lost pay, but for punitive damages many times the amount of lost pay and for "foreseeable" loss of earnings over the complaining worker's entire life expectancy.

If several employes are involved, the brief noted, such an award could easily exceed a million dollars and mean "obliteration" for a local union.

'Shabby Cloak'

In the light of official U.S. policy of "encouraging the practice and procedure of collective bargaining" through representatives of the employes' own choosing, the AFL-CIO declared, "the award of such staggering sums by state courts as a remedy for conduct subject to the NLRA represents a veritable displacement of national labor policy, with the form of the action serving only as a shabby cloak over the reality underneath."

Such a consequence, the brief said, greatly outweighs any minor inconvenience to an employe who might have to file NLRB charges.

"We suggest that the usual reason for avoiding the labor board, when it would have jurisdiction and could order job reinstatement and award back pay," the brief continued, "is the simple desire to get a labor union before a judge and jury imbued with hostile regional attitudes and armed with such antiquated but formidable truncheons as the power to award 'smart' money."

The AFL-CIO noted that in its decision in San Diego Building Trades Council v. Garmon, issued subsequent to Gonzales, the Supreme Court set forth the preemption doctrine that courts have no jurisdiction over conduct "arguably subject" to NLRB jurisdiction, except that states retain the right to deal with "violence" or conduct of a "merely peripheral concern" to federal labor law.

The federation urged that the court refashion its Garmon rule ending the confusion created by Gonzales and making it clear that the courts should defer to the board not only by refusing to entertain a suit but also by refusing to provide a remedy, even where the conduct is related to other conduct within the court's jurisdiction.

The AFL-CIO brief was drawn up in support of reviews sought by the Iron Workers and the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters from the decisions of state courts in damage suits brought by individual workers. The AFL-CIO said it regarded the decisions as "plainly wrong" in that the cases did not involve membership rights, did not fit either exception to the preemption doctrine, and clearly were within the jurisdiction of the NLRB.

AFM String Congress Lists Noted Conductors

New York—Six nationally-known symphony orchestra leaders have accepted invitations to serve as guest conductors at concerts to be given by the Musicians' Congress of Strings scholarship summer school student orchestra at Michigan State University, AMF Sec. Stanley Ballard has announced.

The Congress of Strings will be conducted between June 23 and Aug. 17. The AFM project, to be held for the fifth year, offers scholarships to 100 winners of community auditions conducted by union locals in the United States and Canada.

Heading the list of distinguished guest conductors will be Eugene Ormandy, of the Philadelphia Orchestra, who will appear July 11. Ormandy has had a keen interest in the Congress of Strings, has sponsored promising students and has influenced other Philadelphians to do likewise in cooperation with AFM Local 77.

Others on the list are Izler Solomon, conductor of the Indianapolis Symphony; David Johanas, conductor of the Dallas Orchestra; Louis Lane, conductor of the Akron Symphony and associate conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra; Robert Shaw, associate conductor at Cleveland and founder of his famous Chorale; and Michael Piastro, conductor of the Longines Symphonette and a Congress of Strings faculty member.

Congress of Strings scholarships are open to promising string players between the ages of 16 and 23. The winners receive eight weeks of intensive instruction under noted teachers. Meals, housing, lessons, recreation and transportation between their homes and Michigan State are provided at no cost.

The dean of the faculty again will be Dr. Paul Oberg, chairman of the University of Minnesota Music Dept.

Other members, in addition to Piastro, include Concertmasters Rafael Druian of the Cleveland Symphony, Frank Houser of the San Francisco Symphony and Hyman Goodman of the Toronto Symphony; Louis Krasner, professor of violin and chamber music at Syracuse University; Warren Benfield, double bass with the Chicago Symphony; Robert Jamieson, principal cellist with the Minneapolis Symphony; William Lincer, solo viola with the New York Philharmonic; and Thomas Salzman, principal cellist with the Pittsburgh Symphony.

AFM Pres. Herman D. Kenin noted that many scholarship winners in the past four seasons have received permanent contracts from symphony orchestras. Others, he added, have won scholarships from colleges and universities which support the union's "live" music program.

"We evaluate the success of our project by such concrete accomplishments," he said.

In Manpower Report:

Congress Prodded To Face Job Needs

(Continued from Page 1)

the quality and adaptability of the labor force, the President stressed.

In addition to public policies, he declared, "private industry and trade unions must also exercise initiative and responsibility to adapt jobs and employment practices to make the fullest use of manpower resources and to do so in a humane and efficient manner."

On the current situation, Kennedy made three points:

1. "Our foremost manpower concern is the lack of adequate growth in employment opportunities. The nation is wasting an intolerably large proportion of its human resources through unemployment and under-employment."

The President noted that an average 4 million workers—5.6 percent of the labor force—were jobless in 1962 and another 2.7 million could find only part-time work. The total loss: 6.7 percent of available worktime.

These losses, said the President, totaled a billion workdays. The loss was equal to shutting down the nation completely—no production, no services, no pay—for over three weeks, he said.

Kennedy also pointed out that unemployment weighs more heavily on the longterm unemployed, on minority racial groups and in depressed areas. There also are under-utilization, mainly among male farm workers, and the "waste" of hidden unemployment, as among older persons, women and handicapped workers, he added.

2. "The trend in youth unemployment demands special concern and action. Alarming numbers of our youth lack work opportunities as well as the educational preparation necessary for a rewarding adult life."

The President said one of every seven youngsters between 16 and 21 years of age is both out of school and out of work, a situation spreading "frustration and disillusion" among young people.

3. "Despite the large supply of unused manpower, serious shortages exist in essential occupations."

Future Trends

Turning to "future trends," Kennedy listed four areas of concern:

- "The number of new job-seekers will be growing much faster."

Kennedy foresaw a net growth of 13 million workers in the 1960s, or 50 percent greater than in the 1950s. Unless the new job gain is speeded up, he said unemployment will rise.

If jobs are provided only at the same rate as in the past five years, he warned, unemployment will reach 5.5 million or over 7 percent of the 1967 labor force.

- "The number of new job-seekers will rise at an unprecedented rate."

Kennedy said the post-World War II baby boom means "the labor market will be flooded by young people." In 1960, 2.6 million persons turned 18; in 1965, some 3.8 million will turn 18, a rise of nearly 50 percent.

- "Manpower requirements will increasingly have to be met by younger and older workers, with corresponding training adjustments."

The decline in the 35-44 age group and the 5 million rise in the over-45 group reinforce" the importance of eliminating for good all the wasteful discrimination against older workers. . . ."

- "Skill requirements are changing and rising rapidly."

The President said the nation's education facilities, curriculum and methods must be revamped to enable people to keep their skills and knowledge up-to-date.

Under "action," Kennedy discussed programs begun in the last two years, programs proposed this year and additional proposed programs.

He cited the Area Redevelopment Act of 1961 and the Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962 as designed to meet structural unemployment and to become more significant as unemployment is reduced.

Other Measures Listed

These and other measures—such as public works projects, trade expansion adjustment aid, housing and urban redevelopment programs, improved employment services and income-maintenance programs — make a notable start for improving the manpower program, Kennedy asserted. But, he added, they will not suffice to achieve and maintain high job levels.

The President said his proposed tax changes "will provide enlarged consumer markets and encourage increased investment, thereby setting in motion demand for additional work and workers—which in the spiral of economic progress will generate larger markets, additional investment and more job opportunities."

At the same time, he cautioned, the nation must acquire other tools to combat structural unemployment. Foremost, he said, is the need to enact his proposed Youth Employment Act.

He outlined a wide range of legislative action he feels is needed to complete the manpower picture: general education, vocational and technical education, higher education and graduate study, adult education, strengthened unemployment insurance, broadened minimum wage coverage, especially in the service industries.

Under "additional programs," Kennedy declared:

- "We must proceed more vigorously to eliminate discrimination barriers to full use of the workforce. Racial, religious, sex and age discrimination must be eradicated. . . ."
- The nation must become more willing to initiate and experiment with new methods to overcome obstacles to jobs for the unskilled, older workers with obsolete skills, the poorly motivated, the partially disabled.

800,000 To Change Jobs in Next 30 Days

Some 800,000 workers will be holding different jobs 30 days from now and 400,000 of them will be working in other labor market areas, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has told a Senate Appropriations subcommittee.

Wirtz, in describing a fast-changing job picture, said the rapid spread of automation has cut new job opportunities to a rate of nine-tenths of 1 percent in 1957-62, half that of the 1.9 percent in the 1947-57 period.

Part of the increased funds requested for his department would go for an Office of Policy Planning, an operation he said would have enabled his agency to have moved into automation-caused manpower problems "five years sooner than we did."

Meany Urges $10 Billion Tax Cut Now

Asks Prompt Spur to Economy, Postponing Action on Reforms

(Continued from Page 1)

job growth and tax equity are to be attained."

Meany told the committee that in considering the Kennedy Administration's tax program, "you are not just deciding who ought to get relief, and how much; you are making the most significant single decision that will be made this year—and perhaps for many years—about the economic future of the American people."

Noting that the unemployment rate already exceeds 6 percent and may approach 7 percent before the end of the year, he said whatever decision the committee reaches on taxes may well determine "whether or not the United States will suffer another major recession this year."

Six of Every 100 Idle

Behind the joblessness percentages, Meany observed, are men and women, "six workers out of every hundred, most of them breadwinners for families, [who] cannot find gainful employment."

He cited a study by the University of Michigan's Survey Research Center which found that nearly a third of the families supported by wage or salary earners were affected by unemployment or short working time in the 1960-61 period.

Thus, he observed, the basic reason for the lag in the nation's economic growth rate "is a shortage of customers with money to spend."

"We believe that federal action is imperative in two directions," Meany said. "We believe that public works and other job-creating programs must be expanded, and we believe that taxes must be cut. Because its effects would be felt much more quickly, we believe the tax cut should have top priority.

"But in order to be effective, a tax cut must be in the right amount, in the right place and at the right time."

- "The right amount," he asserted, is $10 billion; "nothing less will have an adequate impact upon a $560 billion economy."
- "The right place is in the lowest income bracket—first," Meany continued. "The primary objective is a quick and sharp rise in sales. The spending patterns of American families make it clear that tax reduction for low and middle income families will promptly be translated into consumer sales, providing the badly-needed stimulus to production."
- "The right time," Meany said, "is now—as quickly as possible. The longer the delay, the greater the problem will become. It is far cheaper and easier to avoid a recession than to cure one."

First-Step Proposal

He urged Congress, as the first part of the two-step proposal, to:

- Split the lowest present income bracket—$4,000 for married couples and $2,000 for single persons—taxing the bottom half retroactive to Jan. 1 at 12 percent and the second half at 15 percent, instead of the present 20 percent on the entire amount.
- Increase the minimum standard deduction proposed by the Administration to $400 for the taxpayer and $200 for each dependent.
- Cut taxes on the first $25,000 of corporate profits from the present 30 percent to 22 percent, as proposed by the Administration, to give quick tax relief to small corporations, "which are likely to have immediate use for the extra funds."

These three provisions, Meany said, would mean $9.8 billion in extra buying power for American families and $200 million in extra after-tax profits for small corporations.

"As these tax savings are spent," he observed, "as they spread through the economy, they will contribute as much as $20 billion, perhaps even more, to total national production—creating new jobs, providing business with more customers—the most powerful incentive for new investment—and generating increased tax revenues."

The proposals, he said, would mean a tax saving of $228 for a family of four. The higher minimum standard deduction would raise the amount of tax-free personal income for such a family to $3,400.

Meany cautioned the committee that Congress should not try to recoup revenues through other avenues, such as a federal sales tax.

Sales Tax Opposed

"Even though a federal sales tax is not officially before you," he said, "the record should show that we are unalterably opposed to it. There would be no sense at all in stimulating buying power with one hand and taking it away with the other."

By the same token, he said in response to questions, to try to offset the revenue loss by a cut in federal spending would "negate" the benefits to the economy the tax cut may be expected to bring.

The basic problem facing Congress and the nation today, he emphasized, is not balancing the budget, but "balancing the economy."

Commenting on the Administration's program, Meany said that while the $10.3 billion net reduction proposed by the President is close to the amount sought by the AFL-CIO, the planned "three-year stretchout" will "severely blunt its effectiveness."

He objected, too, to the $4.8 billion—nearly half the total reduction—the Administration proposes in relief to corporations and upper-bracket taxpayers.

"This money is far more apt to be saved than spent," Meany declared.

He said the AFL-CIO does not oppose a cut in corporate tax rates as such, but it should not be part of the first tax step. Cash flow to corporations over the past five years has exceeded plant and equipment expenditures by $8 billion, he noted, making it clear there is no shortage of funds for investment.

"The whole amount of the initial tax cut should be applied where the effects on the economy will be felt most quickly," the federation president declared.

In view of the generous tax relief granted corporations last year in the form of investment credit and revised depreciation schedules, he said, the top corporation tax rate should not be dropped below 49 percent, and there should be no reduction at all in either corporate or upper-bracket personal tax rates "unless loopholes are effectively closed at the same time" and by about the same amount.

In the area of tax reform and loophole closing, Meany commended the Administration's proposals to relieve hardships on working mothers, the elderly, workers moving to new jobs, and those whose maximum earnings are concentrated over short periods.

He expressed approval of the Administration's proposals to tax capital gains on transfer by death or gift, to end tax favoritism for dividend recipients and to tighten the formula for computing mineral depreciation allowances.

He noted, however, that the Administration at the same time is proposing to cut the capital gains tax rate "when it ought to be raised" and has asked no reduction in the "excessive" depletion allowances themselves.

Other loopholes that should be closed, but which the Administration measure ignores, Meany said, are the tax-free status of interest from state and local bonds, the "tax enticement" that encourages runaway American shipowners to operate under foreign flags, the split-income privilege and the failure to withhold taxes on dividends and interest.

On the other hand, the AFL-CIO president opposed the Administration plan to end tax exclusion on the first $100 a week of sick pay and to tax workers for their employer's payment of premiums on group life insurance above $5,000.

He also said "constructive alternatives" should be sought to the Administration proposal that itemized deductions be allowed only in excess of 5 percent of gross income.

A QUICK, SIZABLE TAX CUT in the lowest brackets is needed to stimulate consumer demand and help solve the nation's high unemployment problem, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany told the House Ways & Means Committee. Here Meany, right, is shown conferring with Committee Chairman Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark.), who is flanked by Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.), left and Rep. Howard H. Baker (R-Tenn.).

Canada Joblessness Endangers Fund

Ottawa, Ont. — Canada's Unemployment Insurance Fund, which hit a peak of about $900 million in 1956, dropped to a "danger level" of $71.8 million at the end of January with heavy drains ahead.

Contributions during January — from employers, workers and the government — totaled $31.3 million but payments to unemployed workers amounted to $58.5 million, or $27.1 million more.

Ranks of Idle Exceed 6% in 5 New Areas

Major job areas with 6 percent or more of the work force unemployed increased in February for the second consecutive month, the Labor Dept. reported.

Of the 150 major job areas measured by the department, 46 were designated as areas of "substantial unemployment" last month, two more than in January and five more than the December figure of 41.

Three smaller job areas also were added to the 6 percent or more unemployment category, bringing the total to 173 in February.

The department reported that 18 major centers and 103 smaller centers are officially classified as "areas of substantial and persistent unemployment." These have been recommended to the Area Redevelopment Administration for consideration under the ARA law.

The two major job area shifts that sent the total upward last month occurred in Newark, N. J., and New Brunswick-Perth Amboy, N. J., where unemployment moved from the 3-to-6 percent range to the 6-to-9 percent range.

Two other areas — Brockton, Mass., and Atlantic City, N. J.— moved from the 6-to-9 percent range to more serious categories; Brockton to the 9-to-12 percent classification and Atlantic City to 12 percent or more joblessness.

Joint Economic Group Asks Faster Tax Slash

(Continued from Page 1)

ly" curb government services "basically beneficial to the nation."

The Joint Committee's report, based on hearings on the President's Economic Report to Congress, made these points:

- It favors enactment of tax reforms "which will tend to broaden the tax base, reduce the complexity of the tax structure, reduce overlapping state and local tax structures and contribute to improved economic stability, full employment and economic growth."
- The President's tax revision program is the "surest path to full employment and rapid economic growth" and to "achievement of budget surpluses and debt retirement."
- To concentrate any quick tax reduction in the lower income brackets, the first bracket individual rate should be dropped from 20 percent and split to 14 and 16 percent. An alternative approach is to increase the personal exemption.
- The Administration should amend its tax program to "include reductions or eliminations of some present federal excise taxes."
- Savings can be made in present government spending programs, and such savings should be used in the "great priorities of national need: education, health, conservations, research and development, urban renewal, worker retraining and area redevelopment, without increasing total expenditures."
- The committee disapproved the action of the Federal Reserve Open Market Committee in moving last December "to tighten monetary conditions" at a time when tight money was not needed either to fight inflation or "to protect the dollar." It recommended "that the monetary authorities follow a policy of assuring that the money supply expands in line with rising needs of an expanding economy."
- The U.S. should "promptly and vigorously" bargain for a reduction of the Common Market external tariffs, and the Common Market should be requested to make an immediate unilateral reduction in its tariffs on a most-favored nation basis pending completion of the negotiations. The report urged also legislation this year to broaden the 80 percent provision of the Trade Expansion Act so that it can be used whether or not the Common Market is enlarged.

In its analysis of the economic situation the committee said there has been a tendency of federal, state and local tax structures to "exert too powerful a braking effect on the economy when demand is rising." Federal tax policies, it added "have become outdated and ill-adapted to present and prospective conditions."

It noted that 70 to 90 percent of the federal tax burden falls upon consumption and from 10 to 30 percent on savings. The report commented that even if taxes are reduced in accord with the President's program, "some rise in idle resources may occur, with unemployment exceeding 6 percent sometime during this year."

Job Security Advisers Reactivated by Wirtz

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has reconstituted the long-dormant Federal Advisory Council on Employment Security with stronger representation from the policy-making levels of industry and labor.

First meeting of the new 26-member group was set for Apr. 5.

Authorized under the Wagner-Peyton Act of 1933 and the subsequent President's Reorganization Plan of 1949, the council functions as adviser to the Bureau of Employment Security on unemployment insurance matters and job counseling and placement services.

Worker representatives whose terms expire next June 30 are AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank, Pres. A. J. Hayes of the Machinists, Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock of the Auto Workers and Pres. Joseph H. Davis of the Washington State AFL-CIO.

Labor members with terms expiring June 30, 1964, are Pres. Harry Boyer of the Pennsylvania State AFL-CIO, Administrative Dir. Jacob Clayman of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., Pres. John H. Lyons, Jr., of the Iron Workers, Pres. Karl F. Feller of the Brewery Workers.

Hall, Curran Testify:

Sea Unions Attack Bid to Outlaw Strikes

By David L. Perlman

Unions in the maritime industry have sharply denounced a bill to impose compulsory arbitration in dock and ship disputes as a threat to collective bargaining and an entering wedge of destruction of labor's right to strike.

Joseph Curran and Paul Hall, both AFL-CIO vice presidents, urged the House Merchant Marine Committee to reject the arbitration bill introduced by Committee Chairman Herbert C. Bonner (D-N. C.). Hall is president of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. and of the Seafarers; Curran heads the Maritime Union and the AFL-CIO Maritime Committee.

Hall denounced compulsory arbitration "as a matter of principle and on practical grounds."

He warned that the Bonner bill "would be the end of true collective bargaining, because the compulsory arbitration machinery would supplant the give-and-take of bargaining as we know it."

Curran charged that the Bonner bill would lead to government dictation of working conditions. He said that although the bill provides for a National Maritime Arbitration Board of "disinterested" persons, "this means nothing." He emphasized:

"There just is no such thing as a disinterested person. Any board is going to be influenced by the economic policies of the Administration that names it and by other considerations even further removed from the issues in dispute. It would, in short, mean that the government decides."

First Bill of Series

The Bonner proposal is the first of a large group of strike-limiting bills to reach the hearing stage. It would apply to licensed and unlicensed seamen, longshoremen and other pier employes, crews of tugs and barges and marine pilots.

If a dispute affects a "substantial part" of U.S. shipping, the President would be authorized to appoint an emergency board and impose an 80-day strike ban. Unlike Taft-Hartley boards, however, the group could make public recommendation for settlement. If mediation fails, the President could then order compulsory arbitration.

Hall and Curran emphasized that the problems of the shipping industry are not primarily in the labor relations field. The union leaders cited the whittling away of the American-flag merchant fleet as a result of "runaway" shipping flying foreign "flags of convenience."

"Despite the very many problems of the American merchant marine," Hall told the committee, "the year-in and year-out cry seems to be: 'Ban strikes, harness the unions, impose compulsory arbitration, and the problems of the maritime industry are over.'

"The right of the unions to bargain freely with employers," he emphasized, "are not the cause of the illnesses plaguing the American merchant marine."

Curran declared that "there has been no critical breakdown of labor-management relations in this industry or in industry generally."

Propaganda Drive Hit

Charging that "a massive propaganda campaign" has sought to create an atmosphere of "public hysteria," Curran added:

"It would be a grave mistake to legislate on the basis of the panic created by this campaign. Such legislation can only work to the long range detriment of our industry and of our country."

In other congressional developments:

- A House Labor subcommittee approved the Administration's Youth Opportunities bill, which includes plans for both a Youth Conservation Corps and a city-based Home-Town Youth Corps. A Senate subcommittee was expected to report the measure to the full Labor Committee. It appeared unlikely the original Administration timetable for getting the bill to the White House before Easter would be met.
- The House voted 387-3 to extend the draft for an additional four years. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce, which opposes the Youth Opportunities bill, has asked the Senate to amend the draft law to bring younger men into the service and "help solve the unemployment problem."
- Pres. Kennedy asked Congress to set up a system of "public defenders" to represent people who can't afford to pay lawyers to defend them in federal criminal cases.

"Whenever the lack of money prevents a defendant from securing an experienced lawyer, trained investigator or technical expert, an unjust conviction may follow," the President said.

- An Administration-backed mass transit bill was reported by a Senate Banking & Currency subcommittee. Labor witnesses had urged that stronger job and collective bargaining safeguards for workers be specified in the bill.
- Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) tried to rally his troops for the first battle of the budget—an attempt to defeat a bill to encourage federal-state outdoor recreation programs—but most of the GOP stalwarts stayed off the battlefield. The measure breezed through without a record vote, and with some GOP support.

CHARGE OF THE LIGHT BRIGADE is what it looks like and what it is—14 members of Chicago Glaziers Local 27 moving a long section of plate glass from a truck to a waiting window opening. The extra manpower was pressed into service to make sure a gust of wind did not shatter the glass before it reached its destination.

Consumers Hit Sales Practices At 'Truth-in-Packaging' Hearings

Mrs. Sarah H. Newman, secretary of the National Consumers League, walked into the Senate Anti-Trust subcommittee's hearing room carrying a bag of groceries and household items.

When her turn came to testify, she reached into her bag and pulled out three cans of tuna fish.

One had a net weight of 6.5 ounces and sold for 29 cents. Another weighed 9.25 ounces and cost 41 cents. Still a third weighed 7 ounces and the price was two cans for 57 cents.

"You have to go through a complicated arithmetical problem to decide which can is the best buy," she told the subcommittee.

Urging approval of the "truth in packaging" bill introduced by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), chairman of the hearing, Mrs. Newmen declared:

"It is painfully apparent that the competition of the package has gone beyond the legitimate bounds of honest business ethics."

Representatives of the Administration and virtually every major consumer group joined in endorsing the Hart bill, which would direct the federal government to set standards for labeling and packaging food and household staples to prevent deceptive practices.

Mrs. Esther F. Peterson spoke both as assistant secretary of labor and as a housewife in endorsing the bill.

In her official capacity, she emphasized the important part of the family budget which is spent for items covered in the Hart bill—"an average of 17 percent of total expenditures for all goods and services." She added:

"Week after week, pennies lost in this way can fritter away hard-won wage gains. Of special concern to us is the effect of such loss on the one in every five American families earnings less than $3,000 a year."

Mrs. Peterson told the committee that a few days before she had tried to compare prices for different brands and sizes of soap flakes and detergents "and I can tell you, I had to turn the boxes and bottles over more than once to find the fine print."

A Consumers Union representative, Mrs. Mildred Brady, said her organization has received "thousands of letters from readers detailing their unhappy experiences with deceptive packaging." She read to the subcommittee sample letters including one which reported:

"I measured the liquid from the can of cut wax beans because the few wax beans looked lonely in the saucepan. There was 1.25 cups liquid in a 2-cup can."

Sen. Abraham Ribicoff (D-Conn.), a former Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, moved to the witness table to tell the subcommittee that the consumer is being "gyped to death."

He produced three identically sized cans of baking powder made by the same manufacturer, selling for the same price, but "the quantity in each can is different."

Jerry Voorhis, executive director of the Cooperative League, said the Hart bill would help honest businessmen as well as consumers.

Firms that build consumer acceptance on "good quality, honest labeling, and full, understandable measure" would be protected from competitors who are "willing to use the half-truth label, the partly empty package, and fractional-ounce contents," he said.

The AFL-CIO is among the groups scheduled to testify soon in favor of the "truth-in-packaging" bill.

3-16-63

Trade Union Pressure Hiking Japanese Wages

Japanese wages, once the lowest in any major nation, have been increasing within recent years due to trade union pressure, the president of the largest free democratic trade union in Japan asserted in an interview on the ABC radio network program, As We See It, a public service program produced by the AFL-CIO.

"During the past year, the rate of increase of wages [in Japan] is very noticeable," Takeo Katayama, acting chairman of Domei Kaigi, declared.

He said that wages have been going up 5 to 6 percent a year, except for 1962, when the increase was more than 10 percent. The average wage today is 20,000 yen, equivalent to $50 a week.

The Japanese federation head said that comparison of the wage in foreign exchange does not reflect the true situation because of the different standard of living in Japan. The trade unions are presently pushing for a minimum wage of 10,000 yen, he reported.

Masachichi Motoi, president of Sodomei, one of the three federations that recently united in Domei Kaigi, said that Domei Kaigi "has marshalled its forces and unified its stand in striving to attain greater strength for the free and democratic type of trade unionism."

Motoi, who is also president of the Japanese electrical workers national union and a representative of the Social Democratic Party in the Japanese Diet, attributed the increase of two Communist seats in the last election, one in the lower and one in the upper house, to national issues rather than to any rise in Communist sympathy.

Lobbyist To Run Ohio Jobless Aid

Columbus, O.—An Ohio industralist who has lobbied for legislation restricting jobless benefits and campaigned for a so-called "right-to-work" law has been appointed administrator of the Bureau of Unemployment Compensation by Republican Gov. James A. Rhodes.

The new administrator, Williard P. Dudley, is a former trustee of the Ohio Information Committee. This group, described by the State AFL-CIO as "ultra-conservative," was set up to fight improvements in jobless benefits.

In 1961, Dudley testified for a bill which would have restricted eligibility for unemployment compensation. The labor-opposed measure was vetoed by former Gov. Michael V. DiSalle (D), but a similar proposal has been introduced in the current legislature.

During the 1958 election campaign, Dudley argued in public debates for the proposal to outlaw the union shop. Ohio voters turned down the "right-to-work" proposition by a big margin.

Dudley, a former vice president of the Ohio Steel Foundry Co., was confirmed by the GOP-controlled Senate for a four-year term as unemployment compensation administrator. The Ohio AFL-CIO termed the appointment "an unfortunate one."

Strikers Back at Work Thank Unions, Wives

East St. Louis, Ill.—Special thanks for help and encouragement from many sources have been expressed by members of Oil Workers Local 7-644 in a resolution noting the end of a strike of more than six months at Mobil Oil Co.'s East St. Louis refinery and St. Louis bulk plant.

Expressing "heartfelt gratitude" for the numerous gifts of money, food and clothing by union men, and their "sharing of jobs and meeting places," Local 7-644 added:

"We wish also to humbly thank our wives for their patience and faith in us during this strike. Especially do we wish to thank them for keeping the spirit and meaning of Christmas alive through the wonderful Christmas party they gave our children."

High Court Outlaws County Unit Voting

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, March 23, 1963 | No. 12

One Man, One Vote Guide Set

By Willard Shelton

The Supreme Court has struck down the Georgia "county unit" system, under which heavy preference was given to ballots cast by rural voters in primary elections for statewide office, and laid down a flat rule that all ballots in such elections must be tallied on the principle of "one person, one vote."

The AFL-CIO in its 4th constitutional convention in December 1961 charged that "unequal representation" of voters in Congress and the legislatures "deprived millions of Americans of their proper voice in government." It warned that a "concept inherent in the constitution—one man, one vote"—was thus "flagrantly violated."

The court noted that the unit system gave sparsely populated Echols County (1,876 persons) two "unit" votes and urban Fulton County (Atlanta, 556,426 persons) only six "units."

Counties Compared

"One unit vote in Echols County represented 938 residents, whereas one unit vote in Fulton County represents 92,721 residents," observed Justice William O. Douglas in his majority opinion in the 8-1 decision.

Thus in a Democratic primary to choose candidates for U. S. senators, governor and other statewide posts "one resident in Echols County had an influence in the nomination . . . equivalent to 99 residents of Fulton County."

This system is a denial of due process and equal protection of the laws under the 14th Amendment, the court ruled.

In statewide primary elections, Douglas wrote, "all who participate in the election are to have an equal vote—whatever their race, whatever their sex, whatever their occupation, whatever their income, and wherever their home may be . . ." whether in a city or a small town.

The court went further and struck down a revised "unit" plan devised by the Georgia legislature last year but not yet put into effect.

A three-judge district court had indicated that an amended system —or some other "weighted" system of tabulating ballots—might be held constitutional "if the disparity against any county is not in excess of the disparity that exists against the state in the most recent electoral college allocation."

The Supreme Court said that the political compromises by which the

(Continued on Page 12)

Conservative Grip Dims State Legislative Outlook

PENS USED TO SIGN historic collective bargaining agreement covering 500,000 postal workers are displayed by Postmaster Gen. J. Edward Day after ratification ceremony. Seated, from left: Assistant Postmaster Gen. Richard J. Murphy, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Day, Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee Chairman Olin D. Johnston (D-S. C.) and Assistant Postmaster Gen. Frederick C. Belen. Standing are presidents of the six unions with exclusive bargaining rights for their crafts: Everett G. Gibson of the Motor Vehicle Employes; Max H. Jordan of the unaffiliated Rural Letter Carriers; E. C. Hallbeck of the Postal Clerks; Jerome J. Keating of the Letter Carriers; John W. Richardson of the unaffiliated Maintenance Employes, and George L. Warfel of the Special Delivery Messengers.

Six Unions Sign Historic Contract For Half-Million Postal Workers

Six union presidents and the Postmaster General of the United States have signed an historic first contract establishing work rules, grievance and arbitration procedures for more than half a million postal workers.

The Post Office—the largest single civilian employer in the nation—is the first department of the federal government to sign a union contract covering all of its non-supervisory employes throughout the nation. Negotiations for supplementary local-level agreements will begin later this year in thousands of post offices.

The national agreement—hammered out in bargaining sessions which began last October—came only 14 months after Pres. Kennedy's executive order directing government agencies to recognize unions representing their employes.

The postal unions, all but two affiliated with the AFL-CIO, won exclusive bargaining rights for their crafts by polling a majority of votes in a national representation election last June.

'Tremendous' Advance

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany termed the new bargaining relationship "a tremendous step forward" in government employe-management relations. Meany and Sen. Olin D. Johnston, chairman of the Senate Post Office & Civil Service Committee, spoke at signing ceremonies.

Unions representing the two biggest groups of postal workers —clerks and letter carriers— praised the department's ready acceptance of collective bargaining.

Letter Carriers Pres. Jerome J. Keating said the agreement sets "clear-cut guidelines" in many areas of working relationships which formerly had been subject to widely-varying interpretations. In matters dealing with transfers between crafts, he noted that the contract represented an agreement among the unions themselves as well as between unions and management.

Pres. E. C. Hallbeck of the Postal Clerks, chairman of the AFL-CIO Government Employes' Council, praised the pact as "a good first contract" which the unions hope to improve over the years ahead.

Other union signatories to the agreement were the Motor Vehicle Employes and the Special Delivery Messengers, both AFL-CIO affiliates, and the Rural Letter Carriers and Maintenance Employes.

The basic national agreement

(Continued on Page 9)

Setbacks Outweigh Progress

By David L. Perlman

Conservative gains in state elections last November have dimmed the outlook for labor-backed bills in many of the 49 legislatures meeting this year, according to a survey by the AFL-CIO News.

With most legislative sessions past the midpoint, and some already adjourned, the survey indicated that only a scattering of states will make even modest improvements in minimum wage laws, unemployment benefits, civil rights legislation, workmen's compensation, and effective reapportionment of rural-weighted legislatures.

In some states, labor's legislative efforts have been largely defensive—to try and hold the line against a rash of employer-sponsored bills which would decimate the unemployment compensation program and wipe out gains made in previous years.

Wyoming is the most dramatic example of resurgent right-wing strength. There, Republicans strengthened their grip on the legislature last November and ousted a Democratic governor.

The immediate result:

- A so-called "right-to-work" law banning the union shop.
- A sharp slash—up to $10 a week—in unemployment benefits, coupled with a drastic tightening of eligibility requirements in a state where one out of 10 workers is without a job.

The perennial search for new revenue sources in most states con-

(Continued on Page 11)

James L. McDevitt Dies, Headed National COPE

James L. McDevitt, national director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Action and a vice president of the Plasterers, died Mar. 19 in Oklahoma City while attending a COPE area conference. He was 64.

Death was attributed to a stroke followed by a cerebral hemorrhage, and came in Mercy Hospital after an operation.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called McDevitt's death "a shocking personal loss to me and to his legion of friends throughout the labor movement."

"No one served the trade union cause with deeper sincerity and greater diligence than Jim McDevitt," he added. "His contributions over the years, in every sense of the economic and social life of workers, can hardly be measured. Most recently, his leadership of COPE was instrumental in developing the political voice of American wage-earners into a potent instrument, more nearly in keeping with their numbers.

"He will long be missed as a leader and a friend, and his place will be hard to fill."

Chairman John Bailey of the Democratic National Committee

(Continued on Page 4)

Job Security Settlement Won by Railroad Clerks

San Francisco—A job security settlement providing what was called "almost complete protection" against displacement of workers by automation on the Southern Pacific has been agreed to by the Railway Clerks, representing 11,000 workers in seven states, and the railroad.

Three months of steady negotiation, following a strike call and recommendations by a presidential panel, produced a settlement after almost five years of discussion and dispute. The pact resulted from a recommendation by Pres. Kennedy and the National Mediation Service that the parties refer five unsettled issues to arbitration by a three-man team.

Mediation Board member Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., called the new pact "a unique settlement." For the first time in railroad history, he said, labor and management have agreed to establish "a system of natural attrition for limiting job abolishments due to any cause."

Natural attrition, it was agreed, means job vacancies created by death, promotion, retirement, resignation, or dismissal for cause.

The arbitration board named to tackle five unsettled issues convened here and will make a report to the President by Mar. 26. The issues

(Continued on Page 2)

EXCLUSIVE RECOGNITION as bargaining representative for more than 900 workers at the U.S. Naval Station in Washington, D. C., is granted to the Washington Area Metal Trades Council after a successful organizing drive. From left: John J. Lorden, AFL-CIO field representative assigned to the campaign; Council Pres. Raymond Searles; Capt. H. A. Adams, Jr., commanding officer of the Navy installation, and AFL-CIO Regional Dir. Oliver Singleton.

Job Security Settlement Won by Railroad Clerks

(Continued from Page 1)

listed by General Chairman James E. Weaver of the BRC's system board on the Southern Pacific are:

Time required for the railroad to restore jobs after emergency layoffs; whether positions abolished because of sharp drops in traffic must be restored if traffic picks up; when an employe may take a separation allowance; compensation of extra board employes who must travel to work; qualifications and training of extra board employes.

Work Rules Deadlocked

Elsewhere on the rail bargaining front, railroad managements made no move to accept Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz's appeal that they resume bargaining with five operating unions on work rule changes. The unions agreed but management was reported marking time until a U. S. District Court injunction expires March 29, leaving the way open to appointment of a presidential panel.

In Milwaukee a committee of the Trainmen recommended a strike against the Milwaukee Road if that carrier tries to change work rules without negotiating.

The arbiters in the Southern Pacific bargaining include J. Keith Mann of Stanford University, named by Kennedy, and two others named by union and management —Lester P. Schoene, BRC counsel, and K. K. Schomp, SP personnel manager.

The dispute over what railroad workers call "job slaughter" started in 1958 on the SP and other roads when automation began to result in layoffs and job abolishment.

The union threatened to strike but was restrained as the case moved slowly through the procedures of the Railway Labor Act until a presidential emergency board recommended a series of job protection measures and urged the parties to resume negotiations.

They did, but negotiations were broken off Feb. 2 and BRC Pres. George M. Harrison issued a Feb. 26 strike call. Then the railroad got a 10-day restraining order, which was withdrawn when the union agreed to a 72-hour notice provision.

The new pact, in addition to protection for those affected by job abolition retroactive to Oct. 22, 1958, provides a 40-hour week guarantee for "extra board" employes.

Here are highlights of the agreement:

- Abolition of permanent positions shall be restricted in accordance with the principle of natural attrition. The number of permanent positions as of Jan. 1, 1963, has been established as 4,828, allocated to the six master seniority roster regions on a pro rata basis.
- The number of permanent positions in each region may not be reduced faster than the number of vacancies opened up through natural attrition, excluding seasonal jobs and short-term emergency layoffs.
- Provision is made for negotiation and arbitration if the railroad wants to transfer work between seniority districts. But the union general chairman must be given 90 days notice before any permanent position is abolished.
- Benefits for BRC members in regularly assigned positions, including the new "extra board" employes, guarantee displacement allowances, with no loss of income for five years for those retained in service; payment of moving and traveling expenses for such workers; and unemployment benefits and furlough allowances for furloughed employes with one year of seniority or more.
- Furloughed employes may choose between an allowance of from 60 to 75 percent of average pay, or a lump sum separation allowance of up to 360 days' pay.

The new agreement is effective Apr. 1, 1963.

Mediator O'Neill recalled that the Railroad Telegraphers negotiated a "landmark" agreement with the same railroad in 1961. It called for a modified form of the natural attrition limit on all ORT job abolishments due to technological changes.

In 1962 the Telegraphers got a job security agreement on the Chicago & North Western Railway after a month's strike and White House intervention. This was followed by an agreement with the New York Central strengthening the job security of 1,850 union workers and providing up to five years of severance pay in case of job abolition.

J. C. Alexander Dies; Postal Clerks Officer

Danville, Va.—Funeral services were held here for J. C. Alexander, a vice president of the Postal Clerks, who died suddenly Mar. 18.

Alexander, 58, had been in charge of the union's employe relations program in the Washington, D. C., region, including the states of Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina. He had been state representative for the union since 1955 and a national vice president since last May.

FCC Chief Tells House Probers:

Tight Control of Mass Media 'Very Dangerous' for Nation

Control of the mass media by a handful of chain operations "can be a very dangerous thing" for the nation, Newton N. Minow, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, told a House committee.

Appearing before the House Anti-Trust subcommittee investigating declining competition in the newspaper industry, Minow said that the records show that newspapers that do not own radio or television stations are at "a significant competitive disadvantage."

A recent FCC study disclosed that in the 1945-47 and 1958-60 periods, every newspaper that suspended publication was without broadcasting facilities. He cited figures showing that there are 26 cities in which the only newspaper owns the only television station, and 80 cities in which the only paper owns the only radio station.

Minow's testimony highlighted the opening sessions of the hearings under the chairmanship of Rep. Emanuel Celler (D-N. Y.). The subcommittee has postponed scheduled sessions to next month due to Celler's illness. Spokesmen for a number of unions in the industry were among witnesses whose testimony was postponed.

The opening sessions produced these other developments:

- Norman Chandler, publisher of the Los Angeles Times, said suspension of his Los Angeles Mirror and the Hearst-owned Los Angeles Examiner in January 1962 was handled under a mutual agreement that had received "oral clearance" from the Anti-Trust Division of the Justice Dept.

The department is currently investigating the shutdown which eliminated competition between the evening Mirror and the Hearst-owned Herald Express on the one hand and between the morning Examiner and the Chandler-owned Times on the other.

The Justice Dept. was reported as having told a Hearst attorney at the time of the suspension that "either or both" of the publishers were free to cease publication of "a losing newspaper." The department had previously denied approval of a proposed "cross-sale" of the two papers.

- Combination advertising rates instituted by morning-evening newspapers in nearby Florida cities played a major role in forcing the St. Petersburg Independent to sell to the rival St. Petersburg Times last June.

Loyal Phillips, former editor and publisher of the Independent, said he sought a buyer after combination rates were instituted in Tampa, Sarasota and Jacksonville.

- The American Newspaper Publishers Association denied that there has been a decline in newspaper competition and urged the committee to direct its attention to bringing unions under the anti-trust laws.

Minow testified that the FCC, in licensing radio and television stations, has expressed a preference—"all other things being equal"—for applicants without "mass media interests—including newspaper interests."

He said the commission is currently seeking legislation that would give it greater leeway in choosing licensees. The public interest dictates that licenses not always go to the highest bidder, he declared.

Asked by Celler if it was significant that three newspaper chains now own 45 dailies, 25 magazines, 17 radio stations and 12 television stations, Minow replied:

"I think it is more than significant. I think it could be dangerous. . . . Any concentration of power in a few hands can be a very dangerous thing."

Chandler, under questioning by Celler, disclosed that the Times-Mirror Co. had offered to buy the Herald-Express from Hearst for $5 million in March 1961 but that Hearst turned down the offer. It was Hearst who suggested the mutual suspension plan, Chandler said.

2-Day Session Set On Civil Liberties

More than 100 national organizations are expected to attend the 15th annual conference of the National Civil Liberties Clearing House, Mar. 28 and 29 in Washington.

Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas will speak on "Education for a Society under the Bill of Rights" at a banquet session Mar. 28. Study meetings will focus on the controversial issues of "Housing Discrimination—Whose Responsibility?"; "Religion in the Schools—The Reach of the Constitution"; and "A Century After Emancipation—The Impatient One-Tenth."

Among the speakers will be former Gov. David L. Lawrence (D-Pa.), chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing; Whitney M. Young, Jr., director of the National Urban League; and the Rev. Dean M. Kelley, director of the National Council of Churches' Dept. of Religious Liberty. Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., is co-chairman of the program committee.

Meany Hits Strike Bar In N.Y. Hospital Bill

Albany, N. Y.—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany has urged New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller to reject a pending bill ostensibly designed to give collective bargaining rights to workers in non-profit hospitals but which would impose compulsory arbitration and automatic injunctions against strikes. He called on Rockefeller to support instead "measures that will give to the hospital workers a state of first class citizenship."

In a message to the governor warning of danger to basic rights in bills introduced by Republican legislative leaders, Meany said a bill to amend the State Labor Relations Act "would without question deny to non-profit hospitals and residential care centers and their employes the proven benefits of their basic right to free collective bargaining."

Further, the federation head said, the legislation "would take labor-management relations out of the hards of the parties involved and turn them over to the control of state agencies and injunction courts."

Meany told Rockefeller that the legislation "imposes uncalled-for restrictions and limitations on the economic weapons" of labor and would give its enemies "a vital tool to set back the gains that labor has sought and won" by establishing compulsory arbitration and court injunctions as substitutes for true collective bargaining.

"Its enactment," he concluded, "could only be detrimental to the future development of labor-management relations. I urge you to reject the proposals contained in S.I. 2857 and its companion bills and request that you support efforts now in the legislature calling for public hearings into methods and measures that will give to hospital workers a state of first-class citizenship."

Rockefeller helped end a strike in a non-profit hospital in New York City last July with a promise that he would support legislation in 1963 ending the exclusion of such workers from coverage by the state labor law.

The governor's proposal, however, included fact-finding, compulsory arbitration in negotiating the terms of contracts, issuance of an automatic injunction by a court against any strike, and a legal ban on strikes by such workers.

Pres. Raymond R. Corbett of the state central body previously had urged the Legislature to reject the administration-backed bill as a "backward step in the state's social progress."

Benefits Plan Found Factor In Organizing

The Sheet Metal Workers' new accident insurance program has been a major help to the union in its organizing of new members, Dir. of Organization Edward J. Carlough has reported.

It was a main factor in winning two recent large elections, said Carlough, whose department distributed 100,000 copies of a new organizing pamphlet to union staffs shortly after the new insurance plan went into effect Jan.1.

The union's convention in October authorized the officers to establish a plan covering all good-standing members and to finance it out of per capita tax. The result was Insurance Agency, Inc., providing 24-hour protection on and off the job with comprehensive accidental death dismemberment and loss-of sight coverage for the union's 100,000 members.

The representation elections won by the union immediately came at the new Trane Co. plant in Salt Lake City on Jan. 30, and at the 2,500-worker Barber-Colman plant in Rockford, Ill., Feb. 6.

Jersey City Enacts Strikebreaker Curbs

Jersey City, N. J.—Jersey City became the 10th city in the state and the 19th in the nation to adopt a municipal ordinance curbing the employment of professional strikebreakers and the activities of agents supplying them to employers.

Eight states, including New Jersey, have statutes along the same lines. The Presidents' Committee of the Allied Printing & Related Trades, heading the campaign for enactment of the laws, reports that bills have been introduced in a number of other states whose legislatures are now in session.

At Madison Square Garden:

Second Vote Slated In Newspaper Strike

New York—Madison Square Garden and city voting machines will be used by Local 6 Typographical Union members for a new vote Mar. 24 on a proposed settlement of their 15-weeks-long dispute with New York's major daily newspapers.

"Big Six" Pres. Bertram A. Powers said the settlement terms would be resubmitted to the membership as a special order of business at the local's regular monthly membership meeting.

He said the union had accepted Mayor Robert F. Wagner's offer of the use of the Garden and the voting machines because several hundred members had been unable to crowd into Manhattan Center Mar. 17 for the ratification meeting which rejected Wagner's settlement proposal by a vote of 1,621 to 1,557.

About 9,000 members of the local, some 3,000 of whom are newspaper printers, will be eligible to vote at the monthly meeting, a local spokesman said.

Powers, ITU Pres. Elmer Brown and other local and international leaders had urged the members to accept the $12.63 package proposed by the mayor. They termed it a "major victory" in that it included a number of key provisions the local had sought at the outset of the strike, such as the 35-hour workweek, an expiration date common with other union contracts, and a guarantee of a share in savings and protection of present personnel against loss of jobs through the introduction of automatic tape.

The 64-vote margin of rejection, local sources said, reflected the views of some members that the two-year day-shift wage increase of $8 was not enough, the welfare plan should be improved, a fourth week of vacation should be included and the guarantees relating to outside tape were less than "iron-clad."

Powers predicted, however, that the terms would be accepted in the second vote, observing that a week's time had given the members "a chance to reflect not only on the merits of the proposal submitted, but also on the question of alternatives that remain if the proposal is not adopted."

Meanwhile, Newspaper Guild units all have voted acceptance of an offer by the publishers to add $4.13 to the $8.50 Guild settlements worked out last Oct. 31, in exchange for extension of the Guild contracts to Mar. 31, 1965, to match the date proposed to the printers.

ITU Mailers also announced tentative settlement with the papers on a money package which local Pres. Thomas Laura said was in the area of the $12.63 offered the printers. The Stereotypers have voted acceptance of a new agreement which includes a fourth week of vacation after a year's service in lieu of other benefits in the proposed ITU package.

Contract terms remain to be worked out with the Pressmen, Paper Handlers, Machinists, Electricians, striking Photo Engravers, and the unaffiliated Deliverers.

NLRB Charge Accuses Local Of Race Bias

General Counsel Stuart Rothman of the National Labor Relations Board has announced the Atlanta office will issue a complaint charging that a local union in Gadsden, Ala., refused to process grievances of Negro employes.

The complaint, based on a charge filed by eight employes of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. plant there, will name Rubber Workers Local 12 which, according to Rothman, has refused to process a grievance though directed by the parent URW to do so.

URW Pres. George Burdon said he has ordered an investigation into the Gadsden situation and will report the facts to his executive board.

Rothman said he will ask the NLRB to find that the local committed an unfair labor practice under the law by failing to provide fair representation for members of the bargaining unit.

Last August the general counsel issued the first such complaint in the 27-year history of the labor board, accusing Local 1 of the unaffiliated Independent Metal Workers with discrimination against Negro workers at the Hughes Tool Co., Houston, Tex. Recently an examiner upheld the charge and recommended that the board take away the union's bargaining rights for failing to do a fair job.

Labor Dept. Issues Manpower Summary

The American economy has been stagnant for nearly a year, with high-level joblessness now in its sixth year "and no significant gain in employment since mid-1962," according to a new Labor Dept. manpower summary.

The bulletin, "Manpower and Training: Trends, Outlook, Programs," is a 26-page summary of the manpower report recently submitted to Congress by Pres. Kennedy and Labor Sec. Wirtz. It is available from the Labor Dept.'s Office of Information, Publications and Reports.

STRIKING WORKERS at the Chicago Hotpoint plant of General Electric receive first of weekly benefits paid by the Sheet Metal Intl. Association. Benefits went to striking Hotpoint workers whether they were union members or not. Dispute was ended when Hotpoint executive agreed to a first-time 30-month contract.

Office Building Workers Win 3-Year Hike

New York—Some 15,000 commercial building employes in 3,250 office and loft buildings have won wage increases totaling $8.40 a week and other improvements in a new three-year agreement between Building Service Employes Local 32B and building owners.

The settlement, reached with the assistance of the State Board of Mediation, averted a strike affecting midtown office buildings. It set the pattern for an additional 7,000 workers in buildings covered by independent agreements.

Had Strike Authority

Local Pres. Thomas Shortman said union negotiators had strike authorization but were "mindful of the confusion and inconvenience" resulting fro ma strike and had kept negotiating since mid-November to reach a peaceful settlement with the two realty groups involved.

The agreement calls for a retroactive wage increase of $3 a week this year; an additional raise of $2.40 a week next year, and another $3 in 1965. Corresponding increases in minimum hiring rates are payable on the effective dates in each agreement.

Also provided are a $2 weekly wage differential for handymen; a 37.5-hour week for night workers; a hike in pension benefits from $45 to $50 a month; higher severance benefits, and improved sick pay and sick leave.

With 42,000 members, Local 32B is one of the six largest local unions in the nation.

30-Month Contract Ends Hotpoint Strike

Chicago—A 22-day strike ended at the Hotpoint Div. of the General Electric Co. when the company agreed to a first contract including a provision to arbitrate grievances involving layoffs, recalls and promotions and a 21-day "no-replacement" clause for workers striking over grievances involving job standards and wage incentives.

Hotpoint and striking Local 571 of the Sheet Metal Workers agreed on a 30-month contract that includes no immediate wage increase but provides for two wage reopeners—the first next July 15, the second in August 1964.

'63 Reopener

A September 1963 reopener allows the union to seek progress in union security, arbitration, benefits other than wages and various other issues.

Sheldon Charone, union counsel, said that company agreement on the 21-day clause on replacement of workers striking over job standards marked a "major gain." Eventually, he said, the effect will be "to eliminate all unfair job standards."

Agreement was reached after federal mediators brought company and union officials together for three days of bargaining and after strikers had begun receiving strike benefits from the Sheet Metal Workers Intl. Association. Benefits were paid to non-members as well as union members by waiver of a clause in the international's constitution.

Local 571 won representation rights for some 2,500 workers in a National Labor Relations Board election last May. Eight months of negotiations failed to produce a single bargaining concession from Hotpoint's first offer, which contained "not a penny" in wage increases or fringe benefits or agreement on working conditions and arbitration of grievances.

Approximately 2,000 workers walked out when the strike was called, Local 571 spokesmen said, and Hotpoint production was progressively slowed. Backing from other unions and the AFL-CIO included a widespread consumer boycott of Hotpoint products. Twenty-one company concessions were included in the negotiated contract.

Organization Dir. Edward J. Carlough of the international union said "the truly important thing" was that a GE-controlled company was forced to revise GE's "historic 'no concession' policy" during contract negotiations.

The local's agreement represents the first union contract in Hotpoint's 56-year history. The union negotiating committee included Local Pres. James Crouch, special Intl. Rep. Alan Roberts, and Regional Dir. of Organization Edward W. Hussey.

USES Policy Aids Women Hunting Jobs

Women seeking employment will receive greater help from the government in finding jobs for which they are qualified, the President's Commission on the Status of Women has announced.

Dr. Richard A. Lester, vice chairman of the commission, said the U.S. Employment Service has issued a new policy statement emphasizing that jobs must be filled without regard to sex.

"We know that the employment service does not itself practice discrimination in recommending applicants for employment," Lester declared. "However a great many employers specify male applicants only for many job openings for no particular reason except custom or habit."

The USES guideline says the agency's policy will be "to promote employer acceptance of women workers on the basis of their qualifications."

5-Union Strike Hits Big Kingsport Press Plant

Kingsport, Tenn.—The first authorized strike in the 40-year history of the Kingsport Press here has brought solid support from 1,600 members of five unions—and 200 former "free riders" have signed up since the walkout started Mar. 11.

The strike was voted at a mass meeting of almost 2,000 after management rejected a "rock bottom" offer on contract renewal made by negotiators for the Printing Pressmen, Typographers, Bookbinders, Machinists and Stereotypers.

Pres. A. J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen, who was chairman at final joint negotiations, said unsettled issues include wages, improved vacations, work week reduction on certain shifts, seniority and equipment manning.

Management has offered a few minor "fringe" adjustments and wage hikes of 1.5 percent the first year, and about 2 percent for each of the next two years as against industry settlements elsewhere of about 3 percent, or 10 to 12 cents an hour.

The strikers are prepared to stay out until a fair settlement is reached, and no union will return to work until all go back, union spokesmen said at strike headquarters.

Pickets are optimistic and their lines "solid" in the face of reports that management will advertise for strikebreakers to work in the big plant here, one of the largest U.S. publishers of hard-bound books. Company products include encyclopedias, the Book of Knowledge, and novels distributed by Grosset & Dunlap and other publishers.

Management of Kingsport Press, which prints some 40 million books a year, announced that the plant is "open for operation." No more than 20 workers have tried to cross the picket line, and the supervisory force has been unable to keep up production, the union committee said.

The plant is in northeast Tennessee, close to the border of southern Virginia and not far from IPP&AU headquarters at Pressmen's Home, Tenn.

A temporary court order sought by management was issued Mar. 13 restraining picket-line violence, with a hearing set for Mar. 27. The unions have been supplying pickets on two-hour shifts at 10 plant gates and four warehouses and report that there have been no disturbances.

Joint Training Group Chooses Officers

The Operating Engineers and two construction employer groups have announced the election of the first officers of the newly formed National Joint Apprenticeship & Training Committee for Operating Engineers.

Robert J. Cunningham, of the National Constructors Association, is chairman; B. K. Soby of the Associated General Contractors of America, Inc., vice chairman; and Reese Hammond, IUOE director of organization, secretary.

THE 15,000-TON S.S. Hope, hospital ship that tours the seas as a project of the People-to-People Health Foundation, moves up New York harbor after a 10-month stay at Salaverry, Peru. More than 500 U.S. physicians, dentists, nurses and auxiliary personnel have served on the Hope's three voyages to Indonesia, Viet Nam and Peru. Project Hope is endorsed by the AFL-CIO and Pres. George Meany is a member of the board of directors. The Health Foundation, located at 1016 Twentieth St., N. W., Washington, D. C., is now seeking funds for hospital voyages to other countries.

James L. McDevitt Dies, Headed National COPE

(Continued from Page 1)

mourned McDevitt's death as a "sharp and distinct loss to America and to working people everywhere."

"He devoted a lifetime towards strengthening and improving the lot of the working man and women and toward increasing the participation of individual citizens in the democratic processes of government," Bailey said. "His life of service to people and to the nation will long stand as an example for others to achieve."

Republican National Chairman William E. Miller called McDevitt's services to the AFL-CIO and his development of COPE "a major contribution to American politics."

"James McDevitt in his decades of inspired political action work," he said, "made many contributions to the national interest that went beyond partisan consideration."

Philadelphia Background

A veteran political activist who cut his teeth in Philadelphia Democratic circles, McDevitt had headed COPE since Mar. 1, 1957. Previously, from the time of the AFL-CIO merger in December 1955, he had shared COPE leadership with Jack Kroll, former head of the CIO Political Action Committee, who retired in 1957. Before the merger he had been, since 1951, national director of the AFL's Labor's League for Political Education.

McDevitt was born in Philadelphia on Nov. 3, 1898, and attended parochial schools there. He began his apprenticeship in 1916 under the guidance of Plasterers Local 8 and interrupted it to serve with the Army in France during World War I.

Upon his honorable discharge he completed his apprenticeship in 1920 and quickly became a leader in his union, serving as recording secretary, president and business representative. In 1928 he was elected president of the Philadelphia Building Trades Council and directed it during the depths of the depression in its fights for scarce jobs, its struggles to preserve wage standards and its successful resistance to Communist efforts to capitalize on the plight of the unemployed.

In 1938 he was chosen president of the Pennsylvania Federation of Labor, one of the largest in the country, guiding the defense of labor's gains during successive Republican regimes. He retained the post until called to the directorship of Labor's League.

McDevitt's record is marked by service to city, state and nation in many capacities. He served on the Building Code Commission and Housing Authority in Philadelphia; was labor relations director of the Works Progress Administration and was appointed to the Philadelphia Regional Labor Board in 1935.

In 1938 he was named to the State Unemployment Compensation Board of Review. Other state agencies in which he served included the Displaced Persons Commission, State Planning Commission, Advisory Council for Private Trade Schools, Advisory Committee on Public Utility Arbitration Law, Advisory Committee on the Physically Handicapped and Advisory Council on the Governor's Highway Safety Council.

Nationally he had served on the advisory committee of the U.S. Bureau of Employment Security, the Committee for the Extension of Labor Education and as U.S. labor representative at the Intl. Labor Organization's World Safety Conference in Geneva in 1948.

McDevitt led labor drives for community chests and the Red Cross and was a member of the executive committee of the Pennsylvania Council for a Fair Employment Practices Commission, the National Conference of Christians & Jews, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the National Trade Council for Palestine.

Surviving are his widow, Margaret, whom he married in 1953 after the death of his first wife; three children, Air Force Lt. William McDevitt, stationed at Topeka, Kan.; James L. McDevitt, Jr., of Bethesda, Md.; and Margaret, wife of Thomas Byrne, attache at the U.S. embassy in Dar-es-Salaam, Tanganyika.

Funeral services were held Mar. 22 in St. Bartholomew's Church, Bethesda, which he attended. The body was removed to Philadelphia, where it was on view that evening, with interment the next day in Holy Sepulchre Cemetery there.

JAMES L. McDEVITT

Meany to Receive AMVETS Award

The AMVETS Americanism Award will be presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at a luncheon in Washington Apr. 6, the World War II-Korea veterans organization announced.

Honored with Meany will be Gen. Lucius D. Clay, who will receive the world peace award; Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, the defense award; Sen. Edmund Muskie (D-Me.), the congressional award.

$33.4 Billion Reported in Benefit Plans

More than 120,000 employe pension and welfare plans reported assets of $33.4 billion at the end of 1960 and benefits paid out during the year amounted to $7 billion, the Dept. of Labor announces.

In an analysis of welfare and pension plan reports required under legislation backed for years by the AFL-CIO, the department noted that total assets and reserves for employe benefits had risen to $52.2 billion—an increase of $4.5 billion over 1959. The total included $18.8 billion held as reserves by insurance companies to guarantee payments under insured retirement plans.

More than 1,000 plans had assets of $5 million or more in 1960, the department said, and 100 plans had assets of at least $50 million each. These included 90 pension plans and 10 welfare plans.

Contributions to plans reporting under law to the Dept. of Labor were listed at $11 billion, an increase of $1 billion over the 1959 total. The $7 billion paid out in benefits represented a $1.5 billion increase from the previous year.

The original Welfare & Pension Disclosure Act, under which reports of assets and financial condition are required by the federal government, was substantially improved and tightened last year by amendments proposed by the Kennedy Administration and backed by the AFL-CIO. The principal change was to give the Secretary of Labor adequate authority to administer and enforce the law.

Unionist Appointed Apprenticeship Aide

Roscoe H. Burt, member of the Plumbers and the Government Employes has been named director of the Idaho-Oregon-Washington-Alaska region of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Apprenticeship & Training.

Meany to Speak:

CSA Parley to Study Use of Leisure Time

The shorter workweek and the constructive use of leisure time will be discussed by experts at 10 concurrent workshops scheduled to be held Mar. 31 to Apr. 4 at the Commodore Hotel, New York City, during the eighth annual AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Services.

Increased leisure time offers new opportunities for public service by workers who cannot satisfy their creative instincts on the job, according to Dir. Leo Perlis of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities.

Fifteen speakers on the agenda include the presidents of seven union bodies; August Heckscher, director of the Twentieth Century Fund and special White House consultant on the arts; Charles E. Hendry, dean of social work at the University of Toronto; Msgr. Raymond J. Gallagher of the National Conference of Catholic Charities; Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y); Dir. George Gallup of the American Institute of Public Opinion; Pres. Eric Johnston of the Motion Picture Association; Rutgers University Pres. Mason W. Gross; and Chairman Laurance Rockefeller, New York State Council of Parks.

The union presidents are Ralph Bellamy, Actors' Equity; John H. Lyons, Iron Workers; David Sullivan, Building Service Employes; Lee W. Minton, Glass Bottle Blowers, and A. Philip Randolph, Sleeping Car Porters.

Also listed are Pres. Raymond R. Corbett, New York State AFL-CIO, and Pres. Harry Van Arsdale of the New York City AFL-CIO.

High point of the conference will be a banquet addressed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, New York Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, Mayor Robert F. Wagner, and AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, chairman of the federation's Community Services Committee. The annual Murray-Green award, named for the late presidents of the former AFL and the former CIO, will be presented at the banquet to Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, president of the American Red Cross.

Perlis, who will preside at the banquet, said conference speakers will be asked to discuss the economic, philosophical, phychological and social factors related to leisure time.

"The untapped mental and emotional resources of the man who has no inner commitment to his job cries out for nourishment," he said. "Workers want a feeling of accomplishment."

He said the aim of the conference is to encourage the reading of books, attendance at concerts and plays, participation in cultural affairs, educational experiences, and recreation.

"Millions of workers go through life," he asserted, "without listening to good music, reading a good book or seeing a good play. When unions sponsor cultural events such as little theatres and art shows, the response has been great."

AUGUST HECKSCHER
White House Arts Consultant To Address Conference

1963 Histadrut Award Presented to McDonald

Philadelphia—Steelworkers Pres. David J. McDonald received the 1963 Histadrut Humanitarian Award of the National Committee for Labor Israel before a banquet audience of some 1,200 persons.

The plaque expressed "grateful appreciation of his outstanding efforts in fostering sympathetic understanding between the people of the United States and the people of the state of Israel."

Previous winners of the Histadrut Award include former Pres. Truman, the late Eleanor Roosevelt, Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg and four labor officials: AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Auto Workers Pres. Walter P. Reuther, Ladies' Garment Workers Pres. David Dubinsky and Clothing Workers Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky.

Histadrut is the Hebrew name of the Israel Federation of Labor, whose membership is nearly a million in a country of 3 million.

McDonald accepted the honor with thanks from himself and the steel union. Noting the language of the award, he recalled that "humanitarianism is constant regard for the interests of mankind—a deep and abiding regard for man's constant betterment without his enslavement."

World history has rarely seen a phenomenon like the "rapid rise of Israel into the position of respect and admiration it now holds in the free world," McDonald said. He praised the cooperation between the Israeli government and unions "in the common cause of humanitarianism."

Funds raised through the sale of tickets will be used to provide vocational school scholarships in Israel.

Goldberg, former general counsel for the USWA, voiced pleasure at Histadrut's selection of McDonald for the 1963 award.

R. Conrad Cooper, executive vice president of U.S. Steel Co., praised Israel as a land of "enterprise and initiative, coupled with education and developing technology." where poverty is being effectively fought. He voiced hope that it might become possible for Israel and other countries in the Middle East to find that honorable commercial relationships "point the way to peace and rising standards of living."

Potofsky hailed McDonald's record as being "in the tradition of Philip Murray," and praised his services to America and to Israel, a "land of working democracy."

Other speakers included Ambassador Avram Harmon of Israel, Dr. Sol Stein and Joseph Schlossberg of the National Committee for Labor Israel; and Ben Ilan, new Histadrut representative in the U.S.

FAMILIAR FACES and famous names were much in evidence at this union session—the 29th annual general membership meeting of the AFL-CIO Screen Actors Guild. This view shows some of the 1,500 actors in attendance at the Beverly Hilton Hotel casting their votes from the floor.

SAG PRES. GEORGE CHANDLER, just re-elected to office, presides. That's Third Vice Pres. Jack Lemmon seated behind him.

Union Meeting with a Hollywood Flair

EDDIE CANTOR received the first annual SAG Award for achievement and good citizenship, presented by Chandler at a later date. Left, starlets and character actors reveal the varied makeup of SAG's membership.

NATIONAL BOARD members Ricardo Montalban, Richard Long and Gene Raymond are shown during a lighter moment.

ANOTHER GROUP of board members includes, from left, William Bendix, Jeannette Nolan, Ray Teal, Whit Bissell, James Hong and Kathleen Freeman.

LIVELY FLOOR DISCUSSION of bargaining policy and problems in the democratic trade union tradition brought forth the views of such members as (left to right) Vince Townsend, Florence Ann, Harry Hines, Joanne Reno and Maria Palmer. At far right, SAG Treas. Frank Faylen is shown as he delivered his report.

Memo for November 1964

AN AFL-CIO NEWS survey of the 49 legislatures meeting this year confirms the results of the 1962 elections: the conservative forces are more firmly in control than ever before.

Four months after the balloting that saw the conservatives increase their general control of legislatures, critically needed improvements in state labor and welfare programs are being pigeonholed, defeated or ignored. In a number of states established programs have been seriously weakened. In many others anti-labor proposals have picked up new strength.

There is little hope that in the time still remaining for most legislatures to act positive steps will be taken to meet the complex of problems of a burgeoning urban society. Labor and liberal groups find themselves deeply involved in preventing further erosion and fending off new attacks by the narrow-interest groups that dominate most legislatures.

The dismal record of the legislatures to date places a new emphasis on the need for a national approach to the myriad problems facing all Americans.

Back to McKinley

AN INKLING of the 19th Century approach to the economic ills of the 1960s that pervades some important areas of Congress can be gleaned from the questions put to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany during his testimony before the House Ways & Means Committee on tax legislation.

In the adjoining column excerpts of some of these questions and Meany's answers underscore the problems of legislating modern-day solutions when congressmen challenge the graduated income tax and the need for the New Deal.

Faced with the threat of a lagging economy and high, persistent unemployment, the contribution of Rep. James B. Utt (R-Calif.) is to tag the tax system as "the greatest weapon in the hands of socialists, directed at the heart of capitalism." Rep. Bruce Alger's (R-Tex.) contribution to the search for means of stimulating the economy is to term the New Deal a failure.

The income tax fight was settled 50 years ago; the New Deal that pulled the country back from the brink of disaster happened almost 30 years ago. But the throwbacks are still with us, fighting a rearguard, delaying action to slow progress.

James L. McDevitt

JIM McDEVITT, as director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, played a major role in a development that took place within his lifetime—the transformation of labor's political activity from a hit-and-miss flurry a few weeks before election day to a year-round, soundly-based effort.

Competent, personable and dedicated, his passing is deeply mourned. He will be missed because the labor movement never has enough Jim McDevitts to whom it can entrust the difficult tasks of a complex world with confidence that they will be well done.

COPE, its solidly-built organization and its record of accomplishment, constitute a living memorial to him.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, March 23, 1963 No. 12

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

The Turn of the Screw

At Congressional Hearing:

Meany Instructs GOP Diehards In 20th Century Economics

In his testimony before the House Ways & Means Committee on tax legislation, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany was challenged on his views on the capitalistic system and the record of the New Deal by two congressmen, Rep. James B. Utt (R-Calif.) and Rep. Bruce Alger (R-Tex.) This is how it went:

MR. UTT: The only struggle in the world today, domestically and internationally, is between socialism and capitalism, and the graduated income tax is probably the greatest weapon in the hands of the socialists, directed at the heart of capitalism.

Therefore, I think to apologize for the capitalistic system is probably the greatest sin that any American can commit because I think it is what built the country, what brought us out of a small nation into the strongest nation in the world.

MR. MEANY: I did not refer to apologists for the capitalistic system. I did not say that at all. I happen to believe in the capitalistic system just as much as anyone in this room. This economy we have in this country is a capitalistic economy and the trade union movement is part of this economy and is part of this system.

I make no apologies for being part of the capitalistic system. Of course, I am constantly criticized by Moscow Radio and Pravda; I guess I am their favorite whipping boy. I am considered an agent of Wall Street, they say, because I believe in the capitalistic system. I spoke of the wealthy and their apologists. I did not speak of apologists for the capitalistic system.

Now, I believe in making investment attractive to people who are willing to put up money for risks. I believe in management getting paid to manage and I believe in the entire system.

Why would I not believe in it? Under this system, despite the fact that we have our problems and we are never satisfied, you might say, with what the worker gets as his share of what the system produces—despite all of this—under this system we have done better for workers in America than in any other place on earth that has any other kind of system.

But what I am concerned with is can the capitalistic system survive a situation where we have crept up in 10 years from 1.9 percent unemployed to almost what you might call a permanent basis of something above 5 percent and at the present moment about 6 percent?

Can we survive if that continues to creep up and it gets to the point where—despite the safeguards that we have built into our system—it gets to the point where unemployment starts to feed on unemployment and we get this vicious circle that operated so disastrously in the 1930s?

Can we survive that? Surely I know this: We can't survive that sort of eventuality and still be the leader of the free world. So I am for the capitalistic system and trying to work within it.

* * *

MR. ALGER: Can it be that the New Deal idea of deficit financing and pump priming has failed to solve the problem and we are going to take some more of that bad medicine?

MR. MEANY: In 1931 and 1932 we had a government that certainly was not New Dealish. We were operating then by the old laws of the market place without any government interference. We were producing at a greater rate than ever before in our history and we had 14 million people unemployed.

At that time, the New Deal, as you referred to it, had to put out a fire. In other words, if you are going to win a battle, you have to arrange first to live. What we want to do is keep this system going. I feel that there is a danger to the whole system in growing unemployment.

So, when you speak of the 1930's and the New Deal and government in these things, I would like to remind you that on the 4th of March, 1933, the government came into this thing with both feet after our much-boasted-about private enterprise, under a conservative Administration friendly to business for 12 years prior to that had failed, and when the country was flat on its back.

That is the record. It is all right to forget that. We were flat on our back.

The President had to call a bank holiday, close every bank in America until he could re-open them to prevent further collapse of banks. This came after 12 years, not of the New Deal, but 12 years of an Old Deal when we were operating under the old theories of the market place.

We were operating under the trickle down theory—if we kept the big corporations fat and happy, enough would trickle down. Now I am exposing myself as "a socialist."

Morgan Says:

Complaint to FCC Points Up Television's Role in U. S. Politics

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

LET THE LEGAL BEAGLES and the civil libertarians gather 'round to examine an intriguing and increasingly important problem of maintaining a balance of fairness in the broadcast coverage of political campaigns.

A year ago a Negro minister from Jackson, Miss., the Rev. Robert L. T. Smith, complained to the Federal Communications Commission that a television station in Jackson, WLBT, had refused to sell him time to promote his candidacy for Congress. The station denied this, said it had offered to sell him time, not in the winter but nearer the June primary. In April, however, the station declared it was not going to sell time to anybody involved in this particular race because there was "no interest" in it. The incumbent whose seat Smith was challenging was John Bell Williams, avowed segregationist who had been in Congress 16 years.

Morgan

It would take a 12-year-old civics student five minutes or less to see which candidate benefited from WLBT's "equal non-treatment" policy—the veteran Williams, whose political face had been familiar in the state for nearly a generation, or the Negro preacher, little known outside his own neighborhood. Smith had already posed his problem in his own words. In an indignant letter to FCC Chairman Newton Minow, he wrote:

"In the face of an all but total blackout on the part of local news medja, [of] our effort to present the issues involved to the people . . . and the proposed solutions that we intend to offer, these television appearances are matters of extreme urgency to us."

He appealed to the FCC for help. Some people could argue—and have—that there was little or nothing the FCC could do. The commission does not determine the programming for broadcasting stations and is prohibited by law from censoring any broadcast material. Furthermore Sec. 315(a) of the 1934 Federal Communications Act provides that while equal time must be given all candidates for a public office if any time is afforded to one, the broadcaster is not compelled to allow any of them to use his station.

It was in this provision that WLBT was trying to take refuge. However, in order to keep their licenses to use that public utility known as the air, broadcasters are required to operate "in the public interest." And over the years, as radio and television have become increasingly vital in political campaigns, it has come to be generally accepted that radio and TV stations have an obligation to carry political discussion.

In fact, a 1959 Supreme Court decision took official note of that reasoning.

"While denying all candidates use of the station would protect broadcasters from liability," its opinion ran, "it would also withdraw political discussion from the area. Instead, the thrust of [sect.] 315 is to facilitate political debate over radio and television. Recognizing this, the Communications Commission considers the carrying of political broadcasts a public service criterion to be considered both in license renewal proceedings" and in granting new licenses.

On Apr. 17, 1962, the FCC wrote WLBT, quoted the salient points of the Supreme Court decision judiciously including the reference to licenses, and requested within five days a detailed explanation of why it was denying its facilities to Williams' Negro opponent. Three days later the station notified the FCC and the Rev. Smith that he could purchase TV time. He did, though, as everybody expected, Williams overwhelmed him.

BUT THAT WAS NOT the end of the story. It may have been, in a sense, the beginning. At a hearing before a House committee. Minow and the commission took considerable needling from Williams and other southern congressmen. They accused the FCC, in effect, and for obvious reasons, of making its own law and issuing what amounted to an "order" to WLBT to sell the Negro minister time or face cancellation of its license.

Minow denied this. "Mr. Chairman," he testified at one point, "the U.S. Supreme Court has said that one of the major obligations of a broadcaster is to carry political discussion. To me it makes no difference what his color is, or where his state is.

"It is my further view that the commission certainly has the authority to inquire of a broadcaster whether he is carrying any political discussion; and if not, to ascertain the reason why he thinks it is not in the public interest to carry it."

To some people that stand is revolutionary if not downright subversive. But Minow holds the novel view that the federal government and its agencies were created for the protection of the public, not just the privileges of a few. Ironically, though he has not reached a final decision, Newton Minow is considering an alluring offer to leave his post and join the Encyclopedia Britannica. Maybe he could be persuaded to stay if the President—and the public—would let him know how much citizens of his calibre are needed in government.

Washington Reports:

Bill to Help Medical Education Seen Improving Nation's Health

SEVENTY-FIVE THOUSAND persons could be saved from cancer every year if sufficient facilities and medical scientists were available for research, Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.), chairman of the House Interstate & Foreign Commerce committee, declared in an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program heard on more than 500 stations.

Harris said the shortage of facilities and research personnel adversely affects the search for information on heart disease, rheumatic fever and other fatal and crippling ailments.

Harris and Rep. John B. Bennett (Mich.), ranking Republican on the committee, talked about the bill just approved by the committee which would provide $180 million over a three-year period for construction of medical school buildings in which an increased number of doctors and dentists would be educated. The measure would also provide loans to needy students, who would make repayment after they had completed their education.

"The loan program for students is one of the soundest provisions of the bill, in my judgment," Bennett asserted. He explained that the processing of loans would be "left to the school," with first consideration given to the students in greatest financial need.

"I think it is conceded to be true that there is a rather critical shortage in the availability of physicians and dentists," Harris said.

ONE REASON, Harris said, is the lack of facilities. Another is the fact that since the explosion of the first atomic bomb, the emphasis has been on attracting students into thermonuclear and similar science fields. A third is the cost of a medical education, which is now about $20,000, and the length of time it takes to prepare for practice.

Harris said a similar but more liberal measure, providing $75 million a year for 10 years, did not get to the House Rules Committee until late in the session last year. He said it was then too late to expect passage of the bill. He was hopeful that the early action of the Commerce Committee this year will mean passage of the measure.

"I hope action will be favorable," he declared, "because a real need has been shown. We need approval if we are to meet our obligations to the American people."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE NATION HAS BEEN admiring the state of South Carolina, where political leaders have given guidance to their people to accept the racial desegregation of Clemson University with dignity, civility and a respect for law and order. In the meantime, Gov. Ross Barnett of Mississippi, the gentleman who was unable to guide his people wisely about the admission of James Meredith to the University of Mississippi, has devoted himself to framing legislative gimmicks perpetuating "states' righters" in control of the state's dominant Democratic Party.

Barnett's program has been almost unreported nationally, but a bill went through the legislature last month that has the potential of damaging both Mississippi Republicans and "national" or "loyalist" Democrats, who don't believe that opposition to civil rights progress is a sensible central political policy.

The Barnett law provides that in each presidential year, after the national platforms have been written and the national parties have nominated tickets, the Mississippi Democratic and Republican parties must hold September primaries for the choice of electors. Each party state convention will be allowed to nominate two sets of electors—one slate in each case bound to support the national nominees, the other either unpledged or pledged against the national nominees. Then will come the primaries to select which set, in each case, will be the electors for the November balloting.

* * *

THE EFFECT OF THIS, clearly, will be to create a situation in which the state Democratic organization, one of the most tightly controlled statewide political machines in the country, can express displeasure at the Democratic Party nominees—almost certainly Mr. Kennedy and Mr. Johnson again—and keep them off the November ballot.

It will allow Mississippi "states' rights" Democrats to bolt the national party leadership without bolting the party technically and without changing parties honestly.

Mississippi newspapers have reported that Republicans are shouting "foul play," charging that the revision of the state's system of choosing electors will buttress "states' rights" Democrats at the expense of both "loyalist" Democrats and the slowly gaining Republicans.

The system has the surface appearance of Democratic procedures —party conventions and primaries and all the appurtenances. But the objective is to continue state political control in the hands of those who sent Barnett to the Democratic nominating convention in 1960 to plead their case, and then bolted the ticket and chose "unpledged" electors who voted for Barnett himself for President instead of Kennedy.

* * *

THE EMPTINESS UNFOLDS when the sponsors of the new law frankly say their final hope is to persuade enough southern states to vote for an "independent" or "states' rights" candidate and against both Republican and national Democratic tickets, thus depriving either of an Electoral College majority and throwing the choice of a President into the House of Representatives.

Constitutionally, this is perfectly feasible. But it was tried by southern extremists in 1948 against Harry S. Truman. They took four southern states away from him with their "third party," but they didn't deprive the country of the privilege of electing its own President.

There is no sign today that southern leaders elsewhere are prepared to join Mississippi in adventurism and secession from national life.

From the standpoint of Mississippi Democratic liberals, the Barnett electoral law is an abomination. From the standpoint of the Republican state chairman, Wirt Yerger, Jr., as quoted in a Mississippi newspaper, it strengthens Kennedy for next year rather than weakens him.

The President won't get Mississippi's electoral votes next year under any circumstances, Yerger said, but it may help him if the Republican nominee "doesn't get them either."

PROPOSED LEGISLATION to train more doctors and dentists would help meet a pressing national need, Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.), chairman of the House Interstate and Commerce Committee, right, and Rep. John Bennett (Mich), ranking Republican on the committee, asserted in an interview for the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

Prospects Are Looking Better For the Harried Householder

By Sidney Margolius

PROSPECTS FOR GETTING good values and keeping down family living costs have improved this April. A number of important foods—notably meat and eggs—are cheaper. Home-seekers will find mortgage rates lower than a year ago. Prices of used cars have dropped. You will find prices of Easter clothing outfits reasonable too. In fact, clothing prices are approximately the same as 10 years ago, despite the general rise in the cost of living in that period.

Also, for the first time you will find shoes labeled to notify you if they contain synthetic materials, or such lower grades of leather as split cowhide or pulverized leather.

The new labels represent a unique victory for a little shoe repairman in Medford, Oreg. (little only in terms of resources). Wilbur Gardner was outraged by some of the inferior materials he found in shoes he repaired for moderate-income families, and wrote literally thousands of letters to congressmen and others. He brought the problem to the attention of the labor press and consumer cooperatives and won their support and that of the Oregon congressional delegation. The result was that the Federal Trade Commission investigated and then issued regulations requiring the disclosure of cheaper materials.

Now shoes beginning to arrive in the stores this spring bear these labels. Unfortunately, the new FTC rules need further strengthening and policing as the new labels are not always easy to find (look inside the shoe) or clear in language. For example, labels used by one of the largest chains on some low-priced shoes mysteriously read: "Olefinic upper — all other components man-made materials."

The seller means that the uppers are a plastic resembling patent leather, and that the sole and other components are plastic and other synthetic materials. In this case, the shoe is a satisfactory one for its low price. The new plastic "patent-type" uppers are sturdy, but do not have the "breathing" ability of leather.

The new labels can be helpful in learning if innersoles are made of lower-quality materials although the FTC rules here too are disappointingly weak. They allow the sellers merely to state: "Innersole of non-leather shoeboard." If you see this on the label, it will pay to ask the seller just what the "non-leather" material is. Whether it is plastic (fairly satisfactory), or paper (not satisfactory) makes a big difference.

The rules do require that shoes made of split leather be labeled accordingly.

Many of the soles found on moderate-price shoes are plastic. The labels at least now notify you if soles are "man made," meaning plastic, so you buy them with full awareness that you are not getting the higher-priced leather. Plastic soles do give long wear and are satisfactory for many purposes.

Also watch out for sock linings made of paper dyed to look like leather, found in some cheap shoes. They are not satisfactory.

One welcome development this spring is that the narrow-toe, spiked-heel style, which women practically have been forced to wear recently, is being modified. An increasing number of shoes being shown have shorter rounded or squared toes, and medium-length stacked or Cuban-type heels.

THE DECLINE in home-building and heavy savings deposits in banks are forcing down interest rates now about one-half of 1 percent less than a year ago. Most frequent rates now are 5.25 to 6 percent, with the West Coast as usual at the highest levels.

Prices of used cars declined this winter and now are a little more reasonable than a year ago. New-car sellers are pushing the larger models again with sales of economy compacts declining this year. But a family looking for moderate-cost transportation still will seek out a compact. In addition to lower initial cost, the compacts have been proven more economical to operate.

Runzheimer & Co., Chicago accountants, made a study in the Chicago area for the American Automobile Association and found operating costs for an eight-cylinder standard car to be 3.8 cents a mile, but only 2.7 cents for a domestic compact. This includes gas, maintenance and tires.

FOOD BUYING: Both pork and beef are cheaper this spring but the real buy is poultry. Broilers are in exceptionally heavy supply. April is the "flush" month for eggs, with supplies heaviest of the year, prices lowest and quality highest.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

THIS POSTER is being distributed by the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept. in its campaign to have union members and the general public channel their Easter season spending to where they get their money's worth—in union-made goods and services. Local label councils throughout the country are pushing the drive.

Economy Moves Sidewise:

Consumer Sentiment Found Leveling Off

IF THE U.S. ECONOMY has been moving in any direction during the past three months it has been sidewise, according to the University of Michigan Survey Research Center.

The center's quarterly survey of consumer attitudes and inclinations to buy in November-December indicated a recovery in consumer sentiment up to the level of early 1962. A slight but steady decline during the year apparently was reversed largely by favorable consumer reaction to the solution of the Cuban crisis in October.

The latest SRC survey, a nationwide cross-section of about 2,000 adults in January and February, shows:

- There were no further gains in the recovery of consumer sentiment.
- The improvement noted in November has not been cancelled.

A third conclusion, given with "less assurance," is that the stimulation apparent in November shows some signs of wearing off.

The SRC Index of Consumer Sentiment stood at 98.3 in January-February, slightly but not significantly lower than either two or 12 months earlier. (The index is geared to consumer attitudes of fall 1956.)

The new data are most favorable regarding interest in automobiles and least favorable regarding the long-range business outlook. Attitudes toward personal financial conditions ranked in between.

Prospects for near-term demand for automobiles remain good, the SRC economists report. Expressed intentions to buy cars, and especially new cars, were somewhat higher in January-February than a year earlier.

This augurs well for sales prospects of 1963 model cars, but past experience indicates that intentions to buy expressed in January and February do not provide any indication of the prospects for new models introduced the following autumn.

Intentions to buy houses for owner occupancy and planned improvements and repairs of homes are likewise somewhat more frequent than a year ago, the report continues. Large electrical appliances show no definite trend.

Attitudes toward the personal financial situation, which improved from August to November 1962, have changed little since then. Attitudes toward unemployment and business prospects over the next five years are less favorable than in November.

In January-February only 29 percent of all people said that on the whole good times would predominate during the next five years, as compared to 36 percent of people who were similarly confident a year ago and a majority of respondents a few years ago.

Although nearly two-thirds of American consumers favor a tax cut, there are no indications that people now count on paying lower taxes in the future, the report says.

In explaining their personal financial expectations and their economic outlook, hardly anybody refers to a prospective tax cut, the SRC economists say.

"There is no reason to associate the recent large automobile sales and the increased incurrence of personal debt with expectations of tax savings," they conclude. "Should a tax cut be enacted, its stimulating effects on consumer demand would come in the future."

From Soup to Nonsense:

How to Tell Man from Woman, In Case Anybody Didn't Know

By Jane Goodsell

WHAT IS A MAN? A man is a creature who can remember how many electoral votes Truman got in '48, the number of rounds it took Dempsey to knock out Sharkey and the gas mileage he got out of the first car he ever owned. But he can't remember what size socks he wears, the ages of his children or the name of that old Tommy Dorsey number that his wife refers to as "our song."

What is a woman? She is a person who can't recall who won the football game she attended last Saturday, and she's vague about the year and model of the car she drives. But she can rattle off the calories count of anything from an orange section to a chocolate sundae. And she can give you a detailed description of the blue chiffon dress she wore to her high school prom.

A man is brave and fearless about hurricanes and loaded guns and cars that accelerate from zero to 60 in 8.6 seconds. But he blanches at the sight of anything served in cream sauce in a patty shell, and he develops a nervous twitch if he has to enter a dress shop or a beauty salon or a hospital.

A woman is brave and stoical about plucking her eyebrows and sleeping on wire hair curlers. She's adventurous about eating calves' brains and sweetbreads and snails. She's cool and collected about nosebleeds and little children who wake up, sick to their stomachs, at 3 a.m. But she bursts into tears over a frizzy permanent. And if she reads a news story about a murderer who escaped from a prison in a town 1,500 miles away, she lies awake half the night hearing funny noises downstairs.

A MAN CAN UNDERSTAND the Dow-Jones averages and the pari-mutuel betting system and the principle of jet propulsion. But he can't figure out how to pin the baby's diapers, and he can't fold a bath towel so the monogram is right side out and centered in the middle.

A woman can distinguish real pearls from synthetic pearls at 20 paces. She can do needlepoint and peel grapes, and apply fingernail polish on her right hand. But she can't fold a road map or keep track of her gloves or whistle through her teeth.

By keeping these distinguishing traits in mind, you should be able to tell a man from a woman.

As Unemployment Worsens:

February Job Total Stays Unchanged

Non-farm payroll employment showed "some improvement" between January and February, aided by the end of the East Coast dock strike, the Labor Dept. has reported in releasing detailed job figures.

The department said non-farm payrolls held steady at 54.8 million instead of declining as expected. Within this total, the key manufacturing sector remained at 16.5 million, interrupting a seven-month decline in factory jobs.

Earlier, the department's summary report had disclosed a sharp worsening in the unemployment picture. This revealed an unexpected rise of 250,000 in unemployment—half among adult breadwinners and half among teenagers. This pushed the jobless total to 4.9 million and the seasonally adjusted jobless rate to 6.1 percent, highest in 15 months.

The detailed February job report, based on payroll data as of mid-month, showed that "non-farm payrolls remained virtually unchanged over the month at 54.8 million, although a decline of about 200,000 is usual for this time of year." The report continued:

"Job developments in trade, services and state and local governments were slightly better than seasonal. The February figures also reflected the end of the dock strike which resulted in the return of about 70,000 employes to payrolls in transportation. The reduction of 120,000 jobs in contract construction was mainly seasonal."

In the manufacturing sector, total employment remained almost unchanged from January at 16.5 million; it totaled 16.7 million in December and 16.5 million a year ago.

The report noted that over-the-month changes in the 11 durable goods and 10 non-durable goods subdivisions of manufacturing "were small and generally in line with seasonal expectations."

"This development," the report said, "interrupted a seven-month decline in factory employment (June 1962-January 1963) which totaled 300,000, seasonally adjusted, and which nearly offset the job expansion in the service-producing industries over that period."

The factory workweek at 40 hours in February was little changed from January, the report said. It noted the workweek has been "on a plateau" in recent months, although at a lower level than the first half of last year.

Overtime hours, at 2.6 in February, were about the same as a year ago but somewhat below the level of most of last year, the report added.

Average hourly earnings of factory production workers remained unchanged at $2.43, while weekly earnings slipped to $97.20 due to a slight drop of six minutes in the workweek. Both levels, the report observed, were about 2 percent above a year ago.

The total labor force rose by 700,000 to 74.0 million in February, the report said. This was a gain of some 1 million above a year ago.

Half of Jobless Are Heads of Families

New data now compiled in the Labor Dept.'s monthly labor force surveys throw this additional light on the unemployment problem:

- Of the 4.9 million unemployed in February, 2.3 million—nearly half the total—were family breadwinners, a rise of 100,000 over January.
- Of the total jobless, 4.3 million or 9 of every 10 were actively seeking fulltime work in January and February.
- The man-hours lost to the economy because of unemployment and parttime unemployment rose from 6.8 percent, seasonally adjusted, to 7.1 percent in February—a rate worse than the year-earlier figure for the first time since late 1961.

FIRST DELEGATION of Republic of China trade unionists from Taiwan ever to visit the United States is shown above during a call at AFL-CIO headquarters. Holding the banner with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany is Loh Kwang, standing, director of the Chinese Federation of Labor. At Meany's left, holding a plate presented to him, is Pres. Chien-Wen-fa of the Taiwan Provincial Federation of Labor.

C of C Attacks Labor Board, Asks 'Full Dress' Congressional Probe

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce has asked for a "full dress congressional investigation" of the National Labor Relations Board, charging that the board "has reversed so many precedents the past two years that the hoped-for industrial stability is now a hollow hope."

At the same time, the chamber urged an $8.6 billion tax cut effective June 30. It should be a reduction of the "right kind," that would not only benefit consumers but would "principally encourage risk taking and extra effort," it said.

The revenue losses could be offset by "substantial reductions" in the expenditures proposed by Pres. Kennedy, the CofC said and "if necessary" by "enactment of a low-rate general excise tax exempting food, medicine and shelter," to produce $3.5 billion in new revenues.

"General excise tax" is considered a term used as a substitute for "federal sales tax." The difference is that a direct sales tax at the retail level is noticeable by consumers; an excise tax, paid at the producers' level, goes into the cost of the goods, and represents a "hidden" burden on the eventual consumer.

An excise tax "must be enacted ultimately," the CofC spokesman, Joel Barlow, told the House Ways & Means Committee.

The chamber's attack on the NLRB came in an otherwise routine statement urging Congress to slash proposed federal spending for fiscal 1964 by $4.5 billion and to knock out, in addition, $4.6 billion in spending authority requested for future years.

Assailing a Kennedy proposal for a $2 million increase in NLRB funds to handle an increased workload and make further progress in cutting down a backlog of cases pending, the CofC said:

Complete 'Reform'

"The chamber calls for complete reform of the NLRB." Until after the "full-scale investigation" and reform, it declared, "any additional increases (in the board's funds) should be denied.

"Past experience has proven that more money and more personnel have not cut the backlog, but rather encouraged further institutionalization of board procedures."

Only two of the NLRB's five members are original Kennedy appointees—Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Gerald A. Brown. A third, John H. Fanning, was reappointed by Kennedy to a second term but originally named by former Pres. Eisenhower. The remaining two members—Boyd Leedom and Philip R. Rodgers—are Eisenhower holdovers.

The AFL-CIO pointed out in 1961 that in the Eisenhower years, "a majority of the appointees" had attempted to reverse previous precedents and primarily were drawn from management legal or negotiating counsel.

It also pointed out that the Eisenhower board's harsh interpretations of the Taft-Hartley Act were repeatedly repudiated and overruled by the Supreme Court, which in 1960-61 handed down "two dozen major decisions," with a winning record of more than 80 percent for unions, challenging the board's doctrines.

The "most spectacular single day" was Apr. 17, 1961, a report to the AFL-CIO convention noted, when "in four different cases the Supreme Court overturned the board's Mountain Pacific doctrine on hiring halls, threw out its Brown-Olds mass reimbursement remedy, and rejected its view on so-called 'foremen clauses' and 'general laws clauses'."

The NLRB under McCulloch has decentralized its processes to speed up cases, giving election-petition authority to regional directors and expediting the handling of unfair labor practice charges.

Case Load Up

Its case load has zoomed, Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman reported to Congress last January, reaching an all-time high of 25,386 cases in 1962, but delays have been reduced. The average time for processing an election petition was cut to 44 days, Rothman said, about half that previously required.

Despite a rise in unfair labor practice cases—4,000 more in 1962 than in 1958—complaints were issued in an average of 48 days, whereas in 1958 it was 143 days. The average trial examiner's hearing was completed within 98 days, as against 192 days in 1958, Rothman reported.

Six Postal Unions Sign First Nationwide Pact

(Continued from Page 1)

covers matters other than wage rates, retirement benefits and insurance coverage—areas which are determined by Congress. It deals with work and vacation schedules, transfers and seniority rights, travel and moving allowances, and grievance and appeal procedures, including arbitration.

Under the advisory arbitration procedure, the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service will supply the names of five arbitrators. Each side will strike two names to choose the arbitrator, whose expenses will be paid equally by both sides.

Kennedy Order Hailed

Meany noted at the signing ceremony that Pres. Kennedy's executive order had finally dispelled the once commonly accepted theory that public employes had no right to bargain collectively. He predicted the result would be improvement in the postal service as well as in the working conditions of postal workers.

Johnston likewise saw collective bargaining marking "the beginning of a better relationship between employes and management in the federal government."

"It is a happy day," he added. "I have been advocating this for years."

Bierwagen Joins Bus Union Staff

Pres. John M. Elliott of the Street & Electric Railway Employes has announced that Vice Pres. Walter J. Bierwagen of Washington has agreed to devote full time to service with the international union to help relieve a staff shortage.

Beirwagen offered his resignation as president of the union's National Capital Div. 689, to be effective the day his successor is installed but not later than June 30. An international vice president since 1953, Bierwagen previously had been the only officer not on a full-time basis.

He is also treasurer of the Greater Washington AFL-CIO, vice president of the Maryland-D. C. AFL-CIO, member of the Maryland Governor's Study Commission on Reapportionment, member of the Commission on Human Resources of the Washington Center for Metropolitan Studies.

Screen Guild Proposes Pay TV Earnings Plan

Hollywood, Calif.—The Screen Actors Guild has proposed a new system of payment for actors in films released on pay television—which isn't in operation yet—in negotiations opening Mar. 25 with the Association of Motion Picture Producers.

The SAG proposal separates pay TV rights from theatrical exhibition rights. It asks, with respect to any film on which production is started after Jan. 1, 1963, that 6 percent of the worldwide gross receipts, less actual distribution expenses, be paid the cast, with a maximum limit of 40 percent. This payment would be in addition to the salaries the actors get for actually making the movie.

In addition, SAG asked that at the time the picture is released for use on pay TV, the producer pay each actor not less than 75 percent of the applicable minimum as a "non-returnable advance" against his share in the worldwide gross.

The present contract, in effect since Feb. 1, 1960, provides, with respect to "free" TV release of theatrical movies on which principal photography was started after Jan. 31, 1960, that the producer pay SAG 6 percent of worldwide total gross receipts, less 40 percent for distribution expense. Under the new proposal checks would be made out to the actors and delivered to SAG for distribution.

The union also is seeking guarantees against discrimination in the hiring of actors because of race, creed, color or national origin.

The SAG proposals also would extend contract protection to members employed on films made outside the United States unless they are covered by a contract between the producer and the actors' union having jurisdiction in that country.

In the hope of encouraging production, SAG is not asking for a wage increase in accordance with a policy previously adopted by the membership.

Union negotiators are Dana Andrews, chairman; Leon Ames, Warner Anderson, Frank Faylen, Charlton Heston, Darryl Hickman, Jack Lemmon, Jock Mahoney, Gil Perkins, Walter Pidgeon, Donald Randolph and Thurl Ravenscroft.

Labor Essay Contest Sponsored by Council

Point Pleasant, W. Va.—An essay contest on the subject "What Will Organized Labor Do for My Future?" is being sponsored by the Mason-Jackson Labor Council in cooperation with the school systems of the two counties. Winners in each county will get savings bonds valued at $100, $50 and $25.

SOME 400 GUESTS attended the dedication Mar. 11 of the new headquarters building of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions in Brussels. Shown above is the building itself. Below, in a group attending a reception, are: Douglas MacArthur, U.S. ambassador to Belgium; Sec. Pieter de Vries of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation; ICFTU Gen. Sec. Omer Becu; Graham N. McKelvey, U.S. labor attache in Brussels; Mrs. Becu.

Technical Missions Stepped Up by ILO

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization's technical cooperation program, expanding steadily, resulted in 591 expert missions to developing countries in 1962, an increase of nearly 50 percent over the previous year, according to a report to the ILO Governing Body by its committee on operational programs.

Heading the list was Africa with 169 missions compared with 94 in 1961. Increases also were registered for other operating areas—Asia, 141 missions compared with 97; Latin America, 130 missions compared with 99; Near and Middle East, 83 missions compared with 66, and Europe, 53 missions compared with 32.

The number of experts assigned to technical assistance programs, the ILO expects, will increase considerably. The increase already reported is particularly notable in the case of long-term missions to carry out projects under the United Nations Special Fund.

In other actions, the Governing Body:

- Directed a committee to report at the next meeting on its examination of questions connected with the proposed Intl. Center for Advanced Technical & Vocational Training in Turin, Italy. ILO Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse was asked to present to the next Governing Body meeting a statement on the financing available for the center. Governing Body approval of the project, given earlier, was conditioned upon assured income to operate the center for at least the first four years.
- Received a report that the proposed amendment to the ILO constitution enlarging the Governing Body has been ratified by 42 nations; that three ratifications will be made soon, and that 25 more will be needed before two-thirds of the member-nations, as required, have given their approval.
- Voted to set up a technical advisory group to make recommendations on how to handle the question of land reform at an Intl. Labor Conference.
- Authorized Morse to continue his study of the extension of ILO buildings here.
- Morse announced that Burundi has become the 106th ILO member upon a declaration by Prime Minister Andre Muhirwa that the new African nation accepts the obligations of the ILO constitution. Burundi remains bound by 17 ILO conventions which had been ratified by Belgium and declared applicable to Ruanda-Urundi before liberation.

Legislatures Disqualify Thousands:

Unemployment Compensation Standards Debased in States

Employer-dominated legislatures are meeting a squeeze on gravely-depleted state unemployment insurance funds by pushing bills to disqualify thousands of jobless workers.

One legislature—in Wyoming—has voted to slash benefits as well as cut the number of workers entitled to receive them.

Another legislature—in South Dakota—has passed a bill which imposes a waiting period of up to 13 weeks for all persons with past annual earnings over $6,000. The more the worker earned before losing his job, the longer he is required to wait before he can draw unemployment benefits. A token $1 increase in maximum benefits will permit legislators to say they voted for higher jobless payments.

South Dakota's action was termed "a complete departure from the wage insurance principle of unemployment compensation" by Raymond Munts, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Social Security.

Munts, interviewed on Labor News Conference over the Mutual radio network, said the unemployment insurance situation has "worsened considerably in recent months." He gave this illustration:

"Pick any 10 unemployed persons and you will find that three or four are excluded from any benefits because of where they worked or the operation of eligibility requirements. One or two of that 10 have been out of work so long that they have exhausted their benefit rights, and the remaining five are drawing benefits which average about one-third of their lost wages. And two of the lucky five will use up all their benefits before finding re-employment under current conditions."

On the plus side of the ledger:

- Arkansas raised its maximum payment from $30 to 50 percent of the state average wage—an immediate $5 boost. An amendment to freeze the maximum at $35 was defeated, assuring automatic increases as average wages rise in the future.
- West Virginia raised benefit maximums $3 a week and, contrary to the trend, succeeded in relaxing disqualification rules affecting workers discharged for misconduct.
- Idaho strengthened its financing by raising the wage base on which employers must pay taxes. A bill to cut benefits by 10 to 90 percent for those whose past earnings were above $5,000 a year—a variation of the South Dakota measure—passed the Senate but was killed in the House.
- Utah raised the taxable wage base from $3,000 to $4,200, but at the same time raised the requirement for past year's earnings from $400 to $700.
- An Arizona bill to raise maximum benefits from $35 to $40 has passed the Senate and is pending in the House.
- A Senate-passed bill in New Mexico would raise the benefit ceiling from $36 to 45 percent of average weekly wages—currently $41.
- Delaware has hopes of eliminating the one-week waiting period for jobless benefits. The report from Massachusetts is that a higher maximum, with no strings is "almost a certainty." Alaska anticipated favorable action on improvements in its compensation law; several other states are "hopeful."

Most improvements carry strings, however. Tennessee raised its benefit ceiling from $32 to $36. The previous standard 22 weeks of benefits was shifted to a range of 12 to 26 weeks—which will help those who worked steadily before losing their jobs, and cut the entitlement of others.

In addition, disqualifications would be made permanent for as long as the worker is unemployed.

In Minnesota, Ohio, Colorado and Michigan—where Republicans control both houses of the legislature and the governorship—bills to weaken existing laws pose serious threats.

Benefits Face Cuts

One-third of the persons receiving unemployment compensation in Minnesota would have their benefits reduced or be disqualified entirely under an employer-backed bill which has passed the Senate and was up for debate in the House as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

It contains a "sweetener" in that a minority of workers would be entitled to higher benefits—$45 instead of $38—for 30 weeks instead of 26.

But thousands of seasonal workers who had been entitled to 26 weeks would have their benefit periods cut approximately in half and an estimated 15,000 would be disqualified entirely. Under present law, duration of benefits is tied to the amount of wages earned in a base period; the pending bill links duration to the number of weeks worked.

The Colorado Senate passed, 24-9, a State Chamber of Commerce bill which:

- Reduces maximum benefits from 32.5 weeks to 26 weeks.
- Requires a longer period of employment to qualify for benefits.
- Bars payments when an employe is out of work as a result of any "labor dispute," not just strikes as at present.
- Disqualifies payments during the period covered by separation pay or pro-rated vacation pay, and reduces the amount payable by the total of such pay.
- Repeals a provision for a 25 percent "bonus" above the normal maximum for persons with work records of at least five years of steady employment before becoming jobless.

Legislation pending in Michigan would add new disqualifications to the unemployment compensation law and, the State AFL-CIO reports, "would practically repeal the Ford-Canton decision" of the State Supreme Court, which permitted payment of compensation to workers idled by a strike in an out-of-state supplier plant.

The report from Ohio is a "definite likelihood of unfavorable unemployment compensation legislation. Employers pushing for a bill that would wipe out most of the improvements made in law in Democratic-controlled 1959 session, with exception of benefit hike."

And in Texas, the word on unemployment compensation is: "If any legislation comes out, it will very likely be unfavorable."

Step Backward

Wyoming, with one of the highest unemployment rates in the nation and one of the lowest unemployment insurance tax rates, has had one of the best compensation systems—although still below minimum standards sought by the AFL-CIO and recommended by both the Eisenhower and Kennedy Administrations.

The cut in benefits came from a reduction of maximum benefits from 55 percent to 50 percent of average state wages, and dropping a previous provision for up to $6 in dependent benefits. Under the old law, a worker with two dependents could receive $55 a week; his new maximum is $45.

While he could previously receive benefits with as little as 18 weeks employment, the new law requires six months of previous work. The rule for disqualification for refusal to accept "suitable" employment while receiving benefits has been toughened by eliminating consideration of the worker's previous training, experience or wage level. And if he leaves the state to hunt employment, his benefit will be cut 25 percent.

Recount Ended, Rolvaag Out in Front by 91 Votes

St. Paul—Four and a half months after the election last November, Minnesota seemed about to acquire a new governor—Democrat Karl Rolvaag—on the basis of a ballot recount showing that he beat incumbent Republican Gov. Elmer L. Andersen by 91 votes.

A special three-judge state court rejected a Republican motion to void the recount and instructed Democratic attorneys to draft a proposed order declaring Rolvaag the victor.

Andersen, originally elected in 1960, was certified last November as re-elected by a 142-vote margin. He has held on to the office, during the laborious recount, under a constitutional provision allowing a governor to serve until his successor is duly certified and sworn in.

He has functioned to make state appointments, recommend legislation and sign bills.

Even while the court considered and rejected Republican efforts to void the recount, the GOP-controlled legislature was trying to push through two more bills so Andersen could sign them before leaving office.

One, an unemployment compensation measure, would narrow eligibility standards and cut benefits, either forcing off the jobless insurance rolls or reducing payments to about 35,000 seasonal or intermittently employed workers. While the bill would raise the maximum jobless benefit from $38 to $45, the effect would be to throw the 35,000 wholly or partially on public relief.

The other bill would prohibit unions from expending dues revenue in state or local political campaigns.

Rolvaag would be expected to veto both measures, but the prospects were that he might not take office in time to do so.

Appeal Still Possible

Rolvaag was lieutenant governor at the time of the election, when more than 1.2 million votes were cast. Charging irregularities at the polls, he obtained a recount under ground rules laid down by the three-judge special court with the cooperation of lawyers for both Democratic and Republican Parties.

Each side reserved the right to challenge the recount later, and the GOP still had the right to appeal to the State Supreme Court an unfavorable ruling from the special court.

Conservative Grip Limits State Gains

Shift to Right Brings New Effort To Wipe Out Progress of Past

(Continued from Page 1)

tinues to center on sales taxes and a growing variety of nuisance taxes, all of which put the heaviest proportional burden on low and middle-income families.

At least one new governor—Ohio's economy-pledged Republican James A. Rhodes—has tackled the revenue problem by cutting off funds for welfare programs. He abruptly ordered the state's share of county relief payments cut from 50 to 40 percent, and also slashed state aid to the blind, the disabled, and dependent children.

In a rare area of bipartisan accord, state ratifications of the constitutional amendment prohibiting a poll tax as a voting requirement for federal elections have begun to roll in after a slow start. The count, as the AFL-CIO News went to press, was up to 23 with additional ratifications imminent.

If the poll tax amendment is ratified this year, Virginia—the only state which did not have either a regular or special session of its legislature—will presumably call a session to adopt a voter registration procedure. Arkansas faces the same problem. Its legislature adjourned without agreeing on a stand-by registration plan.

In some big states—including California, one of the few major liberal beachheads—the legislative session is too young for analysis. Here, however, is a cross-section of state reports in areas other than unemployment compensation and reapportionment, covered in stories on this page and Page 10:

ALASKA—Labor-supported bill establishing Human Rights Commission passed House, expected to pass Senate.

ARIZONA—Secondary injuries made eligible for workmen's compensation under Senate-passed bill. Delay in making payments eliminated by authorizing immediate payments based on $200 monthly pay, with balance of payment retroactive after it has been computed.

ARKANSAS—An attempt to impose a stringent literacy test for voting defeated as amendment to registration bill in House, which set up a permanent registration system to be used when the poll tax constitutional amendment is adopted. The bill failed to clear the Senate before adjournment.

COLORADO—One of the worst of a series of anti-labor bills, which would prohibit workers or unions from striking or "acting in concert" to prevent the use of any "labor-saving" device, was reported favorably by the Senate Labor Committee without a hearing. After a vigorous protest from the state's labor movement, the Senate voted to send the bill back to committee. However the Labor Committee, this time after holding a hearing, again sent the bill to the Senate where it was being debated as the AFL-CIO News went to press. A pending workmen's compensation bill would raise benefits slightly, but tighten restrictions and deduct any federal social security payments. Prospects good for expanding jurisdiction of fair employment practices.

DELAWARE—Legislature set up an apprenticeship council under the State Labor & Industry Dept., which the State AFL-CIO described as "a bill which we have sought for the past 12 years."

HAWAII—Still early in session, but liberal legislature raises hopes for labor-backed bills, including a measure to limit powers of courts to issue injunctions in labor cases and a bill to reduce from eight to two the number of employes necessary for a representation election.

IDAHO—Minimum wage, previously 75 cents, raised to $1. Also enacted was a bill specifying time-and-one-half-pay for women after 8 hours in one day. Six-month residence requirement for voting dropped to 60 days for presidential election. With legislature near adjournment, no action was expected on "right-to-work" and bill to require 75 percent vote of bargaining unit to permit a union shop.

INDIANA—In the recently adjourned regular session, enforcement powers were added to the state's previously toothless fair employment act. Workmen's compensation was raised $3 to $42 a week maximum. Otherwise the session was a tug-of-war between a conservative Republican legislature—which came within one vote in the House of calling for abolition of the federal income tax—and Democratic Gov. Matthew E. Welsh. Among the bills he vetoed was a Kerr-Mills "means test" measure for health care. A special session now in progress resulted from a deadlock over the state budget. The GOP is pressing for a sales tax.

KANSAS — Public accommodations bill expected to pass; prospects less bright for bill to prohibit discrimination in sale, rental, financing of housing.

MAINE—Strong bipartisan opposition to "right-to-work" expected to kill or pigeonhole the bill.

MARYLAND—A weak public accommodation bill passed which applies to only half the state. In Maryland, legislators can exempt their home counties from many state laws through amendments attached to bills. The counties where race discrimination is most widespread.

MICHIGAN—A bill for a $1 minimum wage—the state presently has none—is supported by Gov. George W. Romney. However the State AFL-CIO reports it is "so loaded with exclusions that it bypasses most people who need protection." One plus action expected is approval of aid to dependent children legislation to enable Michigan to receive federal funds authorized two years ago. It passed the House through combined votes of Democrats and moderate Republicans over Old Guard GOP opposition.

MINNESOTA—Fate of legislation prohibiting use of union funds in state elections and a proposed "little Landrum-Griffin" measure may depend on whether Democrat Karl Rolvaag is declared elected governor over Republican incumbent Elmer Andersen.

MISSISSIPPI — The Dixiecrat legislature adopted a labor-opposed bill requiring September primaries to choose presidential electors—a device aimed at making it easier to keep candidates of the national Democratic Party off the ballot, or at least deny them the use of the party label.

NORTH CAROLINA—Labor hopes to raise the 75 cent minimum wage—the only wage floor law in the South—to $1.

OHIO—Sitaution summed up by the State AFL-CIO thus: "We have Democratic-controlled legislatures once every 10 years. We make progress in those years. In between it's a defensive battle to preserve what we've got, with a minor advance thrown in here and there."

OREGON—Collective bargaining rights for public employes passed House by substantial margin. Expect favorable action on minimum wage bill. Railroads seeking repeal of Oregon's "full crew" law requiring six men on trains more than 40 cars long; rail unions urging its strengthening by requiring an additional brakeman on trains of more than 100 cars.

PENNSYLVANIA—Still early in session, but outlook is for a defensive battle to prevent retrogression.

SOUTH DAKOTA—Public accommodation bill passed. Labor-opposed bill to eliminate right to register at polls on election day sidetracked for study.

UTAH—Archaic law prohibiting "miscegenation" repealed. Sales tax raised. Several anti-labor bills killed.

WEST VIRGINIA — Minimum wage bill passed House, died in Senate. Sales tax extended over AFL-CIO opposition. Defeated or not acted on were bills to establish state apprenticeship council, ban age discrimination in hiring, and permit payroll deduction of union dues by state employes.

Realty Promotion 'Truth' Bill Enacted

Santa Fe., N. M. — The New Mexico legislature has passed a labor-backed "truth in real estate promotion" bill.

It sets penalties up to five years in prison and a $100,000 fine for misleading advertising of developments of 25 or more parcels and failure to provide purchasers with complete information on restrictions, street facilities, availability of utilities and water, full price and financing terms.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council last month adopted a resolution calling for legislation to curb "land speculators bilking unwary consumers of their hard-earned money through flagrant misrepresentations."

COPE Distributing Two New Leaflets

Two new register-and-vote leaflets for mass distribution are now available from the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education.

Entitled "It Takes a Lot of Muscle" (Publication No. 128) and "365 Days a Year" (No. 129), they stress the importance of union members registering so they can vote for good candidates committed to programs for the welfare of the great mass of Americans. The leaflets should be ordered by number. Copies are free.

23 States Ratify Ban on Poll Tax

Twenty-three of the necessary 38 states have ratified the constitutional amendment preventing states from imposing a poll tax for voting in federal elections.

The states are: Illinois, Oregon, West Virginia, New Jersey, Montana, Maryland, New York, California, Indiana, Rhode Island, Michigan, Alaska, Ohio, Idaho, Hawaii, New Mexico, Utah, Minnesota, North Dakota, Colorado, Vermont, Washington and Nevada.

DISTINGUISHED SERVICE citation was presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany (left) by William D. Gargan, stage, screen and television star, on behalf of the American Cancer Society. Gargan, whose larynx was removed in a cancer operation and who uses esophogeal speech, expressed the society's appreciation for the $828,000 raised by AFL-CIO affiliates in Labor's March on Cancer.

State Reapportionment Viewed as Inadequate

Legislators from rural areas and small towns are showing a not-surprising reluctance to vote themselves out of office or to dilute their considerable power by giving greater representation to city and suburban areas.

The result, the AFL-CIO News found, is that most reapportionment actions have been of a token nature, with continued over-representation of sparsely-populated areas. In most states where reapportionment is an issue, labor and other groups supporting population-based representation are pinning their hopes on the courts rather than the legislatures.

Here are some highlights:

Colorado—Reapportionment act has been challenged in federal court as a Republican gerrymander.

Delaware—Court challenge has been brought against reapportionment act described by State AFL-CIO as "unfair and unjust."

Idaho—Urban areas got more representation in House through increase in size from 63 to 79, but still under-represented. No change in heavily out-of-balance Senate. Labor supporting court challenge.

Indiana — Gov. Matthew E. Welsh (D) has vetoed a labor-opposed bill which would make geography rather than population the prime factor in both houses.

Iowa—Legislature adopted constitutional amendment, which labor opposes as inadequate. It is scheduled for a Dec. 3 referendum. Meanwhile State AFL-CIO has brought a federal court suit challenging both existing apportionment and proposed amendment.

Mississippi — After referendum defeat of a proposal to further increase rural control, legislature adopted a plan which State AFL-CIO terms "a definite improvement." It was ratified in a special election.

Nebraska—State AFL-CIO has brought suit challenging referendum-approved constitutional amendment giving weight to area as well as population in state's unicameral legislature.

Nevada—Reapportionment suit filed in federal court by four officers of State AFL-CIO.

New York—With GOP firmly in control of legislature, labor pins hopes for fair reapportionment on pending court suit.

Ohio—Labor supporting suit before federal court to eliminate provision in state constitution which allows each county one representative, regardless of population.

Oklahoma—Reapportionment act may not meet federal court order, in which case the court may proceed to reapportion on basis of population.

Rhode Island—Court has ordered reapportionment, but issue expected to be deferred until forthcoming constitutional convention.

Tennessee—In this state whose archaic representation pattern convinced the Supreme Court that constitutional rights were involved, a pending bill comes closer to equalizing representation but still gives an edge to rural areas.

Vermont—"Labor is very much in the fight for reapportionment" in the current session of the legislature, the State AFL-CIO reports.

Washington—Special session under way with court directive to reapportion or court will do so itself.

Reuther Mourns Bishop's Death

Detroit—A "profound sense of loss" at the death of Methodist Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam was expressed by Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Auto Workers in a tribute to his "long, active service to humanity."

Bishop Oxnam was a member for several years of the union's Public Review Board, a role which, Reuther said, reflected his "deep sense of human rights."

"He often expressed his deep satisfaction at being able to serve the members of the UAW in this way," Reuther added, "and he resigned only when illness caused his doctor to advise him to do so. People everywhere—the countless members who knew him and all who benefited from his vast and passionate devotion to humanity without ever personally knowing of his admirable efforts—can experience only a deep sense of loss."

Conservatives Regain Control:

Rules Group Blocks Medical School Bill

The House Rules Committee, temporarily back under control of the Southern Democratic-Republican coalition, blocked House action on a Kennedy-supported bill to construct medical training facilities.

The Rules unit, raised from 12 to 15 members two years ago and again this year to provide a knife-edge majority to Kennedy supporters, went back to control of the five Republican members and two southern Democrats, headed by Chairman Howard W. Smith (D-Va.) when Rep. Ray J. Madden (D-Ind.) was unable to attend because of illness.

A majority vote is required for the committee to give a bill a green light for floor action. A 7-to-7 tie on clearing the medical facilities bill kept it bottled up.

The bill, which would authorize $175 million in federal funds for medical and dental facilities, was approved by the House Commerce Committee by an overwhelming bipartisan 20-1 margin.

Smith said later the Rules action did not finally kill the bill. The way was left open to bring it up, he said, when other federal education proposals are considered.

In other actions in Congress:

- A Senate Labor subcommittee voted a liberalized version of the Administration's youth employment opportunities bill. It would set up a Youth Conservation Corps (YCC) to work in national parks and reservations and in "home-town" projects. In addition, the committee added a section authorizing matching federal funds for states which create their own youth corps and put young people to work on "home town" projects.

Before approving the measure, Democrats defeated an amendment by Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.) to strike out the Youth Corps section.

- Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.) continued hearings of a Senate Anti-Trust subcommittee on his truth-in-packaging bill. Federal Trade Commissioner Paul Rand Dixon endorsed the measure, saying that its enactment would allow the FTC to issue regulations "with teeth" for the guidance of business firms.

The Rules Committee action pigeonholing the medical facilities bill came after Commerce Committee Chairman Oren D. Harris (D-Ark.) made a direct personal appeal for clearance so the House could vote on it before Easter.

"I'm as much in favor of economy as the next man," he said, but the need for larger numbers of physicians and dentists is "urgent." The supply, he told the committee, "is about to be outrun by the demand."

In other actions dramatizing the new stalemate created by Madden's illness, the Rules unit:

- Killed a proposal to open House committee meetings to radio, television and tape-recorder coverage. Senate committee meetings have long been open to these news media.
- Turned down a proposal by Rep. Phil Landrum (D-Ga.) to split the existing Education & Labor Committee into two separate groups.
- Turned down various other proposals—all on 7-7 tie votes.

FIRST NEW PHOTOGRAPH of the Supreme Court in several years was taken recently. From left to right it shows (seated) Justices Tom C. Clark and Hugo L. Black, Chief Justice Earl Warren, and Justices William O. Douglas and John M. Harlan; (standing), Justices Byron R. White, William J. Brennan, Jr., Potter Stewart and Arthur J. Goldberg.

County Unit Voting System Killed, 'One Person, One Vote' Decreed

(Continued from Page 1)

federal union was formed and the electoral college established in the U.S. Constitution "implied nothing" about the use of a similar system "by a state in a statewide election."

'One Person, One Vote'

"The conception of political equality from the Declaration of Independence, to Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, to the 15th, 17th, and 19th amendments can mean only one thing—one person, one vote," Douglas declared.

The high court overruled the district court, struck down its "disparity" theory, and remanded the case for a decree knocking out any form of "county unit" or other "weighted" system of tabulating ballots in a manner to favor one geographical area over another, one class of voters (rural) over another (urban).

The sweeping decision apparently kills existing county-unit voting systems usd in Maryland and Mississippi for party-primary purposes as well as the Georgia system.

Its language also apparently rules out the "county unit" system within congressional districts, under which rural-area voters have been given a "weighted" advantage over city voters.

"Once the geographical unit for which a representative is to be chosen is designated, all who participate in the election are to have an equal vote," the court declared.

In Maryland, candidates for governor have been "counted out" in party primaries under the "unit" system, even though they won a majority of the popular vote. In Georgia, candidates for Congress have been "counted out," regardless of a popular vote victory, under the "county unit" system.

Dissent by Harlan

In a dissenting opinion, Justice John M. Harlan bitterly argued that the court's judgment on the Georgia case arose from its 1961 decision opening up a gerrymander of the Tennessee legislature to challenge in the federal courts.

The court in the Tennessee case had "turned its back on [a] wise chapter" and agreed "to enter [the] political thicket" involving practicalities of politics, Harlan said. It "can no longer escape the necessity of coming to grips with the thorny problems it so studiously sought to avoid" in the earlier decision.

"I cannot consider it irrational for Georgia to apply its county unit system to the selection of candidiates" for governor and other statewide office "to assure against a predominantly 'city point of view'" in the administration of state business, he said.

Douglas, speaking for the majority, said the county unit case involved no question having "anything to do with the composition of the state or federal legislature."

"We intimate no opinion on the constitutional phases of that problem [gerrymandered legislatures] beyond what we said" in the Tennessee decision, which merely told lower federal courts to take jurisdiction of valid challenges and seek to frame decrees that meet the test of constitutional guarantees of due process and equal protection of the laws, Douglas wrote.

The Georgia case "is only a voting case," he added. Justices Potter Stewart and Tom Clark filed a concurring opinion emphasizing that the county unit case had nothing to do with "the basic ground rules" that in the future may grow from the Tennessee case.

"Within a given constituency," Stewart remarked, "there can be room for but a single constitutional rule—one voter, one vote."

Power of Lower Federal Courts Over State Convictions Increased

The Supreme Court has ruled that the federal courts have power to use the habeas corpus writ to liberate prisoners convicted and held in prison under state criminal laws if their imprisonment violates their rights under the federal constitution.

The 6-to-3 decision brought a sharp dissent from Justice John M. Harlan, who warned that the federal courts were thus thrown open to constitutional claims by all state prisoners. It was a "disquieting" decision, he said.

The majority opinion written by Justice William J. Brennan acknowledged difficult questions involving the federal nature of the national-state system. He declared the decision was nevertheless necessary to prevent unconstitutional imprisonment in cases where state law did not protect basic rights.

In other cases the court:

- Ruled that joint committee procedure for handling worker grievance cases may be enforceable by federal courts under the Taft-Hartley Act even if the word "arbitration" does not appear in the contract language regarding grievances.

The question is whether an award by a joint management-union committee arose from "the chosen instrument for the definitive settlement of grievances," the court ruled. The case was sent back to district court for determination of what was meant by the contract language.

- Said every state must provide an attorney for every person charged with crime if he is too poor to hire one and requests help.

The decision, which was unanimous, directly reversed a 1942 precedent that attorneys were required under the constitution only if the accused person faced a possible death sentence under state law.

- In a series of decisions, laid additional constitutional restrictions on the states in providing full help to indigent persons charged with crimes. The court split 5-to-4 and 6-to-3 in two such decisions, with Chief Justice Warren and Justices Black, Brennan, William O. Douglas, and Arthur J. Goldberg joining each time to reverse the state court decisions. In one case they were joined by Justice Byron R. White.

The habeas corpus decision involved a New York prisoner convicted of murder 21 years ago on his own confession alone. Two other persons also were convicted on their own confessions in the case, but went free when the state appellate courts ruled the confessions were coerced by police brutality.

The remaining prisoner did not appeal at once, and when he did the state courts said that in a procedural sense he had waited too long. The state judges said he could be treated as the others but that they were powerless to act.

The Supreme Court's decision which set him free held that procedural defaults by a prisoner under state law do not deprive him of constitutional rights when he invokes the aid of the federal courts.

'Job Guide for Young' Available in New Edition

The 1963-64 edition of the Job Guide for Young Workers, just published, will be used by more than 10,000 high schools in helping jobseekers get off to a good start, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Employment Security has announced.

"Young people must continue their education and training as long as possible to qualify for the skilled jobs of the '60s," Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz said.

The guide provides useful information about the duties, characteristics, employment prospects, advancement opportunities and methods of entry into a wide variety of jobs frequently sought by young people leaving high school, he pointed out.

The guide was prepared by the bureau's U.S. Employment Service in cooperation with state employment security agencies. The 78-page booklet reflects the accumulated experience and knowledge gained by specialists in public employment offices in their contacts with young workers and their employers.

Copies of the job guide may be bought at 45 cents each from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C.

Budget Cuts Seen Costing Future Jobs

Congressmen and senators who want federal programs reduced and the budget cut must take responsibility for additional future unemployment, the Meat Cutters have warned.

Union Pres. Thomas J. Lloyd and Sec.-Treas. Patrick E. Gorman urged Sen. Everett McK. Dirksen (R-Ill.) to drop his announced campaign for federal "economy." They said "we know it is part of the political game" that he oppose budget requests, but they advised Dirksen that federal programs "maintain and create jobs."

IRS Rules Held Factor in Layoffs

"Critical and continuing job losses" have been suffered by professional musicians as a result of "tardy and excessively restrictive" Internal Revenue Service regulations on the tax-deductibility of business entertainment expenses, Pres. Herman Kenin of the Musicians has told the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue.

Citing spot checks in cities across the country, Kenin said that 100 Philadelphia musicians have been laid off since the regulations went into effect Jan. 1; that 161 lost their jobs in Los Angeles; that in New York, Chicago and Seattle various establishments have either closed or shut off live music at a cost of layoffs for more than 100 musicians.

The musicians' union "does not condone expense account chiselers," Kenin said. He complained, however, that IRS restrictions on entertainment tax-deductibility were so severe as to "abolish legitimate traditions" in the field of business contacts and transactions.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, March 30, 1963 | No. 13

Substantial U.S. Aid Boost Strongly Backed by Meany

PICKET DUTY IS SCHEDULED at least eight days in advance in the strike of Oil Workers Local 4-367 against the Shell Oil Co. installation at Pasadena, Tex. Above three of the strikers looks for their names on the assignment board in the union hall. At right is L. D. Wilkers, strike chairman. (See story on Page 3.)

Dissents from Slash Asked by Clay Group

By David L. Perlman

U.S. foreign aid programs should be "substantially increased," not cut back, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany declared in a vigorous dissent to retrenchment proposals made by a presidential advisory committee.

Meany charged that the committee, headed by retired Gen. Lucius D. Clay, failed to show in its majority report "real understanding" of the world struggle "between the forces of tyranny and freedom" in making recommendations which included:

- A $500 million slash in current $3.9 billion aid programs.
- "Harder terms" of repayment for many of the economic development loans made by the U.S.
- Withdrawal of U.S. aid from many areas of Africa.

Meany, only labor representative on the 10-member Clay committee, told Pres. Kennedy that the American people are willing to continue their support of the "long-term costs" of strengthening the free world.

Criticizing the majority's "arbitrary limitations" on U.S. aid programs, Meany pointedly noted that other Presidents "have been subjected to and have overcome the advice of individuals whose view of the national interest was too narrow, whose approach was negative, and whose arguments taken out of context could be dangerously misused" by opponents of the President's program.

Aid Foes Encouraged

Comments by Capitol Hill opponents of foreign aid indicated the majority report had whetted their appetites for severe appropriation cuts, despite Clay's statement at a press conference that reductions beyond the group's recommendations "would be at a sacri-

(Continued on Page 8)

Safeguards Asked for Transit Bill

The Senate has been told that labor cannot support a bill providing federal grants for urban mass transportation facilities unless amendments are added assuring "adequate protection" of workers' rights.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, in a letter to all members of the Senate, urged support for amendments, which he said would be offered to the committee-approved bill, to guarantee collective bargaining rights and to ensure that federal funds will not be used to bring about displacement of workers or loss of existing benefits.

Biemiller emphasized that the AFL-CIO "supports enactment of a long-range program of federal assistance for mass transportation" as provided in the Administration-backed bill sent to the Senate floor by the Banking & Currency Committee.

He said, however, that the committee failed to write into the bill assurances that employes will not be adversely affected by such programs and added: "The AFL-CIO

(Continued on Page 2)

Forced Arbitration Hit:

Dockers Join Fight Against Bonner Bill

Eighty thousand members of the Longshoremen are "unalterably opposed" to a bill imposing compulsory arbitration of maritime disputes, top officers of the union told the House Commerce Committee.

ILA Pres. William V. Bradley warned that the legislation proposed by Committee Chairman Herbert C. Bonner (D-N. C.) is "the surest way to destroy collective bargaining."

If it becomes law, he said, "then neither side will engage in the type of bargaining likely to result in a contract. Both sides will refrain from compromising in the knowledge that ultimately someone else will assume the responsibility and do their job for them."

Thomas W. Gleason, the union's executive vice president, charged that "those who favor compulsory arbitration are kicking up a dust storm to hide their assault upon the freedom to strike."

"They would want American

(Continued on Page 7)

February Price Index Ties Record

The consumer's cost of living tied an all-time high in February, pushed upward by higher prices for food and clothing, the Labor Dept. has reported.

The Consumer Price Index rose by one-tenth of 1 percent to return to the record high of 106.1, first reached last September. This means the market basket of goods and services which cost $10 in the 1957-59 base period now costs $10.61.

In a companion report, the Labor Dept. said a small decline in the factory workweek caused a slight drop in average spendable earnings or take-home pay of factory production workers.

And because of the rise in the cost of living between January and February, the Labor Dept. noted, the real earnings or purchasing power of factory workers declined slightly.

Some 2,500 metalworking and meatpacking workers will receive a 1-cent an hour hike based on quarterly and semi-annual adjustments under contract escalator clauses.

The index for February was 1.2 percent above a year ago.

The net spendable earnings report for February showed the weekly take-home pay of the factory worker with three dependents down to $85.58 with a slight drop in the workweek; the worker without dependents received $77.91.

The take-home pay in both cases was down by 20 cents from January but $1.15 per week above a year ago.

Stronger Equal Pay Bill Urged by Labor

The AFL-CIO has urged Congress to enact a "comprehensive and effective" equal pay for women law and to strengthen the pending Administration-backed bill by expanding coverage and providing clearly spelled-out protection against wage cuts.

Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told a House Labor subcommittee that a federal law is needed because the "evil" of discriminatory pay practices still exists despite "the combined efforts of collective bargaining, voluntary employer action and state legislation."

The AFL-CIO wants "prompt action" on the legislation, he said, but not "at the expense of effective action." He cited an AFL-CIO Executive Council resolution adopted last month which declared:

"A pious statement of principles, shot through with exceptions of application, and obstructions to enforcement, will not be acceptable, nor will any shabby attempts to equalize women's wages by reducing those for men be acceptable."

Schnitzler said the Administration bill, introduced by Subcommittee Chairman Frank Thompson, Jr. (D-N. J.) and Rep. Edith Green (D-Ore.), "is aimed in the right direction."

He praised its enforcement provision, which gives the Secretary of Labor authority to issue orders halt-

(Continued on Page 8)

Railroad Officials Try To 'Tape' U.S. Mediator

A top federal mediator's efforts to help settle the Florida East Coast Railway strike through exploratory meetings with company officials lasted just 20 minutes.

Then Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., a member of the National Mediation Board assigned by Pres. Kennedy to the nine-week strike, discovered that the traditionally private and informal session was being "taped" on a recorder.

O'Neill indignantly told the railroad executives that he considered their unannounced recording of the meeting "an insult to the United States government." He broke off the session when company officials refused to turn off the recorder and insisted on the right to transcribe all talks with federal mediators.

Back in Washington, O'Neill confirmed to newsmen that the railroad's refusal to follow the ordinary procedures of mediation had forced the government to suspend its efforts. He said he had never before—in 25 years of mediation—encountered such a situation.

O'Neill, who went to Florida after successfully assisting in settlement of the Railway Clerks' job security negotiations with the Southern Pacific Railroad, was assigned to the FEC strike after the Florida congressional delegation urged Ken-

(Continued on Page 2)

U.S. Textile Research Called Vital

Congress can help revitalize the textile industry by approving funds for a government-sponsored research program, Pres. William Pollock of the Textile Workers Union of America told 40 delegates from five states at a TWUA legislative institute in the U.S. capital.

Pollock cited the loss of 400,000 textile jobs in recent years and the despair created by the scrapping of plants and the abandonment of communities left stranded. Only one proposal to help solve textile problems has, after five years of studies, won the unanimous support of all elements, he asserted—the proposal to establish a government-sponsored program directed at increasing scientific knowledge of textile materials and processes.

The fruits of this basic research, he said, can be applied by the industry to the expansion of markets through developing new products and new uses for textiles.

Pointing out that the program has been endorsed by Pres. Kennedy, the Special Commerce Subcommittee on Textiles, and a textile committee appointed by the National Academy of Sciences, Pollock said its adoption, and congressional approval of an initial $2.5 million appropriation, is "of utmost concern" to the 800,000 workers left in the industry.

Delegates at the first institute session were from Pennsylvania, New Jersey, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee. They visited their senators and representatives; were guests at the Japanese embassy, and took part in a week-long program highlighted by a debate on hospital insurance under social security, featuring Rep. John D. Dingell (D-Mich.) who favors the social security approach, and Rep. Thomas B. Curtis (R-Mo.), who opposes it.

A second institute for delegates from TWUA locals in Midwestern and New England states was scheduled to start Mar. 31. Those in charge include Pollock; TWUA Sec.-Treas. John Chupka; and other TWUA officials, including John W. Edelman, Washington representative; Education Dir. Paul Swaity and Stanley Rosen, his assistant; and William DuChessi, COPE director.

New Jersey Labor Backs $1.25 Wage

Newark, N. J.—Approval of a House-backed $1.25 state hourly minimum wage was urged on the Senate by State AFL-CIO Pres. Vincent J. Murphy to protect the thousands of workers he maintained were "exploited . . . simply because New Jersey doesn't have a minimum wage law."

"Passage of the bill will not mean an end to the low wage problem," he asserted, "but it is a beginning. It is part of our intensified attack against poverty and its human waste and social costs to our society.

"At least the bill will prevent continued growth of the unjustifiably wide income disparity between the defenseless lowest-wage earners and the rest of New Jersey's work force."

Murphy said a State AFL-CIO survey showed that a single woman living with her family needs to make at least $1.37 an hour "merely to exist without any frills or luxuries." Far more is needed to support a family, he added, but "many employers ignore this fact and continue to pay disgracefully low rates."

FIRST PRINTER from the Detroit area to join the Peace Corps was David J. Deeds (left), an apprentice member of Typographical Union Local 18. Congratulating him as he leaves for training at Georgetown University, Washington, is Pres. Harlow Banks of Local 18. Deeds expects to leave for Afghanistan about June 1.

Labor Board Forbids 'Selective' Lockout

A "selective" lockout of union employes by druggists who kept their stores open with non-union workers was unlawful discrimination and "clearly retaliatory," the National Labor Relations Board has ruled.

A panel of three board members has ordered the Kitsap County, Wash., Retail Druggists' Association to stop discouraging membership in Retail Clerks Local 381 by locking out union members while continuing to operate with non-union employes, and to give lost pay to 45 of the 48 locked-out pharmacists and clerks.

The dispute started when members of Local 381 rejected the employers' "last offer and began picketing one store." All employers then handed layoff notices to union members, notifying them they would be rehired when the picketing was ended.

The employers and their bargaining agent, the Industrial Conference Board, Tacoma, Wash., claimed they were not trying to undermine or eliminate the union but merely to protect themselves against union "whipsaw" tactics. Their own conduct, they argued, had been found legal in a previous NLRB ruling in the often-cited Buffalo Linen case.

The decision, by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and members Boyd Leedom and Gerald A. Brown, rejected this argument, saying the Buffalo Linen rule did not apply for these reasons:

- The employers agreed in advance to suspend their union-member employes if a labor dispute closed one store, and all association members signed an agreement to that effect before the strike started Sept. 11, 1962.
- In accord with the agreement, when picketing began at one store the other employers singled out union members for temporary suspension "whereas non-member employes were retained."

Thus, the board said, "not only in its conception but also in its implementation the lockout was purposefully discriminatory" as between union and non-union members and therefore it is "immaterial that the respondents had no hostility to the union and no specific intent to discourage" union membership.

The board noted one unique event—two stores within a block of the picketed store hired their own pickets wearing signs similar to those of union pickets. The picketing was not requested or authorized by the union, and the employers said the pickets were utilized because of the stores' proximity to the picketed establishment.

In other rulings at the same time, the board held in a 3-1 decision that the National Seal Division of Federal-Mogul-Bower Bearings, Inc., violated the law by refusing to rehire four probationary employes after a strike last fall of Rubber Workers Local 171 in Downey, Calif. Management's argument that the probationers had failed to complete 60-day trial periods before the strike, and therefore need not be rehired, was struck down by NLRB Members John H. Fanning, Leedom and Brown.

Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissented on the ground that the probationers elected to stay away from work during the strike and thus broke a company rule about working without interruption for 60 days.

A second ruling by McCulloch, Leedom and Brown was that the Perkins Machine Co., Warren, Mass., did not commit an unfair practice when management reminded members of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers Local 223 that they could resign from the union during a contract "escape" period and sent them resignation forms, but did not urge them either to resign or remain in the union.

Mediator 'Taped' In Rail Strike

(Continued from Page 1)

nedy to send a personal representative to the scene.

Meanwhile, the non-operating union's strike remained solid. Operating crafts were respecting the picket lines and the only trains running were staffed by management officials.

The "non-op" unions struck Jan. 23 after the company continued to refuse to give its employes the 10.28 cents an hour pay increase granted last year by every other Class I railroad in the nation.

Engravers Reject Pact:

Settlement Delayed In Newspaper Strike

New York—Settlement of New York's long newspaper strike and lockout hit another snag when members of the striking Photo Engraver's voted 191 to 111 to reject a new agreement recommended by their negotiators.

The unexpected turndown caught management and union leaders by surprise.

The city's morning papers—the Times, Herald Tribune, Daily News and Mirror—were preparing to go to press on the presumption that the 320 engravers would ratify the settlement. Earlier, picket lines had passed through machinists and electricians to prepare equipment for quick return to publication.

Photo Engravers Local Pres. Frank McGowan had urged the strikers to accept the pact as "the best we can get." After the vote, he said his next step would be to report to the publishers and Bertram A. Powers, president of Typographical Local 6 and head of the Newspaper Unity Committee. A new engravers' meeting with the publishers was set for Mar. 29.

There was also a possibility that the engravers would call a meeting of the full local, which also includes some 2,900 members employed at commercial printing shops.

Mayor Robert F. Wagner, who had recommended the settlements for the unions involved in the dispute, said he would await reports and "assess the situation" before taking further action.

The major objection of the Photo Engravers to the proposed settlement reportedly was the failure to reduce the workweek from 36¼ to 35 hours for all shifts, not just the overnight shifts as the mayor had recommended.

The package was valued at $12.63, with wage and fringe benefit improvements of $6.50 in the first year and $6.13 in the second, including four weeks of vacation after a year of service.

Earlier in the week, the ITU local removed what was then thought to be the major barrier to a solution of the 16-week dispute when it reversed an earlier vote and accepted a two-year settlement also valued at $12.63.

The printers, who had been the first union to strike four of the dailies and encounter a lockout by four others, gathered at Madison Square Garden and used city voting machines to ratify the settlement by a vote of 2,562 to 1,763. A week earlier they had rejected the same package, 1,621 to 1,557.

As the dailies prepared to resume publication prior to the Photo Engravers' vote, the Times and the Herald Tribune announced price increases from 5 cents to 10 cents a copy. The other two morning papers, the Daily News and the Mirror—both tabloids—said they had no immediate plans for a price increase. The Times also announced that the price of its Sunday edition would go up from 35 to 40 cents in the circulation zone extending 50 to 200 miles beyond the city.

The evening papers have been 10 cents a copy for sometime.

Transit Bill Assailed As Short on Job Rights

(Continued from Page 1)

will oppose enactment of mass transportation legislation" unless protective amendments are added on the Senate floor.

Debate on the bill was expected to begin Apr. 1.

In the House, the Administration's high-priority Youth Employment bill—a two-part program establishing a Youth Conservation Corps and a "hometown" youth program—was approved by the Education & Labor Committee on an 18-12 party-line vote.

Among Republican amendments defeated were proposals to transfer administration of the program from the Labor Dept. to the Interior Dept., and to require that state recreation areas where youth may be employed be open to persons of all races.

Would Kill Bill

Committee Chairman Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.), who has sponsored anti-discrimination amendments to many bills in the past, said he voted against the amendment offered by Rep. Robert Taft (R-O.) because it was intended to assure that the bill would be killed in the House Rules Committee.

Although Pres. Kennedy had expressed hope that the measure would clear Congress by Easter, it is not expected to move to the House floor until the Administration's single-vote margin of control of the Rules Committee is restored by the return of Rep. Ray J. Madden (D-Ind.). Madden's illness has enabled the coalition of five Republicans and two conservative Democrats to block Administration bills.

In other congressional developments:

- A House Education subcommittee was reported close to bipartisan agreement on a $2.7 billion college construction and student aid bill.
- Eight Republican senators, accusing Kennedy of not doing enough on civil rights, proposed a legislative package going beyond the proposals the President made in a special message earlier this year.
- A House Agriculture subcommittee opened hearings on extension of the Mexican farm labor program. The Labor Dept. is supporting a one-year extension of the program, coupled with major reforms. Labor witneses were scheduled to testify urging that the entire program be scrapped.
- The House Ways & Means Committee, nearing the end of its tax hearings, heard witnesses from the oil industry strongly oppose any change in the oil depletion allowance. The first witness for the oil industry was Gen. Lucius Clay.

NMU Wins Rights On Cableships

New York—The National Maritime Union has been given exclusive recognition under Pres. Kennedy's executive order as bargaining representative for non-officer seamen on Army cableships in the Seattle area.

Col. T. A. Rathje, commander of the Army's Transportation Service agency in Seattle, granted the recognition to bargain for appropriate personnel aboard the cableships Albert J. Myer and Basil O. Lenoir.

OCAW Local Asks Support:

Shell Oil Strikers Still Solid After 7 Months on Picket Line

Houston, Tex.—Unions don't pass out medals for endurance and courage, but if they did, 2,200 members of the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers here could step up and be decorated.

On strike since last Aug. 19 against the Shell Oil Co. and Shell Chemical Co. at nearby Pasadena, not one member of the Local 4-367 bargaining unit has returned to work—and that includes 100 to 150 "free riders." Shell has used supervisors to keep up production.

There is no talk of going back to work, though management stubbornly continues to refuse to bargain, OCAW charges, on a new contract. The strike here is the last of a series which began last summer in various refineries and bulk plants as a result of Big Oil's insistence on "management rights" clauses detailed in a collective bargaining "handbook" distributed by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce.

Every Thursday, OCAW members report to the union hall to pick up strike benefits of $20 a week. Thus far about $1.5 million has been disbursed, and financial reserves of the parent union have been greatly weakened by the union's long fight against highly profitable companies.

Support from union members all over the country has been remarkable, the union has said, and those who can help are asked to send contributions to the OCAW Emergency Fund, c/o Sec.-Treas. A. F. Grospiron, Box 2812, Denver 1, Colo.

When the strike began last summer, other Shell installations were shut by strikes at Wood River, Ill., and Norco, La., near New Orleans. Mobil Oil locals also walked out at St. Louis, East St. Louis, Detroit and East Chicago, Ind.

Settlements at other locations had the effect of stiffening the resistance of Oil Workers at Pasadena to any worsening of their contract protections.

The issue, the OCAW says, is Shell's attempt to take away contract clauses in effect for up to 25 years. The company demands unlimited freedom to assign work and shift schedules as it wishes, and the union cites this typical example: management wants to pay overtime only as required by law—time and a half after 40 hours.

The strike, first in more than 10 years, was the climax of several years of deteriorating conditions. Shell has eliminated jobs and thrown heavy work loads on remaining workers, the union asserts. It has assigned work outside normal craft lines and has contracted out work that plant employes historically have performed.

Overload's the Same

One veteran employe who has worked here since the Pasadena plant was built in 1929—long before the union was organized—says:

"The company wants to turn back the calendar 25 years. The work is a little cleaner now but the overload is just about the same."

Shell, second largest of world oil firms, is owned principally by stockholders in the Netherlands and England, according to union sources.

Shortly after the strike started, Shell resumed operation of the plant and has come close to maintaining the normal 135,000-barrel-a-day production by using supervisory employes. Employes of outside contractors have been hired for some maintenance jobs, OCAW reports.

FOUR DAYS ON, FOUR DAYS OFF is the work schedule enjoyed by members of Meat Cutters Local 551 under their contract with an Anaheim, Calif., packing company. Here Robert Anglim, all dressed up for the occasion, pauses en route to his job in the frozen baked goods section to greet H. W. Bridgford (left), who runs the plant for his father, and Local Sec. Harold Woodward.

Insurance Firms Defy NLRB on Bargaining

Five insurance companies have refused to bargain with the Insurance Workers, winners of representation elections in single-office units, in a move the union calls a "delaying tactic" to discourage organizing.

The firms have refused to accept a National Labor Relations Board ruling that a union may represent insurance workers in offices smaller than statewide in extent. The ruling first was made in a case involving the Quaker City Life Insurance Co., at whose office in Alexandria, Va., six insurance agents and a clerk voted for the IWIU as their bargaining agent.

The board found Quaker City guilty of an unfair labor practice and ordered it to bargain. When it refused, the NLRB asked the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to enforce its ruling and a decision is expected momentarily. The loser may appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Since the Quaker City ruling the board has found two other firms guilty of unfair practices—the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., at two district offices in Wilmington, Del., and the Equitable Life Insurance Co. for two district offices in Cleveland and one in Lorain, O.

In each case the NLRB found that smaller units were appropriate and, after hearings, board examiners reported "the respondent admits that it has refused to bargain with the union but contends that the union was not properly certified in that the unit found by the board . . . was not an appropriate unit."

In two other cases board examiners have recommended that Metropolitan be found in violation of the law for refusing to bargain with the union in its offices in Philadelphia, Pa., and Woonsocket, R. I. A similar finding was made against Equitable at Washington, D. C.

The union has filed charges of refusal to bargain against Western & Southern Life at McKeesport and Wilkinsburg, Pa., and against the Life Insurance Co. of Virginia at Petersburg, Va.

The union said the NLRB's right to decide appropriate bargaining units has been well-established by the courts.

"This kind of delaying tactic will cause some of our election victories to evaporate," said IWIU Sec.-Treas. William A. Gillen. "In an industry with a high turnover of employes, 25 percent of the members in these units will be gone by the time the final ruling is handed down."

He said the companies "have all the money in the world and lots of legal talent." Refusals to bargain, Gillen said, "gain time and put us to a lot of expense, which we can ill afford."

Insurance Workers Ask Strike Support

Insurance Workers' Pres. George L. Russ has called on IWIU's 200 locals and all other union members to support a strike of Missouri and Ohio agents against the Monumental Life Insurance Co.

Some 300 agents on Mar. 18 began picketing district offices in 11 Ohio cities and in St. Louis, Kansas City and St. Joseph, Mo.

Monumental has bargained with the union for 25 years. The company proposed a major revision this year in commission payments which members turned down. The firm then refused to negotiate any improvements in previous offers, Russ said.

Growing Support Seen For Health Care Bill

Two spokesmen for the Kennedy Administration have expressed high optimism that growing public support of the President's plan for social security hospital insurance for the aged will lead to its enactment by Congress this year.

Presidential Assistant Lawrence F. O'Brien said "the prospects are good" that the House Ways & Means Committee will vote out a health care bill that will win the acceptance of the House. He also said that the November elections had created a decisive majority for the labor-backed bill in the Senate, which turned down the proposal last year by a margin of only two votes.

Health, Education & Welfare Under Sec. Ivan A. Nestingen said "there is a clear majority" for the legislation in both houses of Congress stemming from overwhelming public support of the program. He noted that the department had received nearly 50,000 letters on health care for the aged last year which showed that the public favored the President's social security approach by a ratio of more than 2.5 to 1.

The statements by O'Brien and Nestingen went to the National Council of Senior Citizens, which is spearheading a nationwide campaign for the old-age hospital insurance program. The council is headed by former Rep. Aime J. Forand (D-R.I.).

O'Brien noted that the Ways & Means Committee, which failed to report the bill last year, may well be occupied until mid-July with the Administration's tax proposals and the debt ceiling limit. He predicted, however, that once those high-priority matters are out of the way, the committee would turn its attention to the health care bill, again sponsored in the House by Rep. Cecil R. King (D-Calif.) and in the Senate by Sen. Clinton P. Anderson (D-N.M.).

Some committee members reserved judgment on the social security plan last year until they could study the workings of the Kerr-Mills Act of 1960, which provides federal aid to states for public assistance to the "medically indigent" aged.

HEW recently reported that as of last November only half the states had acted to put Kerr-Mills provisions into effect, and that even among these benefits varied widely.

Auto Workers Propose Joint Industry Studies

Detroit—The Auto Workers have proposed that major auto and agricultural implement companies and the union prepare for 1964 contract negotiations by setting up joint study committees—a separate committee for each company—to meet at least a year in advance of the start of actual negotiations.

Careful advance study of joint problems is advisable, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said in letters to presidents of General Motors Corp., Ford Motor, Chrysler, American Motors, Intl. Harvester, Allis-Chalmers and John Deere Co., because such studies have proved helpful in other companies.

The usual 60-day bargaining period is not long enough to work out solutions to complicated issues, he said, and the failure of the collective bargaining process might increase pressure on government to intervene in such a way as to "leave little room for private decisions freely arrived at by labor and management."

Authorized by Board

Reuther wrote that the UAW executive board had authorized him to propose that management and labor jointly study such problems as these:

- The creation of new job opportunities for younger workers, for older workers too young to retire, and for members of minority groups.
- The development of methods to "cushion the impact" of automation and plant relocation on workers, companies and communities.
- Plans to improve job security, health plans and income security, and ways of raising living standards "to levels compatible with the possibilities of our potentially—but still far from actually—affluent society."

Reuther observed that management and the UAW will be faced in 1964 negotiations with not only the need for resolving a host of technical issues involved in the improvement of present programs, but also with the obligation to "develop imaginative and effective new solutions to serious and urgent" new problems.

The "enormous complexity of the problems we face," he said, "seems to dictate that you and we go to the bargaining table in 1964 better prepared than ever before" to meet our joint responsibilities.

Those responsibilities, he went on, can best be met through a "joint problem-solving approach" providing "ample time and the proper atmosphere for thorough and objective exploration."

Beginning work a year or more in advance would mean, according to Reuther's proposal, that July 1, 1963, should be the starting date for talks in the auto industry. In the agricultural implement industry, it would be no later than Aug. 1, 1964.

'Obligation to Contribute'

Admitting that management and the union "obviously cannot hope to solve, through collective bargaining, all the economic problems" facing the nation, Reuther said that nevertheless "neither can your company or our union ignore our obligation to contribute to the solution of those problems" to the maximum degree possible by the bargaining process.

The UAW head warned that labor-management relations are facing a "crisis which may well determine whether free collective bargaining may survive" and said both sides must redouble their efforts to prove it can work.

In 1961 the UAW originally gave management, instead of a set of bargaining demands, a list of problems which should be solved jointly. This year, it reminded the companies, it still believes that "the best solutions are apt to be those developed . . . through a joint thinking-through and working out" of common problems.

"We in the UAW are convinced," Reuther asserted, "that negotations will proceed more smoothly, that dangers of breakdown through misunderstanding will be minimized, and that sounder solutions to problems will emerge . . . if we thoroughly prepare ourselves . . . through joint study."

The UAW is prepared, Reuther said, to set up joint study committees with or without "outside" experts. The committees would not be authorized to bargain. They would be confined to "assembling relevant data and to exploring and studying objectively and in good faith the problems that must be faced" when bargaining starts.

Work Injuries Drop In Manufacturing

Work injuries in manufacturing plants declined 9 percent during the fourth quarter of 1962, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported—from 11.7 to 10.6 per million manhours worked, well under the annual average rate of 11.4 for 1962 and 11 for 1961.

A Curious Document

THE REPORT OF THE CLAY COMMITTEE on foreign aid is a curious document—so curious that the recognized dean of columnists, Walter Lippmann, could find little to say except that it shouldn't have been published and the committee's staff director had to announce that the majority proposals had been misinterpreted.

Lippmann's comment was to the effect that the report should have been used for internal consumption only, as a kind of private memorandum for persons with enough sophistication to know what was meant. The staff director, William T. Dentzler, Jr., said newspaper stories showed "serious confusion."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany filed the only disenting opinion to the majority report. He warned in pointed language that in the hotly-contested issue of foreign aid great danger arises when the "view of the national interest" revealed is "too narrow," and that "arguments [may] be taken out of context."

This is precisely what happened, of course. Moreover, the federation president's dissent was aimed primarily at the majority's approach—the "business" approach that measures operations on a strictly limited scale, with no clearly-expressed conviction that U.S. assistance programs should be designed to lift the social and economic circumstances of workers and to assure the opportunity for the development of free and vital trade union movements. Here, Gen. Lucius Clay made it clear that the majority ruled out an emphasis on improved social conditions as not "germane."

One test of all this will come eventually when the Administration and the Appropriations Committees meet in the annual battle over money for foreign assistance programs.

Rep. Otto Passman of Louisiana, chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee that doles out funds, certainly believed he got aid and comfort from the majority report. Passman last year managed to cut $1 billion from Pres. Kennedy's proposed expenditures of $4.9 billion.

A second test comes with the programs themselves. There is no evidence that the American people think "business" standards should be considered alone in our conceptions of foreign aid. On the contrary, the objective that commands public support for the Alliance for Progress is precisely the objective of using U.S. aid to assist in promoting social and internal reforms.

The President himself has an opportunity to put his Administration's program back in context when he sends his special foreign aid message to Congress.

A Decisive Handful

NEVER LET IT BE SAID again that it makes little difference whether a handful of votes, more or less, is cast in a statewide or nationwide election. Minnesota has a new governor, former Lieut. Gov. Karl Rolvaag, more than four months after the people of the state went to the polls, with a handful of voters furnishing the decisive plurality.

The incumbent Republican, then Gov. Elmer L. Andersen, appeared to be winner last November after a long, slow count of ballots from the more remote precincts.

But Rolvaag and his supporters believed that irregularities—not fraud or intentional vote-stealing—had affected the 142-vote margin credited to Andersen. They were able to finance the costly and laborious process of a recount. Rolvaag was certified as winner by a 91-vote edge.

What if just 92 of the Rolvaag voters had stayed home?

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, March 30, 1963 No. 13

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

Bothered and Bewildered:

A Congressman Finds It Tough To Know What the Voters Want

The following is excerpted from a letter from Rep. Elmer J. Holland (D-Pa.) to A. L. Edmonds, executive director of the Pennsylvania State Chamber of Commerce, in reply to a chamber request that he support moves to reduce Pres. Kennedy's spending requests.

MAY I ASK if the state chamber has contacted any local chambers regarding this policy? Gov. William W. Scranton was in Washington . . . to seek congressional assistance from the Pennsylvania delegation for more defense orders to the industries in our state. He also requested assistance on other programs.

The University of Pittsburgh has written me asking for additional federal money for its ROTC program.

Practically every community which I represent — boroughs, townships, third-class cities, the city of Pittsburgh and the county of Allegheny—has written asking my help in securing assistance in expediting their applications for projects under the Accelerated Public Works Program—and these are needed projects.

I have been requested by the Regional Industrial Development Corp. to increase the size of the retraining program of the Administration so that the unemployed can be trained and available for the newer industries we are trying to get.

Gov. Scranton has stated he is going to lower the requirements for the present medicare program, thereby permitting more people to be covered and increasing the amount of money the federal government will have to contribute.

Requests have been coming to my desk to see if requirements for small business loans can be lowered for Pennsylvania as it is difficult for our small businessmen to secure loans under the present standards. Such loans are needed in Pennsylvania and only the federal government will give consideration to their requests.

With the apparent need for additional educational opportunities, for present studies and future students as well as for our adults and those unemployed, requests are being presented for federal assistance for communities to improve their present facilities, enlarge them, construct new ones and to help finance junior colleges and technical schools for needed education after high school.

We have been asked to increase federal funds in an effort to improve our present vocational programs, to bring them up to date and to help provide modern equipment.

Every college and university in the state would like additional funds for the student loan program and for the enlargement of present facilities. This, of course, comes under the National Defense Education Act.

SELDOM DOES a week go by that I am not asked by one of the companies in the Pittsburgh area to help secure for it some government orders.

With the continued use of automation and other technological developments by our Pennsylvania industries we are witnessing the replacing of manpower by machines—and this is going into the white-collar group as well as the blue-collar workers. We are also witnessing no rush on the part of new industries in settling here although over $100 million was spent by the state, the local communities and private financial interests through the Pennsylvania Industrial Development Agency during the past years. And Gov. Scranton has suggested that the state's share be raised 5 percent more.

Look at the communities in Pennsylvania that requested and received aid under the Area Redevelopment Act. What would happen to them if federal spending would be stopped?

Recently the United States Chamber of Commerce testified before the Ways & Means Committee asking the '64 spending be kept at '63 levels—but—they wanted a tax reduction in the amount of $7 billion and this, admittedly, would produce a deficit.

It is rather difficult to know just what is wanted, here in Washington, when we receive letters such as yours asking for less spending and others asking for additional federal money.

"How long have you had this friendly feeling toward umpires?"

Morgan Says:

Tested by Mutual Good Will, Two Wrongs Can Make a Right

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

SOMETIMES, or so I am prepared to argue, two wrongs can make a right. At least when two mutually conflicting misconceptions are isolated, identified and conceded, misunderstandings can be cleared away and people on both sides may learn something in the process.

Six weeks ago I commented in this corner on an exchange of correspondence between Robert R. Pauley, president of the ABC Radio Network, and John J. Stewart, a part-time teacher and an official of the publications and information services at Utah State University in Logan, Utah.

Morgan

The subject was a nationwide college essay contest which ABC and the AFL-CIO co-sponsor annually in connection with this correspondent's nightly radio program. Pauley had taken sharp exception to a note from Stewart stating he did not care to have his students participate in a contest sponsored by a network whose TV affiliate had recently aired an interview with Alger Hiss. He also indicated he thought too many radio and TV commentators were not objective enough or ethical enough in their handling of news.

Disturbed over what he considered an unwarranted denial to Utah State students of an opportunity to compete for graduate scholarships (the contest prizes), Pauley challenged Stewart to put their original exchange of correspondence on a bulletin board at USU and invite student comment. This challenge, it turns out, was unnecessary. For, as University Pres. Daryl Chase later wrote Pauley and as Dean Carlton Culmsee of the College of Humanities & Arts wrote the AFL-CIO, announcements of the essay contest had been distributed on the campus before Stewart indicated to Pauley he wasn't going to distribute them to his students.

Culmsee complained, with understandable concern, that the "image" of Utah State had been "unfairly damaged." He emphasized that Stewart was not a spokesman for the university and he interpreted Stewart's note to mean that simply as an individual teacher he was rejecting a suggestion that the contest be made a "class assignment."

This reporter hastens gladly to repair any damage that may have been done to USU's image by the original airing of the Pauley-Stewart exchange, by trying now to put events in proper perspective here. However, I must emphasize there was no attempt in the first instance to malign the university, but simply to question the action of an individual educator which seemed repressive.

The point which motivated me more than anything else to make the commentary was the courage of Robert Pauley as a businessman and a broadcasting executive to engage in public controversy—a courage which, I am afraid, has been much more the exception than the rule not only in business but in other segments of our society.

THIS SUBSEQUENT clarification that Stewart's view about this particular issue did not represent the university's view but that the university did not propose to deny his expression of his own opinions—all this is a happy reflection of the fact that Utah State is operating in the best traditions of American education. If free institutions mean anything, they mean the freedom to discuss, to test opposing views and choose among them without the compulsion to force conformity with either left, right or middle.

This small incident is another encouraging example, I think, of an improvement in intellectual atmosphere on college and university campuses in this country. A decade or so ago too many students, too many teachers and too many college presidents dodged controversy or discouraged it for fear of reprisals in the darkness of fear that the phenomenon of McCarthyism had managed to spread over the land.

Not everything is bright sunshine yet but the climate seems to get better every day. Indeed, Utah State's sister institution, the University of Utah at Salt Lake City, recently held a highly ambitious and highly successful week-long series of seminars under the label "Challenge."

This Challenge effort came from the University of Utah students themselves. "The administration was uneasy," my source reports; "the faculty was skeptical. (The program) was a dandy."

Indeed the head of the university's department of philosophy, Dr. Waldemer P. Read, even challenged the challengers, lashed out at the program, said the participants read like a "who's who of the status quo."

One panel complained about the conformity of college students and another about the failure of college professors to go beyond "brinkmanship"—that is to say, raising controversial issues in class without really trying to change preconceived opinions.

What is the younger generation coming to?

Washington Reports:

Youth Work Opportunities Bill Urgent Need, Humphrey Says

SINCE UNEMPLOYMENT among young people is higher proportionately than for any other group, the Youth Employment Opportunities bill is urgently needed, Sen. Hubert Humphrey (D-Minn.) asserted in an interview on the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports to the People, carried on almost 600 radio stations.

Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R-Vt.), a member of the Labor & Public Welfare Committee with Humphrey, agreed that the youth unemployment problem is crucial, but proposed amendments to the bill.

Humphrey explained that the Youth Employment Opportunities bill has two titles. The first, for a Youth Conservation Corps, would provide in the first year for up to 15,000 "young men of good character" between the ages of 16 and 21 to work in national forests, national parks and on federal public lands. The period of employment would be from six months to two years, the basic salary $60 a month plus board, room, clothing, medical care and education.

Title II of the bill would set up a Home-town Youth Corps, open to men and women between 16 and 21, for work in parks, playgrounds, settlement houses and elsewhere for non-profit organizations and state and local authorities. The cost would be borne between the federal and local governments on a 50-50 or 25-75 basis.

PROUTY OBJECTED to Title I, saying that a young man who went into the Youth Conservation Corps would not "acquire any skill which would enable him to obtain gainful employment when he leaves, so that he is going to be right back where he started and perhaps unhappier than if he had never gone to the camp."

The money might better be spent, he went on, for vocational training in the cities and towns where they live. He said he might therefore favor expansion of the project proposed in Title II.

Humphrey insisted that members of the YCC would get an education as well as perform useful work.

Prouty defended the cost of the bill, saying that "young people who are dropping out of school, who are not receiving proper educations in their high schools are not able to get jobs, and if they become welfare cases, we pay a great deal more money to take care of them."

Humphrey blasted Republican opposition, such as that coming from Senate Minority Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.) and House Leader Charles A. Halleck (Ind.) "as partisan and narrow."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

WHEN THE U.S. CHAMBER OF COMMERCE recently attacked the National Labor Relations Board, calling for a "full dress congressional investigation," it accused the board of failing to cut its backlog of undecided cases. The NLRB's official testimony causes some concern about the carelessness with which the CofC handles facts.

NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch testified Mar. 14 before a Senate Appropriations subcommittee headed by Sen. Hill of Alabama. In justifying the board's request for an additional $2 million in funds to handle an anticipated heavier work load, McCulloch gave these figures:

The number of contested unfair labor practice cases handled in fiscal 1961, ending June 30 of that year, was 415. (This was after McCulloch himself had been in office only a few months.) But in McCulloch's first full fiscal year—the next year ending June 30, 1962—the number of contested unfair practices cases processed rose to 640—an increase of 54 percent.

Despite the heavy increase in the workload, the backlog of undecided cases of that type had been reduced from about 440 at the end of fiscal 1961 to "just a little over 300," representing a reduction of about 31 percent, at the end of fiscal 1962.

In the July-December period of 1961, the board took an average of 332 days to decide unfair labor practice cases—from the time a charge was filed until the board had issued its decision. In the last six months of 1962, this time lapse had been cut to 302 days.

* * *

McCULLOCH TOLD the subcommittee the time lapse had been even more sharply reduced in contested elections to determine whether or not workers wish to choose a union as bargaining agent.

The handling of representation election cases was delegated in 1961 to regional directors, McCulloch pointed out, under authority conferred by Congress. In fiscal 1961, it took an average of 87 days from the time a petition was filed until the board issued a directive for an election to be held. In fiscal 1962, this had been reduced to 45 days.

Moreover, he remarked, in 80 percent of the cases the decisions of the regional directors have been accepted by the parties involved.

Thus, he continued, the backlog of undecided representation cases involving a contest had been cut from 540 at the end of fiscal 1961 to 150 at the end of fiscal 1962.

Is this the record the CofC had in mind when it told Congress that "past experience [with the NLRB] has proven that more money and more personnel have not cut the backlog"?

* * *

THERE CAN BE NO DEFENSE for the misrepresentation of facts in a claim that McCulloch's testimony was not known until Mar. 14. Last January, NLRB General Counsel Stuart Rothman reported to Congress that the workload had increased heavily but that the time lapse in handling cases had been sharply reduced.

The average time for issuing a complaint in unfair practice cases was cut from 143 days in calendar 1958 to 48 days in 1962, Rothman reported. The average trial examiner's hearing was completed within 98 days of the filing of a complaint, whereas completion of a hearing required an average of 192 days in calendar 1958.

The workload in 1962 was 25,366 unfair practice charges and representation cases, he said—7 percent higher than in calendar 1961, 47 percent higher than in 1958.

McCulloch cited an estimated further increase in the workload of about 6 percent in the next fiscal year. To handle this, he said, the board requested a 3 percent increase in its funds—only $600,000 to support 53 additional employes. The remainder of the $2 million in extra money requested was to pay the salary increases Congress itself voted last year.

The CofC has no legitimate charge that the NLRB under McCulloch is inefficient. What it really wants is to get back to the Eisenhower-appointed board of the middle 50s—the one that really was inefficient—because it doesn't like the way the board is now enforcing the law that asserts the right of workers to organize freely.

THE NEED FOR employment opportunities among American youth is critical, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Sen. Winston L. Prouty (R-Vt.), right, agreed on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People. Humphrey urged passage of the proposed Youth Employment Opportunities Bill, while Prouty would amend it to provide more vocational training.

Full Union Rights Asked In Hospitals

New York—Legislation to grant employes of non-profit hospitals "the same collective bargaining rights and dignity guaranteed by law to workers in private industry" has been urged by Building Service Employes Local 114 in a telegram to Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller (R).

Peter Ottley, president of the 15,000-member local which includes hospital and nursing home employes, said a hospital-disputes bill sponsored by Rockefeller which would establsh compulsory arbitration and prohibit strikes would be a "roadblock to orderly, honorable and realistic settlements."

He said his union has included arbitration of contract renewals in its agreements with New York hospitals "voluntarily," but "not under the compulsion of the law."

Ottley wired Rockefeller that "as presently drawn, the Administration bill actually runs counter to your avowed purpose of extending first-class citizenship to hospital workers."

He added that the proposed arbitration clause "provides that awards can be taken to the courts and there modified or entirely vacated, thus making even this device ineffective."

Work Norm Studies Seen 'Inadequate'

New Orleans—Members of the American Institute of Industrial Engineers were told at a regional meeting here that their profession is "in trouble" with most labor unions because of failure to improve inadequate methods of measuring work standards.

"National and local unions are becoming more, rather than less, critical," observed Bertram Gottlieb, industrial engineer with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, who was one of the chief speakers at the conference.

He urged expansion of the scope of industrial engineering education to stimulate a truly professional outlook among practitioners in the field, whom he described as now no more than "master mechanics."

Gottlieb said the recent emphasis on mathematics and statistics "must not be allowed to bury other needs" and urged that more stress be placed on the human aspects of production. He suggested that students of industrial engineering be encouraged to elect such study options as physiology, industrial psychology and sociology.

Foreign Policy Aid Named by IUE

Appointment of Educational Dir. Ben D. Segal as the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers first director of international affairs has been announced by IUE Pres. James D. Carey.

Segal, who will continue to serve in the education post, has represented the IUE at many international conferences. He also has served as a lecturer or faculty member at labor schools and seminars in Europe, Asia and Latin America. As a Fulbright scholar in England in 1953-54, he studied workers' education programs conducted by British unions.

Carey also announced the calling of the IUE's first Intl. Affairs Conference, to be held Apr. 19-21 at the Carnegie Center in New York. The program is being arranged with the aid of the Foreign Policy Association and will include sessions at the nearby United Nations.

BOOKS FOR LIBRARY of the University of Minnesota Political Science Dept. have been presented by the Minneapolis AFL-CIO. Shown with a collection of bound copies of the Congressional Record, 1916-1940, are Chairman Charles H. McLaughlin of the department and Pres. Robert Gomsrud, right, of the central body.

CWA Seeks Pay Hike, Improved Pensions

Chicago—Pension plan improvements and a "substantial" general wage increase for 380,000 U.S. and Canadian telephone workers are high on the list of goals for 1963-64 bargaining set by the Communications Workers.

In a two-day session here, the union's 59-member collective bargaining policy committee reviewed the profit position and growth potential of the industry, and drafted a program for use in negotiations starting shortly for 100,000 Bell System workers and later for some 280,000 others.

The committee concluded that "upward wage adjustments" in the American communications system would be "a stimulus for the economy."

In a resolution adopted by the CWA executive board and 40 rank-and-file workers from the U.S. and Canada, the delegates said the tax reduction and reform proposed by Pres. Kennedy would "help effect a reversal in the present downward trend of the economy."

"The private sector of the economy should not wait on the government's program but must, with vitality and purpose, continue to do those things which experience has demonstrated contribute to a vigorous expanding economy," the committee concluded.

It called for an increase in all minimum pensions to $125 a month, and the addition of survivors' rights to existing pension plans. Other portions of the bargaining program include:

- Correction of job-structure inequities.
- Company-paid comprehensive health insurance for every CWA worker, pensioner and dependent.
- Elimination of all social security deductions from pension benefit calculations.
- Total life insurance coverage, fully paid by the employer, under existing and future plans.

The committee authorized Pres. Joseph A. Beirne to order intensive studies of two subjects for future use in bargaining—a reduced workweek and an "industrial sabbatical leave" to begin after 21 years of service and increasing with each additional seven years.

Beirne praised committee members for focusing attention on long-range problems as well as immediate goals and asserted that the "tremendous strides in technology and productivity require steps like these if Americans are to have jobs and to enjoy the benefits which our economy is capable of providing for every citizen."

'A New Sense of Hope . . .':

Mental Health Plan Backed by AFL-CIO

Labor "wholeheartedly supports" Pres. Kennedy's proposal for a "wholly new national approach" to mental illness and mental retardation, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told a House Commerce subcommittee.

The Administration program, Biemiller said, would bring "a new sense of hope" and "a dramatically increased chance of success" to efforts "to help free millions of American families from some of the pain and anguish of mental illness and mental retardation."

Proposed Earlier

Kennedy proposed to Congress in a special message earlier this year a federal matching grant program, beginning in the 1965 fiscal year, to establish comprehensive community mental health centers. Federal funds would cover up to 75 percent of construction and initial staffing costs. The President requested $4.2 million in immediate appropriations for planning grants.

"If we launch a broad new mental health program now," he said, "it will be possible within a decade or two to reduce the number of patients now under custodial care by 50 percent or more."

To meet problems of mental retardation, the President asked federal planning grants for states, construction grants for community centers, special education programs for retarded children and increased teacher training, plus federally-financed research.

Biemiller told the subcommittee, headed by Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts (D-Ala.), that programs "on the scale that is needed cannot be expected to be undertaken without federal funds . . . Local communities will not be able to take on the whole of this burden, unaided, at the outset. So federal funds . . . are essential."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, Biemiller noted, has strongly endorsed the President's "highly imaginative and thoroughly practical proposal."

The council resolution noted that "since mental retardation has been found to be so frequently associated with deprivation of the basic necessities of life and poor medical care, a broad program of prevention is fundamental."

While endorsing a provision in the Administration bill enlarging the Federal Hospital Council from eight to 12 members and assigning it advisory responsibilities in the mental health and retardation fields, the AFL-CIO said its basic composition should not be changed.

At present, it is composed equally of persons in the health field and representatives of the public using health services. This 50-50 ratio, emphasizing the importance of public members, should be continued in expanding the council, Biemiller said. The Administration bill would give health professionals an 8-4 majority.

Sears Boycott to Go On, RCIA Says in 3rd Year

The Retail Clerks' nationwide consumer boycott against Sears Roebuck & Co., now nearing the end of its third year, will continue until the chain "recognizes and respects" the right of its employes to organize and bargain for legitimate objectives, the head of the boycott committee has declared.

RCIA Vice Pres. Samuel J. Meyers, in a review of the boycott, noted that it was launched July 23, 1960, after Sears fired some 260 San Francisco employes who had refused to cross a Machinists' picket line, invoking a clause in their contract which permitted them to respect authorized picket lines.

The workers subsequently were reinstated as the result of an arbitration decision and court order, but the RCIA continued and intensified the consumer boycott.

The San Francisco incident, Meyers observed, was the culmination of a long "wearing-down" program instituted by Sears to destroy existing unions within its stores. Since the start of the boycott, he noted, the union has been sustained by arbitrators, the National Labor Relations Board and the courts in a number of disputes with the giant retailing firm.

Nevertheless, Meyers declared, Sears continues to make "systematic war on every effort of its employes toward unionization."

"Sears not only refuses to bargain for union security," he said, "but is repudiating union security commitments in bargaining units where they previously existed."

The AFL-CIO Executive Council, at its August 1960 meeting, endorsed the Clerks' boycott, urging all trade unionists and their friends not to patronize Sears stores "until management ceases to interfere with the self-organization of employes and until it demonstrates good faith acceptance of the union security clauses in its contracts."

Goldfinger Warns on Jobs, Lag of Real Earnings

New York—High and rising unemployment and the lag of real earnings behind productivity should be of deep concern to investors and their advisers, the AFL-CIO's chief economist declared in a speech to the New York Society of Security Analysts.

"It seems to me that, in the long run, Wall Street has as much of a stake as the rest of us in the need to achieve full employment, maximum utilization of our plant and equipment and a balanced, growing economy," said Nathaniel Goldfinger, the federation's research director.

He pointed out that since 1956 real earnings of factory production and maintenance workers have lagged behind the productivity increase for the entire private economy. The lag has also been true, but to a lesser extent, he noted, for all persons employed by private business, including executives.

Thus, Goldfinger commented, "for the past six or seven years, many large groups of employed wage and salary earners have received only a small share of the benefits of the economy's improving efficiency to produce, while significant numbers of working people have been jobless or employed only part time."

This "slow but continuing trend . . . toward the kind of lopsided economic relationships that existed in the late 1920s" poses a "truly important problem for the future of the American economy," he continued.

He noted that wage costs per unit of industrial output have been heading downward for almost five years and probably will continue to do so.

This would be a "healthy development," he said, if it had been accompanied by substantial increases in wages and salaries. However, the fact that it has been achieved at the expense of income improvements for large segments of the population makes it "bad news for the national economy," Goldfinger declared.

"If I were a stock broker or a security analyst," he said, "I would be at least somewhat concerned about these real trends of recent years, rather than with the myth of rising wage costs.

"The national economy cannot possibly be prosperous for any long period of time on the basis of a narrowing pyramid—with a slowly shrinking foundation of mass consumer buying power. And the obvious foundation for securities, over the long run, is the soundness of the national economy."

IATSE Picks Miller As Vice President

Houston, Tex.—Business Agent Edward J. Miller of Houston Moving Picture Machine Operators Local 279 was elected a vice president of the Theatrical Stage Employes at a meeting of the general executive board here.

Miller succeeds the late Albert S. Johnstone of New Orleans. He has handled business affairs of the Houston local for the past 35 years.

AFL-CIO Backs Hart Bill:

Truth in Packaging Act Held Needed to End Retail 'Chaos'

"Truth in packaging" legislation is needed to end "chaos in the retail market place," the AFL-CIO has declared in testimony before a Senate subcommittee.

Odd-shaped packages labeled "jumbo," "kingsize" and "giant" present a "Tower of Babel" to the housewife seeking the most economical buy, Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair declared.

Although existing law requires that statements of net weight be carried on containers, these are often in small type, in colors which blend with the packages and in hard-to-find locations, he noted.

Once having found the weight, the housewife frequently is "no better off than before" because of the "extraordinary" assortment of weight units, with differences "extending even to fractions of ounces," Fair declared.

As a result, "it becomes almost impossible to make any ready comparison of the price of one brand against another or of one size package with another, even for the same brand."

The bill, sponsored by Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), was given strong endorsement also by two Administration officials, Food & Drug Commissioner George P. Larrick and Wilbur J. Cohen, assistant secretary of Health, Education & Welfare.

Cohen said the Administration and HEW "wholeheartedly endorse" the measure.

Larrick praised a provision which would enable his agency to issue regulations which would have the effect of law to correct packaging abuses. The bill would "facilitate and encourage compliance with commonly accepted standards of honesty in the labeling and packaging of consumer products," he said.

Opposed by Industry

An industry spokesman, Robert E. Graham of the Owens-Illinois Glass Co., told the Senate Judiciary subcommittee that no regulatory packaging legislation is needed. He said the public is being "served as never before" by products packaged in a variety of convenient containers with pinched waists, pouring spouts and long necks.

However, Prof. Irston R. Barnes of the Columbia University Graduate School of Business told the subcommittee the Hart bill would be "good for the economy and good for business."

Fair said the AFL-CIO has a strong interest in the legislation because families of union members "are concerned not only with improved wage income, but also with what that income will buy."

He said modern packaging has brought "many benefits" including convenience and sanitation. But it has also brought, he emphasized, "uneconomic effects which consumers must pay for—in the form of 'packaged air,' in inefficient shapes designed to maximize advertising coverage, and in the extra costs of storing, shipping and shelving a myriad chaos of different sizes and shapes of containers."

The AFL-CIO, he declared, is not opposed to "attractive and imaginative packaging—on the contrary, we welcome it."

"As consumers we want only to protect our pocketbook at the marketplace without a refresher course in mathematics, the burden of a portable calculator, or the nuisance of a magnifying glass," he said.

UAW Assails Romney On Jobless Benefits Bill

Detroit—The Auto Workers have charged that two Republican bills now before the Michigan legislature would run counter to a pledge by Gov. George W. Romney (R) and actually would obstruct the payment of jobless benefits to workers laid off as a result of strikes that do not involve or benefit them.

UAW Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock said that neither bill, one of which is backed by the governor himself, would carry out the intent expressed by Romney in his State of the State message to assure the payment of benefits to such workers.

The issue involves repeated attempts by the GOP-controlled legislature to reverse a policy set by the Michigan Supreme Court in 1959. The court ruled that Michigan auto workers laid off during a 1958 strike at Ford's Canton, O., plant, because of what the company called "parts shortages," were entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. The decision is now known popularly as the Ford-Canton Rule.

Former Gov. John Swainson (D) twice vetoed Republican-backed bills to overturn this policy and Romney, who assumed the governorship this year, said he would have vetoed the 1962 measure himself.

While the UAW sees no need for any legislation, it has offered to cooperate in drafting a law "which would eliminate the possibility of the abuse which employers allege while avoiding abuses that would adversely affect workers."

One bill recently approved by the Republican majority of the House Labor Committee, however, "uses a great many words to say, in effect, that any worker laid off as a result of a strike against any plant of a multiplant corporation will automatically be denied benefits whether or not he has any interest in the strike."

Woodcock declared the House bill is "in direct conflict" with Romney's expressed intent. He charged that it had been drafted by the "Big 3" auto producers and had been pushed through the Labor Committee in an "incredible performance" during which it was put to a vote before committee members were given a chance to see the text.

The governor's own bill, approved by the Senate Labor Committee, also "falls far short" of his announced objective, Woodcock said. Instead of "assuring" workers of benefits if they are laid off as a result of a strike from which they will not benefit, he said, Romney's bill "sets up a series of technical obstacles that would make it difficult or impossible for such workers to obtain their benefits."

He said the bill would require state agencies and courts to "presume" that workers will benefit from a strike that led to their layoff under circumstances that in many cases would have "no bearing whatsoever on the actual likelihood that they would benefit."

"In each instance," Woodcock said, "the workers would have the burden of proving that the facts in the specific case are different from the wholesale presumption. In effect, the workers would be considered guilty unless they could prove themselves innocent."

2-YEAR-OLD Mark Erickson of Butte, Mont., has a big smile for William R. Bennett, the locomotive fireman who risked his life to snatch the boy from the path of his train. Bennett was honored with the annual safety award of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen at a banquet in Washington, D. C.

Air Pollution Control Pressed by AFL-CIO

The AFL-CIO has urged Congress to take immediate steps to control the air pollution now affecting the health of an estimated 85 million or more United States inhabitants.

The control program, proposed in a bill introduced by Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts (D-Ala.), is "headed in the right direction," AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller testified, but labor believes it "should go even further" to meet the present and future dimensions of the problem, he said.

Air pollution, like water pollution, is a problem that will not stay within artificial boundaries, Biemiller said, because "air moves, just as water flows, with a fine contempt for man-made boundaries."

Specific Points Made

Warning that the health and safety of the American people are at stake, Biemiller told a House Interstate & Foreign Commerce subcommittee that labor recommends these changes to strengthen the pending bill:

- A proposed grants-in-aid program to state air pollution efforts should be studied with a view toward increasing the duration and financing of the federal assistance.
- The proposed grant of $7 million in fiscal 1968 should be increased. The section spreading the grants over five years represents "a short-range approach to a long-range problem."
- The bill should direct the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare to develop criteria of air quality as affected by any kind of emission or discharge into the atmosphere.

Biemiller urged the subcommittee to study the experience of California, especially its standards for air quality and motor vehicle emissions and its tests for new devices to meet such standards.

"Adequate far-sighted action now," he said, "can protect the health of our citizens from the injurious affects of air pollution" and save the next generation from serious health hazards and from "far greater air pollution costs which we failed to pay in this generation."

He urged the committee to approve a bill which will "start an air pollution control program in line with the national need for an indispensable natural resource, the air we breathe."

Outline of Air Crisis

The witness gave these outlines of the crisis facing the nation because of impure air:

The quality of air, like that of water, is deteriorating as chemicals and other materials are discharged in rapidly increasing amounts, at a rate "even more rapid than the growth of the general population," and these harmful discharges into the air are increased by new technological processes, by the growth of urban settlements, and by industrialization.

Air pollution control becomes more difficult, Biemiller told the subcommittee, as the number of motor vehicles increases.

Just as population, urban life and industrial production impose greater demands on a watershed, so do they burden the airshed—an area of varying size which relies upon a single air mass in the skies above.

Many U.S. areas are suffering serious air pollution problems, Biemiller said, citing 19 states such as California, Connecticut, Illinois, Ohio, New York and Pennsylvania which have reported air pollution in urban and nearby rural areas.

"Air pollution is causing large-scale damage to livestock, crops, timber and recreational areas," he stated, "in addition to the economic blight it brings to the city areas themselves."

The nation does, he assured the subcommittee, have enough scientific knowledge to put pollution controls into effect.

Sea Unions 'Unalterably' Oppose Bonner Forced-Arbitration Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

labor to be free to work, but not free to stop work no matter what the problem, the privation or the provocation," he added.

The recent ILA strike, he asserted, came about because employers expected the federal government "to help them hold down the size of settlement."

Employers merely "went through the motions of collective bargaining," he said, adding:

"They met with us, but they contrived to behave in a manner which kept them just short of the vague boundary line that the National Labor Relations Board has drawn between good faith bargaining and no bargaining at all."

An argument might be made for compulsory arbitration of labor disputes, Gleason said, if management agreed to compulsory arbitration of investment decisions, prices, management salaries and bonuses, and profits.

"Those who today advocate compulsory arbitration evidently believe that they are correcting an error that was originally made on Mt. Sinai," he said. "They have been campaigning ever since to add an 11th commandment, 'Thou Shalt Not Strike'."

Despite the recent 38-day strike, he said, most disputes on the docks "have been settled after a very few days by voluntary agreement of the parties."

Bradley termed the Bonner bill "the first step toward destruction of the economic system under which labor, management and the public have prospered. Whatever may be the annoyance and inconvenience caused by individual labor disputes, the cure proposed here is far worse than the disease."

In other testimony before the committee, Paul Hall, president of the AFL-CIO Maritime Trades Dept. and of the Seafarers, said proposals to impose arbitration "is the way they talked when the trains weren't running on time in Italy. When Mussolini got the trains running on time, the country also found its freedoms had been destroyed in the process."

Hall, who had testified earlier, was recalled for additional questioning. Asked about an alternative proposal which would require the President to submit an arbitration order to Congress before he could enforce it, Hall commented that the question was like asking a convicted man whether he would prefer to be hanged or shot.

Biggest TUC Union Shows Growth in '62

London — Membership in the largest unit of Great Britain's labor movement, the Transport & General Workers, rose by 12,000 in 1962 to a new record total of 1,369,718.

Meany Urges Increase in Foreign Aid

Dissents from Slash Clay Group Favors

(Continued from Page 1)

fice of our own national interest."

Meany sharply challenged the approach to foreign aid as "primarily" a business operation rather than as a means of advancing "economic and social well-being for entire populations of developing countries."

The role of labor itself in countries receiving U.S. aid, he pointed out, is given "scant mention" in the majority report despite history's lesson that "free labor is a priority target" for Communist conquest.

He proposed that the Agency for Intl. Development establish a trade union department to help develop labor, management and government cooperation in economic and social planning in the Alliance for Progress nations and other countries receiving U.S. economic help.

Where necessary, he said, some U.S.-financed projects should be carried out under "direct supervision and management" of AID and Alliance for Progress representatives.

At a press conference, Clay said the majority had "not intended to downgrade the role of labor" but did not consider social conditions in countries receiving U.S. aid "germane to this report."

Private Industry Encouraged

A committee recommendation that no U.S. aid be given for government-owned enterprises which would compete with private industry, he said, was based on a belief that if a project "was not sufficiently economically sound to attract private industry . . . then it did not have any business being built at all."

Clay also said he "would not go so far as to say" that recognition of labor's right to organize and bargain collectively should be a "condition" of U.S. aid, although "we do support the desirability of free trade unions."

The committee's executive director, William T. Dentzler, Jr., stated that contrary to some press reports the majority did not recommend slashing Kennedy's proposed $4.9 billion foreign aid program to $3.4 billion.

Clay said at his news conference that the committee had considered only the programs being carried out with the $3.9 billion appropriated by Congress last year—and the majority of the committee believed these could be continued or phased out at a saving of $500 million during the next fiscal year.

He emphasized that the majority report "did not refer" to new programs requested by the President. The Alliance for Progress program alone, he indicated, "will require some $320 million next year that was not required this year."

Virtually all of the committee-proposed cuts would be in the economic aid program, which cost $2.4 billion last year. Only a negligible reduction could be made in the $1.5 billion military aid program at present, Clay said, although he expressed the view that military costs could be reduced by one-third over a period of years.

The committee majority said only "limited" U.S. assistance should go to African nations, with the burden of the aid on that continent shifted largely to Western European nations. He discounted the risk of Communist economic penetration if U.S. help is withdrawn.

Meany's dissenting statement termed U.S. aid programs "insurance against possible vast military expenditures and sacrifices of American lives." He added:

People Willing to Pay

"I do not accept the view that we cannot afford to pay the full cost for these essential programs nor, I am confident, do the people of the United States."

Commenting on the committee's failure to consider workers' rights in nations helped by the U.S., he declared:

"Certainly if the worker is to bear the brunt of privation and the burden of nation-building—as in the case of developing countries—we cannot expect this vast sector to voluntarily enlist in our cause without rights, without freedom, without justice, without bread."

Meany told Kennedy that the Administration's desire to strengthen the free world has "wide popular support." Declaring that even greater support must be rallied to carry out needed programs, he emphasized that "popular support has never been enlisted by a backward and negativistic viewpoint."

Immediate White House reaction to the report was cautiously phrased. Kennedy wrote Clay thanking the committee members for the "time and effort" they gave to the project and the "expression of support for properly administered mutual defense and development programs."

In addition to Clay and Meany, the committee included Robert B. Anderson, secretary of the treasury in the Eisenhower Administration and an investment banker; Eugene R. Black, retired president of the World Bank; Dr. Howard A. Rusk, physician and associate editor of the New York Times; University of Nebraska Chancellor Clifford Hardin, a former Federal Reserve Bank director; Harvard Prof. Edward S. Mason; former Defense Sec. Robert A. Lovett; Continental Oil Co. Pres. L. F. McCollum; and Herman Phleger, State Dept. legal adviser in 1953-1957.

Union Funds Urged for Co-op Housing

The AFL-CIO's strong endorsement of programs of cooperative housing was reiterated by Sec. Joseph D. Keenan of the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers at the 6th National Conference on Cooperative Housing in Washington, D. C.

Keenan cited AFL-CIO support of investment of union reserve funds in financing non-profit cooperative housing, with the double objective of providing safe use of capital and helping achieve the socially desirable purpose of providing decent housing at prices within the reach of workers.

Another union speaker, Jack T. Conway, executive assistant to Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the Industrial Union Dept., told the conference that the success of cooperative housing programs had been established by experience with loan guarantees by the government's Housing & Home Finance Agency. The rate of foreclosures on such projects had proved low, he said.

Conway until recently was deputy administrator of the Housing & Home Finance Agency.

Other union speakers included William C. Doherty, Jr., director of social projects for the American Institute for Free Labor Development, and William H. Oliver of the Auto Workers.

LABOR'S PROPOSALS for strengthening the Administration's equal pay for women bill are discussed by, left to right: AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller, and Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr., chairman of the House Labor subcommittee considering the bill.

Labor Urges Stronger Bill on Women's Pay

(Continued from Page 1)

ing discriminatory pay practices, subject to appeal and enforcement in federal courts.

"We cannot overemphasize the importance of this feature of the bill," Schnitzler said. "Without a specific enforcing agency, legal rights accorded to individuals by labor legislation are usually rendered non-existent for all practical purposes."

Schnitzler suggested, however, that "to minimize long delays," appeals or enforcement orders should be taken directly to federal circuit courts of appeals rather than to district courts.

Points Made

In other areas, the AFL-CIO made these points:

- Coverage of the bill should apply to employers in industries "affecting commerce" as provided in the Fair Labor Standards Act, and not to the narrower "in commerce" provision of the Administration bill. The present language "could result in large-scale exclusions."
- There is no justification for excluding small employers. The Administration bill, which limits coverage to employers with 25 or more workers "in any place of employment," is so "ambiguous" that large retail chains might escape coverage entirely. "At the very least," all employers with 10 or more workers should be covered.
- While the AFL-CIO is "reluctantly" willing to accept a provision enabling employers gradually to raise wage rates for women to equality with male workers, specific clarifying language is necessary to guarantee that rates won't be "equalized" by cutting the pay of men.

Also testifying for equal pay legislation was Mrs. Caroline Davis, director of the Women's Dept. of the Auto Workers.

She termed unequal pay for women "immoral . . . a bar to effective employer-employe relations" and "a penalty upon the workers in the economy who are already as a rule paid the lowest rates." Mrs. Davis added:

"Each day until the equal pay bill is passed and provision made for its enforcement, hundreds of thousands of women will be paid less than they are entitled to and need, and their dependents will be injured by the deprivation of food, clothing and shelter their mothers have earned."

Opposition came from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, whose spokesman told the subcommittee that the business group supports the "principle" of equal pay for women, but opposes federal legislation as "the wrong way to achieve the objective."

State legislation and collective bargaining, the CofC said, "already afford an effective way to deal with the question."

Earlier in the hearings, Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz and Assistant Sec. Esther F. Peterson declared that an enforceable federal law was very much needed.

ILO, Common Market Cited

Wirtz noted that 38 nations have ratified an Intl. Labor Organization convention setting procedures for "establishing equal pay in fact as well as in principle." He noted that the European Common Market agreement also carries a specific guarantee of equal pay.

Mrs. Peterson termed the Administration bill "moderate and flexible." She pointed out that lack of equal pay for women legislation puts "enlightened and progressive employers" at a disadvantage "when competing with the employers who do use a double standard pay structure."

Legislature Hails 50-Year Unionist

Providence, R. I.—A half-century of "stewardship to labor" is "a beacon light to those who now serve the labor movement, a memorial to those who did serve it faithfully and an incentive to those who will serve in the future," the Rhode Island General Assembly said in a resolution hailing John A. McConnell upon his completion of 50 years in the trade union movement.

The long-time business agent of Street Carmen's Div. 618 in Providence, McConnell was a trustee of the State AFL-CIO when he retired at the last convention. He had been a vice president of the former Rhode Island Federation of Labor and a member of the War Labor Board and the Wage Stabilization Board.

Carpenters Name Tassler as Editor

The appointment of Bernard Tassler as editor of the Carpenter has been announced by Pres. M. A. Hutcheson of the union.

Tassler was managing editor of the American Federationist magazine until 1960, when he joined the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor-Management Reports.

Gov. Rolvaag Takes Office In Minnesota

St. Paul, Minn.—Democrat Karl Rolvaag moved into the Minnesota governorship he won in the closest election in the state's history just in time to block a Republican-sponsored unemployment compensation bill which would have disqualified or cut benefits for some 35,000 seasonal workers.

He was aided by the first filibuster ever conducted in the state senate—a five-hour talkathon which kept the bill from clearing the legislature while the holdover Republican governor, Elmer L. Andersen, was still in office. Andersen had previously been certified as elected by a 142-vote margin.

After Rolvaag was certified winner by a 91-vote margin in a statewide recount of the ballots, the bill was sidetracked in anticipation of a gubernatorial veto and efforts were under way to seek agreement on a compromise.

Rolvaag's inauguration was also expected to quash another GOP bill—to prohibit unions from contributing to state or local political campaigns.

The new governor, who had been given a small office in the basement of the capitol while the lengthy court-supervised recount proceeded, was faced with the immediate problem of replacing Republican appointees to his cabinet, chosen by Andersen and confirmed by the Senate.

The special court's recount of the election, in which more than 1.2 million votes were cast, became final when Andersen waived his right to appeal.

3-30-63

Labor Group 'Regrets' EEC Bar to Britain

Hamburg, Germany—Regret that the Common Market and Great Britain were unable to reach agreement on that country's membership "when the vital interests of each of them and of Europe as a whole are at "stake" was expressed by the Committee of Intl. Transportworkers Federation Unions in the European Economic Community at a meeting here.

The committee voted to support, with the rest of the European labor movement, "every effort which may be made to find a basis for agreement which leads to a Europe united politically and economically and closely associated, as equal partners, with the United States."

"The committee will also in the future make its full contribution to the common transport policy and the upward harmonization of social conditions, the two aims of the EEC which most directly concern transport workers which must be put into effect as quickly as possible," the committee said.

"In these efforts, the committee will reinforce its close relations with ITF-affiliated transport workers' unions in European countries not yet members of the Community."

NLRB Report Condemns 'Boulwarism'

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, April 6, 1963 | No. 14

Unemployment Rate Down; 4.5 Million Remain Jobless

PICKET SIGNS DIDN'T LAST LONG once the New York newspaper strike and lockout ended. Here members of Typographical Union Local 6 tear up their signs as Pres. Walter Thayer (left) of the Herald Tribune looks on. (See story Page 3)

Must Get at Cause, Wirtz Declares

By Robert B. Cooney

The nation's job situation "improved substantially" between February and March, the Labor Dept. has announced, with unemployment declining to the high level of this past winter.

The key seasonally adjusted jobless rate dropped to 5.6 percent in March from February's 6.1 percent, at the time the highest rate in 15 months.

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz cautioned that the March rate, while "encouraging" compared to January and February rates, "is plainly no cause for a broader satisfaction."

"My feeling is about what it would be if somebody's temperature dropped back from 104 degrees to 103 degrees," Wirtz said in a statement.

"We still have to get at the cause of the trouble."

The Labor Dept.'s summary job report said the total unemployed declined from 4.9 million in February to 4.5 million in March, although there is usually little change at this time of year.

The jobless rate had hung at about 5.5 percent through most of 1962 and began moving upward during the winter.

Adult Workers Gain

The March rate of 5.6 percent means 56 of every 1,000 persons in the labor force were actively seeking work and could not find it. The rate a year ago was 5.5 percent. It was at a postwar high for the month at 6.8 percent in the 1960-61 recession; the postwar low for March was 2.6 percent in 1953.

(Continued on Page 12)

Foreign Aid Budget Cut By Kennedy

Pres. Kennedy has cut $420 million from the foreign aid budget estimate he gave Congress last January, but the voluntary reduction failed to appease Capitol Hill foes of the program.

The $4.5 billion requested is the lowest amount the Kennedy Administration has asked, but still is nearly $600 million more than the heavily-slashed $3.9 billion appropriation Congress voted last year.

Kennedy said guidelines proposed by the advisory committee headed by retired Gen. Lucius D. Clay, plus the availability of some carry-over loan funds from this year's budget, had been used to pare the spending estimate.

The Clay Committee majority—with AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany

(Continued on Page 12)

GE Blamed for Strike:

Trial Examiner's Report Hits 'Boulware' Bargaining Tactics

By Eugene A. Kelly

The collective bargaining tactics used by the General Electric Co. since 1947 have been condemned by a National Labor Relations Board trial examiner as bad-faith bargaining.

The system devised and perfected by former GE Vice Pres. Lemuel R. Boulware is considered by unions to consist of this technique in bargaining: deciding in advance on a "fair" offer; presenting it on a take-it-or-leave-it basis; conducting a massive communications campaign to undermine union resistance; and finally "taking a strike," if necessary, rather than changing the offer.

NLRB Trial Examiner Arthur Leff concluded after more than a year of taking testimony and studying briefs, that the GE bargaining policy forced a strike on the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in 1960. By going over the heads of union negotiators to the workers and their local unions, GE also caused IUE to abandon the strike and accept the company's original offer after a three-week struggle, Leff said.

IUE Pres. James B. Carey saluted the examiner's findings as sounding "the first death-knells of Boulwarism."

GE Vice Pres. Virgil B. Day, who holds Boulware's former post, said the company will appeal Leff's recommendations and will "approach and conduct this year's negotiations with over 100 unions in the same spirit and with the same approach" as in past negotiations.

Leff's intermediate report is subject to appeal to the labor board and thereafter to the federal courts.

Leff upheld most of the charges filed against GE by IUE following the 1960 strike. He said after citing the bargaining method devised by Boulware, that "the circumstances . . . support an inference" that GE, "by reason of its calculated course of conduct, so made itself a captive of its own bargaining policies as to substantially inhibit and obstruct good-faith negotiations."

Evasion of Good Faith

The record as a whole, the examiner concluded, fairly supports an inference that the company's "entire course of conduct, of which its communications program was an integral part, was aimed at evading its good-faith bargaining obligations."

Leff in his report recommended that the NLRB direct GE to take these steps:

- Cease and desist from refusing to bargain fairly with the IUE.
- Order the reinstatement of 20 strikers at Augusta, Ga., whom GE refused to reinstate on Aug. 24, 1960, and to give them lost pay with interest at 6 percent.
- Instruct the company to provide the insurance and pension plan data requested by Carey and other IUE negotiators in the 1960 negotiations.

The contract which the union accepted after the strike failed will

(Continued on Page 2)

Labor Urged To Aid Arts In Leisure

New York — A special White House consultant on the arts urged labor to "accept the challenge of free time" and join in active promotion of the arts as part of a constructive approach to the use of leisure.

The problem, said August Heckscher, one of the main speakers at the 8th annual AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Services, "is to permit everyone to enjoy the arts in their free time and still to preserve, indeed to nourish and enhance, the standards of high professional attainment and excellence."

"Only so," he said, "can we

(Continued on Page 2)

Congress Asked to Ban Mexican Farm Labor

The Mexican "contract" farm labor program "long ago outlived its usefulness" and should be abolished outright, the AFL-CIO has told Congress.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller said the importation of Mexican farm labor has "undermined" the wages, working conditions and job opportunities of domestic farm workers.

Alternatives Being Weighed

Its continuation beyond its Dec. 31 scheduled expiration date would be "a tragedy," he told a House Agriculture subcommittee which is considering these alternatives:

- Extension of the existing "bracero" program for an additional two years under a bill introduced by Rep. Charles M. Teague (R-Calif.).
- A two-year extension, coupled with amendments which would abolish most of the reforms attached to the program during the past two years. Subcommittee Chairman E. C. Gathings (D-Ark.) is the sponsor.
- A proposal by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz for a one-year extension with a stipulation that domestic farm workers must be offered the same housing, workmen's compensation and transportation benefits now furnished workers brought in from Mexico.
- The demand of unions, religious groups, consumer organizations and representatives of small "family" farmers that the program be permitted to lapse as scheduled.

Biemiller termed the program a subsidy for big corporate farms

(Continued on Page 11)

FAIR-MINDED EMPLOYERS are penalized when unscrupulous competitors chisel on wages, Vice Pres. Myra Wolfgang of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes, Detroit, testified at hearings on a proposed state minimum wage law for Michigan, conducted by a State House subcommittee.

'Boulwarism' of GE Condemned In Report by NLRB Examiner

(Continued from Page 1)

expire Sept. 29. The examiner's report dealt with GE bargaining policies as they existed in 1960 and past years.

Leff described GE's offer to the IUE in 1960 negotiations and applied to the company's conduct the legal rule that good-faith bargaining requires, among other things, a willingness by both parties to "discuss freely and fully their respective claims and demands, and when these are opposed to justify them on reason."

Leff said his findings on negotiations "disclose unmistakably" that GE's bargaining behavior fell short of that standard.

Thus, he said, on Aug. 31, 1960, "only one day after its offer was presented," the company "in effect served notice on the union that it would be futile for the union even to attempt to persuade it to alter its fixed positions on three of the union's principal demands.

Also at different times, Leff went on, GE negotiators "registered impatience with the union's efforts to have it justify its bargaining positions" and at times "either refused or shifted to other reasons which it stated in terms so vague or arbitrary as to stifle further meaningful discussion."

Ruling Explained

As to GE's take it-or-leave-it approach to bargaining, the examiner explained that his conclusions were not based solely on a party's refusal to alter his declared position.

"Good faith requires parties to negotiation not only to have a sincere desire to reach agreement, but also to make an earnest effort to reach common ground" through collective bargaining. This does not mean, Leff reasoned, that an employer or union must yield its freedom to reject proposals, or to refrain from concessions unacceptable to him.

It does mean, he continued, that the parties "must approach bargaining with a mind accessible to persuasion; that they must follow procedures increasing the prospects of a negotiated agreement; that they must regard all proper issues before them as issues to be resolved" through bargaining, and that they must be willing to "consider and explore with an open mind compromise proposals or other possible solutions of their differences."

Leff said that, on the basis of these and other tests of good faith previously established by the labor board and the courts, as well as GE's behavior both in and outside negotiations, he was convinced the company had not bargained in good faith.

The examiner described GE's campaign to win acceptance of its contract offer and said that after a recess in negotiations due to the IUE convention, GE "continued to flood the employes with a constant stream of communications plugging the merits of its bargaining positions."

In some instances, he said, it "advanced arguments not only more full but different from those presented to the union negotiators at the bargaining table," a technique which, Leff said, constituted "the clearest evidence of bargaining bad faith."

GE's propaganda system, the examiner reported, stressed an ever-recurring theme during negotiations: "The finality of the company's offer and the futility of further negotiations; GE's firm policy not to enlarge its offer because of a strike or threat of strike; the asserted 'selfish, irresponsible and political' motives of the IUE leadership; and the asserted jeopardy to employe jobs that would flow from any improvement in management's offer or from a strike."

Said the report: "The constant repetition of the theme referred to above, and the manner of its presentation were such as to reflect a conscious and deliberate purpose to play on employes' fears and insecurities."

Thus Leff concludes that GE's communications program was designed not only to keep employes informed but was a "deliberate design to undermine employe faith and confidence in the union's leadership and in the efficacy of the collective bargaining process."

All this conduct, taken together, was found to violate the law requiring good faith negotiations and the examiner concluded: "On all the evidence, I find that the strike which began Oct. 2, 1960, and extended to Oct. 22, 1960, was caused and prolonged in substantial part" by GE's unfair labor practices "in unlawfully refusing to bargain with the union."

Industrial Engineering Institutes Set

The 1963 AFL-CIO Union Industrial Engineering Institutes, tailored to meet the needs of full-time union staff members, will be held July 22 through Aug. 2 at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, Wis.

The institutes are sponsored by the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research and the University of Wisconsin School for Workers.

Three will be offered—on time study and wage incentives, job evaluation and related problems, and synthetic work measurement systems. Certificates will be awarded to participants who complete each institute. All three institutes meet in the same two-week period.

Bert Gottlieb, industrial engineer in the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research, pointed out that the institutes offer "the only AFL-CIO-sponsored training program to help union representatives protect union members faced with management's use of industrial engineering techniques." They "provide an opportunity for continuing study in the complex field of industrial engineering and its relationship to collective bargaining," according to a brochure being distributed to potential participants.

Tuition for each of the institutes is $70 for the two-week period, including the cost of instruction, textbooks and other materials. Participants will be housed and fed in university dormitories and dining facilities, with the cost to be met by the participants.

Final registration will take place in Madison on July 22, and registration forms should be received by June 24. Additional information may be had from Gottlieb at AFL-CIO Headquarters, 815 Sixteenth Street, N. Y., Washington 6, D. C., or from Norris Tibbetts, University of Wisconsin School for Workers, University Extension Building, Madison 6, Wis.

At CSA Parley:

Challenge of Leisure Posed for Workers

(Continued from Page 1)

have a civilization measuring up to our hopes and a leisure which brings true delight."

He predicted that the federal government would soon have an Office of the Arts to encourage their development, and suggested that labor's role might include support by unions for an orchestra or theater which could bring music and drama of the highest standards to all parts of the country.

"I am in favor of the most widespread participation in the arts," said Heckscher, who is director of the 20th Century Fund.

'To Dance, To Sing, To Play'

"Is there any reason [that] in our present-day society everyone should not be taught to draw a reasonable likeness of the things around him, to dance, to sing, to play a musical instrument, to act with spirit, to write a poem?"

Leo Perlis, national director of AFL-CIO Community Service Activities, said in his keynote speech that "the nature of leisure and its meaning to the individual and to society" had absorbed mankind from the time of Plato.

"The difference is that we now have more people with free time than ever before," he told the 500 delegates representing labor, government and private social and welfare agencies and universities.

Dr. George Gallup, head of the American Institute of Public Opinion, noted that 10 years ago only 21 percent of the people favored a shorter workweek, but that the percentage has since risen to 29. Seventy percent of those questioned, he reported, said they believed "their children, when grown, would have more leisure time."

Citing polls showing that 10 percent of the people buy about 80 percent of the books printed, Gallup called for state and city action to promote more widespread adherence to high cultural standards in the use of leisure.

"Much talent is available and we must find a way to use this talent to improve our communities," he declared.

Praise For CSC

Among other speakers, Dean Charles E. Hendry of the University of Toronto's School of Social Work warned the delegates not to equate leisure with mere free time, or "effortless non-work."

"At one extreme," he said, "under such an arbitrary and artificial definition, leisure comes to be viewed as the privilege of the snob; at the other extreme, as the possession of the mob."

He lauded the "creative and courageous initiative" of the federation's Community Services' Committee in relating the theme of the conference to the AFL-CIO's campaign for a 35-hour workweek to combat unemployment.

Laurance Rockefeller, chairman of the New York State Council of Parks, urged Congress to set up a Bureau of Outdoor Recreation and called on the delegates to work for an improved recreational environment.

"To what end is a higher standard of living," he asked, "if it means fouling the air, the polluting of our streams, and the desecration of our countryside?"

Actress Lillian Gish recalled that Frank Sinatra had once observed that his love for music had enabled him to overcome his youthful environment, which he described as "perfect for a crook."

"Some of our new leisure time could well be used in music, singing in choral societies or clubs," she said, "not to keep from joining the underworld, but because it is fun to do."

Citing Gibbon's observation in The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire that a nation that hires men to play its games is a decaying nation, she suggested that "while you want to see the Big League games, it's a good idea to play some games yourselves."

Perlis's keynote speech emphasized that the steady shortening of the workweek demands the active participation of labor in community agencies, both public and voluntary. He suggested the establishment of a united arts fund for the purpose of financing culture and the arts.

The question, Perlis said, is not "are we going to work fewer hours, as obviously many already do, but what are we going to do with our free time?"

"Hours are reduced when machines replace muscles," he said, "and even more hours will be reduced when machines replace minds. If life is to have meaning and purpose in our impersonal, scientific, atomic and frightfully complex industrial society, it must be lived in beauty and with spirit."

LEISURE TIME offers a good chance to discuss—well, leisure time. That's what is being done between sessions of the AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Service Activities by, from left, Dr. George Gallup, Pres. A. Philip Randolph of the Sleeping Car Porters and Leo Perlis, CSA national director. The conference theme was on the shorter workweek and use of leisure creatively.

Addition Planned To IUE Building

Plans to build a $1.5 million addition to the Philip Murray Building, headquarters in Washington of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, have been approved by the IUE executive board.

The union has bought two adjoining properties and authorized A. R. Clas, architect who drew the original plans, to plan an addition with the same facade as the Murray Building, a subbasement and a three-story parking garage. Tenants, including the Newspaper Guild and the Auto Workers, will occupy enlarged quarters.

ULLICO Schedules 36th Annual Meeting

Baltimore—The annual meeting of the Union Labor Life Insurance Co. shareholders, officers and board members will be held here Apr. 9 in the Sheraton Belvedere Hotel.

The 36th annual gathering will hear Pres. Edmund P. Tobin review the accomplishments, financial growth and objectives of ULLICO. At a following luncheon, speakers will represent business, labor and the legal profession.

New York Newspaper Blackout Ends

19,000 Back at Work On 8 Major Dailies

By John Barry

New York—The longest newspaper strike and lockout in New York's history ended after 114 days with all sides expressing hopes that future improvements in bargaining relationships would prevent another one like it from ever occurring.

The dispute, which involved some 19,000 workers in 10 unions and closed eight major daily papers, came to a close Mar. 31 when the Photo Engravers—last remaining union on strike—ratified a new two-year contract containing a wage and fringe benefit package within the $12.63 formula accepted by other striking unions.

Two union locals which had not been formally on strike—the Paper Handlers and the Pressmen—accepted similar packages at meetings late the same day.

Presses Roll

Picket lines at the papers were dissolved minutes after the engravers' vote, and the morning dailies were rushed into production.

A settlement of the Cleveland newspaper blackout—which has closed the Plain Dealer and the Press & News since Nov. 30—also appeared imminent as striking Machinists reached tentative agreement on a new pact and the Typographical Union local prepared to vote on proposed wage and fringe gains of $13.95 over a 26-month period.

Other striking unions already have ratified new agreements with the two papers, which said they hoped to be back in circulation Apr. 8, if the printers approve the pact.

Principal features of the $12.63 package accepted by the Photo Engravers in New York are a $3.50 pay increase and a fourth week of vacation after one year, effective with the first year of the agreement, and a $4.65 pay hike in the second year with reduction of the workweek for the lobster (post-midnight) shift from 36¼ to 35 hours.

The vote to accept the proposal was 213-104. Four days earlier the engravers had voted 191-111 to reject slightly different terms within the $12.63 pattern proposed by Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

Wagner was credited with a major role in settlement of the dispute, which started Dec. 8 with a strike by the ITU's "Big 6" local at the News, Times, Journal-American and World-Telegram & Sun, followed by a lockout and management suspension of four others—the Mirror, Post, Herald Tribune and Long Island Star-Journal. (The Long Island Press stopped distribution within the city.)

City Hall Sessions Held

After the efforts of federal mediators ranging all the way to Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz failed to produce significant results, the mayor called the parties into a series of marathon bargaining sessions at City Hall which often lasted through the night.

The issues separating the printers and publishers were sharply narrowed in these talks to the point where Wagner finally recommended the terms of settlement after Pres. Kennedy had publicly urged third-party determination.

The papers accepted the mayor's proposals, which ultimately set the $12.63 pattern, but the ITU members originally rejected the recommendations of Intl. Pres. Elmer Brown and Local Pres. Bertram A. Powers that they ratify the tentative agreement.

A week later, however, the printers heeded an appeal from Powers for reconsideration and at a meeting in Madison Square Garden, using city voting machines, reversed their earlier action and accepted the package.

The ITU agreement was hailed by Powers and the majority of the local's scale committee as a "major victory" on all the chief points of principle in dispute.

Common Expiration Date

It yielded an expiration date common with all other union contracts, a 35-hour workweek, protection of present jobholders and a share in the savings from the introduction of automatic tape to set stock tables, plus two-year pay increases of $8 for the day shift, $10 for the night shift and $12 for the lobster shift.

The common expiration date was contingent on the Newspaper Guild's willingness to extend its already-settled contract to Mar. 31, 1965. The Guild agreed to the five-month extension in exchange for an additional pay hike averaging $4.13 to bring its total package to a par with the mayor's pattern.

Reflecting on the long, bitter dispute following its final solution, Powers, who headed the unity committee of local union leaders, expressed the hope that in the future "the method of negotiations improves so that we can gain our legitimate objectives without a strike."

On the management side, Walter N. Thayer, chief spokesman for the publishers and president of the Herald Tribune, said "the negotiating machinery of both sides must be improved, and there should be no piecemeal bargaining. That is the prime lesson learned."

Wagner indicated that he may propose establishment of a joint labor-management committee to undertake a continuing study of problems in the newpaper industry, away from the heat of the bargaining table, so as to minimize differences in periodic negotiations and avoid future strikes and lockouts.

At his news conference, Kennedy said he saw no lesson in the New York and Cleveland newspaper strikes, both local in nature, that might produce changes in federal labor legislation.

A PAGE ONE PROOF, pulled in the composing room of the Daily News, convinced Mayor Robert F. Wagner that his 65 days of mediation in the New York newspaper strike and lockout had finally paid off.

Panel to Mediate Work Rules Dispute

Pres. Kennedy has appointed an Emergency Board to seek to mediate the railroad work rules dispute, and spokesmen for the five operating unions expressed hope that the action would bring about a resumption of collective bargaining.

Management, after breaking off negotiations, had set Apr. 8 as the date for unilaterally putting into effect new work rules, including elimination of the jobs of 40,000 firemen-helpers. Appointment of the board defers a shutdown by freezing conditions for 60 days.

Named to the board were Samuel I. Rosenman of New York as chairman; Pres. Clark Kerr of the University of California; and Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger of the University of Wisconsin.

Protest Strikers Win $50,000 Backpay Pact

Rockwood, Tenn.—Steelworkers who refused to swallow dust and chlorine gas fumes at the Roane Electric Furnace plant here, and who walked out in a protest strike 18 months ago, have won $50,000 in lost pay and a return-to-work stipulation from their employer.

Owners of the parent Tennessee Products & Chemical Corp., which makes ferro alloys for the steel industry in the big Roane furnace, agreed in a settlement with the union and the National Labor Relations Board to lay off strikebreakers according to a specified formula and take these additional steps:

- Rehire 77 strikers who were, at the time of the walkout on Sept. 6, 1961, stationed within 100 feet of the plant's metal-crushers and grinders and within 75 feet of the furnace-gas chlorinators.
- Recall approximately 200 others in nearby departments who walked out in sympathy.
- Terminate all discharges put into effect after the strike started and pay an average of $120 in lost wages to 430 workers with seniority back to Aug. 31, 1954.
- Establish a master seniority list of about 850 workers and hire from it as production permits by laying off workers hired after Sept. 11, 1961.

The agreement followed a stipulation between the company and the union on terms of settlement.

The NLRB, in a decision signed by all five members, also directed the company to cease firing workers for union activities and to stop discouraging membership in the USWA or its Local 5495.

The strike attracted wide attention when wives and children of strikers took the places of their menfolk on the picket line in the early days of the protest walkout. The strikers had been jailed for violating a court order not to come closer to the plant entrances than 1,000 feet.

10 Safety Walkouts

Workers in the plant had staged 10 walkouts in five years to compel management to improve working conditions. Said a union spokesman when the strike started:

"The company continues to refuse to cooperate with our Safety Committee in working out a reasonable and effective safety program, and has forced us to protect ourselves in the only manner we can.

"We want to work; we need to work; we are fighting for our jobs and our safety. We intend to do everything legally possible to protect our jobs and our lives."

When the company refused all atempts at a peaceful settlement, the union withdrew its pickets and filed an unfair labor practice charge.

After lengthy hearings, NLRB Trial Examiner Owsley Vose found that working conditions in the furnace were "abnormally dangerous" and that workers directly affected by dust and fumes were justified in walking out but that others were forbidden to take such action under a no-strike clause in their contract.

The company, however, agreed in its stipulation to recall all strikers for whom work is available.

Unions Vote On 'Last Offer' At Boeing

Seattle—With a Taft-Hartley injunction against a strike of 45,000 Boeing Co. workers due to expire Apr. 15, employes of the company balloted Apr. 2-4 on management's last contract offer to two unions—the Machinists and Auto Workers.

The balloting is required by T-H, even though IAM members turned down the same offer last Jan. 23 and authorized a strike call. The vote at that time was 16,864-3,590 against acceptance.

A board of inquiry, named when Pres. Kennedy applied for an 80-day T-H injunction, reported to Kennedy that the Boeing "final" offer made Mar. 24 was the same as that made previously.

It included wage increases ranging from 21.5 to 32 cents an hour over a three-year period, and a hike in basic retirement benefits. But the offer, predicated on acceptance of all other Boeing proposals, still would leave Boeing workers lagging behind other aerospace employes, the unions said.

Boeing management refused to accept a union shop proposal asked by the unions and recommended by a presidential aerospace board last December—a key issue.

Shortly before the "last offer" balloting, the Washington State Senate adopted a resolution calling on both parties to accept the terms proposed by the aerospace panel. Gov. Albert D. Rosellini of Washington also urged speedy acceptance of the panel's terms or final and binding arbitration.

"Last offer" ballots were being counted as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

Chrysler Pensions Total $46.5 Million

Detroit—More than 16,500 Chrysler workers have received in excess of $46.5 million in pension benefits since the fund was won by a 104-day strike in 1950, the Auto Workers have reported.

Dir. Douglas Fraser of the union's Chrysler Dept. said current assets of the trust fund guaranteeing pension payments to Chrysler retirees stand at $184.6 million. The fund is non-contributory, jointly administered and actuarially funded.

Lead Workers Win Gains in Long Strike

Flat River, Mo.—A three-year contract "package" totaling 31 cents an hour in benefits has been won by lead workers who voted 606-489 to end a 247-day strike against the St. Joseph Lead Co.

Members of Steelworkers Local 6242 voted at a meeting of 1,100 strikers near here to disband their 40-mile-wide picket line and to await recall to their jobs in four mills and 12 southeast Missouri mines producing 100,000 tons of lead a year.

The workers walked out last July 27 after rejecting a wage hike of 2 cents an hour. Their morale stayed at peak strength, the USWA reported, with generous support from other unions in the form of money and food, including truckloads of chickens, cattle and shoes.

The new contract contains these improvements:

- Wage increases of 10 cents an hour effective immediately; 9 cents for wage adjustments in the second contract year under a new job evaluation program, plus 3 cents an hour per employe to protect those whose job rates may be cut by re-evaluation; in the third year, an extra 3 cents an hour for pensions, plus a 5-cent wage boost.
- Company payment of 3 cents an hour next year to defray all costs of a workers' family health and welfare plan, including hospitalization and medical coverage.
- A union shop, an improved method of calculating vacation pay, and a five-day workweek with penalty pay for most weekend work.

The contract was the first for the workers since they voted for USWA affiliation. Formerly they were members of the unaffiliated Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers and later of another AFL-CIO union which yielded jurisdiction. Mine-Mill was ousted from the former CIO in 1950 on finding of Communist control.

ANNUAL SAFETY AWARD of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen is presented to William R. Bennett, who last summer saved the life of three-year-old Mark Erickson of Butte, Mont. Pictured at the award banquet in Washington, D. C., are, from left: BLFE Pres. H. E. Gilbert, holding little Mark; Bennett; Mrs. Erickson; Tennessee Gov. Frank G. Clement, who addressed the banquet; and Rep. Arnold Olsen (D-Minn.).

Rail Unionist Honored For Saving Child's Life

A 44-year-old Montana railroader and the two-year-old boy whose life he saved last July shared the spotlight at the annual safety award dinner of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen in Washington, D. C.

Little Mark Erickson, who had wandered onto the tracks of the Butte, Anaconda & Pacific Railway near Butte, was presented with a train set—to play with safely at home.

William R. Bennett, who leaped from the locomotive cab to outrace the slowing freight train and snatch the boy to safety, was honored with his union's highest award and a $500 check.

BLF&E Pres. H. E. Gilbert told the dinner guests, who included leading members of Congress and government officials, that Bennett "was in the right place at the right time, and he knew what to do."

Responding to tributes to his heroism, Bennett said simply:

"I hope it helps all the firemen in the country."

Bennett was referring to the efforts by railroads to eliminate all firemen-helpers on locomotives as part of a drastic unilateral scrapping of long-standing work rules. Rail unions have contended that the fireman-helper is essential to railroad safety.

The award winner was chosen by a panel of judges including AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Interstate Commerce Commission Chairman Laurence K. Walrath, Canadian Labor Congress Pres. Claude Jodoin, Pres. Howard Pyle of the National Safety Council and Gilbert. The selection was made from among the 12 monthly winners of the Locomotive Firemen's Safety award program.

Gov. Frank G. Clement (D-Tenn.), principal speaker at the dinner, praised Bennett for displaying "courage that is in keeping with the highest American tradition" and lauded the union to which he belongs for having made a "sustained major public service contribution to the betterment of living in America."

Gilbert told the group that the BLF&E's safety award program has received an award of its own—from the National Safety Council. The program, he said, was launched five years ago to acquaint the public with the fireman-helper's role in "saving lives, preventing property damage and preventing or minimizing accidents."

Some members of the union "have given their lives trying to do what Bill Bennett risked his life to do successfully," Gilbert noted.

Joining in the presentation was Bennett's congressman—and Mark Erickson's also—Rep. Arnold Olsen (D-Mont.).

USWA Local Defeats Raid By Teamsters

Nashville, Tenn.—Steelworkers Local 4802 has crushed an attempted raid by the ousted Teamsters on the union's representation rights at Aladdin Industries here.

Workers at the Aladdin plant voted 277-129 to retain the USWA as their bargaining representative, ending several months of Teamster raiding efforts, USWA Dist. 35 Dir. Lorne H. Nelles reported.

A message from AFL-CIO Pres. Joseph A. Beirne congratulated the Aladdin workers for "proving once again that Teamster 'muscle and money' will not coerce, will not buy, the votes of workers who know the score."

Beirne's Communications Workers repulsed a similar raid by the Teamsters in January, when the CWA Western Electric installers unit voted against the Hoffa-led union by a margin of 3-1. The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt elements.

Shortly before the election at Aladdin, USWA Rep. James E. Payne wrote the workers reminding them that their average hourly earnings had risen 7.7 percent each year under the USWA and that fringe benefits had gone up from 20 cents an hour to 51 cents.

On the day of the vote, the secretary-treasurer of Teamsters Local 327 was subpoenaed by a federal grand jury investigating charges of jury tampering in the recent conspiracy trial here of IBT Pres. James R. Hoffa, which was declared a mistrial.

Local papers on the same day carried stories that the gun-carrying permits of three business agents of the same local had been revoked.

37 Candidates Vie For 17 SEG Offices

Hollywood, Calif.—Thirty-seven members have been nominated for 17 offices in the annual election of the Screen Extras Guild.

Rivals for the presidency are the incumbent, Jeffrey Sayre, proposed by the nominating committee, and Tony Regan.

CWA Opens Negotiations For Installers

New York — Bargaining on a new contract for 17,000 Western Electric installers started here after the National Labor Relations Board dismissed Teamsters Union objections to an election the CWA won last Jan. 4.

CWA Pres. Joseph A. Beirne said his union is "gratified" that CWA's 3-1 nationwide election victory over the unaffiliated Teamsters, expelled in 1957 by the AFL-CIO, has been "finally validated" and called for "intensive negotiations" designed to produce a "quick and long overdue agreement."

Beirne said that until the ruling by the NLRB regional director here, the Teamsters' "resort to technicalities" had prevented negotiations on wages, fringe benefits and working conditions.

Communications workers, he asserted, "have no stomach for the [James R.] Hoffa" union. The organization, "once a fine union, is now a racket-ridden wasteland in which convictions of officials" on various charges are "a commonplace in court rooms," he said.

Union School Studies Taxes, Social Needs

Philadelphia—Social needs and fair taxation were major topics at a recent conference here co-sponsored by the Philadelphia AFL-CIO Council's education committee and the Lehigh Valley AFL-CIO Education Council.

The conference, which drew 85 trade unionists from New Jersey and Pennsylvania, was conducted by the Union Leadership Academy.

Charles Guensch, chairman of the Philadelphia education committee, and Leroy Clayton, secretary-treasurer of the Valley council, shared the chairmanship of the program, which included the following speakers and workshop directors:

Philip H. Des Marais, deputy assistant secretary of health, education and welfare; Pat O'Farrell of the Steelworkers research and economics department; Helmut Golatz, director of labor education at Pennsylvania State University; George Boyle, coordinator, Institute of Management & Labor Relations, Rutgers University; Al Lowenthal, director of the Union Leadership Academy, and Joseph Rayback, head of the Dept. of Labor Education at Penn State.

Recount Seen Possible:

Michigan Approves New Constitution

Detroit—Michigan's voters approved a labor-opposed new state constitution by a narrow 10,760-vote margin according to complete unofficial returns. The results may be subject to a recount, however, if the official tally confirms the thinness of the apparent majority.

In statewide votes on judicial and educational posts, Republicans cut into Democratic strength in electing four of eight members to public boards of education. The Democrats elected two state supreme court justices, regaining a 5-3 margin.

Predictions of a major Republican sweep failed to materialize as a record-breaking 1.6 million voters turned out in the hard-fought battle over the proposed new constitution. This was half a million higher than the previous all-time high of 1.1 million in an off-year election, set just two years ago.

In a major statewide race, Democrat Lynn M. Bartlett won reelection to his fourth term as state superintendent of public instruction. He defeated Republican Raymond N. Hatch.

The Democratic majority on the bench was regained in the Apr. 1 election when Justice Eugene F. Black was re-elected and former Justice Paul L. Adams, who had lost a re-election battle last November, also was elected.

Leonard Woodcock, an Auto Workers vice president, was handily re-elected to the Wayne University board of governors, and Michigan AFL-CIO Education Dir. Don Stevens was re-elected to the Michigan State University board of trustees.

Labor's opposition to the proposed new organic law was based on provisions on legislative apportionment that bar either a state senate or state house based on population.

Michigan AFL-CIO Pres. August Scholle challenged existing apportionment of the state senate in a suit that traveled to the Supreme Court in Washington and resulted in a state supreme court decision last year invalidating the law. Republicans won a stay of execution to prevent reapportionment prior to the November election. Apportionment provisions of the new constitution are considered vulnerable to attack.

Detroit's Mayor Jerome Cavanagh said that court action was anticipated "to grant more equitable representation for urban Michigan than is provided in the new document."

Legal challenges would be expected to be heard some time in the new state supreme court.

Republicans won one seat each on the Wayne and Michigan State boards, another on the University of Michigan board of regents, and a place on the state board of education. The pluralities ran from a low of 2,000 to a high of 6,000.

Gov. George W. Romney (R), who led the fight for the revised constitution, was a vice president of the constitutional convention that drafted the document. He also backed all Republican candidates for state office, referring to the candidates as "my Republican team." In his race for governor last year his campaign did not identify him with the GOP or his running mates.

All Michigan daily newspapers and most radio and television stations gave heavy support to the proposed constitution and almost the entire Romney slate.

Democratic candidates for the statewide offices ran with Michigan Committee on Political Education support.

'Voice' Teamsters Get New NLRB Election

The National Labor Relations Board has set aside an election among 8,200 truck drivers in the Philadelphia area because of violence by supporters of the expelled Teamsters and has ordered a new election.

The order came from Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Boyd Leedom and Philip Ray Rodgers on charges filed after the election last November by the Voice of the Teamsters Democratic Organizing Committee, Independent.

The new election will be held Apr. 25-28 at Philadelphia, Atlantic City, Pennsauken, N. J., New Castle, Del., and Salisbury, Md., for drivers now in Local 107 and three other IBT locals which bargain with Motor Transport Labor Relations Inc.

The "Voice" group charged, and the NLRB regional director in Philadelphia ruled after an investigation, that the pre-election period was marked by "numerous instances of violence, in some cases brutal," against Voice supporters.

Regional Dir. B. F. Schauffler found, and the board agreed, that acts of vandalism and violence against Voice supporters "unmistakably conveyed to them the belief that if they continued to be active for the Voice they would be targets of bodily harm."

If adherents of a union are prevented from speaking to other members, attending union meetings or engaging in other activities by "acts of senseless violence," then "no free and fair election can be held," the board's agent reported.

The vote in the election last November was "Voice" 3,274; four Teamsters' locals, 3,870; neither 19; challenged 392. The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on charges of domination by corrupt interests and have not purged themselves of the charges. James R. Hoffa is president.

Another group of "Voice" members, employed by the Smith Transfer Co., broke away from IBT Local 107 this year and recently were chartered as AFL-CIO Local 3032. The charter was presented by AFL-CIO Vice President Joseph A. Beirne after the Smith unit won an NLRB election over IBT Local 107.

Forced Arbitration Denounced by RLEA

A bill to impose compulsory arbitration in maritime disputes has been denounced by the Railway Labor Executives' Association as an attack on collective bargaining.

The RLEA said the bill, introduced by House Merchant Marine Committee Chairman Herbert C. Bonner (D-N.C.), "would be the entering wedge to shackle the liberties of all American workers through compulsory arbitration."

AFL-CIO seamen's and dockers' unions previously have denounced the proposal.

Charts Tell Story of Unemployment

Millions of American workers today are caught in a great squeeze of economic forces, according to a Labor Dept. report on the manpower situation.

For the past five years, the unemployment rate has averaged at least 5.5 percent each year; in the past year there has been no dent in unemployment and no real gain in jobs.

In the period ahead, in the decade of the 1960s, labor force growth will rise by an average of about 1.2 million a year compared to 800,000 a year in the 1950s. Young people from the postwar baby boom will reach working age; the 14-to-24 age group of workers which rose by 400,000 in the 1950s will zoom by over 6 million in the 1960s.

Thus with upwards of 5 million workers jobless and for longer periods of time, the nation needs an estimated 13 million jobs just to take care of the coming labor force growth alone and more than 2 million jobs a year to make up for those jobs wiped out by technology.

The Dept. of Labor report on the manpower situation outlined this problem under a requirement of the Manpower Development & Training Act of 1962.

These annual reports on manpower availability will become, in the future, a basic statistical tool for planning national programs in education, training and retraining, apprenticeship, labor mobility and many other fields.

The first report on "Manpower and Training," submitted to the President transmitted by him to Congress together with his own comments, reviewed the manpower trends the country has experienced in the postwar years, drew a profile of unemployment showing who the jobless are, where joblessness hits hardest and in what groups, and presented essential information on the outlook and problems arising in various fields of potential employment or unemployment.

The following charts were selected from that report:

TREND of joblessness has been upward during the past decade, with only partial recovery from recessions.

UNEMPLOYMENT RATES are higher for non-white workers in every occupational group. Overall, the jobless rate of non-whites is more than double that of whites.

AVERAGE DURATION of unemployment has risen sharply since 1957. Most of the dramatic rise has been among those jobless for over half a year.

RATE OF LONG-TERM unemployment rises by age. The older a worker is, the longer he remains jobless once he is knocked out of work.

THE INFLUX OF YOUNGSTERS will be the most striking change in the labor force in the 1960s. The older group, age 45 and over, will also increase.

SCHOOL DROPOUTS SUFFER much higher rates of unemployment than those who finish high school, even years after schooling ended.

LARGEST JOB INCREASES to come by 1970 will be in service and goods-producing industries. Greatest growth is foreseen for service, government and construction.

PRODUCTION JOBS in manufacturing fluctuated widely after the war but have fallen off in the period since 1953.

NON-PRODUCTION JOBS — white-collar employment—have increased steadily in the postwar period as contrasted with factory jobs.

Congressional Shell Game

THERE ARE two species of congressmen who have made slashing reductions in government spending a major goal in the 88th Congress. One is chained to the 19th Century and is sincerely dedicated to the belief that private capital, aristocratic largesse and charity can solve most of the nation's problems.

The other specimen, more abundant on Capitol Hill, is firmly wedded to budget chopping for all programs and projects except those that affect his own district.

The Republican-Dixiecrat coalition has singled out Pres. Kennedy's proposed budget for major attack. Almost daily there are new diatribes on government spending and promises to reduce expenditures by varying percentages and dollar amounts.

The Wall Street Journal decided to take a closer look at the "economy" drive and its leaders and came up with a story that perhaps explains why many Americans tend to take a skeptical, bordering-on-cynical approach to political life.

★ ★ ★

THE KEY LEADERS of the coalition—House GOP Leader Charles Halleck, Senate GOP leader Everett McKinley Dirksen and House Rules Committee Chairman Howard W. Smith—are all seeking specific, costly projects for their states and districts while assailing the Administration for its wild spending plans.

In his Journal article, Alan L. Otten writes:

"Consider this striking example: Of the six-man House Republican 'task force' masterminding efforts to cut Pres. Kennedy's money requests, four members have urged adding unbudgeted funds to the Interior Dept.'s appropriations bill for the fiscal year starting July 1."

This hypocrisy is a direct by-product of the conservative coalition which represents sectional and regional interests rather than the national interest. At the present moment in the nation's history, with unemployment at an intolerable level and scores of problems crying out for solutions on a national basis, this shell game can only result in impairment of our democratic processes.

People's Lobby

AIR POLLUTION CONTROL, mental health centers, truth-in-packaging legislation seem far removed from the scope of the anti-union proposals that flowed into Congress in its opening days. But they are closely and intimately linked.

In the past week or so the AFL-CIO—the target of the proposals to weaken and decimate unions—urged Congress to support mental health, air pollution and packaging legislation in the public interest. It spoke for the millions of Americans who have no organized voice on matters that affect their health and their pocketbooks.

The AFL-CIO is the "people's lobby" in Washington, speaking out in the interests of all Americans whether or not they are union members. Proposals to weaken or cripple the labor movement would also destroy this voice for the millions who have no other spokesman.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Gervase N. Love, Eugene A. Kelly, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, April 6, 1963 No. 14

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'How About Talking Up Jobs?'

Canadian Political Fable:

If Cats Make Laws for Mice, Just Who's Going to Benefit?

This political fable, "Cats to Govern Mouseland," by T. C. "Tommy" Douglas, leader of Canada's New Democratic Party, first appeared in Canadian Labor, the official publication of the Canadian Labor Congress:

MOUSELAND WAS THE PLACE where all the mice lived. Mice were very much like men. They had good days and bad days, times when they were happy and times when they were sad. And like men, they also had a parliament and a government.

Every four years they went to the polls and they used to elect a government—of big black cats.

If you think this is strange, you only have to read the history of governments in many parts of the western world to see that maybe mice aren't any smarter than men.

Now these black cats were not dastardly creatures. They certainly were not. They were nice clean cats. They were fat cats and they gave good government and they passed good laws. They were good laws for cats!

But the laws that were good for cats weren't always good for mice.

One of the laws they passed, for instance, was that mouse holes had to be big enough for a cat to get his paw through. Another law was that, in the morning when cats were a little sleepy, mice would only travel at half speed so that a cat could get his breakfast without too much exertion. All the laws that black cats passed were good laws for cats, but they were very hard on mice. The mouse population kept dwindling!

The mice had enough of this and when the next election came around they went to the polls, almost to a man they voted the black cats out. They put the white cats in.

The white cats, of course, had fought a terrific campaign. They had said, "The trouble in Mouseland is those round mouse holes. You put us in and you will get square mouse holes." But the square mouse holes were twice as big as the round mouse holes and now a cat could get both paws in. More mice disappeared!

In the next election they put the white cats out and went back to the black cats.

When they couldn't stand it any more they tried the white cats. They even tried one government of half black cats and half white cats. It didn't make any difference.

The trouble wasn't the colour of the cats, the trouble was just that they were cats!

AFTER A WHILE one little mouse named Joe got up on a little soap box and said: "Look, fellow mice, why do we keep electing cats to make laws for mice?"

"He is a Bolshevik," the cats said. "Lock him up."

They locked him up. He languished in prison and finally died. They thought that was the end of it.

But, it is as true of mice as it is of men, that you can't kill an idea. Once an idea is born in the minds of free men it never dies.

All through Mouseland, back in the dark corners, the mice began to say to one another, "Do you remember that queer guy, Joe? You know, maybe he was right. Why don't we elect mice to make laws for mice?"

At last the story spread through Mouseland until the day came, as the day will come, when the mice did start to elect mice to make laws that are good for mice, not for cats.

That, in simple language, is why we formed the New Democratic Party in Canada, a party which believes in democratic economic planning, designed to increase the wealth production of the nation by promoting economic growth and providing for employment. It is a party which is pledged to use our country's increased wealth production to raise living standards and to improve educational health and welfare services. A party of the people of Canada pledged to serve the best interests of all Canadians.

"Oh, and one thing more—don't miss any coffee breaks. The boss's brother runs a restaurant just around the corner."

Morgan Says:

Comedian Dick Gregory's Role: His Brother's Keeper in Action

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

IN THE TRADITION of great clowns and comedians, entertainer Dick Gregory has a deeply solemn side and I venture to guess that it is a more moving experience to hear this remarkable young man speak his urgently serious thoughts about America than even the hilariously candid and bitterly penetrating patter of his night club wit.

Morgan

Gregory has gained swift fame and some fortune with his disconcerting ability to treat the so-called racial problem as a kind of cruel joke and make the white man laugh with both shame and perception at what he has perpetrated against the Negro race of which Gregory, in addition to being a native-born American citizen, happens to be a member.

They say that the shaft of ridicule, especially when aimed with good heart, can penetrate the crust of prejudice more devastatingly than any other weapon, and I believe it. Gregory with his deadly bead may have bowled over more obstacles to understanding than an army of social workers or a battery of lawyers for the NAACP. His biting intelligence, the iconoclastic acidity of his sarcasm have shattered the myth, still but diminishingly held, that the black man is "different."

"All we want," he said in Washington the other day, "is for people to be fair. . . . Keep me a second-class citizen if you must but don't make me pay first-class taxes."

Behind the purposeful scorn of that remark is a dedication on the part of this 30-year-old native of St. Louis that is awesome. He is using the money, the popularity and prestige he has gathered since becoming a soft-spoken, wrinkle-browed sensation in a Chicago key club hardly three years ago to strike a telling blow for fairness. He has singled out ghastly situations in which Negroes have been treated more savagely than in slavery. He has done this not only to right individual wrongs but to try to shake the country into an awareness of what it is doing to itself.

Gregory is immersed in another monumentally unfunny project. At a lunch given at the U.S. Capitol for him by Rep. John Brademas (D-Ind.), he told about it. By the sale of a record album called "My Brother's Keeper"—consisting of a taped question-and-answer session in February with a thousand enthusiastic students at San Diego, Calif., State College—he is trying to raise $37,000 to be used in one of two ways, to feed destitute farmers in Mississippi or help rehabilitate wayward teen-agers, elsewhere.

The farmers' story needs some background. In May 1962 a campaign was begun to register all eligible Negroes to vote in LeFlore County, Miss. Soon afterwards county officials withdrew from the Agriculture Dept.'s surplus food program whereunder 26,000 Negroes and whites—more than half the county's total population—were receiving subsistence packages of butter, milk, cheese, flour and potatoes.

Though officials denied it, it seemed obvious the move was in direct reprisal against the voting drive. As of this week, only 475 Negroes were registered. And there has been violence as well as other pressures against the drive.

TO TEST the country's excuse that it "couldn't afford" the $37,000 it purportedly cost annually to store and distribute the free federal food packages, Gregory launched his record-selling campaign at $1.60 each, the 60 cents for manufacturing charges, the dollar to go toward the $37,000 he planned to donate to the county to pay its storage bill.

However, word came from Greenwood, Miss., that the Agriculture Dept. had agreed to put up $15,000 of that tab from its own funds, that under this "pressure" LeFlore County was reinstituting the surplus food program, and that desegregation leaders were going to increase their vote registration efforts. When he heard the news, Gregory wondered how ethical the Agriculture Dept.'s move was to assume what appeared to be a county obligation. He didn't think this would be any permanent solution. (Last fiscal year most of Mississippi's 84 counties got $21.5 million worth of the federal government's surplus food stocks and Washington County's storage and distribution bill, in interesting contrast to LeFlore's was reportedly only $12,000 to cover 36,000 people.)

In any case Gregory still plans to offer LeFlore County officials his check. If they refuse it he will use the money to take 50 of the "toughest teen-age gang leaders in the country —black or white—to Hawaii for a week's holiday as part of the Dick Gregory Foundation program against juvenile delinquency."

He recoils from the latter term and he won't give his plan a "Better Boys Club" label either. So he calls his charges, formally, "potential high school drop-outs" and he thinks the name alone may help work wonders with the recruits. Here is our brother's keeper keeping faith.

Washington Reports:

With 94 of Every 100 Working, Plight of Jobless Often Ignored

SEC. OF LABOR W. Willard Wirtz declared that with 94 people out of 100 working, it is difficult for many persons to realize the unemployment problem the nation must meet.

In an interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program now heard on more than 600 radio stations, Wirtz said the fact that 5 million persons are unemployed and that unemployment has continued from 5.5 to 6 per cent for five years is a statistic, but "behind this figure is the fact of human waste, human tragedy, a problem that this nation has to face."

He said also that the figures released by the Dept. of Labor do not give the complete picture of joblessness.

"If a man is working at all, we call him employed, even though he is working only a few hours out of the month," he explained. "And then, too, there is the fact that conditions over the last several years have been such as to discourage some people from even trying to look for a job, and we count as unemployed only those who are actively looking for a job."

Wirtz added that there is another "tragic aspect to the situation" in that "many persons have used up their unemployment insurance benefits."

"If the country could see what unemployment means in particular areas, then we would do something about it," Wirtz asserted. "If the country could realize that the unemployment figure for younger workers is about 12 to 13 percent, and that for minority groups it's also that high," then action would follow.

THE ANSWER, he said, is to stimulate the economy so that there will be a demand for the services of the 5 million jobless. The first thing needed is for Congress to pass the tax bill to "release $10 to 12 billion dollars into the consumer aspect of the economy, thus stimulating the demand for goods and services."

In addition, Wirtz said, passage of the Youth Employment Opportunities bill is needed, as well as the building of more schools, highways, hospitals, and projects to increase the water supply.

Wirtz also talked about the need for improvement of the unemployment benefits program, reform of "the work habits of the country" so as to eliminate discrimination against workers in the 45-60-year group, and an acceptance of responsibility by labor, management and government to see that persons displaced by automation are able to get other gainful employment.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

"THIS IDEA THAT YOU CAN CUT the budget wholesale without cutting programs," remarked Pres. Kennedy at his Apr. 3 press conference, is the same kind of thinking that leads budget-balancers to imagine that you can take "$9 billion [in government spending] out of the economy" without putting this country on the economic skids.

Mr. Kennedy was talking about the letter sent by his predecessor in the White House, Gen. Eisenhower, to House Republican Leader Charlie Halleck of Indiana—the general telling Halleck that about $13 billion could be knocked out of Kennedy's $98 billion budget.

Part of Mr. Kennedy's reply was political and ironical, aimed specifically at Gen. Eisenhower's last director of the budget, Maurice Stans, whose skilled attention to fiscal policy was recommended by the general.

Stans was budget director, the President recalled with relish, when the 1958-59 recession hit. The result: A $500 million surplus was turned into the country's "largest peacetime deficit," a trifling matter of $12.5 billion.

The country suffered "the largest outflow of gold in dollars in our history, 1959, about $3.9 billion."

"We had two recessions, 1958 and 1960, and we had the highest peacetime unemployment, 1959, since World War II," the President continued. "That is not a record that we plan to duplicate if we can help it."

Mr. Kennedy had some additional comments, however, that were broader in scope. They were a renewal of the effort to instill ordinary common sense into the spending-and-taxing debate.

* * *

THE COUNTRY is rising in population at the rate of 3 million a year, he observed.

The "budget may have gone up because the country is growing and the population is growing, but so is our Gross National Product," he continued, and added the home thrust:

"I think we ought to recognize that . . . our budget expenditures as a percentage of our Gross National Product are about the same as they were all through the fifties," the Eisenhower years.

The national debt "as a percentage of our Gross National Product is steadily declining."

"When we came into office, we had 11 combat-ready divisions, and now we have 16. We increased the scheduling of Polaris [submarines], nearly double per year. We increased the number of planes on 15-minute alert from 33 percent of our Strategic Air Force to 50 percent. . . . In the Navy we have added about 46 vessels."

* * *

THE PERTINENT QUESTION to be asked about Mr. Kennedy's budgets is one that he recognizes himself: Is the federal budget rising fast enough in the area of non-defense projects—the education, health, social, transportation, urban development, recreation and conservation fields?

The first three fiscal years the Kennedy Administration has handled have seen, in non-defense expenditures, "less of an increase than Pres. Eisenhower . . . [had] in his last three years," the President remarked.

"I am concerned that we are not putting in enough, rather than too much," he added.

Gen. Eisenhower was given a demonstration early in his Administration that a tax cut can stimulate the economy so usefully that the anticipated revenue loss is cut in half and soon wiped out entirely. More business activity means more revenue at lower rates. The primary need now is to "prevent an economic decline of the type we had very rapidly in 1958 and 1960," Mr. Kennedy remarked.

We need sustained government expenditures and a tax cut, he said, because the economy must be sparked to a "$25 billion increase in our Gross National Product to absorb the people coming into the labor market, let alone cut down the unemployment."

It sounds good to talk about wholesale meat-ax budget slashing, but it isn't prudent fiscal policy for a country that needs a surge forward.

UNEMPLOYMENT which has been at 5.5 to 6 percent for five consecutive years is "a problem this nation has to face," Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz said in an exclusive interview on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service program.

How to Buy:

Buying by Federal Standards Cheapest Way to High Quality

By Sidney Margolius

NOWADAYS YOU OFTEN buy your orange juice already canned, your vegetables in a box, your fish in a package and your meat already wrapped. This is convenient. But you no longer can see what quality you are buying, and obviously have no way to compare values or pick the most suitable quality for your needs.

The fact is you cannot depend on a food packer's own designation of his product as "fancy" or "premium." Surveys have found that foods labeled to indicate high quality sometimes really are lower quality. While lower grades are satisfactory for many purposes, there is no use paying a top-quality price for them.

Some packaged foods and meats are labeled according to official standards of the U.S. Agriculture Dept., and this is the most efficient and economical way to buy. For example, as this is written, we have before us three different brands of frozen orange juice. One brand is two for 47 cents; the second, two for 49 cents; the third, two for 53 cents. But it's simple to know which is the best buy because all three carry the official "Grade A" label of the Agriculture Dept. in a little U.S. shield printed right on the cans. That means all three brands meet the same official government standard of quality.

Where possible, it pays to buy according to official U.S. grades. Not only do these grades help you select the best value, without depending on a widely-advertised name as moderate-income housewives especially tend to do, but they also help you choose the right quality for the intended use.

For example, if you are buying canned plums for a molded plum ring, where the appearance of the fruit would be important, you might be willing to pay the extra price for Grade A. But for a plum pie, you would be as well off buying Grade B, and for a plum whip, it would be a waste to buy anything but Grade C. Usually the chief difference between Grade A and the lower grades is only appearance. Grade A products are selected for uniform size, for color and tenderness.

BUSINESSMEN TEND to feel that we consumers should be satisfied to buy by brand name. But they themselves don't depend on brand names. Chicago wholesalers have found that meat dealers often refuse to buy pork products under a brand name alone if they are not certified by Agriculture Dept. graders as meeting standards of the Chicago Mercantile Exchange.

As the use of packaged foods expands, grade labeling becomes increasingly necessary so we know what's inside the package. More and more consumer organizations are calling the attention of government agencies and congressmen to this need.

Meanwhile, buy by grades wherever possible to take advantage of one of your best potential money-savers. You will find eggs often are sold by grades, sometimes meats, and occasionally canned foods.

In general, we recommend using Grade A for the table and Grade B or C for the pot. The nutrition is the same no matter what the grade. In eggs, for example, the yolk of the Grade B is a little flatter, and the flavor a little less delicate than in the Grade A. You might want Grade A for boiling or frying but Grade B is just as satisfactory for omelets, casseroles and other cooking and baking purposes.

In meats, the official U.S. grades are "choice," "good" and "standard." The "good" grade usually is the best buy because not only does it cost less than the "choice," but it is comparatively lean. The "good" does not have as thick a covering of fat as the "choice."

In canned fruits and vegetables, your best buy usually is Grade B, or for many family uses, Grade C. For example, in peaches, for a difference of 10 cents or more a can, you will find that Grade C has irregular pieces while the Grade A is uniform. But the difference in flavor is indistinguishable.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

OVERSIZED INVITATION to participate in the opening of the AFL-CIO Union-Industries Show set for May 17-22 at the St. Louis Arena is presented to Missouri's U.S. senators—Edward V. Long at left and Stuart Symington in center—by Joseph Lewis, show director and secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Union Label & Service Trades Dept.

Announced by Patton:

Farm Union Sets Up Political Action Unit

THE NATIONAL FARMERS UNION, which has had a long and friendly relationship with organized labor, is establishing its own political action organization.

NFU Pres. James G. Patton announced the establishment of the Rural Political Education Committee at the group's annual convention in New York City.

The Farmers Union has some 300,000 farm families, mostly in western states, among its membership and its new political group is expected to be a powerful ally of the labor movement.

Patton told the 1,500 farmers and their wives, meeting at Carnegie Hall, that the Rural Political Education Committee would be separate from the NFU but that top officers of the NFU would head up the political group.

"RPEC tells voters about issues—and about the views and records of candidates for office," a new brochure about the organization reads.

"It reports the voting records of elected officials. And it gives information to members so they can vote intelligently. It encourages members to become party workers, officials or candidates."

The brochure explained that "RPEC assists in registering voters and helps to get them to the polls on election day." It said that "RPEC is not a political party but supports candidates who in turn support the interests and objectives of the family farmer."

RPEC will be financed by voluntary contributions, just as labor's political arms are financed.

The NFU, Patton said, is finding it difficult to maintain its membership in the face of declining farm population. The organization is supporting the Administration's farm program. Its most immediate concern is a referendum late in May in which farmers will vote on a wheat program which guarantees their prices but limits their production. The NFU supports the plan.

The NFU historically has stood shoulder-to-shoulder with organized labor for socially progressive legislation. Currently, it supports medical care for the aged through social security, higher minimum wage with extended coverage, improvements in unemployment compensation, federal aid to education. It strongly opposes so-called "right-to-work" laws. (PAI.)

From Soup to Nonsense:

Friends Are People Who Live Only in Inaccessible Spots

By Jane Goodsell

WE MADE A BIG MISTAKE in choosing our friends. We don't know the right people. Oh, our friends are nice enough. Matter of fact, they're very nice—likable, intelligent, well informed and fun.

Still, liking people isn't enough and, believe me, before we make any new friends we're going to do some investigating. No, it isn't their patriotism or their moral standards that worry me. What I've got in mind is something much more basic. I'm going to find out where they live.

The friends we've got now live in the most impossible places: on funny, narrow, hidden-away little side streets, where you're not allowed to park; down one-lane unpaved country roads, where you get stuck in the mud; up dead-end streets, where it's nearly impossible to turn the car around; perched on hillsides so you have to walk up three flights of steps to get to the house; down country lanes where the guests at a party spend the evening running outside to move their cars so somebody else can get in or out of the driveway; way out in new suburbs where there aren't any street lights or house numbers or even people you can hail to ask if they know how to get to Old Oaken Bucket Road.

I can't understand why none of our friends live on nice, level streets in officially planned districts, where the blocks are square and the houses are numbered sensibly, and the streets run parallel to each other in alphabetical order. There are houses on streets like that, and people live in them. I wish they were friends of ours.

Sometimes, as I drive past those houses, I think how convenient it would be to go there to dinner. I could drive right up in front of the house, park the car on that nice, level street and walk in.

I wouldn't have to mince my way in high heels down a gravelled driveway. I wouldn't get stuck in the mud, trying to back the car up a cowpath that I mistakenly took for the turn-off that I was supposed to make. I wouldn't turn my ankle, stumbling up a flight of slippery, lopsided flagstone steps nor would I scrape a fender, trying to turn around in a driveway with an oak tree planted smack in the middle of it.

AS I SAY, our friends are nice people, but they're not worth the risk involved in going to visit them. After all, there must be lots of nice people who live in places you can get to without jeopardizing your life, your car or your sanity.

The only trouble is that sensible people like that might not want to be friends of ours. To be honest, our house isn't in exactly the most conveniently located place in the world. It's on a dead-end street, and it's illegal to park on the right hand side in front of our house.

Luckily, there's a turnaround at the end of the street, and you shouldn't have any trouble if you turn your wheels sharply—really sharply.

"I know this pill will cure your anxiety . . . I take it myself during each medicare controversy!"

AFL-CIO Backs Secretary:

HEW Rejects Romney Plan To Restrict Aid for Children

The AFL-CIO has strongly endorsed the stand of Health, Education & Welfare Sec. Anthony J. Celebrezze that he cannot approve federal matching funds for aid to children of unemployed Michigan workers under the restrictive eligibility requirements proposed by Gov. George Romney (R).

A bill supported by Romney and passed by both houses of the Michigan legislature would limit the program to children of parents who have been covered by the state unemployment insurance program since Jan. 1, 1958.

It would thus make ineligible for aid the families of workers laid off by small employers, public or private non-profit institutions or agricultural enterprises.

Celebrezze cited a memorandum from HEW Gen. Counsel Alanson W. Willcox which found the proposed Michigan definition of an unemployed parent to be "arbitrary" and observed that "a man losing his employment with a nonprofit university or hospital is just as much (or just a little) 'unemployed' as a person in like circumstances losing his employment with a commercial establishment."

This position, AFL-CIO Social Security Dir. Nelson H. Cruikshank wrote Celebrezze, "is completely consistent with the purposes of the Social Security Act and one which must prevail if the principles on which our legislation in this field has rested since 1935 are to survive."

Cruikshank said the Michigan bill is "wrong on two counts:"

- It imposes "an arbitrary condition of eligibility based on coverage by another system" and thus "violates the basic principle of public assistance," which must "recognize need without regard to group or class of recipient."
- It threatens the integrity of both the ADC-U and the jobless insurance programs in that the limitation of benefits to families eligible for unemployment compensation injects "a needs concept" into that program.

ADC-U was set up as a program of federal matching grants to states in 1961 because previously aid to dependent children had reached only those in need of help because of parental death, absence or disability.

Federal law permits the states a broad area in which to define unemployed parents, but Willcox's memorandum said the whole history of social security legislation and its administration makes it clear that state definitions narrower than those specifically permitted under federal law must bear a "rational relation" to the purposes of public assistance programs.

States are specifically permitted to exclude families from ADC-U eligibility if the jobless parent is currently receiving unemployment insurance benefits. The approach of the Romney bill, however, is to exclude families of jobless workers who are not eligible at all for unemployment benefits.

This, said Willcox, is a limitation "not within the permissive language" of the Social Security Act.

In a telegram to Romney, Celebrezze outlined a number ways the state could correct its proposed program to become eligible for federal funds.

"If groups not covered under unemployment insurance were brought within the purview of the program for aid to families with dependent children such a law would be approvable and federal matching funds would be available for the entire group," the secretary wrote.

"If the state's problem is to be sure the program is restricted to those who had full-time employment for a reasonable period subsequent to Jan 1. 1958, an eligibility provision using this as a test of unemployment would be acceptable if applied uniformly."

In Detroit, Romney said without further elaboration that he would take the issue to "the highest authority."

He noted that two other states—North Carolina and Oklahoma—also use eligibility for jobless insurance to qualify recipients of ADC-U. These precedents apparently were the basis of an earlier clearance given the Michigan plan.

The state was subsequently advised, however, that approvals in the two other states had been on an experimental basis and that with extension of the act the limitations in such plans had been found to be "unreasonable."

TEN YEARS AGO Harry Leonard, business agent of Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 160 in Minneapolis, Minn., visited the recently established labor cancer detection clinic for a checkup. Doctors found polyps in his colon. They were removed and found cancerous, but because of the early operation Leonard, shown with his daughters, is now 61 years old, active, healthy and still on the job.

Workers' Lives Saved By Cancer Fund Drive

The American Cancer Society is conducting its annual drive for funds this month, with more than 2 million volunteers soliciting contributions for the organization's research, education and service program.

Gifts to the society will help cut down the annual toll of 100,000 workers which the disease takes each year—30,000 of whom die needlessly, according to Dr. Harold S. Diehl, senior vice president for research and medical affairs and deputy executive vice president of the society.

"I say needlessly," he explained, "because they might have been saved from cancer had it been detected early and treated properly and promptly."

For the remaining 70,000, he said, hope for prevention or cure lies in further advances in research, much of which is financed through collections during the annual cancer month.

Diehl said that science is able to cure half of the 520,000 new cases of cancer diagnosed annually in the United States, of which some 200,000 are in the labor force. However, he continued, "we are only saving one in three." The gap can be narrowed by annual health checkups during which cancer could be detected, he asserted.

"There are in America today over 1.1 million people who have conquered cancer," he said. "They have had the disease but following treatment have been free of it for more than five years. Among this happy group are 400,000 working men and women."

The society recently presented AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany with its distinguished service citation in appreciation for the $828,000 raised by AFL-CIO affiliates in Labor's March on Cancer.

The presentation was made by William D. Gargan, stage, screen and television star, whose larynx has been removed because of cancer and who uses esophogeal speech.

Government Employes Win 4 More Elections

The Government Employes have scored a clean sweep in four recent union representation elections, winning bargaining rights at a Social Security Payment Center in Kansas City, Mo., in a unit of 1,400 employes at McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey, and at Veterans Administration centers in Mountain Home, Tenn., and Hot Springs, S. D.

The Mountain Home election attracted national attention when a competing union, the unaffiliated National Federation of Federal Employes, refused a place on the ballot because it said it did not believe in collective bargaining for government workers. The NFFE urged employes to vote "no union" to keep the AFGE from winning exclusive recognition and the right to negotiate a contract.

Employes instead voted 387-172 for AFGE representation. Professional employes also voted 96-12 for the AFGE, and will therefore be represented in the same unit.

At the other VA installation, in Hot Springs, S. D., the NFFE appeared on the ballot, receiving 12 votes to 124 for the AFGE and 95 for no union.

At McGuire Air Force Base, the vote was an overwhelming 746 for AFGE representation to 236 for no union.

Both Votes Won

The AFL-CIO affiliated union also swept both sections of the election for Kansas City employes of the Social Security Administration. Employes at the Payment Center voted 651-240 for the AFGE and the union won bargaining rights at the Kansas City District Office by a 32-23 margin.

Kansas City was the fourth major Social Security payment center where the AFGE has won exclusive recognition. Elections were won earlier at centers in Chicago, Philadelphia and New York in bargaining units totaling some 4,000 employes.

Turner to Help Lead Cultural Center Drive

Pres. J. C. Turner of the Greater Washington AFL-CIO has been named a general vice chairman of the Washington metropolitan area campaign to raise $7.5 million for the National Cultural Center.

In announcing his appointment, Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, chairman of the Washington Metropolitan Area Committee for the center, said it "mirrors the material and moral encouragement and support the labor movement is giving cultural activities."

Pres. Kennedy has named a board of trustees for the center that includes AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Turner, who also is chairman of the campaign's labor committee, termed his appointment a "recognition of labor's interest" in creation of the cultural center. He is a vice president of the Operating Engineers and has been business agent of Local 77 since 1940.

Sam Jack Kauffman, president of Musicians Local 161, has been named vice chairman of the labor committee for the campaign.

J. C. Turner

Sam Jack Kauffman

Cloak Board Names Organizing Manager

New York—Mayer Finkel, business agent of Cloak Pressers Local 35 of the Ladies' Garment Workers since 1960, has been named manager of the organization department of the New York Cloak Joint Board.

Social Security Ups Benefits $1.8 Billion

Social Security benefit payments in fiscal 1962 rose $1.8 billion over the previous year as more than 1.5 million persons were added to the rolls, the board of trustees of the two funds said in their annual report to Congress.

About half the increase in the number of beneficiaries grew out of 1960 and 1961 amendments to the Social Security Act, according to Robert M. Ball, commissioner of social security and secretary of the board of trustees.

An additional 169,000 beneficiaries became eligible as a result of amendments that relax the amount of work needed for eligibility, he said, while about 723,000 names were added under 1961 amendments making benefits payable to men 62-64 and their dependents.

The trustees presented new cost estimates which confirmed earlier findings that the old-age, survivors and disability insurance system as a whole is in "close actuarial balance."

The OASI trust fund, they estimated, is out of balance by only 17 one-hundredths of 1 percent of covered earnings, a cut of 7 one-hundredths of 1 percent from the previous fiscal year's estimated long-range imbalance of 24 one-hundredths of 1 percent.

However, the trustees reported a reverse trend in the case of the smaller Disability Insurance Trust Fund. This fund, they said, lacked balance by 14 one-hundredths of 1 percent compared with 6 one-hundredths of 1 percent last year.

To put the fund into actuarial balance a silght future increase in the amount of the social security contribution allocated to the disability program was recommended. The amount would be determined by the next Advisory Council on Social Security Financing, to be named soon.

The discrepancy was attributed to extension of benefits first to dependents of the disabled beneficiaries, and later to broadening of the program to cover all disabled workers. The program originally limited benefits to those 50 years of age or older.

The OASI Trust Fund decreased during the year, as anticipated, by about $1.3 billion. Assets of the fund on June 30, 1962, amounted to $19.6 billion.

The Disability Insurance Trust Fund increased by about $2 million to $2.5 billion.

SWEARING-IN CEREMONY shows Assistant Sec. of Labor Daniel P. Moynihan (left) taking the oath of office as it is administrated by Supreme Court Justice Arthur J. Goldberg (center). Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz, who succeeded Goldberg in the Cabinet post, looks on at right.

Moynihan Sworn In As Labor Dept. Aide

Daniel P. Moynihan, executive assistant to the Secretary of Labor since November, has been sworn in as Assistant Secretary of Labor.

Moynihan, 35, joined the Labor Dept. as a special assistant to the Secretary in July 1961. Previously he had been director of the New York State Government Research Project at Syracuse University and assistant professor of political science there.

A graduate of Tufts University, he holds master's and doctor's degrees from the Fletcher School of Law & Diplomacy, his doctoral thesis being on "The United States and the Intl. Labor Organization."

A Fulbright fellow at the London School of Economics in 1950-51, he has been director of public relations for the Intl. Rescue Committee and in 1954 represented a local of the former CIO Government & Civic Employes Organizing Committee on the union's New York City Joint Board. He has taught at Tufts, the New York State School of Industrial & Labor Relations at Cornell University, Russell Sage University and the University of Maryland Overseas Program.

From 1955 through 1960 he served in the New York State government, including membership on the State Tenure Commission and on the staff of former Gov. Averell Harriman (D).

Moynihan has written widely on government, economics and labor, and has contributed to many magazines and other publications. He is married and the father of three children.

Kennedy Union Order Hailed as 'Milestone'

New Orleans, La.—Labor's first year under Pres. Kennedy's executive order on union recognition has been "both frustrating and stimulating," Pres. B. A. Gritta of the AFL-CIO Metal Trades Dept. declared at a Navy industrial relations conference here.

Gritta said the order has been "a milestone in bringing to government workers rights to organize, to obtain meaningful union recognition and to engage in genuine collective bargaining."

It has also, he said, "kindled a real interest on the part of government workers in organization and collective bargaining."

Still, there are "shortcomings," he declared.

The major weaknesses of the program include the lack of an agency to administer the program, comparable to the National Labor Relations Board's role in private industry, and the absence of a terminal point in negotiations or disputes, he said.

Since the government forbids its workers to strike, "it must then provide us with some equitable and fair means of resolving our controversies," Gritta declared.

Unions affiliated with the Metal Trades Dept. have "urged that an arbitration process should be established" to resolve deadlocked negotiations, he said. One possibility, he added, would be to establish a permanent presidential panel "which would take jurisdiction when negotiations are deadlocked, and accord to the parties a full opportunity to present their cases and thereafter make final and binding decisions on all issues in controversy."

Gritta said problems have also arisen on procedures for establishing appropriate bargaining units and determining majority representation. In many cases, he said, this is because procedures were set up by officials unfamiliar with union-management relations.

French Miners Send Thanks for Grant

The French National Union of Miners-FO has sent its "profound gratitude" to American workers for a $5,000 gift to help them in their month-long strike.

The AFL-CIO donation was transmitted to the union through Gen. Sec. Robert Bothereau of the General Confederation of Labor-FO, with which the AFL-CIO is associated in the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions. The miners, despite orders from Pres. de Gaulle, walked out of the government-owned coal mines on Mar. 2 when requests for wage increases and shorter hours were not met.

In a letter to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, Gen. Sec. Andre Augard of the miners' union said "your generous gesture is highly appreciated" and added that support of the world of labor in general and the AFL-CIO in particular has been a source of moral strength to the strikers.

Humphrey Urges Overhaul:

Congressional Procedures Seen in Need of Modernizing

Congress must modernize its procedures if it is to remain responsive to the needs of a fast-changing nation, declared Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.).

Humphrey, writing in the April issue of The American Federationist, the AFL-CIO's monthly magazine, urged the enactment of resolutions which would provide for a full-scale review of the legislative branch and a formal report on recommended changes.

The Minnesota senator, who is majority whip of the Senate, pointed out that since the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 the nation has increased its population by one-third and assumed heavy domestic and international responsibilities.

He proposed a series of changes in the workings of Congress as it is now constituted. But, he added:

"What is clearly needed is a complete and detailed review of the overall structure and workings of Congress—and a set of recommendations to improve the efficiency of Congress."

Humphrey singled out for support a resolution sponsored by Sen. Joseph Clark (D-Pa.) and 31 other senators calling for a "Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress." Similar bills in the House were sponsored by Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.), Rep. John V. Lindsay (R-N.Y.) and 14 others.

"A review and reorganization of Congress is long overdue," Humphrey declared.

"Congress must update its procedures. In a free nation with a representative government, we cannot expect total order and absolute efficiency in the legislative branch. But we can expect—and must demand—a congressional system willing and able to remain responsive to a fast-changing nation."

Loss of Confidence

Humphrey conceded that "long delays and petty bickering" during the final weeks of the 1962 session "cut into the confidence of the people in the legislative branch of their government."

But it would be a mistake, he explained, to blame the length of the congressional session. Such long sessions are inescapable, he added, considering that Congress has far more to do than in the past and only the same number of members to do it.

The problem, Humphrey said, rests partly with the way in which members of Congress spend the time they do have.

Specific reforms he urged as desirable to enable legislators to operate more efficiently and wisely included:

"FIRST, there should be more joint meetings of congressional committees and subcommittees. Too often, a senator or congressman serving on more than one committee must hear substantially the same testimony repeated at different times before two different committees.

"SECOND, there should be more standing joint committees of Congress. This would save the time of Congress as a whole, especially towards the end of each session when late-rising differences between the Senate and House on legislation often stall the work of both bodies.

"THIRD, a change should be made in the 'morning hour' in the Senate to permit members to send their speeches or articles to the clerk for insertion in the Congressional Record, without taking their own time and the time of the whole Senate for the speeches to be read word by word.

"FOURTH, there should be application of the 'rule of germaneness' to the Senate, to require members to restrict their remarks to the issue formally listed as the business of the Senate.

"FIFTH, there should be more efficient scheduling of the workdays of Congress. Specific days—particularly in the earlier months of the session—would be reserved exclusively for committee hearings and action. As the legislation begins to flow out of the committees, more days would be reserved exclusively for debate and action by the full Senate and House.

"One additional change would, I am convinced, improve the efficiency of Congress—particularly in the later months of the session: a summer recess of at least three weeks. . . . I am convinced the change of pace of a summer recess would reduce the tensions and bickering which are now so common in the final few months of congressional sessions."

In addition to these procedural changes, Humphrey cited several needed changes in power and structure.

He repeated his call for revised rules allowing control of a filibuster to enable the majority of the Senate to vote on an issue. He noted that the January-February attempt to amend Senate Rule 22 so that debate could be closed with a three-fifths vote or by a flat 51-vote majority instead of the current two-thirds vote had picked up strength. The effort, he pointed out, won 54 votes this time compared to 19 votes 10 years ago.

Additional Funds Urged For Labor and HEW

The AFL-CIO has urged Congress to appropriate more money than the Administration has requested for federal radiation control and air pollution programs, and for government grants for construction of hospitals and hospital facilities.

Legislative Rep. Clinton M. Fair said the environmental health program of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare for the next fiscal year has been "obviously . . . tailored to the budget, rather than to the needs."

Fair testified before a House subcommittee which is considering appropriations for HEW and for the Dept. of Labor.

He told the subcommittee that the AFL-CIO strongly supports an Administration-proposed increase of $110.5 million in the Labor Dept. budget as "a modest request," fully justified by the "programs and objectives" of the department.

Added funds, he said, will enable the Labor Dept. to:

- Expand its manpower and training program to meet an anticipated growth of the program to 140,000 trainees next year.
- Improve the collection and analysis of employment-unemployment statistics.
- Continue improvement of the U.S. Employment Service and meet problems of job placement and guidance for "the growing number of long-term unemployed, displaced by automation," and the rapidly-rising number of young people entering the labor market each year.

Fair urged the Appropriations subcommittee to restore a proposed cut of nearly $50 million in Hill-Burton Act funds for hospital construction, declaring that "there is still a shortage of hospital and other health facilities." Other health programs proposed by the Administration, he pointed out, would not be implemented in time to affect fiscal 1964 budget needs.

While the proposed budget for environmental health programs—including air pollution and radiation control—is 21 percent above last year's appropriations, this must be "weighed against the small base from which these programs started," Fair declared.

He said the fund request "ignored" recommendations for a national radiation control program submitted by an advisory committee and urged that "at least $25 million" be added to the appropriation.

In other areas of the HEW budget, the AFL-CIO:

- Strongly endorsed strengthening of the U.S. Office of Education and criticized the "woefully inadequate" gathering of educational statistics by the agency.
- Termed the funds requested for public assistance grants to states "absolutely essential," and noted that the $2.9 billion request is $50 million under original estimates, because "states are not implementing the Kerr-Mills medical assistance program at the rate or at the level that was anticipated."

UNION STORE CARD of the Retail Clerks appears on this billboard, one of 53 color displays sponsored by RCIA Local 324 to carry the union's message to 1 million residents of Orange County and Long Beach, Calif. Union Sec.-Treas. Arthur Z. Berland is shown with the poster.

Plant Piracy Hit:

Increased Area Aid Urged by Schnitzler

The "lagging rate of economic growth" and U.S. tax policies which encourage runaway industries and "subsidize plant piracy" threaten the goals of the government's area redevelopment program, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler has told Congress.

He urged the House Banking & Currency Committee to approve Administration proposals for stepped-up federal assistance for depressed areas, including loans to new commercial and industrial enterprises, grants and loans to help communities build public facilities, and greater federal technical assistance to help unemployment-hit areas develop "untapped resources."

Schnitzler also asked the committee to close a loophole in the Area Redevelopment Act which has enabled some private firms receiving federal loans to evade the Davis-Bacon prevailing wage law in constructing new facilities. The original intent of Congress, he noted, was that federal funds "not be used to depress existing wage levels in the communities affected."

In addition, Schnitzler said, some provisions of U.S. tax law "frustrate the desire of Congress to deny any federal aid to a community which merely aids the transfer of jobs from one locality to another."

"I refer to the spreading practice of selling tax-free state and local bonds and using the proceeds to build plants for private users . . .," he said. "Too often this practice is utilized to pirate an employer from another community."

While noting that tax legislation is the province of the House Ways & Means Committee, Schnitzler said the issue "is also germane" to the interests of the Banking & Currency Committee because "the plant piracy encouraged by this practice can help create new stranded communities and thus add to the burden" of area redevelopment.

He urged stringent policing by the ARA to see that facilities built for a new enterprise are not used to lure runaway industry.

Endorsing expansion of federal redevelopment aid, Schnitzler said the program "has made significant progress considering the limited time it has had to do its job and the difficulties caused by the inadequate overall rate of growth of the American economy."

The backlog of loan applications and unmet needs justifies the Administration's request to raise the authorization for industrial and commercial loans from $200 million to $500 million, for public facility loans and grants from $175 million to $325 million, and technical assistance from $4.5 million to $10 million annually, he said.

He also backed a proposal to give locally-financed loans equal priority on repayment with federal loans. This, he said, would make it easier to raise the minimum 10 percent local financing before federal funds can be allocated.

"Most distressed areas were a long time going down," Schnitzler declared, "and it will require time—as well as aid and much effort—to restore them to good health."

MYSTERY STILL SHROUDS disappearance of SS Marine Sulphur Queen, above, with a crew of 29 members of the National Maritime Union and 10 licensed officers. A T-2 tanker built in 1944 and later converted to carry liquid sulphur, the vessel's last radio message on Feb. 3 gave no sign of trouble.

Sulphur Queen Disaster Stirs Action on Greater Safety at Sea

New York—The epitaphs of 39 men lost at sea aboard the Marine Sulphur Queen early in February may well be written in greater shipboard safety conditions for their fellow seamen and union members.

"Let us resolve that we shall see to it that they did not die in vain," was the plea of Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union as he called on ships' committees to redouble their vigilance against unsafe conditions and to hold vessels in port if necessary where repairs are essential.

Positive results already are flowing from an appeal by Curran to ship operators for the installation of inflatable life rafts.

States Marine Lines, largest unsubsidized U.S. flag ship operator, responded to Curran's letter with the statement that it had long regarded inflatable life rafts as "superior life saving devices" and would move promptly to implement "the thoughts of those who feel the same way."

The inflatable rafts have been approved by the U.S. Coast Guard and were recommended in the 1960 Intl. Convention for the Safety of Life at Sea. Only 11 maritime nations have ratified the convention so far, however, and ship owners need not comply with its recommendations until 15 nations do so.

Had the Sulphur Queen been equipped with such rafts, the NMU feels, "we might still have a few of those men around today," Curran wrote the ship operators.

Vanished Off Florida

There were 29 NMU members and 10 licensed officers aboard the Sulphur Queen when it vanished somewhere off the Florida keys after sailing from Beaumont, Tex., Feb. 2 with a cargo of liquid sulphur.

Two life jackets, rings and part of a name board found along the Florida coast are the only meager clues to what caused her disappearance. The hope that she might have sought refuge in Cuba from a blustery Atlantic storm has been discarded. No trouble was indicated in the last radio message received from the ship, Feb. 3.

Meanwhile, the Coast Guard is continuing its investigation and is following up a report that an unidentified merchant ship of Dutch registry may have crossed paths with the Sulphur Queen, a T-2 tanker built in 1944 and operated by Marine Transport Lines.

Curran speculated that since the ship was nearly 20 years old—an age, he said, when most ships are ready for lay-up or at least a complete overhaul — she might have sprung some of her plates.

"Since a cargo of liquid sulphur could become explosive when it comes into contact with the water, she might have been blown sky high," he suggested.

The tragedy, he said, should serve "as a reminder of the kind of job a seaman has" to critics and congressmen now considering a proposal to impose compulsory arbitration on the maritime unions.

He cited particularly a recent article in Reader's Digest, which he said "paints the seamen as living in ease and luxury" but makes no mention of the hazards they face or the fact that they must live as American consumers and not on "the same budget that a European or Asian seaman's family might have."

He recalled that many lives had been lost in tanker explosions in recent years "in port and at sea" and noted that 25 years ago no insurance was available to seamen because of such risks.

"Were it not for the union being able to negotiate insurance as part of the pension and welfare plans," Curran said, "it would be a very expensive thing for any seaman to try to get insurance."

The NMU's contract provisions and its own welfare funds together will yield some $8,500 to the surviving beneficiaries of each of the Sulphur Queen's crew members.

AFL-CIO Asks End Of 'Bracero' Program

(Continued from Page 1)

which has "severely taxed" many communities with heavy social costs stemming from the depressed conditions of U.S. migrant workers.

"Swollen public assistance caseloads, blighted areas, broken families, emotional disorders, child labor and retarded educational achievement" are among the by-products of the displacement of domestic farm workers, he said.

The program, Biemiller declared, "perpetuates a system of colonialism which solves no long-run problems for the imported foreign worker, degrades him as well as the domestic worker he replaces.

In other labor testimony opposing continuation of the program:

- Jacob Clayman, administrative director of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept., called contract labor "legalized peonage."

He said the program was "a mistake" from its start and has served "only the shortrun selfish interests of a small minority of farmers, absentee owners and processors at a tragic cost to farm workers."

- Arnold Mayer, legislative representative of the Meat Cutters, said the competition of braceros and domestic workers for farm jobs in the U.S. "is a competition of poverty against poverty and brings about still greater poverty—it is a competition which lowers wages."

One result of the program, Mayer said, has been the creation of "rural slums" where domestic workers and their families live.

"The program's effect of causing unemployment and low wages, of exporting wages earned in the United States, has blighted these communities," he said. "While corporate agriculture prospers, the communities around them fail to benefit."

- Gilbert L. Simonson, West Coast district director of the Packinghouse Workers, described as "ridiculous" the claim of Mexican farm labor users that American workers will not do "stoop" labor.

"Coal mining is stoop labor," he pointed out, but "nobody suggests bringing in foreign labor to do this type of work, because wages are high enough to attract the workers needed."

Spokesmen for all major religious groups, the National Farmers Union, the National Consumers League and other social action organizations joined in criticizing the bracero program and urging either its immediate abolition or a phase-out coupled with major reforms.

Mayor Daley Wins 4th Term in Chicago

Democratic Mayor Richard J. Daley, strongly supported by organized labor, won a third four-year term in one of the largest vote turnouts in 20 years.

Daley defeated Republican Benjamin S. Adamowski, a former Democrat, by 137,000 votes. The elction brought out 73 percent of the eligible voters. Democrats retained control of the city council with 42 of the 50 seats.

In Birmnigham, Ala., Eugene (Bull) Connor, a bitter-end segregationist, was defeated in his bid for the mayoralty by Albert Boutwell. A record turnout was recorded with Boutwell, running up an 8,000-vote margin.

Japanese Rail Union Asks Major Pay Hike

Tokyo—The Japanese National Railway Workers Union has agreed to ask for substantial pay raises, shorter hours and annual bonuses for its 310,000 members as part of the national "spring offensive" of the Japanese union movement for work improvements, the Intl. Transportworkers Federation has been notified.

Churches Join Attack On Farm Labor Imports

Major Catholic, Jewish and Protestant groups have called for an end to the program of importing Mexican farm labor, coupled with positive steps to improve conditions for U.S. agricultural workers.

Religious spokesmen testifying before a House Agriculture subcommittee included:

- Rev. Shirley E. Greene, representing the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., with an affiliated membership of 40 million.

He told the subcommittee that church investigators had found that the contract labor program "has injurious effects" on family and community life of both the Mexican nationals and the domestic workers they displace.

Calling for an immediate end to the program, he said the church council finds "no moral justification for perpetuation of substandard wages for agricultural labor."

- Rev. James L. Vizzard, representing the National Catholic Rural Life Conference and other major groups including the National Council of Catholic Men.

Father Vizzard's statement, read by Rev. Ralph J. Dugan of the Bishops' Committee for Migrant Workers, declared that failure of farm operators to provide decent wages and working conditions "has caused a blight on the American rural landscape —a blight characterized by poverty-stricken, poorly-educated, under-employed men, women and children roaming throughout the nation in search of work."

"No group in the American labor force has the cards stacked so high against them as do migratory farm workers . . ." he added.

"They are excluded from the protection of most of our great social and labor legislation.

"They must compete with large amounts of foreign labor.

"They are human beings who are considered in the literal sense of the word a 'commodity' to be bought at the lowest possible price."

- Rabbi Eugene J. Lipman, representing the Commission on Social Action of Reform Judaism.

Noting that 750 of the nation's counties have been designated by the Area Redevelopment Administration as areas of severe rural poverty, Rabbi Lipman asked the subcommittee to "give careful consideration" to the "connection between growing farm unemployment and the continuation of Public Law 78," the Mexican farm labor import program.

"The American conscience has been aroused by the many privations and discriminations visited upon America's migratory farm workers," he declared.

Labor Safeguards Added:

Urban Transit Bill Passed by Senate

By David L. Perlman

The Senate passed the Administration's mass transit bill—after amending it to strengthen job and collective bargaining safeguards for workers—and prepared to take up the Youth Opportunities bill as Pres. Kennedy's legislative program began to break out of a congressional logjam.

Giving the President his first major legislative victory of the session, the Senate voted 52-41 for a $375 million program of federal grants to help metropolitan areas cope with mounting transit problems and an additional $375 million in federal loan guarantees for transit systems.

On the final note, 46 Democrats and six Republicans supported the bill; voting against it were 24 Republicans and 17 Democrats.

In the House, another Administration priority bill—a $206 million program of aid to medical education—cleared the Rules Committee and is expected to reach the floor after the Easter recess. The bill had been blocked in the Rules Committee last month by a 7-7 tie vote.

The mass transit bill, which appeared to be in shaky condition at the start of debate, was carefully steered through the Senate. Its floor leaders accepted a series of amendments to pick up needed votes—including trimming the initial three-year authorization from a total of $1 billion to $750 million.

Administration leaders, however, beat down a series of crippling amendments, including a drive by Republican Senators John G. Tower (Tex.) and Barry Goldwater (Ariz.) to strip from the measure protection for workers.

The major effort to kill the program—an amendment by Sen. Frank J. Lausche (D-O.) to eliminate all federal grants—was defeated 57-41. This would have limited the government's role to guaranteeing transit bonds.

Morse Proposal Wins

To meet labor objections to the committee-reported bill, the Senate approved an amendment introduced by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) prohibiting the use of federal funds for public agencies to take over private transportation facilities unless the Secretary of Labor and the Housing & Home Finance Administrator are satisfied that collective bargaining rights will be continued, employe benefits safeguarded, and workers protected against "a worsening of their position with respect to employment."

The amendment, accepted by the bill's sponsor, Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.) was adopted 52-40.

In other developments:

- The Administration regained its one-vote margin of control of the House Rules Committee as Rep. Ray Madden (D-Ind.) returned after having been sidelined by illness. This allowed clearance of the medical school facilities and loan bill.
- The Justice Dept. sent to Congress the Administration's key civil rights bill. Aimed at barring the use of discriminatory literacy tests to keep Negroes from voting, it establishes a sixth grade education as proof of literacy for voting in federal elections.

The measure also gives priority to voting rights suits in federal court and provides for a federal referee to pass on voter qualifications in counties in which fewer than 15 percent of Negroes of voting age are registered.

- The House Ways & Means Committee completed hearings on tax legislation and began closed-door consideration of the proposal.
- The House scheduled an Easter recess starting Apr. 12, with sessions resuming Apr. 22. The Senate was expected to remain in session.

Senate approval of the Youth Opportunities bill is anticipated, although Republican opposition has been mounting. The labor-backed Administration measure provides both for a Youth Conservation Corps, similar to the New Deal's Civilian Conservation Corps, and a "home-town" youth program under which youngsters would be employed by both public and private non-profit agencies.

Senate debate on the bill will open Apr. 8. A companion bill has been cleared by the House Education & Labor Committee.

Defeat of 'Work' Seen In Maine Legislature

Augusta, Me.—A joint committee of the Maine legislature was expected to attach a "do not pass" recommendation on a bill to outlaw the union shop, after a one-day hearing attended by some 600 opponents of a so-called "right-to-work" law.

The House-Senate Labor Committee heard the "work" proposal denounced by the state's Commissioner of Labor & Industry, a leading textile manufacturer, the head of the state Lobstermen's Association, and prominent clergymen.

Earlier the Maine Citizens for Industrial Progress, which opposes "right-to-work," released statements against the measure from the state's two United States senators—Republican Margaret Chase Smith and Democrat Edmund S. Muskie—GOP Gov. John H. Reed, and other state leaders.

The joint legislative committee heard:

- H. L. Gosselin, an executive of the Bates Manufacturing Co. of Lewiston, declare in a letter that passage of the bill could "impede progress in the large, already industrialized plants of our state."
- Leslie Dyer, president of the Maine Lobstermen's Association, state that the proposal "would help to dig our grave" and would not be tolerated by lobstermen.
- Labor & Industry Commissioner Marion Martin said the proposal "is not in the best interest of Maine."
- Rev. Edward F. Allen, superintendent of the Augusta district of Maine Methodist churches, said the state should not prohibit "the democratic right of working men and women to organize and agree with management on a union shop contract."
- Rev. Richard Rokos of St. Mary's Catholic Church, Augusta, declare that "so-called 'right-to-work' legislation would turn back the clock to the last century."

An unfavorable committee recommendation would not automatically kill the bill. In the Maine legislature, all bills are brought to the floor, with committee recommendations merely advisory.

NEW YORK CITY UNION MEMBERS board buses for trip to Albany to protest the sudden imposition of $400-to-$800 tuition fees by the state university board of trustees. The children of trade unionists will suffer most severely, opponents say, and the New York State AFL-CIO and city Central Labor Council are asking Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller or the legislature to restore the long-established free-tuition program.

Kennedy Slashes $420 Million From Foreign Aid Budget Bid vigorously dissenting—had said current programs could be cut by some $500 million through "harder terms" on loans and withdrawal of U.S. assistance from some areas of the world.

(Continued from Page 1)

Kennedy's special foreign aid message, accompanied by a draft bill, devoted great emphasis to telling Congress firmly that the value of the program to "the national interest" of the United States" clearly outweighs its cost."

Our aid programs, he said bluntly, "have generally and consistently done what they were expected to do."

He pointed out that "less than seven-tenths of 1 percent" of our Gross National Product is spent on foreign aid and that since such spending is "clearly in our national interest, all criticisms should be placed in that perspective."

U.S. aid has transformed western Europe into a "vital center of free world strength, itself now contributing to the growth and strength of less developed countries," he said.

Areas of Effort

"Africa is stirring restlessly to consolidate its independence and to make this independence meaningful for its people through economic and social development," the President continued.

"Free Asia is responding resolutely to the political, economic and military challenge of Communist China's relentless efforts to dominate the continent.

"Latin America is striving to take decisive steps toward effective democracy—amid the turbulence of rapid social change and the menace of Communist subversion.

"The United States . . . can no more stand aside in this climactic age of decision than we can withdraw from the community of free nations."

Rep. Otto E. Passman (D-La.), chairman of the House Appropriations subcommittee which handles foreign aid spending, said he had "hoped" that Kennedy would cut his request to between $2 billion and $3.5 billion. Passman served notice he will seek further cuts.

Sen. Richard Russell (D-Ga.) said foreign aid spending should be "substantially less" than last year's figure. And Senate Republican Leader Everett McKinley Dirksen viewed the voluntary cutback as evidence that GOP demands for budget cuts were "bearing fruit."

Kennedy's foreign aid message also proposed a change in U.S. tax laws, on a trial basis, to provide a tax credit for new investments in developing countries and to reinvestments of earnings. He said that "such a credit, by making possible an increased rate of return, should substantially encourage additional private investment.

Declaring that the start of the Alliance for Progress program has been "encouraging," Kennedy declared:

"Had the needs of the Cuban people been met in the pro-Castro period—their need for food, for housing, for education, for jobs, above all, for a democratic responsibility in the fulfillment of their own hopes—there would have been no Castro, no missiles in Cuba."

Despite "noisy opposition" from the early beginnings of U.S. foreign aid, and despite warnings that it was "throwing our money down a rat-hole," American aid programs have succeeded, Kennedy said. He added:

"These victories have been, in the main, quiet instead of dramatic. Their aim has been, not to gain territories for the United States or support in the United Nations, but to preserve freedom and hope, and to prevent tyranny and subversion,

4-6-63

Jobless Rate Down, 4.5 Million Still Idle

(Continued from Page 1)

"Practically all the March decline in unemployment was among adult men and women who had been looking for fulltime work," the Labor Dept. said.

The seasonally adjusted jobless rate for men fell to 4.6 percent in March from February's 5.1 percent—about the same rate as in the past year except for the recent January and February. The jobless rate for women fell to 5.1 percent from 5.5 percent.

The jobless rate for teenagers remained at 15 percent in March, the report noted, continuing higher than a year ago.

The longterm unemployed—those out of work 15 weeks or longer—held steady at 1.4 million in March, although it usually shows a seasonal increase. This was about 100,000 lower than a year ago, but March's 1.4 million compares to 663,000 in pre-recession March 1957 and a postwar low for March of 280,000 in 1953.

Of the very longterm jobless, the report said there continued to be 700,000 persons jobless over half a year, with no over-the-year improvement.

On the employment side of the picture, the report showed a better than seasonal boost of 800,000 jobs to a total of 67.1 million. The improvement was almost all among adults and came in both farm and non-farm sectors of the economy.

Total non-farm employment rose to 62.8 million in March, some 1.4 million above a year ago.

Counted among the "employed" were 2.2 million non-farm workers on short workweeks for economic reasons, unchanged over the month.

Farm employment showed a seasonal rise "somewhat larger than usual"—up to 4.3 million jobs from 4.0 million. But agricultural jobs continued their longterm downtrend by falling 400,000 from March a year ago.

"Labor force time lost, an index measuring the amount of available manhours lost to the economy through short hours and unemployment, dropped from 7.1 percent to 6.6 percent in March as a result of the decline in unemployment," the report said.

The Labor Dept. pointed out that the total labor force—which includes the armed services—rose seasonally to 74.4 million in March. After a period of slow growth from late 1961 through mid-1962, the report noted, "the labor force has resumed a pattern of annual increase amounting to about a million."

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII | Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year | Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C. | Saturday, April 13, 1963 | No. 15

House Smashes GOP Drive To Kill Public Works Fund

Youth Bill Wins 50-34 In Senate

The Senate beat back a series of crippling amendments and passed by a 50-34 vote the Administration's high-priority Youth Opportunities bill, aimed at giving job experience and training to tens of thousands of out-of-school, out-of-work youngsters.

A companion bill in the House has been cleared by the Education & Labor Committee but must hurdle the Rules Committee before it can reach the House floor.

Senate passage of the youth bill came on the heels of another Administration victory—passage by a 73-12 vote of a bill enabling the President to seal off millions of acres of public "wilderness" land from mining and other commercial intrusion.

Both sections of the Youth Opportunities bill had strong labor support—a Youth Conservation Corps modeled after the New Deal's successful CCC program and a "home-town" program which would put city youngsters to work for both public and private non-profit agencies in such fields as recreation programs, hospitals, libraries and social services.

The bill carries a first-year price tag of $100 million and is geared to an initial enrollment of 15,000 in the conservation corps and employment of up to 60,000 in the home-town corps. In the latter program, which includes part-time as well as full-time work, the federal government

(Continued on Page 3)

'Last Offer' Rejected At Boeing

The Machinists will make "every reasonable effort" to reach a peaceful settlement with the Boeing Co. for 45,000 aerospace workers, but IAM Pres. Al Hayes has warned that the responsibility will be "clearly with the company" if agreement is not reached by Apr. 15, when a Taft-Hartley 80-day injunction expires.

Hayes's warning followed rejection by Boeing employes of the company's so-called "last offer." The vote, conducted by the National Labor Relations Board as required by T-H, was 27,605 against the offer, 14,261 in favor.

The labor board said 94.5 percent of union and non-union workers voted at Boeing locations represented by the IAM;

(Continued on Page 2)

THE HEADLINE TELLS the Cleveland strike story in one of the last issues printed by the Cleveland Record, interim union-sponsored newspaper. Pictured after the printers became the last union to settle are, left to right: Seated, Pres. Clifford C. Hilpert of the Typographical Union, and Mayor Ralph Locher, who mediated the 18-week shutdown; standing, Anthony Disantis, Plain Dealer negotiator; Stephen Martenuk of the ITU, and Dan Ruthenberg, Press & News negotiator.

Cleveland Publishes:

Longest Newspaper Strike-Lockout Ends

By Eugene A. Kelly

Cleveland—Two daily newspapers resumed publication here after a 129-day shutdown, the longest in American newspaper history; and the Cleveland Record, interim paper published five days a week by newspaper unions, went out of business.

The last union pickets withdrew Apr. 4 after members of Typographical Local 53 and the Machinists ratified new contracts, but the morning Plain Dealer and the afternoon Press & News waited until Apr. 8 to publish.

The delay, the Plain Dealer said, was due to its desire for an "orderly callback" of employes and the "lack of color supplements and early-printed" Sunday sections.

ITU Pres. Elmer Brown, here for an ITU educational institute, said the strikes should "teach both the publishers and the printing trades that they have to sit down" outside formal contract sessions and "talk about their problems" such as automation. He said he sees no prospect of another strike "in the foreseeable future."

Since the Teamsters walked out Nov. 29, five unions in all had been on strike and six others said they had been locked out. Newspaper Guild Local 1, which had honored the truckers' picket lines Nov. 30 and then voted to walk out, was the first striking union to settle. All settlements were for an approximate $10 "package" for a two-year-plus period, but the ITU said its 26-month pact was worth $13.95 in wages and fringes.

Both papers sought to make up for lost time by printing news digests and missed comic strips. The morning paper started printing the death notices, in its clas-

(Continued on Page 2)

Coalition Defeated In Showdown Vote

By David L. Perlman

Administration forces broke the back of a budget-slashing conservative coalition as the House, in a sharp reversal of its powerful Appropriations Committee, voted $450 million for job-creating public works projects.

The vote, which had been expected to be close, was a decisive 228-184.

If the funds stripped by the Appropriations Committee had not been restored, the $900 million emergency program authorized by Congress in 1962 would have been abruptly terminated. The $400 million Congress appropriated last year to get the program started has been spent or obligated.

Kennedy Asks Restoration

An angered Pres. Kennedy had called for restoration of the funds, declaring it "inconceivable . . . that people can make speeches against unemployment and then vote to destroy a program the object of which is to attack the unemployment problem by providing jobs."

House Democratic leaders, caught off guard when the committee voted 22-19 to kill the program, quickly counter-attacked in the sharpest political debate of the session, accusing the GOP of being willing "to risk a recession to win an election."

In a letter to all congressmen, AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller had termed restoration of the public works funds "absolutely essential to stimulate the American economy and to open up more job opportunities for American workers."

Kennedy, calling on the House to save the program, declared that if the full amount were appropriated it would mean jobs for 500,000 unemployed men and women either on construction sites or in supporting activities. Communities which take part in the program put up

(Continued on Page 12)

Kennedy Bids Steel Hold Prices

Pres. Kennedy called on the steel industry to forego an across-the-board price increase to protect the public interest and preserve the present wage-price stability.

The President called also on the Steelworkers union to "avoid any action" which would lead to a general price increase.

The President's statement was triggered by an announcement by Wheeling Steel Co., the seventh largest steel producer, of a $6 a ton increase. The Wheeling price hike came a year after the dramatic confrontation between the steel industry and Pres. Kennedy in which U.S. Steel increased prices after signing an agreement with the USW and major producers ordered similar increases.

The President at that time, using the full powers of the White House, denounced the increase in strong terms. Three days later the steel industry rescinded the price hike. There has been no major change in prices since then.

In his statement urging continued stability, the President declared, "I opposed such a general increase last year—I oppose such an increase now."

A price hike in steel, he said,

(Continued on Page 3)

Canadian Election Pushes Liberals To Edge of Power—But No Further

Ottawa, Ont.—The 1963 Canadian election has left the government of the nation balancing on a knife edge. A strong surge pushed the Liberal Party to the edge of power—but not quite. The New Democratic Party, with substantial labor support, may play a key role.

Election Day returns showed the Liberals with 128 seats, Conservatives with 96, Social Credit with 24 and the New Democrats with 17 seats. Over 100,000 ballots of servicemen were to be counted Apr. 13, and it was anticipated that this should give the Liberals two more seats from the Conservatives. This increase, however, would be insufficient to give any one party an overall majority in the 265-seat House of Commons. With an expected final tally of 130 seats, the Liberals would be four short of the number of members of Parliament needed to give them a working majority plus one member to act as speaker of the Commons.

Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, whose Conservative Party dropped 20 seats from the 1962 election totals, sat tight waiting for the armed services vote to be counted. He has three constitutional avenues open: He can meet the new Parliament and seek a vote of support from it; he can resign; or he can attempt to work out some coalition arrangement with opposition parties.

The possibility of a coalition arrangement between the Conservatives and Liberals, with both Diefenbaker and Liberal Party Leader Lester Pearson stepping down, was raised by Pearson during the campaign. The prospect of this ma-

(Continued on Page 9)

THREE THOUSAND MEMBERS of more than a dozen international unions affiliated with the New York City AFL-CIO threw a noon-time picket line around the home-base Lord & Taylor store on 5th Avenue to support a drive, undertaken by Retail, Wholesale & Department Store's Dist. 65, for higher wages for 250 non-selling employes. Most of the employes have joined the union but the company refuses to negotiate.

Increase in March:

Unemployment Up In Major Job Centers

The number of major employment centers suffering substantial joblessness increased to 48 in March, the fourth straight monthly rise, the Labor Dept. has reported.

This means nearly one-third of the nation's 150 major job areas has an unemployment rate of 6 percent or over.

After setting an all-time record of 101 areas in the spring of 1961, when the 1960-61 recession hit bottom, the total declined steadily to 40 in November 1962. It edged up to 41 in December, to 44 in January 1963, to 46 in February and now to 48.

A year ago it totaled 63; it was 101 in February-March 1961, when reports were bimonthly, and 33 in pre-recession February-March 1960.

The Labor Dept. reported five changes for March, two areas registering improvements and three showing higher unemployment.

With the auto pickup, Flint, Mich., moved from the 3 to 5.9 percent group to the relatively low jobless category of 1.5 to 2.9 percent. New Bedford, Mass., showed seasonal advances in apparel, manufacturing, construction and fishing and improved from the 9 to 11.9 percent unemployed group to the 6 to 8.9 percent range.

The three areas where the job situation worsened were Waterbury, Conn., Terre Haute, Ind., and Wheeling, W. Va.

Waterbury and Terre Haute were reclassified from the moderate unemployment group to the substantial unemployment, or 6 percent and over, jobless category.

Waterbury, the Labor Dept. said, was affected by recent and long-term job losses in locally important primary metals, chiefly brass. Terre Haute reported over-the-year declines in electrical machinery, other durables and food processing.

Wheeling, already suffering 9 to 12 percent unemployment, slumped to the worst category—12 percent or more. The Labor Dept. blamed cutbacks in primary and fabricated metal plants and the closing of a local toy factory for the increased unemployment.

The number of smaller areas with substantial unemployment increased to 174 in March from February's 173. A year ago there were 203 such areas; in pre-recession February-March 1960, there were 109 smaller areas so classified.

Of the changes in the smaller areas list, Morristown, Tenn., was removed and Muncie, Ind., and Newark, N.Y., were added.

Industrial Engineers Criticized For Ignoring Fatigue Factors

American industrial engineers were sharply criticized by a European colleague for setting production standards for workers without proper regard for fatigue factors and for having "generally ignored" research studies available to them.

European engineers, Dr. C. L. M. Kerkhoven told a one-day seminar in Washington, D. C., on worker fatigue, have utilized research by making sure that work loads or work situations are not injurious to workers.

Kerkhoven, from the Netherlands, is a visiting professor of industrial engineering at Syracuse University and a leading practitioner in the fields of industrial fatigue, work pace, and ergonomics—fitting the job to the worker.

Citing films produced by the Society for the Advancement of Management and widely used in training company engineers, Kerkhoven said they envision an "impossible" amount of work in an eight-hour day at speeds that SMA considers normal but that studies have shown are as much as three time appropriate normal workload.

There are simple devices to measure worker fatigue—methods of checking heart beats, oxygen consumption, calorie usage—but American industry generally "ignores" them, the speaker told an audience of union industrial engineers, research directors and officers meeting in a conference room of AFL-CIO headquarters.

Pointing out that many persons make the mistake of believing that fatigue is caused mainly by heavy work, and that modern lifting devices have made it generally unusual in modern industry, Kerkhoven directly refuted the concepts. Rapid repetitive movements, even when no weight is involved, can be extremely fatiguing and may require relatively long rest periods, he said.

He recalled the case of a girl in an overseas factory who spent the day sitting in a chair stamping wrappers for light bulbs. She was an efficient and speedy worker but complained constantly of fatigue. A study showed the seemingly simple work actually was exhausting and required rest periods almost as long as the work periods.

One SAM film, for example, shows how a worker normally should be expected to use a shovel at a pace of 20.5 shovels per minute. According to Kerkhoven, the maximum rate which could be expected under the best of conditions, over an eight-hour day, would be 8.5 shovels.

Kerkhoven recently was a management consultant for major European firms. He demonstrated equipment to measure fatigue and answered questions at sessions presided over by Bertram Gottlieb, industrial engineer with the AFL-CIO Dept. of Research.

The group was greeted by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler.

Cleveland Newspapers Resume Publication

(Continued from Page 1)

sified advertising or news sections, of 5,000 Clevelanders who died in the preceding 18 weeks.

A day after publication was resumed, five Guild members, including four strikers, received awards from the Press Club of Cleveland for the best newspaper work of 1962. John Blair, editor of the Cleveland Record, won a certificate for service performed by the staff.

The two dailies have the largest newspaper readership in Ohio, according to circulation statements.

Final settlements were brought about with the aid of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service and Mayor Ralph Locher. For the mayor, who took over the office when former Mayor Anthony J. Celebrezze became Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare in Pres. Kennedy's cabinet, it was his first try as a volunteer mediator—a successful one.

The Guild made a determined effort to win a union shop clause in its contract but voted late in January, at meetings of the separate units, to settle for a maintenance of membership clause.

One group of members at the Press complained to ANG officers and the National Labor Relations Board that they had been denied strike benefits since the union's executive board voted Feb. 28 to deny benefits to members who failed to perform strike duties.

The denial was upheld by the ANG officers and the ANG executive board, the latter by a 14-1 vote. The protesters said they would carry their fight to the next local membership meeting Apr. 21.

Music Scholarships Established by UAW

Detroit—The Auto Workers have set up a scholarship program at the National Music Camp, Interlochen, Mich., for talented sons and daughters of UAW members.

The UAW executive board made a grant to the camp which will be used for construction of a lodge, the income from which in turn will provide scholarships each year for one boy and one girl. The award will cover the $695 camp fee, which includes all general costs except private lessons, accompanist fees, etc.

Youngsters in the 10th, 11th or 12th grades are eligible. Applications, which must be returned by Apr. 30, may be obtained from any UAW local or from the UAW Recreation Dept., 8000 E. Jefferson Ave., Detroit 14.

Rail Supervisors Seek Wage Raise

Chicago—An increase in basic wages of $50 a month and improvements in work rules are being sought in a national movement launched by the Railway Supervisors, Pres. James P. Tahney has announced.

The union's general chairmen, representing bargaining units on the 86 railroads with which the organization has 148 contracts, also voted to serve demands on the carriers for four weeks vacation instead of the present three weeks.

In addition supplemental pensions will be sought at the rate of $100 a month for 25 to 35 years of service; $115 after 35 years, and $125 after 40 years.

2.5-Year Bargaining Wins Pact in Malaya

Port Sweetenham, Malaya — After 2.5 years of negotiations, the new Transport Workers Joint Council has won an agreement on uniform rates and working conditions for port workers employed by three stevedore firms here.

'Last Offer' Rejected By Boeing Employes

(Continued from Page 1)

92.3 percent at Vertol Div. plants represented by the Auto Workers; and 92.3 percent at one subsidiary plant in Auburn, Wash., where the Machinists also bargain for the workers.

More than 65 percent voted to reject the company offer. After an earlier turndown by IAM members on Jan. 23, Pres. Kennedy used T-H machinery to name a board of inquiry and invoke the 80-day injunction.

Negotiations were resumed in Washington after the latest turndown, with Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service urging settlement.

Pointing to Boeing management's prior prediction that its offer would be accepted if all employes, union and non-union, had a chance to cast ballots, Hayes said both groups of employes "made it perfectly clear that the company's offer is unsatisfactory" and the next move is up to the company.

Hayes added:

"We are often reminded that the defense posture of the entire free world depends on continuing production at Boeing. We are well aware of our responsibilities. Not only have IAM members twice postponed strike action at the request of the federal government," but have also:

- Agreed to settle the dispute along lines recommended by the President's Aerospace Board.
- Repeatedly offered to accept impartial arbitration.
- Heard Boeing say no to both proposals.

Hayes cited the action of the aerospace board in praising the union for having shown a "sense of responsibility" in negotiations and asserting that "the nation has a right to expect the company to show a comparable sense of responsibility."

Within the time remaining before the unions may strike, the IAM head expressed the hope that Boeing will "demonstrate both its wisdom and patriotism by working with us" to reach a "reasonable settlement."

Issues in dispute include wages, job evaluation, employe rating, relocation pay, contract duration, and union security.

Fear of Divorce, He Says, Made Him Cancel Out

An employer's reported fear that his wife will divorce him is not a good excuse for canceling a union contract and firing four electricians.

So said Trial Examiner C. W. Whittemore in recommending that the National Labor Relations Board make an unfair labor practice finding against the employer and direct him to rehire the fired electricians and give them lost pay.

IBEW Business Rep. Jack Moore of Local 453, Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, testified that Sheldon V. Utley, owner of the Central States Electric Co. in Springfield, Mo., canceled a long-standing contract and said he "either had to go non-union or lose his wife." Utley did not dispute this but gave other reasons for his act, chiefly economy.

Whittemore said there was no merit in any of Utley's excuses for ending the IBEW contract and signing with another union.

NLRB Orders Reinstatement:

Backfiring of Propaganda Held Pretext for Discharge

A South Carolina textile firm which distributed a "generally anti-union" magazine article to employes during working hours, but then fired a worker who called the attention of other employes to a "pro-union" paragraph in the article, has been found guilty of illegal conduct.

The article, entitled The Henderson Story, was a purported account of a strike at the Harriet-Henderson Mills at Henderson, N. C.

Two members of a three-man National Labor Relations Board panel ruled that the Wellington Mill Div. of the West Point Manufacturing Co. fired H. C. McKinney, Jr., because he wore a union button and worked actively on behalf of the Textile Workers Union of America in 1961.

The company's charge that McKinney openly violated a company rule against solicitation during working hours was only a "pretext" for the discharge, NLRB Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown ruled.

The hearing record showed that McKinney and Milford Allen, another millhand, contacted the TWUA in August 1961 and helped sign up 53 members in an organizing campaign. McKinney and Luther Evans, folder operator in the cloth room at the Anderson, S. C. mill, wore their union buttons to work. All three were discharged at various times for union activity and other reasons given by management were pretexts, the majority ruled.

Fanning and Brown wrote that in view of the facts and management's "union animus as evidenced by its many unfair labor practices, and particularly the 'pretext' discriminatory discharge of Allen and Evans," the reason assigned for the discharge of McKinney also was a pretext and "the true reason was McKinney's leadership and activity" in the union.

Trial Examiner Sydney S. Asher, Jr., had related in an intermediate report that management passed out copies of The Henderson Story to employes during the TWUA organizing campaign.

Showed It to 10

On Sept. 28, 1961, McKinney borrowed a copy of the article from a weaver and showed it to about 10 other workers, urging them to read one paragraph which told how the union took care of its members when they were on strike.

McKinney was fired the same day for violating a rule against "solicitation" that had been posted on the bulletin board a week previously when the union asked for recognition and the company refused to recognize it without an election.

The examiner pointed out that the company "initiated the entire matter by distributing The Henderson Story and urging employes to read it on working time" and therefore "had no legitimate right thereafter to prohibit union adherents from seeking to counter the effects" by urging employes to read part of the same publication.

"What really jarred" the company into firing McKinney, Asher held, was not his alleged neglect of his work nor his alleged hampering of others' work but simply that he was "endeavoring to stir up support for the union" as he had "every right to do under the circumstances."

Reinstatement Ordered

Fanning and Brown ordered the company to cease interfering with the union and to reinstate the three fired employes with lost pay and interest. Member Philip Ray Rodgers, dissenting as to the reinstatement of McKinney, held that he was "lawfully discharged for flagrantly violating a valid no-solicitation rule."

The same firm was enjoined on Dec. 30, 1961, by U.S. District Judge Robert J. Martin, Jr., from using unlawful methods—specifically threats, interrogations and discharge of employes—to prevent Wellington Mill workers from organizing.

In another case involving the same firm, NLRB Trial Examiner Benjamin B. Lipton found recently that management had unlawfully spied on TWUA organizing meetings and recommended that it be ordered to stop violating the law.

The Harriet-Henderson strike began Nov. 17, 1958, when the company refused to agree to continue an arbitration clause in a contract with a TWUA local.

Tensions rose when management brought in strikebreakers and, the union charged, broke an agreement on settlement and rehiring worked out by then Gov. Luther H. Hodges, now Secretary of Commerce in Pres. Kennedy's cabinet.

Eight strike leaders were convicted, largely on the testimony of one witness who was later arrested in Virginia on a shooting charge. Jailed in 1959, the union men were released after Gov. Terry Sanford reduced their sentences. The union still maintains they were not guilty of the charges in "conspiring" to blow up the mills.

Single-Unit Elections Extended by NLRB

Single-unit elections among salesmen of P. Ballantine & Sons at two branch offices have been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board in extending its application of election policy to beverage salesmen.

In a 4-1 decision, the board directed that Ballantine salesmen at the Newark, N.J., branch be permitted to vote on whether or not they want to be represented by Office Employes Local 153; and salesmen at the Cranston, R.I., branch will vote on whether or not they want to be represented by Brewery Workers Local 114.

In recent rulings the board has moved away from a former policy of refusing elections except in statewide or regional units. In the latest ruling, Member Boyd Leedom concurred in the result and Member Philip Ray Rodgers dissented, pointing to a contrary decision reached by the 1958 board in a case involving the same company.

In the latest case Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members John H. Fanning and Gerald A. Brown reasoned that the prior ruling "unduly restricted the right of employes to self-organization and bargaining."

It would be a violation of the rights guaranteed by the National Labor Relations Act if the board continued to insist that branch salesmen must organize as a unit of employes in all 12 Ballantine branches extending over hundreds of miles from Rhode Island to Washington, D.C., the majority said.

This assertion is not "mere conjecture," they went on, since "the failure of any labor organization to file a petition for a branchwide unit of salesmen since that 1958 decision vividly attests to its adverse impact on organizational development."

The majority concluded that the law did not intend that board unit determination would "frustrate the organization" of employes.

In addition, they said, the record shows that individual branch managers have considerable authority over Ballantine salesmen and also that drivers and warehousemen at five Ballantine branches are represented in single-branch units by other unions.

'Big Four' to Explore UAW Study Proffer

Detroit—Representatives of four major auto companies have accepted the invitation of the Auto Workers to explore the setting up of joint study committees to meet in advance of 1964 contract negotiations.

Two dates have been set for exploratory meetings—Apr. 15 for a session between General Motors Corp. and the union, and Apr. 16 with Ford Motor officials. Each will be held at headquarters of the respective companies.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther said American Motors Corp. officials and the Chrysler Corp. also have agreed to meet for preliminary discussions at later dates.

Reuther had been authorized by the UAW executive board to propose that the union and major auto and agricultural implement manufacturers prepare for 1964 negotiations by meeting at least a year in advance.

Careful advance study of joint problems is advisable, Reuther wrote the company presidents, noting such studies have proved helpful in the steel and other industries. The usual 60-day bargaining period is not long enough, he said, to work out solutions to complicated issues, and the failure of collective bargaining might increase the pressures on government to intervene in such a way as to "leave little room for private decisions freely arrived at by labor and management."

The four auto manufacturers agreed to preliminary meetings without indicating their views.

Laborers Local 74 Adds to Scholarship

The scholarship program of Laborers Local 74 in Washington has been increased by $500 to $1,500, Pres. Walter Boyce, Jr., has announced. The program was inaugurated last year with awards of $500 scholarships to Carol Ann Coleman, Jessup, Md., who is attending the Cortez Peters School of Business in Washington, and Michael R. Pringle, Washington, who is attending the University of Maryland.

IN NEW YORK'S CHINATOWN, Chun Fish displays a sign telling public that Ying Ming is unfair to labor and is being picketed by Skirtmakers Local 23 of the Ladies' Garment Workers. Ying Ming runs a contract shop for the Ju-El Manufacturing Co. and Cambridge Sportswear, which agreed after a 10-day strike to sign a contract and to rehire five workers fired for union activity.

2 Plants Go ILGWU After 10-Day Strikes

New York—Ten-day strikes against two non-union Manhattan producers of skirts and sportswear have secured first contracts for more than 500 workers and the rehiring of five garment workers discharged for union activity.

The firings precipitated a walkout Mar. 14 at the "inside" shop of the Ju-El Manufacturing Co. here and spread to Cambridge Sportswear and other shops under contract to the two firms. The strikers, assisted by the staff of Skirt & Sportswear Local 23 of the Ladies' Garment Workers, stayed on the picket line around the clock with the active support of other ILGWU locals.

Workers for the two firms, which have been non-union for 15 years, will receive all the benefits of the existing union agreement between Local 23 and the National Skirt & Sportswear Association, according to the union.

The strike caught Ju-El at the peak of its season, and the companies failed in efforts to recruit strikebreakers. Spanish language newspapers refused to accept "help wanted" ads from the struck firm, the union said.

Union Mgr. Shelley Appleton said the walkouts marked the beginning of a new effort, in cooperation with the ILGWU Cloak Joint Board, to "organize whatever remains of non-union sportswear production" in the New York area.

Steel Firms Urged To Price 'Restraint'

(Continued from Page 1)

would invite "another inflationary spiral in place of the present wage-price stability," would hamper overseas competition and adversely affect the balance of payments position as well as "reduce the gains of our economic growth and reduce job opportunities in this country."

In the past year, Kennedy noted, the government has taken "major steps" to improve the economic position of the steel industry. Tax benefits of "some $100 million were provided in 1962," he said and additional tax gains will be realized in this year's tax reduction program.

What the steel industry needs, the President continued, "is more business at competitive prices, not less business at higher prices." He continued:

"I urge similar restraint on the steel workers union. With over 100,000 steel workers still unemployed there is a need for more jobs with job security—not fewer jobs at higher wages. Across the board price increases could precipitate labor demands and unrest that would cause great difficulty."

The President concluded: "I urge the steel industry and the steel union to avoid any action which would lead to a general across the board increase. I urge this in their own enlightened self-interest and in the public interest as well."

British Rail Workers Ask Workweek Cut

London—Two British affiliates of the Intl. Transportworkers Federation—the National Union of Railwaymen and the Associated Society of Locomotive Engineers & Firemen—have agreed to press jointly for a workweek reduction from 42 to 40 hours.

Uganda 107th Nation To Affiliate with ILO

Geneva—Dir.-Gen. David A. Morse of the Intl. Labor Organization has announced that Uganda, which joined the United Nations last October, has become the 107th nation to affiliate with the ILO.

OUTSTANDING CONTRIBUTIONS to labor-management relations won honors for five men from the Buffalo Diocesan Labor College. Shown at the presentation ceremony are (left to right), seated: J. Edmund Kelly, Jr., Buffalo Evening News labor reporter and a Newspaper Guild member, and William J. Ryan, assistant executive director of the United Fund. Standing: Norman E. Nicholson, who accepted an award for Pres. Edgar F. Kaiser of Kaiser Industries; State Mediator Martin E. Wersing; Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, and Msgr. Stanley A. Kulpinski, director of the college.

Kingsport Judge Bars Management Violence

Kingsport, Tenn.—Violence by strikebreakers against union pickets here in a strike of five unions against the Kingsport Press has been restrained by order of a judge of county Chancery Court.

The restraining order, requested by unions representing more than 1,800 production workers, was issued by Chancellor Dayton Phillips after two pickets had been run down by cars of management personnel.

One striker was treated at Holston Valley Community Hopital for a wrenched back and bruises, then returned to the picket line, as did the other victim. The court then issued its order restraining "any unlawful interference" with the right of union members to picket peacefully.

Earlier the management had obtained an order from the same court forbidding the strikers from taking any violent action at some future date. No such violence occurred before or after the injunction, the Allied Kingsport Press Unions reported.

The company has refused to meet with the U.S. Conciliation Service.

5 Unions on Strike

The strikers are members of the Printing Pressmen, Typographical, Bookbinders, Machinists, and Stereotypers unions. About 1,600 production and maintenance workers walked out Mar. 11 in protest against management's unwillingness to improve contracts satisfactorily after almost three months of negotiations. Since then another 200 unorganized workers have joined the striking unions.

The strike is the first authorized walkout in the 40-year history of the firm, one of the largest book publishers in the nation. Its products include the World Book, published by Field Enterprises, Chicago; the Book of Knowledge, and novels sold nationwide by Grosset & Dunlap.

At a mass meeting of 1,700 union members, committeemen and officers reported that picket lines are still firm and support of other unions in the area has been "wonderful." The unions have launched plans for a demonstration parade in this part of Tennessee to call public attention to the dispute.

One company move was to hold a "press conference" in which newsmen were permitted to ask questions without getting immediate answers. The answers were to be given "in a few days," the unions said, in the form of opinions rather than factual statements.

Dist. 65 Art Exhibit Under Way

New York—The 12th annual art exhibition of Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union Dist. 65 is being held this month in the union's headquarters here.

On view are 90 paintings by members of the union which in subject matter, treatment and quality reflect a wide variety of art experience and cultural background among the workers represented in the display. Many of the exhibitors are students of the district's year-around classes in painting and drawing.

Well-known art figures are making a series of appearances during the exhibition, lecturing and demonstrating their techniques to audiences that include interested union members as well as artists.

Professionals also choose top exhibit winners. This year they will be named by Hanna T. Rose of the Brooklyn Museum and Edward A. Bryant of the Whitney Museum of American Art. Other winners will be selected by popular vote and by the Grumbacher Artists' Material Co.

Dist. 65, with 35,000 members, is the largest affiliate of Retail-Wholesale.

Hunger Strike Wins For Greek Dockers

Piraeus, Greece—A six-day hunger strike by dockers here was called off recently when the Federation of Greek Dockers won a satisfactory contract settlement from employers through the intervention of the government.

President's Advisers Told:

'Full Employment' Joint Goal Of Swedish Unions, Industry

The driving force behind Sweden's dynamic economy is a firm agreement among labor, management and government that full employment through steady economic growth must be their prime objective.

Among the key elements in achieving this goal have been a high degree of industrial peace and unhesitating action by the government to ward off slumps.

This, in essence, was the message conveyed to the President's tripartite Advisory Committee on Labor-Management Policy by a mission of Swedish government and industry spokesmen.

Krister Wickman, under secretary of finance; Ivan E. Eckersten, chief of section of the Ministry of Finance, and Curt Nicolin, president of ASEA—the General Electric Corporation of Sweden, which has no ties to GE in this country—made up the second delegation of Swedes to accept the invitation of the President's Committee to discuss their approaches to economic and industrial relations problems.

An earlier Swedish team, which included Arne Geijer, head of the General Federation of Swedish Trade Unions, met with the committee last October.

Economic and industrial relations concepts which have had a hard time taking hold in the United States were taken for granted by the latest Swedish mission when they met with newsmen following their conference with the President's labor-management advisers.

Nicolin, for example, declared in response to a question that Swedish employers "would never think" of conducting open or covert campaigns to undermine the unions representing their employes.

"We prefer to deal with strong unions" as the responsible representatives of the workers, he said.

Sees Unions 'Vital'

He noted that as long ago as 1906 the Swedish Employers Association had issued a statement recognizing trade unions as a vital part of industrial democratic society.

Nicolin estimated that 95 percent of all production workers in Sweden are union members, with a somewhat smaller proportion—70 to 75 percent—organized in the white collar field.

The delegation suggested that the "tone" of labor-management relations may be even more important to the Swedish economy than the specific instiutions involved.

An appreciation for the needs and problems of the "other side" known as the "spirit of Saltsjobaden," was developed out of a series of labor-management meetings in the late 30s at the resort town of that name.

Strikes still occur, they acknowledged, but strike time lost in 1962 amounted to only one-hundredth of 1 percent of the total work output of Sweden's labor force.

As for the government's role in Sweden's "counter-cyclical" economic system, which has enabled it to maintain a low rate of unemployment (1.6 percent of the 3.8-million work force in 1962), Wickman pointed out that the government long ago had adopted the technique of intentional budget deficits in slump years countered by surpluses in boom times.

Capital Budget Used

He noted, too, that Sweden has both a capital budget and a current budget—a system long advocated by the AFL-CIO for the United States—which separates spending of an investment nature from current outlays. Only the current budget is considered in determining the deficit or surplus, Wickman said.

Asked about Sweden's national debt, he referred to it as a matter of course in terms of a percentage of gross national product, not in absolute figures. In contrast, many U.S. congressmen express alarm over the dollar size of the U.S. national debt, without acknowledging that the debt has been declining steadily in postwar years as a percentage of GNP.

One device of the "counter-cyclical" economy which particularly intrigued the President's advisers was the system of investment reserve funds which tends to channel business spending for expansion and renewal into periods of anticipated economic decline.

Under this system, Swedish industry is allowed to allocate up to 40 percent of its pre-tax profits to a tax-free capital reservoir, with nearly half of that amount deposited in the State Bank.

Whenever the country's National Labor Market Board determines that an economic let-down is in prospect, it may free the funds for industry expenditures on tax-free construction, new equipment, etc.

In the intervening years, normal expansion is undertaken through other reserves and loans.

Wirtz Sees Parallel

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz suggested that the net effect of this system is not far from the incentives proposed under Pres. Kennedy's tax program. He said the Swedes had agreed, however, that their reserve system was not likely to work in an economy where unemployment is already more than 6 percent, as it is in the United States.

Nicolin emphasized that Swedish industry regarded the reserve system as an incentive program which did not interfere with private decision making. The delegation also stressed the Swedish government's firm policy of non-intervention in labor-management relations and the lack of anything approaching compulsory arbitration.

They noted, too, that the Swedish government steps up its own spending to help combat expected downturns and maintains a reserve of public works projects, which it releases whenever necessary to combat rising joblessness. Government subsidies also are granted to encourage unemployed workers to move to areas of labor shortages.

When all else fails, unemployment insurance benefits—two-thirds of pay for up to 56 weeks—help the workers to survive periods of joblessness.

"But if you have to pay benefits," Wickman observed, "you really haven't succeeded in promoting your full employment objective."

URW Research Director Named

Akron, O.—The Rubber Workers have announced the appointment of Roy A. Ockert, assistant research director since 1957, as head of the department to succeed Dr. Ralph Bergmann, who resigned to join the staff of the Intl. Labor Organization.

Ockert, a native of Orofino, Ida., was graduated in 1948 from the University of California at Berkeley and has done graduate work there and at San Francisco State and Humboldt State Colleges. He is co-author of "History and Theories of Working Class Movements—a Select Bibliography," published by the University of California Press in 1954.

Hoffa Libel Suit Killed, Court Implies PR Stunt

Detroit—A $1 million libel-and-slander suit filed by James R. Hoffa and the Teamsters Union against the AFL-CIO, Pres. George Meany, and members of the federation's Executive Council was thrown out of federal court here.

Commenting on various legal maneuvers by Teamsters' lawyers as "frolicking," U.S. District Judge Stephen J. Roth in an unusual written opinion remarked that the case had had a "peculiar court history."

Except for the "sober reassurances" of counsel for Hoffa, who is president of the union expelled by the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of corrupt leadership, the court "would be tempted to agree" that the lawsuit "was all a public relations stunt," said Roth.

"It is the spring of the year (and the second spring)" since Hoffa started the libel suit, he observed as he denied the motion of Teamsters' lawyers to amend their complaint and granted the motion of AFL-CIO counsel to throw the case out of court.

"The court would be hard to postulate a suit with more fatal defects and less staying power than this one," the judge said.

What is important, he added, is that "it is terminated as a 'dry run'."

"To put it charitably," he said, the lawsuit seemed "designed for widespread dissemination." Its history "does not leave the compelling impression" that Hoffa and the Teamsters "were anxious to reach the trial stage."

Hoffa sued in December 1961 when the AFL-CIO Executive Council refused to readmit the expelled Teamsters under existing conditions, and Meany told a press conference there was every indication the union "more than ever is under the direction of corrupt and criminal elements."

"Very amusing" was Meany's comment when he was advised of Hoffa's libel action against him.

Attorneys for the AFL-CIO were J. Albert Woll, general counsel, and the Detroit law firm of Rothe, Marston, Mazey, Sachs & O'Connell.

Maine Legislature Smashes RTW Bill

Augusta, Maine—The state legislature landed a crushing defeat to a so-called "right-to-work" bill by killing it in both houses.

The Senate beat the bill by a 28-3 vote after the House had smashed it down 111-32. The legislative actions followed a report by a joint Senate-House labor committee, which voted 9-1 to recommend its rejection.

Fact Sheet No. 1 on 88th Congress:

Tax Cut Needed to Make More Jobs

Kennedy Proposals 'Inadequate'; Labor Urges Deep Slash Now

With continuing high unemployment, with the U.S. economy still lagging far below its full potential, a big tax cut is vitally needed to boost the economy and provide jobs.

Although there is general agreement on this need, business organizations such as the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers want a tax cut designed to give the biggest savings to corporations and to upper-income families.

The AFL-CIO is calling for a quick two-step program of tax reduction and tax reform with the first relief going to low-income and middle-income families.

Automation, growth of the labor force, changes in job skill requirements, decline of some industries, shifts in industry location—all partially explain the rising trend of unemployment and idle plants.

But a basic shortage is consumer purchasing power — customers with cash or credit to buy the goods and services our economy can produce. It's not that people don't want these goods and services. It's that too many Americans just don't have enough money.

The first order of business under the AFL-CIO program would be an immediate $10 billion tax cut, retroactive to Jan. 1, 1963, and concentrated in the lower income brackets. This is essential to raise consumer purchasing power right now and thus to help create new job opportunities.

The second step would be general tax revision and tax reform. Congress should fight through the battle needed to plug up the loopholes that benefit only a privileged minority of taxpayers.

Fact Sheet Series On Key Issues

The AFL-CIO News is publishing on this page the first of a series of Fact Sheets on issues before the 88th Congress.

These Fact Sheets are designed to clarify the issues, encourage widespread support for good legislation, and promote enactment of programs to benefit the American people.

Reprints of Fact Sheet No. 1 are available from the AFL-CIO Dept. of Legislation, 815 Sixteenth St. N.W., Washington 6, D.C.

AFL-CIO Tax Plan

The first-step tax cut urged by the AFL-CIO would include:

1. Reduction of the present 20 percent tax on first-bracket taxable income under $2,000 a year for a single person. This would be accomplished by dividing the first bracket into two parts, with a 12 percent tax rate applied to the first $1,000 and with a 15 percent rate applied to the second $1,000.

For a married couple filing a joint return, the 12 percent rate would be applied to the first $2,000 of taxable income and the 15 percent rate would be applied to the second $2,000.

2. Establish a minimum standard deduction of $400 for an individual plus $200 for each dependent. This would be in addition to the existing personal exemption of $600 for each.

Thus, under the AFL-CIO proposal, a single taxpayer would have tax-free personal income of $1,000 a year and a family of four would have tax-free income of $3,400.

3. Reduction in taxes on the first $25,000 of corporate profits from 30 percent to 22 percent, as proposed by the Administration. This will give quick tax relief to small businesses which are most likely to have immediate investment uses for extra money.

If these three provisions are enacted by Congress and made retroactive to the beginning of 1963, they will release $10 billion into the economy—$9.8 billion in extra buying power for American families and $200 million in extra after-tax profits of small businesses.

As these tax savings are spent, as they spread through the economy, they will contribute as much as $20 billion or more to total national production — creating new jobs, providing business with incentives for rising investment outlays, increasing the rate of economic growth, and generating increased tax revenues.

Tax Reform Plan

The second part of the two-step AFL-CIO program is aimed at equity, at a fairer distribution of the tax burden not only as a matter of justice but also to strengthen the faith of the American people in the integrity of the tax system.

Therefore the AFL-CIO urges that any tax cuts beyond those already proposed for the first bracket of income tax on individuals and corporations be linked to second-step tax reform.

Since World War II, changes in our tax laws have greatly reduced the tax burden on upper-income families, but low-income and middle-income taxpayers are still carrying a burden close to the war-time peak. Upper-income taxpayers still face high progressive tax rates, but they also benefit from a grab-bag of loopholes to help them avoid paying these high rates.

Most of these loopholes—liberalized depletion allowances and estate taxes, increasing exemptions on capital gains profits, the $50 dividend exclusion and 4 percent dividend tax credit, tax-free interest income from state and local government bonds—give big concessions to wealthy people who get income from property, rather than to those who earn their income by working.

Loophole-closing, therefore, is an essential part of tax reform. The AFL-CIO believes that across-the-board reductions — including rate cuts for high-income individuals and for corporations—should be adopted as part of the second step. It simply urges that such changes cannot be justified without across-the-board loophole-closing.

Kennedy Tax Program

Personal income tax rates now range from 20 percent to 91 percent. The Kennedy tax proposals would cut this range to 14 percent to 65 percent—the 14 percent rate to apply to the first $2,000 of taxable income for married taxpayers filing joint returns, and to the first $1,000 for single taxpayers.

Tax relief for business would include a cut in the corporate income tax rate fom 52 percent to 47 percent, the pre-Korean War level, and would help small business by cutting the tax rate on the first $25,000 of corporate income from 30 percent to 22 percent.

Tax rate reductions would begin in 1963 and various tax reforms would go into effect Jan. 1, 1964, but the program would not be fully effective until Jan. 1, 1965.

Cuts in personal income tax rates would result in loss of $11 billion of federal revenue and cuts in corporation rates would result in loss of $2.6 billion, but various Kennedy-proposed reforms would offset about $3.5 billion of this loss.

Thus, the net tax cut proposed by the Administration, the net boost to the American economy, would be about $10 billion, spread over a three-year period—just a little over $3 billion a year.

AFL-CIO Viewpoint

The AFL-CIO supports the general purpose of tax reduction and tax reform proposed by Kennedy.

It does not believe the specific program — the three-year stretch-out of reduction and the large share of the relief proposed for corporations and upper-income families—will do enough to stimulate the economy and to provide more jobs.

Almost half of the total tax cut proposed by the Administration—$4.8 billion—would go to corporations and to the 15 percent of the taxpayers in the top-income brackets. This is bad economics, because rich people are more likely to save money they get from a tax cut, whereas low-income and middle-income taxpayers would spend it.

Furthermore, only last year corporations got a $2.5 billion tax windfall when Congress enacted the "give-away" investment tax credit and the Treasury Dept. relaxed the business depreciation regulations.

As for the so-called corporation "profit squeeze," it is a myth. In 1962, corporate profits after taxes reached a record high of $26 billion and corporate dividend payments were at an all-time high of $15.9 billion—achieved while 15 percent of our productive capacity was idle.

There is no basis to the claim by business that corporations lack investment money. It is necessary to look at their "cash flow" after payment of taxes and dividends. In 1962, non-financial corporations piled up $35 billion in undistributed profits and depreciation set-asides. This was more money than they spent on new plant and equipment.

Clearly the serious lag in business investment is not a result of lack of investment money. It is a lack of job-creating investment opportunities.

Tax Loophole Proposals

The loophole-closing reforms proposed by the Kennedy Administration point in the right direction but they don't go far enough. Existing loopholes result in a "give-away" of more than $10 billion a year to upper-income taxpayers and corporations.

Proposals to tighten the tax law on "capital gains" income by extending the holding period from six months to one year, by ending stock-option tax evasion gimmicks and other unjustifiable "capital gains" dodges, and by curtailing "capital gains" treatment of lump-sum pension and profit distributions have AFL-CIO support. So also does the proposal to repeal the dividend credit and exclusion.

Unfortunately, much of the revenue and equity gain from these reforms would be lost as the result of an Administration proposal to cut the capital gains tax from the present 25 percent maximum to 19.5 percent—when it should be raised.

Furthermore, the Administration failed to call for repeal of the popular "tax shelter" of very rich people—the tax-free interest income from state and local government bonds—and to ask for cuts in the excessive mineral depletion allowances.

The Administration hopes to recover about $2.5 billion by limiting itemized deductions—for taxpayers who choose not to take the standard 10 percent deduction, which is subject to a $1,000 maximum, to those items in excess of 5 percent of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. The AFL-CIO opposes this itemized deduction proposal because it can create more injustice than it cures, and urges more equitable alternatives.

The AFL-CIO also opposes the Administration proposal to end the tax exclusion on the first $100 a week of sick pay. This would injure many working people.

For the same reason, the AFL-CIO opposes the Administration proposal to tax workers for their employer's payments for group term life insurance above $5,000.

Revenue Gap

Many Americans are worried about the projected gap between federal spending and federal tax revenues. Some think it would be a good idea to cut government spending instead of cutting taxes, because they don't want to increase the national debt.

Let's take a quick look at the national debt. It stands now at $300 billion at a time when our national income is about $560 billion a year. So our national debt is less than 55 percent of our national income—down from the post-World War II peak in 1946, when it was 109 percent of a much smaller income.

What is important is our ability to carry the debt. We don't condemn a man who goes into debt to buy a home for his family. We don't condemn a man who goes into debt to buy tools for his job. We regard such spending as a sound investment, and we evaluate the man's ability to carry debt by looking at his income.

In the same way, we can regard a $10 billion tax cut as a sound national investment in America's economic growth.

Up to Congress

It may be late summer or fall before Congress takes final action on the tax bill and sends it to the White House. A major danger in this long delay is that the program will be whittled down to the point where reform disappears and cuts are too little and too late.

To make their influence felt, citizens should urge their congressmen and senators to support swift and effective action on tax cuts—particularly for low-income and middle-income families—to boost our economy and to open up new job opportunities. Urge them also to support tax reform.

Tax Savings in Proposals Of Kennedy, AFL-CIO

Married Couple With two children		Tax saving in 1965, Administration's proposal[1]	Tax saving in 1963, AFL-CIO proposal[2]
Income	Present Tax
$2,500	$ 0	$ 0	$ 0
$3,000	60	60	60
$4,000	240	100	168
$5,000	420	140	228
$8,000	976	232	304

[1]Kennedy Administration proposes minimum standard deduction of $300 for taxpayer plus $100 for each dependent, up to a maximum of $1,000. Full effect would not come until 1965.

[2]AFL-CIO proposes tax cuts and minimum standard deduction of $400 for taxpayer plus $200 for each dependent, effective in 1963.

Explanation of Terms In Bills to Lower Taxes

Tax revision—General overhauling of the tax laws rather than a change in a single part.

Rate reform or rate adjustment—Changes in the percentage rates by which individual and corporate rates are taxed.

Tax reform—Closing of tax loopholes.

Loophole—Special tax privilege granted to a relatively small group. Stock options, excessive mineral depletion allowances, capital gains, dividend exclusion and credit are examples.

Capital gains—Profits made by the sale of corporation stock, buildings, real estate and other "capital assets."

Personal exemption—The amount by which a taxpayer can reduce his income before figuring his taxes. The amount is now $600 for a taxpayer and $600 for each dependent.

Tax deduction—An expense the taxpayer is allowed to deduct from his income before figuring his taxes. These include charitable contributions, medical expenses, etc. The "standard deduction" is an amount equal to 10 percent of the taxpayer's income, up to a maximum of $1,000 for a married taxpayer.

Tax credit—A lump sum the taxpayer may deduct from his taxes. For example, a taxpayer who receives dividends may deduct 4 percent of the dividends he received from the amount of his taxes.

Exclusion—An amount which the taxpayer can deduct from his income before figuring his taxes. For example, a taxpayer who receives dividends may deduct up to $50 from his income before figuring his tax.

103 Degree Fever

THE SLIGHT IMPROVEMENT in the rate of unemployment in March is a welcome addition to the spring season, but unlike the season's promise of a fruitful summer, there are no indications that the jobless rate will of its own accord continue to drop.

Economists studying month-to-month changes in the unemployment rate and evaluating the seasonal changes are persuaded that the drop in the rate from 6.1 percent in February to 5.6 percent in March is an over-adjustment.

They maintain that the increase from 5.8 percent in January to 6.1 percent in February probably overstated the unemployment situation slightly and that the drop to March was a natural correction of this situation.

But given the technical difficulties of measuring the jobless rate on a month-to-month basis, the hard fact remains that the drop to 5.6 percent in March brought the rate to the average for all of 1962. All indications of the moment are that the rate will range between 5.6 and 6 percent for the next few months.

The high, persistent rate of unemployment will begin to drop when the economy receives the long overdue stimulus of a $10 billion tax cut directed at the low and middle income brackets. It will begin to yield from its intolerably high level, also, when federal job-creating programs move through Congress and into the economy.

The March jobless situation was perhaps best summed up in Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz's comment that "my feeling is about what it would be if somebody's temperature dropped from 104 to 103 degrees."

The country cannot tolerate an economic illness reflected in a 103 degree temperature.

The Vital Program

PRES. KENNEDY'S foreign aid message presented a strong argument for a continuing program geared to the free world's needs. But his trimming of $420 million has failed to satisfy its foes.

Those who have set out to wreck the foreign aid program can not be appeased by trimming back a few percentage points here and there; their objective is completely to scrap and wreck the program that has given the free world the strength and resources to stem the Communist assault.

In his dissent to the Clay Committee report, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany stressed that popular support for the foreign aid program "has never been enlisted by a backward and negativistic viewpoint." If the foreign aid battle is to be won in the 88th Congress, it will be won by an aggressive, positive approach that the program must be substantially strengthened.

The President in his message pointed out that "less than seven-tenths of 1 percent" of the value of all goods and services produced in the United States is spent on foreign aid and that the value of the program to the "national interest" clearly outweighs the cost.

This is the salient point, this and Meany's statement that U.S. aid programs are "insurance against possible vast military expenditures and sacrifices of American lives."

A foreign aid program designed to promote economic strength, social justice and peace is not only a program that America can afford but in the ultimate sense is a program it cannot afford not to support.

Shaving the program, temporizing with its opponents, will invite only deeper cuts and further crippling limitations. The battle is on in earnest and can be won only by a forceful, positive, strongly held position for a stronger and broader program.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, April 13, 1963 No. 15

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

He'd Better Hurry Up!

'Superficially Appealing':

Anti-Trust Coverage of Unions Called Unsuitable, Undesirable

The following is excerpted from an address by Pres. Al J. Hayes of the Machinists at a conference on collective bargaining sponsored by Texas Christian University at Ft. Worth, Tex.:

PROBABLY THE MOST superficially appealing, at least to those who have never worked in a factory, is the proposal that unions be brought under the anti-trust laws. On the surface it sounds so reasonable and fair to say that since corporations are covered by the anti-trust laws, unions should also be.

But the absurdity, or downright intellectual dishonesty, of those who profess to see no difference between the associations of working men and the predatory combinations of big business can be easily demonstrated by a few historic and economic facts.

1. What a worker has to sell is not property but a part of himself. Property can be withheld from the market, without loss of value, when the price is not satisfactory. But labor is highly "perishable." Any attempt to withhold it from the market when the price (that is, the wage) is too low results in an immediate and permanent loss to the worker.

2. Commodities can easily be transferred from an unfavorable to a favorable market. Labor, on the other hand, is relatively immobile, being rooted in a particular locality not only by such ties as family, friendship, church affiliation and familiarity of surroundings, but by lack of knowledge of employment opportunities elsewhere.

3. Buyers of commodities are vastly more varied and numerous than are employers of labor. In fact, in recent years a trend of corporate mergers and absorptions has concentrated greater and greater control of production and jobs into fewer and fewer hands.

4. Owners of commodities, corporate and otherwise, have far greater financial resources in cash, credit, property and inventory than do workers. Not only do they have greater resources, but while employers have piously preached individualism, they have customarily practiced combination. As Adam Smith pointed out in his bible of laissez-faire, The Wealth of Nations, about 200 years ago, "Masters are always and everywhere in a tacit but constant and uniform combination not to raise the wages of labor above their existing rate."

5. On a commercial market it is the seller of a property that sets its price. But in the labor market it is not the seller—i.e. the worker—but the buyer—i.e. the employer—who establishes the amount to be paid for labor. This is because even in times of prosperity the need and competition for jobs is greater than the need and competition for workers.

FOR REASONS such as these, workers—even with the strongest unions—have never been able to create a monopoly of labor which is anything like the monopoly of management over goods and markets.

And today, with technological unemployment rising rapidly, the critical danger to our economy comes not from the efforts of unions to protect workers but from the cut-throat conditions which are generated when desperate men compete for jobs.

In view of these considerations it is clear that those who prescribe anti-trust laws for labor either have no conception of what they propose or no conscience for the consequences. Despite the hopes of the kind of reactionaries in the business world who view "right-to-work" laws as a contribution to industrial relations, legislation of the anti-trust stripe cannot be fairly considered a suitable or desirable alternative to collective bargaining.

"Here is a list of women to avoid at the party."

Morgan Says:

Kennedy, Like Ike, Hasn't Yet Got the U. S. Moving Again

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

AT HIS NEWS CONFERENCE Apr. 3, Pres. Kennedy made a biting criticism of the Eisenhower concept of the federal budget, but the question is whether the President has bitten off as much as he can chew.

Although the economic experts' crystal ball is clouded, the state of the nation's economy looms as a major issue in 1964. In a sense, the Kennedy criticism of his predecessor's policies is a reflection on his own New Frontier as well. There are reams of testimony—from non-partisan as well as some Republican sources—to support the urgency of Kennedy's most frequent by repeated admonition in the 1960 campaign that "we must get this country moving again."

Morgan

But there is also a discouraging pile of evidence to indicate that this Administration has not been able, so far, to accelerate the country's economic growth rate very appreciably.

Kennedy himself, perhaps inadvertently and certainly without any deliberate pleasure, gave the public a peek at his dilemma in the manner in which he fielded two major questions. Sensing, no doubt, the potential damage to his program by an Eisenhower blow, however over-simplified, struck in the name of economy, Kennedy defended his own budget at length. In a letter to House Minority Leader Charlie Halleck, Eisenhower had given the Republicans needed ammunition for a wavering attack on the Administration by suggesting the Kennedy budget could be cut by at least $12 billion.

Asked for comment, the President gave it almost a column. In essence his answer boiled down to charges, both explicit and implied, that the narrow, orthodox view of federal spending activated in the Eisenhower years gave us dangerously insufficient military power, the largest peacetime deficit in history, two recessions, record unemployment, our largest outflow of gold, and kept us behind in the space race too.

"That's not a record that we plan to duplicate," the President said, "if we can help it."

The Kennedy Administration has unquestionably strengthened our military posture—although the "missile gap" the Democrats thought they saw turned out to be largely a mirage. And Congress has endorsed the President's bid for first place in space.

But the trouble is other areas are suffering as much or more than they were in the Eisenhower era. This unattractive kettle of fish was noted in Kennedy's answer to the other major question: wasn't he disturbed by the fact that in his first three budgets his commitments to non-defense, non-space expenditures were less than in the last three Eisenhower budgets? Yes, he was, but he felt that the Administration had "done about as much as we can now do."

It is on this point that some of the President's most loyal supporters are most sharply at odds with him. Though they are apt to disagree among themselves as to the right approach, they do not think that the Administration has done as much as it can or should do. Their most consistent criticism seems to be that the President is being more "political" than necessary, that in trying to leave a little for everybody in his tax-cut, tax-reform package, for example, he has satisfied nobody and compromised the program itself out of effectiveness.

There are responsible officials within the executive branch who believe strongly if privately that the Administration is still dealing too timidly with the problems of national growth. It can be impressively argued that we are nowhere near the upper limit of safety in spending for security and welfare, when we remind ourselves that the total value of our goods and services—otherwise known as GNP or gross national product—is already well over half a trillion dollars.

THE STRAINS of our adjustment to an increasingly automated economy are huge and they are going to get more painful. The President estimated we had to have a $25 billion increase in our GNP just to absorb new people coming into the labor market, "let alone cut down the number who are now unemployed."

This is why, encouraging as it is, a statistic showing the unemployment rate has dropped from 6.1 to 5.6 percent won't have any lasting meaning unless it develops into a trend and it won't develop into a trend until the economy expands even faster and better ways are found to attack the hard core of permanent joblessness.

Figures are hard to pin down but according to Administration estimates, our GNP grew at a rate of 2.7 percent between 1952 and 1960, has climbed to 3.6 percent between 1960 and '62. But unless the economy improves noticeably between now and November 1964, the figure of 5 percent is apt to haunt Kennedy in next year's campaign. It was that 5 percent rate which a report highly critical of the Eisenhower Administration said we could and must sustain to keep the country moving properly.

It was the report of the Rockefeller Brothers Fund.

Washington Reports:

Bacon-Davis Act Modernization Seen Needed to Cover Leasing

THE DAVIS-BACON ACT, which requires that contracts for construction of public works or buildings for the federal government or the District of Columbia include payment of the prevailing wage in the area, needs amendments to cover fringe benefits and new lease arrangements, according to Sen. Jennings Randolph (D-W. Va.), chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Public Buildings & Grounds, and Sen. Clifford Case (R-N. J.).

The senators were interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports to the People, now heard on almost 700 radio stations.

Case said that contractors in states such as New Jersey who pay fair wage rates and provide also for fringe benefits are put at an unfair advantage under present law. Other contractors, he said, "Come in and bring labor from the outside and don't pay the true prevailing wage because they don't take care of fringe benefits.

"Until now, these men have been getting away with murder," he added.

Case and Randolph have introduced bills to take care of the new leasing situation. Case's measure would apply to buildings leased by any federal department or agency, and Randolph's to Post Office Dept. leases, which both say have been using the arrangement consistently.

ORIGINALLY, the federal government arranged its own contracts for all public buildings, but for some time has had private contractors build the structures and then lease them to the government. This arrangement is not covered under the Davis-Bacon law.

Randolph and Case support legislation to include fringe benefits in estimating contracts for federal and district building, but have not introduced bills on this modernization of the act. Both mentioned that such a bill has been introduced in the House by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) and in the Senate by Senators Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.) and Thomas Kuchel (R-Calif.).

Both were optimistic about the chances of passage of the proposed amendments, but the West Virginia senator said there will be difficulty from some Republicans who "will seek to include provisions for a review procedure."

"I hope we can get prompt hearings this year, and then effective action in the committees and on the floors of both houses," Case said.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

NEW YORK GOV. NELSON ROCKEFELLER persistently declines to say whether or not he will be a presidential candidate next year. He was able to get former Gov. "Goodie" Knight of California to close up a Rockefeller for President California campaign headquarters after only two days of fledgling flight.

He has spoken recently in Chicago and Milwaukee, in Kansas and Nebraska. He came to Washington for meetings with Republican members of Congress, for a press conference in which he professed himself puzzled by Pres. Kennedy's policy on Cuba, for meetings with Republican women.

He has a tax program of his own as a substitute for Mr. Kennedy's. He would slash taxes more deeply and drop the idea of any immediate reforms in the revenue code. He managed on Apr. 10 to put himself on record with GOP members of the House as opposing a $450 million public works appropriation.

Those close to the governor acknowledge he is too intelligent not to realize that as of now he is the "front runner" for the GOP presidential nomination. Some of his associates believe he has not yet made the emotional commitment to seeking the job that will be necessary before the primaries next year. They represent him as believing earnestly that it would be a mistake for the Republican Party to "freeze" its presidential nominating situation this far in advance of the 1964 convention.

Mr. Rockefeller, on the other hand, is doing all the things a candidate would find it desirable to do if he had made up his mind to seek the nomination overtly. He is assuredly putting himself in a position to influence the selection of a candidate and the drafting of a platform. And he is devoting himself primarily to strengthening his affiliations with the party regulars, which has been where he was weakest.

* * *

AN INTERESTING FACT MAY BE observed in regard to the proposed constitutional amendment to abolish the poll tax as a requirement for voting in federal elections. The southern states are dragging their feet on ratification.

The Senate sponsor of the resolution to kill the poll tax by constitutional amendment was Sen. Spessard Holland of Florida. He was supported by other southerners who had argued for years that the amendment process was the only one legally available to the country.

There was another theory—that Congress had power through a simple statute to abolish the poll tax as a qualification in federal elections. Such a bill passed the House three times but was hung up in the Senate on the constitutional issue or purported issue. Finally Congress adopted the Holland theory, and the proposed amendment was duly approved and submitted to the several states.

Thirty states have now ratified—but only one of them in the South, Tennessee. The Mississippi legislature has rejected the proposed amendment. And across the wide sweep of the rest of the South there has been no action whatever.

Neither of the Carolinas has felt impelled to ratify. Neither has Virginia, or Arkansas, or Louisiana, or Texas. Neither has Georgia or Alabama. Neither has Holland's home state of Florida.

* * *

THERE IS AN ISSUE of good faith that can legitimately be raised.

The poll tax is generally conceded to be an unwarranted restraint on free exercise of the franchise. In most state it has been eliminated by action of the legislatures. Only five states, all of them southern, retain the tax as a restriction on voting in federal elections.

It should not be left to the northern and western states alone to complete the process by which the tax is constitutionally abolished. There are, in fact, only eight states outside the South which have failed to ratify—barely enough for the minimum of 38 needed. It would be an appropriate gesture, surely, if southern states joined in the national movement to eliminate a long-established inequity.

GOVERNMENT BUILDING CONTRACTS, to be fair to contractors and workers, must be amended to cover fringe benefits for workers and lease arrangements by the federal government, which have replaced direct construction contracts in many instances. These principles were advanced by Sen. Jennings Randolph (D-W. Va.), left, and Sen. Clifford P. Case (R-N. J.), who were interviewed on Washington Reports to the People, AFL-CIO public service radio program.

How to Buy:

New Price-Fixing Law Found Slipping Through Congress

By Sidney Margolius

A NEW PRICE-MAINTENANCE LAW is slipping through Congress unnoticed and unprotested by the public which would have to pay higher prices as the result. This was the frank warning sounded at the annual conference of the Council on Consumer Information in Washington recently by a group of consumer-minded congressmen.

The proposed measure is called the "quality stabilization" bill. It is really the old "fair trade" law under a new name and "fair trade" itself is really price-fixing. If passed, "quality stabilization" would enable manufacturers to revoke the right of a retailer to sell their brand-name products if the retailer cut the prices.

"Quality stabilization" sounds like something desirable. But like the "right-to-work" name on anti-union legislation, it is an attempt to fool the public as to its real intent. In this case, the real intent is to limit competition among retailers and require all retailers to sell a manufacturer's brand at the same price if the manufacturer so desires.

The reason some manufacturers and retailers, especially in the drug industry, are pushing to get this new law is that fair trade laws have been declared unconstitutional in about half the states. In the other states, fair trade either was never enacted or is being ignored to a large extent by price-cutting retailers and manufacturers.

But "quality stabilization" could damage your pocket book more than the fair trade laws ever did because it would make it even easier for manufacturers to fix prices. The manufacturer would not even have to seek price agreements with retailers state by state. His fixed price would apply in all states, including those that previously never had a "fair trade" law.

The effect on prices you pay would be drastic. Rep. John Dingell (D-Mich.) warned the consumer conference that a shopping survey by the U.S. Justice Dept. indicated that prices of such goods as household equipment could be raised as much as 27.5 percent. Another serious effect would be to freeze prices of medicines at present high levels.

THE ALARMING FACT is the speed at which the bill is moving through the U.S. House of Representatives with no protest from the public. The public itself has had no warning and does not realize the danger. Dingell reported that he has had heavy mail from his own district in favor of the bill, but not a single letter in opposition.

Senators Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) and Lee Metcalf (D-Mont.) also warned that the new price-fixing bill could be enacted before the public knew what had hit it, and that they too got heavy mail from businessmen against consumer legislation but little from consumers supporting their own interests. Metcalf reported that the "California Retail Druggist" published a "model" letter in favor of price-fixing laws that druggists could adapt to send to local newspapers.

The "quality stabilization" bill is being sponsored by Rep. Oren Harris (D-Ark.), chairman of the House Commerce Committee, who has been trying for some years to get a price-fixing law passed. His bill is known as H.R. 3669, but 20 other identical price-fixing bills have been introduced by other congressmen.

The critical stage will come late in April when a subcommittee headed by Rep. Harley Staggers (D-W. Va.) holds hearings on it.

Government agencies which have the responsibility for fighting price-fixing are strictly against such laws. The Federal Trade Commission, Justice Dept. and Commerce Dept. all have attacked the "quality stabilization" bill as a price-boosting measure.

Lee Loevinger, assistant attorney general in charge of the Anti-Trust Div. last year told a Senate Commerce subcommittee that "quality stabilization" would let manufacturers fix prices at high, non-competitive levels "calculated to yield what the traffic could bear." Moreover, under the proposed measure price-fixing could be extended to fresh produce, canned goods, clothing, gasoline, building materials, even meat and potatoes, Loevinger warned.

A revealing example of how you would have to pay more if "quality stabilization" passes is the dual price system now used by one manufacturer. This manufacturer's appliances, generally considered very high quality, now are sold under one name at cut prices and under another name at fixed prices.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION ACT, sponsored for four years by the Alaska AFL-CIO, is signed by Gov. William A. Egan as some of its backers look on. Behind the governor, from left, are: State Rep. William Sanders (R); Henry Hedberg, state COPE director; State Rep. Mike Gravel (D); State Sen. Nick Begich (D); William Bowman, member of Laborers Local 341 and of the NAACP board of directors, and State Rep. Joe Josephson (D).

More Food Needed:

A New World Goal—The End of Hunger

OF THE 3 BILLION PEOPLE in the world, it is estimated that between one-half and two-thirds lack sufficient food, either in quantity, or in kind, or both. These hungry people live mainly in the developing countries of Latin America, Asia, and Africa.

Their hunger is manifested in many ways. It produces constant social and political unrest, so that these represent lands in turmoil, lacking the means for stable government. It results in low economic productivity. Hungry people cannot work efficiently. The annual per capita income for the people of most of these countries is less than $100.

In many, over 80 percent live on the land, engaged in subsistence agriculture. Contrast this with the United States, where only 8 percent of the people engaged in agriculture produce more than the rest of the nation can consume!

A lack of food and proper nutritional standards also contribute to disease and a generally low standard of living. Of the 70 percent of the world's people who are sick or ill-housed or both, most reside in the food-deficient areas.

The same dismal effect is found on the level of education. Without food, people either do not go to school or derive little benefit from it, so that 62 percent of the world population remains illiterate. Science and learning mean nothing to children whose stomachs are empty.

Alleviation of the conditions which permit the majority of the world's population to be hungry, sick and illiterate is a primary concern today.

The job is not easy or it might have been done long ago. It is not simply a matter of feeding the hungry. Since 1954 the United States has distributed some $11 billion worth of farm products among 100 countries. This has had the important effect of preventing any major famine in these areas in the last eight years. It has fed hungry people and helped finance economic development projects.

Every human being is capable, with some training, of producing more than he can consume. Human resources are very inadequately used today. Likewise with natural resources. For example, the sea which covers 75 percent of the earth, contributes only about 1 percent of our food supply. Only one-tenth of the land area of the earth is now cultivated and much of that is only in partial use. Of 300 known varieties of crops, but 12 are used to supply 90 percent of our food.

There is absolutely no question that the earth can feed her people and support a population many times the size of the present one.

With this idea in mind, the Food & Agriculture Organization (FAO) of the United Nations embarked in 1960 on a five-year Freedom from Hunger Campaign. This campaign has a threefold objective: information and education to arouse world interest on the problem; research into causes and effects of world hunger; and action projects to initiate increased food production and improve nutrition among the developing countries.

In January 1962, the United States established a non-governmental, non-profit, non-partisan American Freedom from Hunger Foundation, in Washington, D. C. Its trustees include leaders in business, labor, agriculture, public service, education, and charitable organizations. Former Pres. Harry S. Truman is honorary chairman. Members include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Vice President Walter P. Reuther.

The role of the American Freedom from Hunger Foundation is primarily educational, to focus greater public interest on the problem of world hunger. By this means, it is hoped to enhance the programs of those non-governmental agencies who already have established projects overseas.

This would permit these agencies to take on new long-range agricultural development work in keeping with the objectives of Freedom from Hunger, which are to help the people of the developing countries to help themselves to overcome their own food deficiencies.

From Soup to Nonsense:

Life in Modern House Is Tough, What With No Doors to Slam

WHAT DO PEOPLE who live in contemporary dream houses do when they feel like slamming doors? They haven't any doors to slam.

Of course, it's possible that they are so well-adjusted that they don't feel any need to slam doors. Maybe life in a dream house is so serene and relaxing that people never build up enough hostility to lose their tempers.

I'm in no position to judge because I don't live in a dream house. Our house has a lot of things wrong with it, and no wonder. It's nearly as old as I am, and there's bound to be quite a lot wrong with anything as old as that.

Our house isn't an all-on-one-level ranch house or a split-level modern. It's just a house. It hasn't a single picture window, and it doesn't have built-in, space-saving storage units or customized features. It has rooms instead of areas. Rooms are very old-fashioned, and they don't give you that spacious, free-flowing feeling that areas do. But rooms have one advantage. Rooms have doors. Real honest-to-goodness, slammable doors.

I suppose that life in a free-flowing area is a lot more soothing to the nerves than life in a boxed-in room. Still, even in a dream house, things must go wrong once in a while. And when things go wrong, I get mad at life. And when I get mad, I slam doors. It makes me feel better.

AND MODERN HOUSES are woefully lacking in doors to slam. Oh, there's probably a door or two somewhere in the house, but you might have to walk the whole length of the split-level to get to it. It wouldn't be the same as having a door right there at your fingertips when you needed it.

Modern houses not only don't have rooms, they don't have closets either. They have storage units with sliding doors that give a house a clean, streamlined look. But you can't slam a sliding door.

Of course, it's possible that even I might be sweet-tempered if I lived in a house that didn't have steps to climb and dust-catching molding and hard-to-clean window panes. Maybe if I had a kitchen with customized, step-saving features and organized work centers, I'd be so happy I wouldn't even want to slam doors.

But I doubt it. I'm afraid I'd never be as well-adjusted as all that. If I didn't have doors to slam, I'd probably throw things instead, which is much messier and more dangerous than slamming doors.

Grave Abuses in Securities Sales Hit

SEC Report Urges New Market Curbs

Grave abuses in the nation's securities markets have subjected the business community to sharp new criticism in a report by the Securities & Exchange Commission.

SEC Chairman William L. Cary, in transmitting the 1,600-page report to Congress, said that the picture it presents of the markets is not one "of pervasive and fraudulent activity," in contrast to the findings of the early '30s that led to enactment of existing federal securities laws.

"At the same time," he added, "the report makes clear that important problems do exist, grave abuses do occur, and additional controls and improvements are much needed."

He said the report "should not impair public confidence in the securities markets, but should strengthen it as suggestions for raising standards are put into practice."

The study, prepared by a special 65-man staff, contained more than 30 specific recommendations for changes in federal law and in the rules of the SEC and organizations in the industry, such as the New York Stock Exchange. The most exhaustive investigation of market practices in 25 years, it was ordered by Congress to determine if present laws and regulations are adequate to protect the interests of the estimated 17 million persons who own securities, many of them people of limited means.

A second installment of the report, which may contain further recommendations, is expected to be sent to Congress before June 1.

Sales Practices Hit

The first section was particularly critical of certain selling practices and the lack of adequate enforcement of self-policing measures undertaken by organizations within the securities industry.

It noted, for example, that while large dealers generally have been ethical in their sales techniques, "abuses have occurred which in some cases have rivaled those caused by boiler-room salesmen," who use high-pressure telephone tactics in pushing sales of low-value securities.

Cary's transmittal letter said that the SEC did not endorse every recommendation in the report "as our own," but accepts all of them "as a sound point of departure . . . for Congress, for the commission" and for the industry's own self-regulatory bodies.

Among the key recommendations of the commission itself were:

- Gradual extension to "over-the-counter" companies with at least 300 stockholders of the same disclosure requirements and restrictions on "insider trading" that now apply to listed firms. Stocks of the "over-the-counter" companies are not listed on the exchanges, but account for an estimated two-thirds of the securities business.
- Tighter qualifications for individuals entering the securities business by requiring them to meet minimum standards of "character, competence and financial responsibility."
- Establishment of minimum capital requirements for new brokerage firms.
- More flexibility to permit the commission to impose penalties on individuals and firms short of outright expulsion from the industry for minor violations of regulations, which now go unpunished in some cases.
- Dampening of the "speculative fervor" surrounding new "hot" issues that has led in some cases to sharp jumps in prices solely as a result of promotional technique of certain brokerage concerns. The SEC urged a requirement that all purchasers of newly issued stock during the first 90 days after the initial sale be given a prospectus outlining the financial condition of the company involved. The present rule requires delivery of a prospectus in the first 40 days of sale, but is not always enforced.
- Registration of private quotation systems with the SEC to insure greater accuracy in the published prices of over-the-counter securities and end "numerous abuses . . . perpetrated by stock brokers and dealers."
- Prohibition of the dissemination through market letters, brochures and other devices of irresponsible advice, exaggerated appraisals and "fanciful recommendations based on little more than mere rumor."

The report itself called for legislation establishing "criminal sanctions and civil liability for intentional or reckless dissemination of false and misleading statements" in company press releases and other public relations material, where the staff said it had found "abuses" violating the spirit if not the letter of the law.

"Where publicity perverts full disclosure, where the purpose or effect is manipulative, the impact of public relations becomes a matter of concern," the report added.

FIRST AWARDS IN NEW HAMPSHIRE for chalking up more than 500 hours of volunteer political activity were presented to five members of the Women's Activities Div. of the Sullivan County AFL-CIO at a meeting in Newport. Four of the winners are shown (from left): Mrs. Lena Foisy, Mrs. Lorraine Palmer, Sec.-Treas. Robert Hobart of the New Hampshire AFL-CIO, who made the presentation; Mrs. Rita McGowan and Mrs. Ella Nelson. Absent when the photo was taken was the fifth winner, Mrs. Helen Filipowicz.

Canadian Election Pushes Liberals To Edge of Power—But No Further

(Continued from Page 1)

terializing appears remote at present.

Also during the campaign New Democrat Leader T. C. (Tommy) Douglas stated that the New Democrats would be prepared to support —for a period of two to three years under certain conditions—the group forming a minority government. He stated that such support would be dependent upon the new government's readiness to take vigorous steps towards getting the economy rolling and ending unemployment; improving social welfare programs by introducing medicare, expanded old-age pensions and unemployment insurance; and easing the tax burden on low income families.

'Avengement' Possible

While there are many ifs and buts in the situation, it is still possible the Conservatives could make some arrangement with the smaller partiies and thus stay in office. The Liberal Party, with strong backing from the big-city conservative press, has moved ideologically to the right.

Pearson declared during the campaign that social security must take second place to belt tightening and austerity. Douglas argued that economic recovery was more likely to be brought about by putting more purchasing power into the hands of low income groups.

Repeatedly he told campaign audiences:

"We believe in the trickle-up theory. Stimulate purchasing power at the bottom and benefits will rise throughout the economy. We do not believe in the trickle-down theory that helping the fat-cats at the top will eventually lead to some benefits trickling down to the rest of us."

This reiterated declaration indicates a fundamental difference in approach to economic problems between the Liberals and New Democrats that could be a stumbling block to any Liberal-New Democratic accommodation arrangement. However, such an arrangement is not out of the question if Pearson is prepared to give the necessary guarantees.

The campaign featured a massive drive by the Liberals in an attempt to plug the issue "stable government." The 1962 election only 10 months earlier, had created a "House of Minorities" with party standings of: Conservatives, 116; Liberals, 100; Social Credit, 30; and New Democrats, 19.

The Liberal Party, during the 1963 campaign, spent money lavishly on radio, television and newspaper advertising and campaign literature stressing the "stable government" theme.

Farmers Back Conservatives

At the start of the campaign a Liberal landslide seemed a virtual certainty. But Diefenbaker, deserted by three of his Cabinet ministers as his party was defeated in Parliament last February, fought a stubborn rear-guard action with almost solid support in the Prairie provinces as a result of long-term wheat-export deals with Red China.

The western provinces held and Conservative support in rural Ontario and to a lesser degree in rural Quebec stood up far better than had been anticipated.

Nevertheless, in the Apr. 8 voting, Diefenbaker lost 20 seats and saw the defeat of six members of his Cabinet. New Democrats, despite suffering the loss of three seats and gaining only one, improved their popular vote over the 1,030,000 gained in 1962. One seat was lost in the steel and coal city of Sydney, N. S.; the other two were dropped in Toronto and Vancouver with the gain being racked up in the steel city of Hamilton, Ont.

The New Democrats showed greatest strength in British Columbia, where they retained nine of the 10 seats won last year. British Columbia has a higher degree of union political activity than any other part of Canada. Among New Democratic MPs are 10 trade unionists, three school teachers, two lawyers, one doctor and a farmer.

Social Credit, the right wing anti-labor party with economic theories of printing-press creation of credit, were cut back sharply in Quebec, where they lost six of the 26 seats they won last June. The party's suprising upsurge at that time was a manifestation of French Canadian nationalism, which was attracted by such slogans as: "You have nothing to lose" and "You don't have to understand Social Credit to vote for it." Liberals cut into Social Credit support in Quebec this time.

NDP Gain in Quebec Vote

The New Democrats won a heavy increase in the popular vote in the largely French-speaking province although they gained no Quebec seats.

The political situation in Canada today is confused. Parliament cannot possibly meet before May 16 to grapple with the problems facing the nation. By that time party representation in the House of Commons may have changed from present standings and Canada may have another party leading the Administration.

The only thing certain is that Canada will again have a "House of Minorities," with no party daring to risk the wrath of the electorate in a third contest at the polls in less than a year.

Whatever government is in office at that time will have the task of piloting through the first national budget to be presented to Parliament in 18 months and justifying expenditures of between $5 billion and $6 billion which have been made without any authority.

7 Steel Firms Indicted On Price-Fix Charges

New York—Seven steel companies have been charged in two indictments by a federal grand jury here with illegal conspiracy to fix prices of specialized steel products.

One indictment accused five companies of fixing prices on wrought steel wheels for railroad locomotives and rolling stock, mine cars and other industrial equipment. Named by the grand jury were U.S. Steel Corp., Bethlehem Steel Co., Armco Steel Corp., Edgewater Steel Co. and Baldwin-Lima-Hamilton Corp.

The five firms are the only producers of wrought steel wheels and have total sales of $60 million annually in the field, the indictment said.

Edgewater and Baldwin also were named in the second indictment—along with Taylor Forge & Pipe Works and Alco Products, Inc.—involving alleged fixing of prices of rolled steel pipe flanges and rings. The four firms do $10 million of business a year in these products, the grand jury said.

The indictments charged that both conspiracies began with secret meetings as long ago as 1948 and continued at least until 1961. The meetings allegedly took place at hotels and clubs in New York City, Pittsburgh and Hershey, Pa.

The seven firms were accused of fixing identical factory and delivered prices, submitting identical bids to such purchasers as the New York City Transit Authority, and correcting so-called pricing "mistakes" after first quoting non-identical prices to customers.

U.S. Steel, Bethlehem and three other companies were indicted by the same grand jury a year ago on charges of fixing prices for open die steel forgings. That case is still pending although five executives named in the indictment have paid fines totalling $44,000 after pleading no contest to the charges.

Factory Hirings, Layoffs Decline

Factory hirings and layoffs both dropped between January and February, the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics has reported.

The hiring rate dropped from 36 per 1,000 to 32, about as expected for the time of year. Layoffs decreased somewhat more than seasonally from 22 to 16 per 1,000. The quit rate dropped as expected from 11 to 10 per 1,000.

Over the past six months, the BLS said, the over-all layoff rate has remained close to the same level after allowing for seasonal factors.

EXECUTIVE BOARD MEMBERS of the Louisiana State AFL-CIO and federation Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler are shown at the recent convention of the state central body in Baton Rouge. Behind Schnitzler, at the podium, are Victor Bussie, state president, and E. J. Bourg, next left, state secretary-treasurer.

Louisiana Labor Urged To Support Tax Cut

Baton Rouge, La.—Organized labor has a responsibility "to insist upon full employment of America's human resources," Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz declared as he urged delegates to the Louisiana State AFL-CIO convention to support Pres. Kennedy's proposals for tax cuts to spur the economy and combat joblessness.

The nation's "central economic need," Wirtz said, is "to release the full potential of every individual both as a producer and as a consumer." He also saw two other areas of "current and increasing responsibility" for labor:

- Strengthening and improvement of "the process of private collective bargaining."
- The obligation "to help make free trade unionism the force for freedom in the world it has become in America."

Wirtz was among the chief speakers at the convention, which reelected Pres. Victor Bussie and Sec.-Treas. E. J. Bourg.

AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, taking particular note of the high level of joblessness in the state, urged an all-out effort to achieve the federation's goal of a 35-hour workweek as a means of increasing job opportunities. He stressed the AFL-CIO stand that a sizable tax cut concentrated in the lowest brackets should be enacted promptly to spur the economy.

Schnitzler, who heads the AFL-CIO Civil Rights Committee, recalled that the federation had set forth a positive civil rights policy in its constitution at the time of merger. He described recent operations of the committee and the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights in working with federation affiliates to end discrimination in the labor movement. Achievements, he noted, have included the merger of a number of segregated locals, contract clauses barring job discrimination, and efforts to assure equal opportunity in apprenticeship training.

He called particular attention to actions of AFL-CIO affiliates to implement the fair practice pledges 122 of them have signed with the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

Among other speakers were Lawrence F. O'Brien, special assistant to Kennedy; Sen. Russell Long (D-La.); Gov. Jimmie H. Davis (D); Rep. Hale Boggs, the House Majority whip, and other members of the state's Democratic congressional delegation, Representatives Gillis W. Long, T. A. Thompson, and James H. Morrison; Ambassador deLesseps S. Morrison, U.S. representative to the Organization of American States, and AFL-CIO Dir. of Organization John Livingston.

Major policy resolutions adopted included support for a shorter workweek, health care for the aged, extension of unemployment benefits, and participation of the state in the federal Manpower Development & Training Act program.

Oklahoma Per Capita Raised for 'Work' Fight

Oklahoma City—Delegates to a special convention of the Oklahoma State AFL-CIO here voted unanimously to step up their fight against a proposed "right-to-work" law and voted an increased per capita tax to help finance the program.

Oklahoma is a key target state of the "right-to-work" forces and petitions have been filed to submit a proposal to outlaw the union shop to a statewide referendum. Labor and a citizens' group fighting the "work" proposal have challenged the validity of the petitions in a case pending before the State Supreme Court.

The convention voted to raise per capita payments from 15 to 25 cents per month, starting in May and continuing through Nov. 30, 1964, "unless the so-called 'right-to-work' issue is disposed of at an earlier date."

The 10-cent increase will be earmarked for the "work" fight and kept in a special account.

State AFL-CIO Pres. Roy Tillman was named full-time coordinator of the program. He will be assisted by seven area directors assigned by their unions to full-time work on the campaign.

The convention-approved "program of action" charged that "the powerful economic forces" behind the "right-to-work" drive are "one and the same" as the "extreme right groups . . . Both, if successful, would result in irreparable harm to our democratic institutions."

Cross Guilty Of Stealing Union Funds

James G. Cross, former president of the Bakery & Confectionery Workers, was convicted in federal court in the District of Columbia on charges of embezzlement and conspiracy to obstruct justice.

The union was expelled by the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of corrupt leadership. A new union, the American Bakery & Confectionery Workers, was chartered to serve workers in the bakery field.

Cross was accused of embezzling $35,000 in 1959 and of embezzling another $35,000 in 1960 to cover up the earlier operation. Sec.-Treas. Peter H. Olsen and various vice presidents, including James Landriscina, were charged with conspiring to conceal the transaction by falsification of records. All have resigned or have been ousted.

Olsen was given a suspended sentence of one to four years on a plea of guilty and Landriscina received a suspended sentence and a fine.

Cross resigned from the presidency of the ousted union in 1961 and the union later cut off pension payments to him. At a B&C convention in January 1962 a new slate of officers was elected and a "reunification committee" was named to discuss merger with the ABC.

Air Crash Victims Honored by Pilots

Chicago—A veteran pilot who died in a plane crash last Nov. 30 was honored posthumously by the Air Line Pilots for "his outstanding contribution to the advancement of flight safety procedures."

The ALPA chose the late Capt. E. J. Bechtold as a recipient of the union's 1962 Air Safety Award.

Bechtold, who was killed in an Eastern Air Lines crash at Idlewild, N. Y., was the union's regional safety chairman and a leading expert in evaluation of new aircraft, air traffic control problems and accident investigation. The award was accepted by his widow, Edna, at a luncheon held during the ALPA's tenth annual Air Safety Forum.

The 1963 safety award was presented to Capt. R. N. Buck, Trans World Airlines pilot who has been active in safety work for 15 years. He is an advisor to the Federal Aviation Agency's Supersonic Aircraft Study Committee and has contributed to meteorology research and evaluation of navigation systems for transocean flying.

Union, government and industry experts took part in the forum.

Meany Makes Plea:

Red Cross Concept Urged to Aid Jobless

New York—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany called on the nation to extend "the concept of Red Cross humanitarianism into the market place" to cover the disaster that joblessness means to six American workers out of every 100.

Addressing the annual Murray-Green Award banquet, Meany drew the theme of his speech from the presence of this year's recipient, Gen. Alfred M. Gruenther, president of the American Red Cross.

The federation president pointed out that the concept symbolized by the Red Cross goes far beyond "charity" in the old-fashioned sense and embraces the idea of "responsibility for anyone who is suffering from circumstances beyond his control."

The wide acceptance of that concept, Meany said, is evidence that civilization "is inching forward toward the ideal of true brotherhood." Therefore, he added, it is difficult to understand why that concept has not been broadened to encompass those in distress because of unemployment.

If a severe storm were to strike the New York area leaving six families in every 100 homeless, he observed, the Red Cross would immediately move into action and the nation "would be united in its concern, in its desire to help."

'Deep Worry and Distress'

"Yet as we meet here tonight, there is deep worry and distress in the homes of six workers out of every hundred, all across America," he continued. "It is not distress caused by the forces of nature; it is man-made, the result of the inability of our own society to meet its problems . . . I mean the problem of unemployment."

While it is not the kind of problem the Red Cross should handle, Meany said, "it should be a matter of just as much concern to the public as a natural disaster of similar proportions."

"And unemployment is a disaster; make no mistake about that," he declared. "It is a disaster to those who suffer from it, of course. More than that, it is a disastrous drain on our national strength, a disastrous reflection upon our position as the showcase of democracy throughout the world. . . .

"I hope that some day soon the American people will realize the dimensions of this disaster; and will realize that unlike hurricanes and earthquakes, it can be prevented by acts of man.

"When that realization becomes universal, when the Red Cross concept extends that far, the disaster of unemployment will be ended forever, and so will poverty in America.

"For we will then have translated disasters like unemployment out of the statistical class and into the area of humanitarianism; we will be thinking in terms of people, not percentages. And when we do, then the heart of America will make itself felt. Then we will have action—Red Cross-like action—and we will win this battle against misery, all of which is so needless, so unnecessary."

'Partners' in Service

AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, who is chairman of the federation's Community Services Committee, said the presentation of the Murray-Green Award to Gruenther had special meaning in that it came from millions of trade unionists who, through the Community Service Activities program, had "long been partners in community service with the Red Cross."

The award was established by the AFL-CIO as a memorial to the late Philip Murray, president of the former CIO, and the late William Green, head of the former AFL.

Beirne paid tribute to Gruenther's service to the nation during his military career and as Red Cross president, declaring:

"He tries to give the world the true impression of our country in humanitarian aspects. He believes that other countries see us not as a nation motivated by materialism, but as a humanitarian nation because we help those of other countries in troubled times."

Beirne also read a telegram from Pres. Kennedy lauding Gruenther as "an outstanding soldier-statesman" who "brilliantly personifies" the tradition of humanitarianism that has marked the nation's great military leaders.

In accepting the award, Gruenther said the $5,000 check that accompanied it would be used to bring members of African and Asian Red Cross societies to this country for study.

The award banquet climaxed the 8th annual AFL-CIO National Conference on Community Services, which this year was devoted to discusion of the shorter workweek and constructive use of leisure.

CSA Dir. Leo Perlis, summing up the conference, said it represented the start "of our program to raise the standards of the use of leisure time for a better life for all."

GEN. ALFRED M. GRUENTHER, president of the American Red Cross, second from right, receives the gold medal of the 1963 Murray-Green Award from AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Joseph A. Beirne, left, chairman of the federation's Community Services Committee. Also shown are AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany, who spoke at the award dinner, and Leo Perlis, right, director of community service activities.

Biemiller Tells Congress:

Cold War GI Education Bill 'Matter of Simple Justice'

Congress should provide education and training benefits for veterans of "cold war" military service as "a matter of simple justice" and as a means of "bringing new skills and greater education to hundreds of thousands of young people who would not otherwise be able to get them," labor has urged.

AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told a Senate subcommittee that the "Cold War GI Bill" introduced by Sen. Ralph W. Yarborough (D-Tex.) would not be an "experiment" because the success of the World War II and Korean War programs has demonstrated "what this bill can do for the veterans and for the nation."

Under the two previous bills, Biemiller noted, some 3.4 million veterans attended college, 4.4 million entered schools below the college level, and 2.6 million learned skills through on-the-job training.

"This has all been an inestimable gain to the United States," he added, "an investment that has paid off in higher achievements and higher earnings for the veterans. Those higher earnings have, in turn, yielded an estimated $1 billion a year in additional tax revenue to the federal government."

The Yarborough bill, being considered by the Veterans Affairs subcommittee of the Senate's Labor & Public Welfare Committee, would provide vocational as well as academic readjustment benefits.

Emphasizing that many young veterans "face the likelihood of prolonged unemployment in an economy which has little need for additional unskilled labor," Biemiller declared:

Skilled Workers Needed

"It is important to these veterans and important to the nation as a whole that they learn job skills which can equip them for jobs in modern industry . . . America needs skilled workers just as surely as it needs teachers and doctors."

Many of today's veterans have served "under conditions closely resembling war" in Berlin, Viet Nam, Laos and other danger points, he noted.

"All of them," he emphasized, "have had their lives disrupted by the unusual demands which the times have placed upon the individuals."

Because of such factors as draft deferment for college students, "youth from low-income backgrounds are more likely to be drafted," Biemiller declared. The Yarborough bill, he pointed out, "would make it possible for thousands of economically deprived young people to attend college or learn valuable skills."

Noting that the proposed act, like its predecessors, would offer educational assistance on a "non-competitive basis," Biemiller said labor considers that "all to the good." He added:

"Most existing scholarship programs are competitive and designed to assist young people with the best intellects. But America needs to educate and train its second bests and its third bests too. This bill can accomplish that better than any existing or proposed scholarship plan."

While the bill is not an "aid to education" measure, it would bring about "an impressive set of secondary benefits," Biemiller noted.

Meets All Needs

He pointed out that Congress for several years "has been struggling to find formulas which will satisfy both public and private institutions, church-controlled and secularly-controlled schools."

"Here is one bill that provides a completely satisfactory method," he declared.

To those who charge that readjustment aid to "cold war" veterans marks "a radical departure" from the practice of limiting benefits to war veterans, Biemiller replied that "compulsory peacetime military service is itself a radical departure from the traditions of the past."

With Biemiller at the hearing was Lawrence Rogin, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education.

LABOR'S SUPPORT of a GI Education bill for veterans of today's "cold war" was expressed by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller at Senate hearings. At right is Sen. Ralph Yarborough (D-Tex.), sponsor of the GI bill. Thirty-eight other senators have co-sponsored the measure.

Rollcall Vote in Senate On Transit Job Security

Before approving federal grants and bond guarantees to help cities improve and develop urban transit facilities, the Senate adopted a labor-supported amendment assuring the job security, collective bargaining rights and existing benefits of transit workers affected. The amendment, by Sen. Wayne Morse (D-Oreg.), was adopted 52-41. Following is the rollcall:

FOR WORKER SAFEGUARDS

DEMOCRATS 43

Anderson (N. M.)	Hayden (Ariz.)	McNamara (Mich.)
Bartlett (Alaska)	Humphrey (Minn.)	Metcalf (Mont.)
Bayh (Ind.)	Inouye (Hawaii)	Morse (Oreg.)
Bible (Nev.)	Jackson (Wash.)	Muskie (Me.)
Brewster (Md.)	Johnston (S. C.)	Nelson (Wis.)
Burdick (N. D.)	Kefauver (Tenn.)	Neuberger (Oreg.)
Byrd (W. Va.)	Kennedy (Mass.)	Pastore (R. I.)
Cannon (Nev.)	Long (Mo.)	Pell (R. I.)
Dodd (Conn.)	Magnuson (Wash.)	Proxmire (Wis.)
Douglas (Ill.)	Mansfield (Mont.)	Randolph (W. Va.)
Edmondson (Okla.)	McCarthy (Minn.)	Ribicoff (Conn.)
Engle (Calif.)	McGee (Wyo.)	Symington (Mo.)
Gruening (Alaska)	McGovern (S. D.)	Williams (N. J.)
Hart (Mich.)	McIntyre (N. H.)	Young (O.)
Hartke (Ind.)

REPUBLICANS 9

Aiken (Vt.)	Cooper (Ky.)	Kuchel (Calif.)
Beall (Md.)	Javits (N. Y.)	Prouty (Vt.)
Case (N. J.)	Keating (N. Y.)	Saltonstall (Mass.)

AGAINST WORKER SAFEGUARDS

DEMOCRATS 20

Byrd (Va.)	Hill (Ala.)	Robertson (Va.)
Church (Ida.)	Holland (Fla.)	Russell (Ga.)
Clark (Pa.)	Jordan (N. C.)	Sparkman (Ala.)
Eastland (Miss.)	Lausche (O.)	Stennis (Miss.)
Ellender (La.)	Long (La.)	Talmadge (Ga.)
Ervin (N. C.)	McClellan (Ark.)	Thurmond (S. C.)
Fulbright (Ark.)	Monroney (Okla.)

REPUBLICANS 21

Allott (Colo.)	Hickenlooper (Ia.)	Pearson (Kan.)
Boggs (Del.)	Hruska (Neb.)	Scott (Pa.)
Cotton (N. H.)	Jordan (Ida.)	Simpson (Wyo.)
Curtis (Neb.)	Mechem (N. M.)	Smith (Me.)
Dirksen (Ill.)	Miller (Ia.)	Tower (Tex.)
Fong (Hawaii)	Morton (Ky.)	Williams (Del.)
Goldwater (Ariz.)	Mundt (S. D.)	Young (N. D.)

Dry Cleaning Pact Saves Long Peace

New York—A new contract giving wage increases and improved social benefits to 3,500 dry cleaning and dye workers has been signed by the Clothing Workers' Cleaners & Dyers Joint Board and two employer groups.

The settlement averted a strike that would have breached 25 years of amicable bargaining between the union and the associations, and covers employes of more than 30 major establishments. About 1,500 additional men and women who work in independent neighborhood, on-the-premises cleaning and dyeing shops also will benefit, as their employers traditionally sign agreements that follow the pattern set by the associations.

Manager of the joint board is Jack Cohen.

The contracts run for three years and provide wage increases of 5 cents an hour in each year for hourly workers; $3 this year and $2 in each of the other years for salaried employes; $3 each year for chain store drivers, whose hours also will be reduced without loss of pay; and $3 this year and $2 in each of the remaining years for wholesale drivers.

Hospitalization coverage was broadened to include children as well as employes and their spouses, and daily room benefits were increased by $3. Pensions were boosted from $35 to $40 a month.

Nova Scotia Unifies Human Rights Laws

Halifax, N. S.—The Nova Scotia legislature has consolidated all human rights legislation into one law and broadened it to prohibit racial and religious discrimination in the rental of apartments.

The apartment legislation applies to buildings with more than four self-contained dwelling units.

Discrimination also is forbidden by the legislation in any public place, in newspaper and radio advertising, and by employment agencies and businesses.

Strict U.S. Protection Urged for Migrants

Legislation regulating crew leaders and contractors of migrant farm workers—"the poorest, the most exploited of all working people in the United States"—is "long overdue," the AFL-CIO told a House Labor subcommittee.

A statement by AFL-CIO Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller and testimony by Arnold Mayer, legislative representative of the Meat Cutters and chairman of the federation's farm labor legislation subcommittee, strongly endorsed bills sponsored in the House by Rep. James Roosevelt (D-Calif.) and in the Senate by Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr. (D-N.J.).

"Exploitation" of migrant workers and their families by crew leaders has been a "real tragedy," Biemiller declared. He noted that "this is the third time in three years" that the AFL-CIO has testified for a crew leader registration bill. During the 87th Congress, a similar bill was unanimously passed by the Senate, twice approved by the House committee, but blocked in the Rules Committee.

Mayer, whose union includes agricultural workers, described the crew leader as "the migrant's bridge to a world which the migrant often does not understand and one which is often hostile to him."

Federal and state investigations, he said, have uncovered abuses by crew leaders including:

- Collecting travel expenses from workers when they have already been paid by the employer.
- Abandoning crew without providing means of transportation back to their homes.
- Underpaying workers and pocketing the difference.
- Misrepresenting crop conditions and exaggerating anticipated earnings.
- Traffic in marihuana and prostitution.
- Overcharging for housing rental and maintenance.

Noting that the legislation is endorsed by the Kennedy Administration and had previously been endorsed by the Eisenhower Administration, Mayer declared:

"This legislation has had as much bipartisan support as could be wanted for any bill. It is legislation whose need is so widely recognized that it would be a tragedy if the House did not pass it this year."

Consumer Protection Goal in Pennsylvania

Philadelphia—The Pennsylvania State AFL-CIO, at its fourth convention, called on the legislature to enact a "minimum" seven-point program to protect consumers against usurious installment credit practices.

"It is a bitter irony," the convention observed in a resolution, "that because of outright fraud or deceptive advertising, packaging concealment or by whatever device, the wage earner, the pensioner, the unemployed worker is subjected to systematic and unrestricted shrinkage of the limited dolars at his disposal."

A dramatic highlight of the convention was a memorial service paying tribute to James L. McDevitt, national director of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education until his death Apr. 19 and for 13 years president of the former Pennsylvania AFL.

Joseph F. Burke, former co-president of the State AFL-CIO who conducted the service, described McDevitt as "truly a child of labor" and lauded his leadership in promoting vigorous labor participation in political affairs.

In another ceremony, Pres. Harry Boyer presented the State AFL-CIO's first "Good Citizen" award to Milton J. Shapp, chairman of the Jerrold Corp., citing particularly his survey of the state's economic, industrial and cultural growth needs.

Gov. William W. Scranton (R) praised labor's support for industrial development in the state and cited statistics showing that the labor productivity in Pennsylvania is "as high or higher" than in any other state in the nation.

Stanton E. Smith, AFL-CIO coordinator of state and city central bodies, described the establishment of the coordinator's office to fill a need created by the expanding role of central bodies in carrying out labor's legislative and political policies.

In internal actions, the delegates increased the monthly per capita tax from 3 cents to 4 cents and adopted policy resolutions supporting enactment of federal civil rights legislation, equitable reapportionment of the state legislature, health care for the aged, a vigorous COPE program at all levels, adequate state funds for adult education, the AFL-CIO call for an immediate $10 billion federal tax cut in the lowest brackets, and opposition to the merger of the Pennsylvania and New York Central Railroads.

Wilderness Plan Okayed:

Youth Bill Approved After Senate Battle

(Continued from Page 1)

would pay half the wages of the young people employed up to $20 a week.

On the final passage rollcall, 43 Democrats and seven Republicans voted for the twin programs; 20 Republicans and 14 Democrats were opposed.

The closest call came when a motion to strike out the Youth Conservation Corps was defeated 47-41. Republicans, who had attacked the program as "extravagant" and charged that conservation camps were an "outmoded" New Deal concept, also lost 50-37 on a motion to substitute an expanded vocational training program.

Sen. John G. Tower (R-Tex.), in an admitted effort to kill the bill by provoking a southern filibuster, introduced anti-discrimination amendments which were tabled on motions by Democratic Majority Leader Mike Mansfield (Mont.). Earlier Congress had been assured by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and other Administration officials that no racial discrimination would be permitted in the program.

The wilderness bill, similar to one passed by the Senate last year, faces the same obstacle which blocked enactment of the legislation in the 87th Congress—the all-out opposition of the chairman of the House Interior Committee, Rep. Wayne N. Aspinall (D-Colo.).

2 Amendments Beaten

Colorado's two Republican senators, Gordon L. Allott and Peter H. Dominick, tried unsuccessfully to amend the Senate bill so as to leave the door open to further mining, oil and gas exploitation, grazing and lumbering on public lands.

The Senate bill permits the President to designate additional areas of public land as "wilderness," subject to congressional veto. The Senate rejected, 49-35, an Allott amendment which would have required the President to seek permission from Congress before adding to the wilderness area.

Supporters of the legislation estimated that the present 8 million acres now classified as wilderness, wild or canoe land would eventually be expanded to more than 30 million acres under the bill.

The Senate bill defines wilderness as "an area where the earth and its community of life are untrammeled by man, where man himself is a visitor who does not remain."

In other congressional developments:

- A House Agriculture subcommittee approved a bill extending the "bracero" program—under which Mexican farm laborers are brought into the United States each year—for an additional two years, making no change in the existing law. Labor and religious groups had called for an immediate end to the program; the Administration had sought a one-year extension coupled with major reforms, and grower interests had asked extension of the program plus elimination of moderate reforms made last year.
- Gen. Lucius D. Clay, who headed a presidential advisory commitee on the U.S. foreign aid program, told the House Foreign Affairs Committee that he thought additional cuts could be made in Pres. Kennedy's pared-down budget request. But he warned against a "stroke of the ax" approach and said the U.S. must not break commitments to other nations.

Poll Tax Ban Pushed By Meany

A "highest priority" effort to secure passage this year of the anti-poll tax amendment in eight more states has been urged by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany to eliminate the voting barrier before the 1964 elections.

Meany wrote the presidents of eight AFL-CIO state bodies where legislatures are still in session and passage is possible asking them "to exert every possible effort to bring about favorable action." The states are Florida, Missouri, Iowa, Oklahoma, Maine, New Hampshire, Arizona and Delaware.

The anti-poll tax amendment has been adopted by 30 states to date. Under provisions of the U.S. Constitution, a three-fourths majority of the states must adopt the amendment to make it law—or 38 states.

Of the 30 states taking favorable action only one southern state—Tennessee—is represented. Mississippi has rejected the amendment and the other southern states have not taken any action. The poll tax as a qualification to voting still exists in Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Virginia and Texas.

Meany wrote the eight state AFL-CIO presidents that ratification of the amendment "is a matter of the highest priority to the AFL-CIO."

"The poll tax is an arbitrary and indefensible restriction on the right to vote," he said. "It must be struck down where it still survives, if we are to carry through our determination to insure every American his full and equal rights as a citizen."

SILVER HELMET AWARD for Americanism was presented by AMVETS to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at a Washington, D.C., luncheon. The presentation was made by former National Commander Marshall Miller, left. At right is the luncheon chairman, Rudolph Pesata, also a past commander.

Public Works Funds Restored by House

(Continued from Page 1)

local money to supplement federal grants.

Republican charges that the program was a "boondoggle" drew sharp fire from Rep. John A. Blatnik (D-Minn.), who last year steered the accelerated public works authorization through the House.

Taking the floor in the House, he shouted angrily at the Republicans: "Don't call it a boondoggle."

Twenty-six percent of the workers in Minnesota's Mesabi Iron Range were jobless last winter through no fault of their own, he said. Blatnik added grimly:

"If there had been an ad for six miners to work all day in mines filled with water, 600 men would have been waiting at 4 a.m. in subfreezing temperatures."

House Speaker John W. McCormack (D-Mass.), reportedly "furious" at the committee's surprise action, charged the Republicans with "blind opposition" and warned that the public "will be closely watching" the House vote "to see who is for more jobs and who is for mere talk."

Administration leaders had anticipated that the public works money—the biggest single item in a catch-all supplemental appropriations bill—would have no trouble getting through the full Appropriations Committee after a subcommittee had trimmed the $500 million request to $450 million.

With no advance indication of a fight, several Administration supporters were absent when the full committee met for a scheduled Friday session.

The situation changed dramatically when Committee Chairman Clarence Cannon (D-Mo.), who has been at odds with the Democratic leadership, and four southern Democrats voted with a solid bloc of 17 Republicans to eliminate all public works funds.

Democratic leaders and the White House rallied a quick counterattack, launched with Kennedy's blast the next day, continuing with strategy meetings over the weekend and McCormack's sharp attack on the GOP from the steps of the White House after a breakfast meeting with Kennedy on Apr. 9.

With Rep. Albert Thomas (D-Tex.), chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee, supporting the restoration of funds and the amendment putting the money back in the bill offered by another veteran committee member, Rep. Edward P. Boland (D-Mass.), the battle became primarily a party contest.

The first test came on a teller vote with the House meeting as a Committee of the Whole. The amendment to put back the $450 million carried 202-172. The victory was assured by the later 44-vote margin scored on the rollcall, in which 208 Democrats and 20 Republicans voted for the public works funds, and 151 Republicans and 33 Democrats opposed it.

Meany Given 'Silver Helmet' By AMVETS

The trade union movement "has truly exemplified Americanism in action," the American Veterans of World War II and Korea declared in a citation presenting the AMVETS Americanism Award to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany.

Under Meany's "strong leadership," the AMVETS said, American labor "has opposed anti-democratic forces in the United States and throughout the world."

The veterans' group presented its Silver Helmet Americanism award—a replica of a GI helmet—to Meany at a Washington, D. C., luncheon.

Meany told the luncheon gathering that he accepted the award "in behalf of the AFL-CIO, which is dedicated to the free way of life."

Silver helmet awards in other fields were presented to Defense Sec. Robert S. McNamara, Sen. Edmund S. Muskie (D-Me.), Gen. Lucius D. Clay and Dr. Winfred Overholser. A special award also went to the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. for its work on the Telstar satellite.

Meany was chosen for the Americanism award, AMVETS said, "in recognition of a lifetime's active devotion to the combined development of individual dignity and collective responsibility as bulwarks of democracy and freedom for all groups of society."

Tanganyika Workers Win New Benefits

Transport Workers in Tanganyika have won contract improvements including annual leave of 21 days with pay; a 42-hour week; overtime pay, sick leave and advance dismissal notice or a month's severance pay.

4-13-63

Dental Bill Insurance Won in Pact

Utica, N.Y.—A comprehensive dental insurance plan has been negotiated by Meat Cutters Local for some 5,000 members and their families in 42 upstate New York counties and several communities in northwestern Pennsylvania.

The plan is believed to be the largest of its kind in the Northeast, said Samuel J. Talarico, who is an international vice president of the Meat Cutters as well as president and business manager of the local. The local has contracts with major food chains and packing plants in the area.

It permits free choice of dentist and includes payment of benefits for all charges, including a full or partial allowance for dentures, up to a maximum of $500 per individual or $1,500 per family per year. The plan has no fee schedule, but does have a $25 deductible per person for each calendar year with a maximum of three deductibles a year per family. Beyond the deductible amount, the plan will pay 80 percent of all dental expenses incurred during the year.

Talarico said preliminary discussions of the program have been held with the New York State Dental Society and meetings also are planned with local dental societies.

Florida Railroad Defies Order to Cancel Rules

The Florida East Coast Railroad has refused to cancel a unilaterally imposed set of employe work rules and the National Mediation Board has asked the Justice Dept. for a ruling on the railroad's failure to comply with an executive order of the President.

At the same time the Florida Railroad & Public Utilities Commission ordered the FEC, struck by non-operating employes for almost three months, to resume full service at once or show cause by Apr. 15 why it should not be fined up to $5,000 a day for violating a state law.

The Mediation Board, which has been meeting in Washington with FEC labor and management to help end a strike of 11 non-operating unions, directed the railroad to withdraw its work rules notice until a special emergency board, appointed Apr. 3 under the Railway Labor Act, has reported back to Pres. Kennedy.

NMB Member Francis A. O'Neill, Jr., said the Florida East Coast replied that it was not bound by the presidential order because it had withdrawn Mar. 12 from group bargaining with operating unions. O'Neill then asked the Justice Dept. to decide whether the railroad had violated the President's order and if so, to recommend legal remedies.

The railroad's Apr. 3 action in putting rule changes in effect unilaterally immediately triggered another strike, this time by members of four operating unions—Trainmen, Conductors & Brakemen, Firemen & Enginemen, and Locomotive Engineers.

The dispute goes back to management's refusal to give non-operating employes the same wage increase of 10.28 cents an hour granted last June to workers on other Class I American railroads, 192 in all. The non-op unions, representing 1,350 FEC workers, blame the impasse on the railroad's board chairman, Edward Ball, 74, who is also chief trustee of the $500 million Alfred I. duPont estate.

The FEC has attempted to run trains with crews composed of supervisors and has announced it will begin hauling potatoes out of North Florida Apr. 15.

Other rail developments were:

- Heads of the five operating unions urged Kennedy's emergency board, at its first meeting Apr. 11, to help mediate the work rules disputes between the railroads and rail brotherhoods, to make its proceedings an "extension of the bargaining table, as intended by the authors of the Railway Labor Act."
- Chairman G. E. Leighty of the Railway Labor Executives Association, testifying before two Interstate Commerce Commission examiners, said the proposed merger of the Pennsylvania and New York Central systems would result in immense harm to jobs, service and facilities needed by the public.

Leighty said the unions are convinced that "no set of conditions . . . could protect the public interest" if the merger is approved, but submitted a set of steps that could be taken to protect rail employes.

AFL-CIO News

Vol. VIII — Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year — Saturday, April 20, 1963 — No. 16

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

IAM, Boeing Reach Strike-Eve Accord

HUNDREDS OF POUNDS of clothing have been gathered by Ladies' Garment Workers Local 99 to aid the more than 20,000 Negroes dropped by Mississippi local officials from federal surplus commodities rolls. The Congress on Racial Equality (CORE) charges the action was in retaliation for efforts of Negro citizens to register for voting. Inspecting the clothing, from left, are Douglas Levin, manager of Local 99; Elizabeth Phillips, a local member; Marvin Rich and Bob Gore, with CORE community relations programs; James Arkord, Local 99 committee member.

Units Still Voting on New Pact

By Eugene A. Kelly

Negotiators for the Machinists reached a tentative settlement on the eve of an Apr. 15 strike deadline set by the union in its long dispute with the Boeing Co. over a new three-year contract covering 40,000 aerospace workers.

After nine months of negotiations and more than 50 bargaining sessions, the settlement was called by a union spokesman "in almost every respect the best ever negotiated" at Boeing, which makes the Minuteman missile under government contract.

The same source said the contract would give Boeing workers benefits totaling $14.5 million in the first year of the proposed pact, in addition to retroactive pay averaging $153 per man, or about $6 million.

The settlement was taken by the IAM to affected workers, with the results of ratification votes by members at Boeing plants across the nation still unclear as the AFL-CIO News went to press.

With the vote at Wichita, Kan., and three small installations not yet known, the incomplete tally was 8,350 for ratification, 5,135 opposed.

At the largest Boeing installation, Seattle-Renton, the members voted 8,283-4,691 to accept the proposed new pact. The IAM unit in Wichita, where 4,000 members are eligible to vote, adjourned its meeting without balloting but scheduled another session.

(Continued on Page 3)

Joint Committees Set Up:

Ford, GM Accept UAW Study Plan

Detroit—Two major auto makers, General Motors and Ford, have accepted a proposal by the Auto Workers to set up joint study committees to meet a year in advance of 1964 contract negotiations.

The committees are not empowered to bargain but will "explore certain prospective issues relating to the negotiations," union and management spokesmen said in joint statements.

At exploratory meetings here the parties agreed to the study committee idea and designated subcommittees to meet again to formulate "ground rules" and to report back later to the full committees.

After the GM session, the joint statement said "the parties now have homework to do on the most effective way of proceeding." The Ford-UAW joint statement reported that union and company "share the view that this study committee can make a constructive contribution by doing preparatory work in advance of the negotiations."

In proposing study committees to meet well before negotiations, Reuther and the UAW executive board had invited the leading auto and agricultural implement makers to meet with the union.

Reuther noted that management and the UAW will be faced in 1964 negotiations with a "host of technical issues" and also with the obligation to "develop imaginative and effective new solutions to serious and urgent" new problems.

Union Proposed

The "enormous complexity of the problems we face," Reuther wrote the manufacturers, "seems to dictate that we go to the bargaining table in 1964 better prepared than ever before." He said labor-management relations are "facing a crisis which may well determine whether free collective bargaining may survive" and urged a redoubling of effort to prove it can work.

The union had asked that the study committees start work by July 1 on such issues as unemployment, displacement of workers, methods to cushion the impact of technology, and ways of raising living standards.

The UAW will meet Apr. 25 with Chrysler Corp. representatives and on a date not yet set with American Motors to explore the study committee proposal. Four farm implement firms have indicated interest in the plan but no meeting dates have been set. They are Harvester, John Deere, Caterpillar and Allis-Chalmers companies.

The union has named Reuther; his administrative assistant, Irving Bluestone, and Nat Weinberg, UAW director of special projects, to both committees. Appointed to the Ford committee were Dir. Ken Bannon with Nelson Samp and Stanley Rowe of the UAW Ford Dept. The GM group includes Vice Pres. Leonard Woodcock, Ernest J. Moran and Frank James of the union's GM Dept.

For management, Vice Pres. Louis G. Seaton heads the GM committee and Vice Pres. M. L. Denise the Ford committee.

Kerr-Mills Inadequate, House Told

The Kerr-Mills program, highly touted by the American Medical Association as the answer to health care for the aged, has failed to do the job, top Administration leaders told a House Appropriations subcommittee.

Wilbur J. Cohen, assistant secretary for legislation of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare, told the House group that "the net effect of the Kerr-Mills program has actually been to increase medical care for old people very negligibly."

The states which have taken advantage of the program of matching federal-state funds had programs of their own in operation, he said, and those which needed new laws, new money and new authorization have ignored the new federal program.

He and HEW Sec. Anthony Celebrezze stressed that the department has tried to convince the states they should pass the legislation needed to take advantage of the program, but that only 27 states have acted. The Kerr-Mills program was passed in 1960 and legislatures were urged to act to become eligible for the matching federal grants.

Figures for January 1963 disclosed that the number of elderly persons aided during the month totaled 116,000 out of the total population of 16.5 million "senior citizens." Four states with 28.2 percent of the elderly population expended 80.4 percent of the funds —New York, California, Massachusetts and Pennsylvania.

The average expenditure per re-

(Continued on Page 7)

Wage Cut Ban Pressed:

Tight Equal Pay Bill Urged by Schnitzler

The AFL-CIO has urged Congress to write into the Administration's equal-pay-for-women bill "a specific provision forbidding any reduction in wage rates" as a result of wage equality.

"Equalization through wage cutting would make a mockery of the purpose of equal pay legislation," AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler told a Senate Labor subcommittee.

Schnitzler emphasized labor's strong support for a federal equal pay law, declaring there is "substantial evidence" that many women workers are paid less than men for the same work.

The subcommittee, headed by Sen. Pat McNamara (D-Mich.), wound up its hearings on the bill with testimony from union, Administration, religious and other public witnesses for the measure, and statements by employers and business groups in opposition.

Some highlights:

- Dorothy Haener of the Women's Dept. of the Auto Workers charged that wage discrimination provides a "bonus for economic chiselers to the disadvantage of employers who refuse to exploit the economic and social disabilities of women in order to cheat them by paying substandard wages."
- Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz said federal legislation is needed because state laws in this field are "fragmentary" and have "not materially changed the unequal pay pattern evident throughout the nation." He termed the Administration bill "moderate and flexible."
- Assistant Sec. of Labor Esther Peterson declared that in both low-

(Continued on Page 7)

Rise in Non-Farm Employment Gains Momentum, Report Shows

The Labor Dept. has dispensed cautious optimism with its report that the pickup in non-farm payroll employment "gained momentum" between February and March.

A rise of 257,000 jobs over the month pushed non-farm employment to 55 million as of mid-March, the department said in issuing its detailed job report. This was 1 million higher than a year ago and an all-time high after adjusting for seasonal influences, the department added.

There were several signs of improvement in the job picture, but a department spokesman warned against letting the wish father the thought that the economy is out of trouble.

Earlier, the Labor Dept. had reported that the seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment had returned to 5.6 percent after spurting to 6.1 percent in February. Some 4.5 million workers remained unemployed.

The over-the-month job rise was "considerably better than usual for this time of year, with most of the gain concentrated in manufacturing and trade," the report noted.

Non-farm employment has improved in the past two months by 300,000 jobs over the January level, after adjusting for seasonal influences and the effect of the dock strike, the report added.

Manufacturing jobs rose to 16.6 million in March, the report said, an increase of 60,000 from February "instead of the usual decline."

Non-manufacturing areas scored gains of nearly 200,000 "or twice the expected seasonal job increase," the report said. Retail trade jobs were up by 48,000 to 8.4 million instead of dropping; construction was up by 66,000 to 2.3 million; service jobs rose by 26,000 to 7.8 million; state and local government rose by 26,000 to 7.2 million.

The job gains in manufacturing, spread rather evenly through assorted industries, represent "a sign of some firmness in the economy," stated Harold Goldstein, the Labor Dept.'s job statistics expert.

However, he noted, manufactur-

(Continued on Page 8)

Special Panel Hunts Solution In Rail Dispute

Chicago—A blue ribbon Presidential Emergency Board has begun closed-door mediation sessions here in a final effort to settle the bitter railroad work rules dispute without "the calamity of a national stoppage."

Board Chairman Samuel I. Rosenman, a former judge and New Deal adviser, asked both sides to dispense with the customary "full-dress testimony" and come up with "realistic ideas" for breaking the long bargaining stalemate.

Pres. Kennedy named Rosenman, Pres. Clark Kerr of the University of California and Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger of the University of Wisconsin to the emergency board he set up after railroads sought to put into effect unilaterally a drastic rewriting of work rules, including elimination of tens of thousands of jobs. Appointment of the board preserves existing conditions for 60

(Continued on Page 2)

Average Income of Men By Education and Color

1961

SOURCE: U. S. Bureau of the Census

Bottle Industry Sets Up Permanent Arbitrators

Atlanta, Ga.—Eight prominent arbitrators will serve as a permanent panel of impartial umpires to settle labor disputes in the glass container industry under an agreement reached by the Glass Bottle Blowers and the employers' trade association.

The unique panel will resolve disputes arising out of contracts covering 77 plants of 28 glass container manufacturers. Selection of an arbitrator from the panel to hear each case will be made by the Tribunals Division of the American Arbitration Association on a rotating basis.

Named to the panel were: David L. Cole, John T. Dunlop, Harry J. Dworkin, James J. Healy, Paul M. Hebert, Elmer E. Hilpert, Bert L. Luskin and Richard A. O'Neill.

A joint statement of GBB Pres. Lee W. Minton and J. Thomas Rimer, Jr., labor relations director of the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute, declared:

"The union and the manufacturers have become increasingly concerned with the long delays in the settlement of grievances. The creation of this panel will expedite the handling of grievances by eliminating the delay experienced in the past in the selection of an arbitrator on a case-by-case basis. To this extent, employers and union members will be better served in the settlement of grievances in a timely manner."

Announcement of the new system was made at a meeting in Atlanta of the industry's Labor-Management Committee, made up of top union and company officials who meet periodically on labor relations problems.

Ground for Fair Exhibit Broken in Washington

A battery of silver spades bit into a plot of earth temporarily housed in the Senate conference room in the Capitol of the United States—and ground was officially broken for one of the major exhibits at the 1964-65 New York World's Fair.

The ground had come from the fair site at Flushing, L. I., and had been specially cut and transported to Washington. The ceremony took place in the Capitol to symbolize the national scope of the exhibit, called the "House of Good Taste," in which some 200 U.S. firms and their employes are expected to participate.

The spades were wielded by various people with active interests in good housing. Among them were Sen. John Sparkman (D-Ala.) and Rep. Albert Rains (D-Ala.), chairmen of the Senate and House housing subcommittees; AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler; Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept.; Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz; Senators Jacob K. Javits and Kenneth B. Keating, New York Republicans; Assistant Sec. of Commerce Herbert W. Klotz; officials of the fair and the "House of Good Taste" project, and representatives of many of the manufacturers.

The housing exhibit is described by its backers as a showcase of ideal-living American homes. Three homes will be erected on the fair site—one traditional, one contemporary and one modern—according to designs of three of the country's most prominent architects, Royal Barry Wills Associates of Boston, Jack Pickens Coble of New York and Edward Durrell Stone of New York.

Mrs. Randolph Dies After Long Illness

Mrs. Lucille Greene Randolph, wife of A. Philip Randolph, president of the Sleeping Car Porters and a vice president of the AFL-CIO, died at the family home in New York after a long illness.

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany and Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler in a telegram of regret to Randolph said they were "keenly aware that at such a moment, no words are adequate; we can only assure you of our fullest sympathy and that of all your friends and colleagues" in the AFL-CIO.

The funeral services were held in New York, with Reg. Dir. Michael Mann representing the AFL-CIO.

Socially, Politically Explosive:

Jobless Rate Among Youth Creating Crisis for Nation

High unemployment among youth could become socially and politically explosive if jobs are lacking for the 26 million youngsters entering the labor force during the 1960s, the AFL-CIO has warned.

"The Coming Crisis: Youth Without Work," an article in the April issue of the American Federationist, describes how the postwar baby boom has grown into today's problem of youth without opportunities.

During the 1960s, the analysis by the federation's Dept. of Research observes, the U.S. will feel the impact of the largest labor force increase of any decade in its history. By 1970, the labor force will total 85.5 million or 12.6 million above 1960; half the rise will be among youths 24 and under.

As the babies of the 1940s reach working age, they are having an increasing impact on society, the survey says. In 1960, over 2 million new young workers became jobholders and job-seekers; by 1965, it will be 2.5 million a year; by 1970, 3 million a year.

"This big expansion in the number of young people in the labor force, when considered in combination with the present high rate of unemployment among young workers, is cause for concern," the AFL-CIO researchers declare.

"Unemployment currently is very high for the labor force as a whole, but it is two to three times worse for young people. And with 26 million new young workers entering the labor force in the 1960s, unemployment can become a dangerously explosive problem in the next few years."

Stacking additional cards against youth, the analysis adds, are such problems as increased automation which requires more education and training; the job shift away from goods-producing to service industries wiping out traditional first-experience jobs, and persistent racial discrimination.

2 Million Idle in 1962

The article estimated nearly 2 million youths were unemployed or underemployed in 1962.

Some 1 million were counted officially as jobless—actively seeking work but unable to find it; another 400,000 between 16 and 24 were "not in school, not at work and not keeping house and not seeking jobs, even though they were physically able to work"; more than 400,000 additional were working part-time because full-time work was unavailable.

The article pointed out that jobless and frustrated youth provided a good base for Hitler in pre-war Germany.

"Any totalitarian movement—be it Nazi, fascist or Communist—directs its efforts toward those who have grievances, whether real or imaginary," the article declared.

"And in the United States, in the years ahead, the grievances of our rapidly-expanding youth population can be quite real indeed—if they are denied a reasonable chance for jobs.

Jobless Rate Soars

"The dangers of large-scale unemployment among youths is not only a matter of economic hardship and deprivation and wasted manpower. Even more important is the fact that it represents a potential threat to society—not only in street gangs, crime and delinquency—but in even more serious forms."

The Dept. of Research says there can develop "a threat to our way of life" not only from unemployed youth but from future adults embittered by their lack of youthful opportunities.

The jobless rate for the nation was 5.6 percent in 1962, the analysis notes. But for youths aged 16 to 24, the rate was 11.3 percent or double the national figure. For teenagers—the 16-19 age group which includes high school graduates and school dropouts—the rate was 14.5 percent or nearly triple the national rate.

Non-whites are at a special disadvantage, the article says.

"Forced into crowded slums and lacking in equal opportunity to compete on the basis of ability, too many non-white youngsters are being robbed of any motivation to stay in school," the article declares.

The result is that in 1961 the jobless rate for non-white boys aged 14 to 17 was 25.4 percent compared to 13.3 percent for white boys the same age. Lack of education and the existence of discrimination in employment may keep the non-white in low-skilled work if he finds employment.

If the influx of 26 million youngsters into the labor force, of whom 7.5 million will be school dropouts, is not to become "a social problem loaded with dynamite" and lead to war with society, a full-scale attack must be made on the causes of unemployment, the AFL-CIO declares.

Program Spelled Out

The analysis urges programs to combat unemployment and underemployment of adults, thereby providing conditions which would motivate and enable young people to continue in school; an overhauled vocational education system and "rapid progress" in equal job opportunity.

But all will come to naught, the article says, unless it is recognized that "the most urgent need is for an increase in the number of job opportunities."

The federation report calls for "vigorous" federal action to stimulate the economy through tax cuts for low and middle-income groups, an expanded public works program and such school-to-work bridges as the Youth Employment Opportunities bill now moving through Congress.

Joblessness of Youth 'Social Dynamite'

Youth unemployment has all the makings of "social dynamite," declared Dr. James Conant, former president of Harvard University, in discussing his findings for the National Committee on Children and Youth.

"In a slum area of 125,000 people, mostly Negro," he said, "a sampling shows that roughly 70 percent of the boys and girls between ages 16 and 21 are out of school and unemployed. When one stops to consider that the total population in this district is equal to that of a good-size independent city, the magnitude of the problem is appalling and the challenge to our society is clear."

Mediation Board Hunts Work Rules Solution

(Continued from Page 1)

days of fact-finding, mediation and bargaining.

"There is so little time," Rosenman said as the board began its work. He said it would "exert all possible effort and influence to get the parties together for bargaining and negotiations—and to keep them together until agreement is reached."

Direct negotiations between the railroads and the five "operating" unions broke off June 22, 1962, when management insisted that any work rules settlement be "within the framework" of recommendations made last year by a study commission. Management walked out of the negotiations when the unions refused the proposed limitation on the scope of bargaining. A final effort at direct negotiations last month ended with management bolting after less than two hours of talks.

Rosenman told both groups that the board members consider their key function "to help the parties settle their differences by themselves and among themselves." Later he told newsmen:

"Everybody is sort of inflexible at the beginning. We expected that. But both sides are taking second looks at their positions."

In other rail developments:

- The Railroad Yardmasters reached agreement with 80 railroads on a retroactive increase generally similar but not identical to that negotiated last year by other non-operating unions. Yardmasters will receive an $8 monthly increase retroactive to Mar. 3, 1962, and a further 2.5 percent increase retroactive to May 1, 1962.
- The Justice Dept. still had under consideration federal action to force the Florida East Coast Railroad—where non-operating unions have been on strike since January—to withdraw unilateral work rules changes affecting operating employes.

The operating unions, which had been respecting picket lines of the shop crafts, joined the strike when the work rules changes were announced. The National Mediation Board ordered the company to withdraw its rules changes, but the railroad has refused to comply.

'Top' and 'Bottom' Retire at Same Time

Lynn, Mass. — The "top" and "bottom" of United Shoe Workers Local 2 are retiring after 50 years and will be guests of honor at a banquet Apr. 25.

Elected for 30 consecutive terms as business agents of Local 2, Joseph D. Hanley represented workers in "top of the shoe" operations and Richard M. Tobin handled "bottom" processes. This year they are retiring together.

The two hired out as "room boys" at $3.50 a week in the early 1900's, stayed through the boom years of 1915-16 when 100 shoe factories had jobs for 14,000 workers, and won union office for the first time in the early depression years. They have been handling grievances and helping set piece rates ever since in the factories, now down to eight employing about 2,000 union members.

NLRB Backpay Order:

UAW Members Get $113,000 in Firings

Payment of more than $113,000 to 22 members of the Auto Workers, illegally fired by the United States Air Conditioning Corp. five years ago, has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board.

Management of the Delaware, O., company not only laid the 22 off unfairly in 1958, the board said, but has failed to comply with an NLRB order and court enforcement decree to reinstate five of the 22 to their former or substantially equivalent positions.

Instead, the three-man panel said, the company declined to reinstate a worker who asked for two weeks' notice time for his successor employer; reinstated another at a job paying 40 cents an hour less than his former job, which was given to a worker with "many years less seniority;" and assigned a former stockroom assistant to work in a water-filled ditch without boots.

When the latter protested, Trial Examiner C. W. Whittemore related in an intermediate report, he was told to see company Pres. G. W. Way, "who ordered the employe out of his office."

The back pay order, approved by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Boyd Leedom and Gerald A. Brown, directs the company to give $113,515 to 21 workers and the estate of Edward Heineman, who has since died; to pay $1,441 from the employe profit-sharing account to seven of the 21; and to put $12,519 into the same account for eight of them.

The dispute has been before the board since July 19, 1960, when the company was found to have committed an unfair practice in firing the 22 UAW members. The employer was directed to offer "immediate and full reinstatement" to the 21 living employes and make them whole for loss of pay.

A year later the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals entered an order enforcing the back pay and reinstatement provisions of the board's ruling, and hearings then were held to set the amount of backpay due.

The company argued that only 7 of the 22 were entitled to back pay and that the remaining 15 could not be reinstated because employment was not available for them. The examiner found, and the board agreed, that jobs were available for all 22 during their backpay periods.

NEGOTIATORS for the Machinists paused for a picture with federal mediators after reaching tentative agreement in Washington on a new contract covering 40,000 employes of the Boeing Co. Left to right are: Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service; Mediation Commissioner Albin L. Peterson; IAM Rep. E. A. Springer of Seattle, Wash., and IAM Vice Pres. Jesse C. McGlon.

1,500 Win First Pacts In New York Hospitals

New York—Three new contracts covering 1,500 non-professional employes in the New York area have been negotiated by Drug & Hospital Local 1199 of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union.

The biggest new agreement covers 500 workers in a union shop contract at the Home for the Aged & Infirm Hebrews, described as "the largest and oldest voluntary institution for the aging in America."

It provides a 21-cent hourly wage increase over a 27-month period, a 37½-hour week and a provision for arbitration of all disputes.

Another agreement negotiated by the local marks a sharp change in labor-management relations at New York Medical College's Flower & Fifth Ave. Hospitals—sites of bitter strikes for recognition in 1959 and 1962.

The hospital management not only recognized the union and reached agreement on a three-year contract, but also declared its conviction that "unions in hospitals . . . contribute to improved operation and service."

Dr. Ralph E. Snyder, dean of the college and president of the medical center, added:

"The principle of unionism is an established part of our society and the acceptance of this principle by hospitals cannot be further denied in good conscience."

The agreement provides a first year 10-cent hourly raise for all workers, plus fringe benefits including medical care and life insurance.

All unresolved disputes, including renewal, will be submitted to a permanent arbitrator.

Recognition of the union as bargaining representative of the 225 employes followed a membership card check conducted by State Supreme Court Judge Abraham J. Gellinoff.

A few days earlier, in another major breakthrough, Local 1199 won recognition as representative of non-professional employes at the Long Island Jewish Hospital in a five-year contract.

The agreement, which contains an annual wage reopener and an arbitration procedure, raises the minimum rate 15 cents an hour and provides a general first-year increase of 10 cents—half payable as of Apr. 1 and the remainder effective July 1.

Hospital Pres. Jack S. Liebowitz said the wage increases will result in "a greatly increased operating deficit for the hospital."

Apprentice Panel Named In Bias Fight

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has named representatives of labor, management, minority groups and the general public to a 15-member Advisory Committee on Equal Opportunity in Apprenticeship and Training. Under-Sec. of Labor John F. Henning will serve as chairman.

Labor members are Joseph Corcoran, education director of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters; Sec.-Treas. A. J. Rohan of the Pressmen; Al Burch, assistant research and education director of the Operating Engineers, and Machinists Grand Lodge Rep. Alec Bauer.

Management representatives are Ford Motor Co. Vice Pres. Charles Patterson; Joseph Eichler, California contractor, and Executive Dir. William Dunn of the Associated General Contractors.

Committee members from minority groups are the Rev. Walter Janer of New York; Emanuel Muravchik, director of the Jewish Labor Committee; Chester Lewis, board member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Dean John Welch of Tuskegee Institute, and Mrs. Dolores Huerta, a member of the California legislature.

Public appointees are Mayor Stanford Brookshire of Charlotte, N. C., and Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer of Washington, D. C.

Kennedy To Speak at IAM Jubilee

Pres. Kennedy will be one of the main speakers at the 75th anniversary banquet of the Machinists, IAM Pres. Albert J. Hayes has announced.

The anniversary celebration will be held in Washington on May 5, the date in 1888 on which 19 machinists huddled out of sight in a locomotive pit in the Atlanta, Ga., roundhouse of the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad—now part of the Southern—and organized what was to grow into one of the country's largest unions.

Other speakers will include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany; Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress, and Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

The Washington dinner will be one of 340 separate observances of the union's diamond anniversary.

As part of the celebration, the IAM has published a 96-page digest-style family magazine, Your Union Today, which contains articles and pictures about the union and its history and aspirations.

"As union members," Hayes writes in an article in the booklet, "we dedicate our efforts to the welfare and well-being of the people, the family people, the working people of the United States and Canada."

Copies of Your Union Today are available at 35 cents each from the IAM at 909 Machinists Building, Washington 6, D. C.

Strike Action Taken by URW In Tire Plants

Akron, O.—Rubber workers at Goodyear, Goodrich and Firestone plants around the nation have voted overwhelmingly to grant strike authorization to union negotiators engaged in contract talks at Columbus, Cleveland and Dayton, O.

Contracts for some 50,000 employes of the three big firms are due to expire at midnight Apr. 20 unless extended.

The union has asked management to include an "economic productivity sharing" plan, sabbatical leaves, and an automation study committee in new pacts, along with improvements in wages and supplemental unemployment insurance benefits.

Contract negotiations also are being held in Cleveland for 3,500 employes of General Tire. The URW expects to open negotiations early next month for 24,000 employes of the United States Rubber Co.

IAM Units Balloting On New Boeing Pact

(Continued from Page 1)

Lodge 2061 at Cape Canaveral, Fla., voted against ratification, 171-55.

In the Philadelphia area, Auto Workers employed at Boeing's Vertol Div. walked out for 16 hours, then returned to the bargaining table at the request of Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service. Some 4,200 Vertol workers are represented by the UAW.

The Boeing negotiations were the last in a series that grew out of a decision by the IAM and the UAW to make improved job and income security their major goals in 1962-63 contract negotiations with the aerospace industry.

The proposed settlement includes these improvements:

- Wage increases of 11-14 cents retroactive to Sept. 16, 1962, plus additional increases of 5.5 cents to 9 cents in September 1963 and again a year later.
- Allotment of an additional 4 cents an hour for correction of inequities, consolidation and upgrading of jobs, and other changes to bring the Boeing wage structure closer to the rest of the industry, as the union phrased it.
- A job evaluation plan to be worked out by a joint committee in the next six months, with an estimated $3.2 million in additional wage hikes to be put into effect after the plan has been approved.
- A new cost-of-living clause calling for annual adjustments up to 3 cents an hour when living costs rise.

The new pact does not contain the union shop that IAM members voted for in a previous referendum by a margin of 73.8 percent, but the present maintenance of membership contract clause was retained.

In addition, it was agreed that all employes newly hired, recalled or transferred into the bargaining unit who do not join the IAM must write to the union and management saying they do not wish to join, and failing that, must become members by the 60th day.

The tentative settlement also provides that pension benefits be increased to $2.25 per month for each year of service, with minimum pensions of $50 monthly; that Boeing add $1.88 per month per employe to the health and welfare plan toward increased costs; and that the union will have a voice in setting travel and relocation pay for workers traveling to Boeing plants and missile bases on company business.

A key issue was a company performance analysis plan. Under the old agreement, one group of workers was ineligible for recall in cases of layoff. The new terms eliminate this exemption, and workers downgraded or subject to layoff in the future will be eligible for rehiring based on seniority and group rating.

In the long struggle for better aerospace contracts, union members at most major plants set several strike deadlines but postponed them at the request of Pres. Kennedy, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz or the federal mediators when negotiations stalled.

Last January, when all companies except Boeing had agreed to accept settlements recommended by presidential emergency panels, a Kennedy-appointed board urged Boeing to "show a sense of responsibility comparable" to that shown by the union.

NLRB Kills Bias Charge Against Local

Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman of the National Labor Relations Board has found no merit in a charge by 18 employes of the Atlantic Steel Co. that Steelworkers Local 2401 failed to give fair representation to Negro workers at the plant.

The union had in fact used its bargaining strength to eliminate disparities, he said.

Rothman denied an appeal from the refusal of the NLRB regional director in Atlanta, Ga., to issue a complaint based on charges that Local 2401 acquiesced in disparate wage rates for white and Negro workers, and agreed to a seniority system which confined Negroes to unskilled jobs.

The complainants alleged that Negro lift truck operators received lower pay than whites. The evidence showed that all operators except one were at the same wage level, and that one, who was in a higher classification because of a special safety factor, was a Negro.

Also rejected was a charge that a contract change secured by the union did not eliminate prior discrimination. Rothman found that the facts did not warrant the conclusion that the union was responsible.

On the contrary, a number of Negroes had availed themselves of new job opportunities under a rule change secured by the union, he said.

Sea Officers Win Pay Hike in Brazil

London—Officers of the Brazilian Merchant Navy who went on strike last winter over wage "favoritism" allegedly shown other seamen by government authorities have, according to the Intl. Transportworkers Federation received substantial wage boosts in an agreement that followed a return to work.

Time to Buckle Down

THE FIRST SESSION of the 88th Congress returns to work next week after its Easter recess with the tempo expected to pick up sharply after initial organization and committee hearings.

In a flurry of activity before the recess the Senate beat back a series of crippling amendments and passed by a 50-to-34 vote the Administration's youth opportunities bill. A few days earlier it had adopted an Administration-backed bill to preserve wilderness areas, also defeating attempts to limit the scope of the measure.

The budget-slashing conservative coalition suffered a stinging defeat when the House voted 228 to 184 for $450 million in funds previously authorized for the public works program. This was the first important test of the coalition's attempt to scuttle the Administration's budget proposals.

The pre-recess votes hold out promise for the next few months but the power of the coalition is a major factor on the Hill. There are indications that both the youth opportunities and wilderness measures will have difficulties in House committees and that the House Appropriations Committee, despite its defeat on public works on the House floor, is ready to slash other key spending measures.

The visits with congressmen and senators during the Easter recess must be followed up with a continuing flow of letters and communications supporting the programs that will create jobs and meet the critical social welfare needs of the nation.

Hospital Costs

IN AN ARTICLE marking the 10th anniversary of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare this month, attention is focused on the "unusual increase in the cost of medical care."

The overall Consumer Price Index, the article by HEW leaders notes, rose from 93.2 to about 106 during the past decade. During this same period, the index for medical care increased from 83.9 to 115.

The analysis of the medical care index reveals that physicians' fees were consistent with the overall increase, and prescriptions and drugs declined somewhat, but the hospital daily service charge component rose from 74.8 in 1953 to 131 in 1963. In dollars this means that hospital care now averages more than $35 a day.

This "dramatic increase" in the cost of medical care is fundamental to the problem of providing hospital care for the aged under the social security system. The high cost of providing medical care, and especially hospital care, for the elderly can only be met by building up the needed funds under an insurance system during the productive working years.

Forty Years After

FORTY YEARS AGO as the nation was emerging from the trials and strife of World War I the Amalgamated Clothing Workers under the leadership of the late Sidney Hillman established the Amalgamated Bank of New York.

Hillman expressed the philosophy of labor banking as "the desire of labor to participate more fully in the economic life of the community and the nation, to accept responsibilities, and to receive whatever benefits may come from accepting those responsibilities. . . ."

In its 40-year history, the Amalgamated Bank, one of the few that survived the flurry of labor banks in the 1920s, has fulfilled the role Hillman laid down for it. It is an efficiently-run, soundly-based, growing institution contributing to the establishment and maintenance of social consciousness in business affairs.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther	George M. Harrison	Harry C. Bates
Wm. C. Birthright	James B. Carey	David Dubinsky
David J. McDonald	Emil Rieve	Wm. L. McFetridge
Joseph Curran	M. A. Hutcheson	A. J. Hayes
Joseph D. Keenan	Jacob S. Potofsky	A. Philip Randolph
Richard F. Walsh	Lee W. Minton	Joseph A. Beirne
James A. Suffridge	O. A. Knight	Karl F. Feller
Paul L. Phillips	Peter T. Schoemann	L. M. Raftery
Paul Hall	Herman D. Kenin

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, April 20, 1963 No. 16

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'It's Been a Tough Winter'

Federationist Asks:

How Is Your Library Doing? If It's Like Most, Not Very Well

Apr. 21-27 will be marked throughout the country as National Library Week. What's the state of the nation's repositories of learning? The following excerpt from the April 1963 Federationist article, "The Need for Modern Libraries," provides some answers.

TAKE A GOOD LOOK at your public library. If it is typical of those in many communities, it was built more than 50 years ago. Because of population shifts, it is located in an inconvenient part of town. It needs again as many librarians as are presently on its staff. Its annual budget is less than half of what would be needed to maintain minimum standards of acceptable service. It needs about 20,000 more books.

With facilities constructed before World War I, it is trying to meet the needs of an expanded population and increased demands from the community for its services. Its shelf space and reading rooms are crowded, badly designed and poorly lighted.

If this is what your community public library is like, then you may be surprised to know that you have better library services than are available to a majority of your fellow Americans!

There are 18 million Americans who have no libraries available to them at all. This is approximately equal to the total population of the 22 smallest states. It means one of every 10 Americans is completely without library service.

But there are also another 110 million Americans who are served by libraries which do not meet even minimum standards of adequacy.

Library construction has come to a near halt since the end of the Andrew Carnegie grants which made it possible to build libraries in many communities. Fewer than 4 percent of the public libraries presently in use have been built within the last 20 years. Eighty-five percent were built before 1920. At present rates of construction, our library buildings would be replaced only once every 500 years.

The U.S. Office of Education estimates that approximately $80 million a year is needed between now and 1970 for library construction.

It takes more than a building and a collection of books to make a library. The books are of little use unless there are librarians who can guide readers to the books that contain what they want to know. There are now about 59,000 professional librarians employed in the United States. To provide even minimum library service, there is a need, according to the American Library Association, of more than 100,000 additional professional librarians.

Clearly, one of the reasons there is a shortage of librarians is the low salary which generally prevails. A professionally trained librarian must have a degree in library science. This involves a five-year college program, equivalent to a master's degree. Yet surveys of the U.S. Office of Education indicate that few communities offer librarians a starting salary as high as $5,000. Median starting salaries range from $4,428 in communities with a population between 35,000 and 50,000 to $4,675 a year in those cities over 500,000 which spend more than $500,000 a year on their library budgets.

SCHOOL LIBRARIES ARE, if anything, in a more serious plight than the community public libraries. Ten million pupils—one-fourth of those enrolled—attend public schools having no school library. And, among those schools which do have libraries, there is an average of only one librarian for every 1,700 pupils, as opposed to the standard of the American Library Association which recommends a ratio of one librarian to 300 pupils.

University and college libraries, which one might expect to be among the best in the nation, also are in a deplorable condition. There are several excellent university libraries, including that at Harvard which has approximately 7 million volumes. But these are the exceptions. More than half the colleges and universities in America fail to meet the modest standard of 50,000 volumes in their collections.

In recognition of the serious need for better library services, Pres. Kennedy has included in his education proposals provisions to improve the nation's libraries. During the first year, a total of $45 million would be made available to community libraries and additional grants of $40 million would be provided to university and college libraries for construction and the purchase of books.

The American Library Association estimates it costs an average of $3 per capita to provide adequate library service. To establish libraries where none exist probably would be even more expensive. But even at the $3 figure it would cost $54 million just to provide libraries for the Americans who do not have them. This is more than the total proposed in the Administration bill.

NLRB Backpay Order:

UAW Members Get $113,000 in Firings

Payment of more than $113,000 to 22 members of the Auto Workers, illegally fired by the United States Air Conditioning Corp. five years ago, has been ordered by the National Labor Relations Board.

Management of the Delaware, O., company not only laid the 22 off unfairly in 1958, the board said, but has failed to comply with an NLRB order and court enforcement decree to reinstate five of the 22 to their former or substantially equivalent positions.

Instead, the three-man panel said, the company declined to reinstate a worker who asked for two weeks' notice time for his successor employer; reinstated another at a job paying 40 cents an hour less than his former job, which was given to a worker with "many years less seniority;" and assigned a former stockroom assistant to work in a water-filled ditch without boots.

When the latter protested, Trial Examiner C. W. Whittemore related in an intermediate report, he was told to see company Pres. G. W. Way, "who ordered the employe out of his office."

The back pay order, approved by NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch and Members Boyd Leedom and Gerald A. Brown, directs the company to give $113,515 to 21 workers and the estate of Edward Heineman, who has since died; to pay $1,441 from the employe profit-sharing account to seven of the 21; and to put $12,519 into the same account for eight of them.

The dispute has been before the board since July 19, 1960, when the company was found to have committed an unfair practice in firing the 22 UAW members. The employer was directed to offer "immediate and full reinstatement" to the 21 living employes and make them whole for loss of pay.

A year later the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals entered an order enforcing the back pay and reinstatement provisions of the board's ruling, and hearings then were held to set the amount of backpay due.

The company argued that only 7 of the 22 were entitled to back pay and that the remaining 15 could not be reinstated because employment was not available for them. The examiner found, and the board agreed, that jobs were available for all 22 during their backpay periods.

NEGOTIATORS for the Machinists paused for a picture with federal mediators after reaching tentative agreement in Washington on a new contract covering 40,000 employes of the Boeing Co. Left to right are: Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service; Mediation Commissioner Albin L. Peterson; IAM Rep. E. A. Springer of Seattle, Wash., and IAM Vice Pres. Jesse C. McGlon.

1,500 Win First Pacts In New York Hospitals

New York—Three new contracts covering 1,500 non-professional employes in the New York area have been negotiated by Drug & Hospital Local 1199 of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union.

The biggest new agreement covers 500 workers in a union shop contract at the Home for the Aged & Infirm Hebrews, described as "the largest and oldest voluntary institution for the aging in America."

It provides a 21-cent hourly wage increase over a 27-month period, a 37½-hour week and a provision for arbitration of all disputes.

Another agreement negotiated by the local marks a sharp change in labor-management relations at New York Medical College's Flower & Fifth Ave. Hospitals—sites of bitter strikes for recognition in 1959 and 1962.

The hospital management not only recognized the union and reached agreement on a three-year contract, but also declared its conviction that "unions in hospitals . . . contribute to improved operation and service."

Dr. Ralph E. Snyder, dean of the college and president of the medical center, added:

"The principle of unionism is an established part of our society and the acceptance of this principle by hospitals cannot be further denied in good conscience."

The agreement provides a first year 10-cent hourly raise for all workers, plus fringe benefits including medical care and life insurance.

All unresolved disputes, including renewal, will be submitted to a permanent arbitrator.

Recognition of the union as bargaining representative of the 225 employes followed a membership card check conducted by State Supreme Court Judge Abraham J. Gellinoff.

A few days earlier, in another major breakthrough, Local 1199 won recognition as representative of non-professional employes at the Long Island Jewish Hospital in a five-year contract.

The agreement, which contains an annual wage reopener and an arbitration procedure, raises the minimum rate 15 cents an hour and provides a general first-year increase of 10 cents—half payable as of Apr. 1 and the remainder effective July 1.

Hospital Pres. Jack S. Liebowitz said the wage increases will result in "a greatly increased operating deficit for the hospital."

Apprentice Panel Named In Bias Fight

Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz has named representatives of labor, management, minority groups and the general public to a 15-member Advisory Committee on Equal Opportunity in Apprenticeship and Training. Under-Sec. of Labor John F. Henning will serve as chairman.

Labor members are Joseph Corcoran, education director of the Plumbers & Pipe Fitters; Sec.-Treas. A. J. Rohan of the Pressmen; Al Burch, assistant research and education director of the Operating Engineers, and Machinists Grand Lodge Rep. Alec Bauer.

Management representatives are Ford Motor Co. Vice Pres. Charles Patterson; Joseph Eichler, California contractor, and Executive Dir. William Dunn of the Associated General Contractors.

Committee members from minority groups are the Rev. Walter Janer of New York; Emanuel Muravchik, director of the Jewish Labor Committee; Chester Lewis, board member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; Dean John Welch of Tuskegee Institute, and Mrs. Dolores Huerta, a member of the California legislature.

Public appointees are Mayor Stanford Brookshire of Charlotte, N. C., and Mrs. Agnes E. Meyer of Washington, D. C.

Kennedy To Speak at IAM Jubilee

Pres. Kennedy will be one of the main speakers at the 75th anniversary banquet of the Machinists, IAM Pres. Albert J. Hayes has announced.

The anniversary celebration will be held in Washington on May 5, the date in 1888 on which 19 machinists huddled out of sight in a locomotive pit in the Atlanta, Ga., roundhouse of the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad—now part of the Southern—and organized what was to grow into one of the country's largest unions.

Other speakers will include AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany; Pres. Claude Jodoin of the Canadian Labor Congress, and Sec. of Labor W. Willard Wirtz.

The Washington dinner will be one of 340 separate observances of the union's diamond anniversary.

As part of the celebration, the IAM has published a 96-page digest-style family magazine, Your Union Today, which contains articles and pictures about the union and its history and aspirations.

"As union members," Hayes writes in an article in the booklet, "we dedicate our efforts to the welfare and well-being of the people, the family people, the working people of the United States and Canada."

Copies of Your Union Today are available at 35 cents each from the IAM at 909 Machinists Building, Washington 6, D. C.

Strike Action Taken by URW In Tire Plants

Akron, O.—Rubber workers at Goodyear, Goodrich and Firestone plants around the nation have voted overwhelmingly to grant strike authorization to union negotiators engaged in contract talks at Columbus, Cleveland and Dayton, O.

Contracts for some 50,000 employes of the three big firms are due to expire at midnight Apr. 20 unless extended.

The union has asked management to include an "economic productivity sharing" plan, sabbatical leaves, and an automation study committee in new pacts, along with improvements in wages and supplemental unemployment insurance benefits.

Contract negotiations also are being held in Cleveland for 3,500 employes of General Tire. The URW expects to open negotiations early next month for 24,000 employes of the United States Rubber Co.

IAM Units Balloting On New Boeing Pact

(Continued from Page 1)

Lodge 2061 at Cape Canaveral, Fla., voted against ratification, 171-55.

In the Philadelphia area, Auto Workers employed at Boeing's Vertol Div. walked out for 16 hours, then returned to the bargaining table at the request of Dir. William E. Simkin of the Federal Mediation & Conciliation Service. Some 4,200 Vertol workers are represented by the UAW.

The Boeing negotiations were the last in a series that grew out of a decision by the IAM and the UAW to make improved job and income security their major goals in 1962-63 contract negotiations with the aerospace industry.

The proposed settlement includes these improvements:

- Wage increases of 11-14 cents retroactive to Sept. 16, 1962, plus additional increases of 5.5 cents to 9 cents in September 1963 and again a year later.
- Allotment of an additional 4 cents an hour for correction of inequities, consolidation and upgrading of jobs, and other changes to bring the Boeing wage structure closer to the rest of the industry, as the union phrased it.
- A job evaluation plan to be worked out by a joint committee in the next six months, with an estimated $3.2 million in additional wage hikes to be put into effect after the plan has been approved.
- A new cost-of-living clause calling for annual adjustments up to 3 cents an hour when living costs rise.

The new pact does not contain the union shop that IAM members voted for in a previous referendum by a margin of 73.8 percent, but the present maintenance of membership contract clause was retained.

In addition, it was agreed that all employes newly hired, recalled or transferred into the bargaining unit who do not join the IAM must write to the union and management saying they do not wish to join, and failing that, must become members by the 60th day.

The tentative settlement also provides that pension benefits be increased to $2.25 per month for each year of service, with minimum pensions of $50 monthly; that Boeing add $1.88 per month per employe to the health and welfare plan toward increased costs; and that the union will have a voice in setting travel and relocation pay for workers traveling to Boeing plants and missile bases on company business.

A key issue was a company performance analysis plan. Under the old agreement, one group of workers was ineligible for recall in cases of layoff. The new terms eliminate this exemption, and workers downgraded or subject to layoff in the future will be eligible for rehiring based on seniority and group rating.

In the long struggle for better aerospace contracts, union members at most major plants set several strike deadlines but postponed them at the request of Pres. Kennedy, Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz or the federal mediators when negotiations stalled.

Last January, when all companies except Boeing had agreed to accept settlements recommended by presidential emergency panels, a Kennedy-appointed board urged Boeing to "show a sense of responsibility comparable" to that shown by the union.

NLRB Kills Bias Charge Against Local

Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman of the National Labor Relations Board has found no merit in a charge by 18 employes of the Atlantic Steel Co. that Steelworkers Local 2401 failed to give fair representation to Negro workers at the plant.

The union had in fact used its bargaining strength to eliminate disparities, he said.

Rothman denied an appeal from the refusal of the NLRB regional director in Atlanta, Ga., to issue a complaint based on charges that Local 2401 acquiesced in disparate wage rates for white and Negro workers, and agreed to a seniority system which confined Negroes to unskilled jobs.

The complainants alleged that Negro lift truck operators received lower pay than whites. The evidence showed that all operators except one were at the same wage level, and that one, who was in a higher classification because of a special safety factor, was a Negro.

Also rejected was a charge that a contract change secured by the union did not eliminate prior discrimination. Rothman found that the facts did not warrant the conclusion that the union was responsible.

On the contrary, a number of Negroes had availed themselves of new job opportunities under a rule change secured by the union, he said.

Sea Officers Win Pay Hike in Brazil

London—Officers of the Brazilian Merchant Navy who went on strike last winter over wage "favoritism" allegedly shown other seamen by government authorities have, according to the Intl. Transportworkers Federation received substantial wage boosts in an agreement that followed a return to work.

Time to Buckle Down

THE FIRST SESSION of the 88th Congress returns to work next week after its Easter recess with the tempo expected to pick up sharply after initial organization and committee hearings.

In a flurry of activity before the recess the Senate beat back a series of crippling amendments and passed by a 50-to-34 vote the Administration's youth opportunities bill. A few days earlier it had adopted an Administration-backed bill to preserve wilderness areas, also defeating attempts to limit the scope of the measure.

The budget-slashing conservative coalition suffered a stinging defeat when the House voted 228 to 184 for $450 million in funds previously authorized for the public works program. This was the first important test of the coalition's attempt to scuttle the Administration's budget proposals.

The pre-recess votes hold out promise for the next few months but the power of the coalition is a major factor on the Hill. There are indications that both the youth opportunities and wilderness measures will have difficulties in House committees and that the House Appropriations Committee, despite its defeat on public works on the House floor, is ready to slash other key spending measures.

The visits with congressmen and senators during the Easter recess must be followed up with a continuing flow of letters and communications supporting the programs that will create jobs and meet the critical social welfare needs of the nation.

Hospital Costs

IN AN ARTICLE marking the 10th anniversary of the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare this month, attention is focused on the "unusual increase in the cost of medical care."

The overall Consumer Price Index, the article by HEW leaders notes, rose from 93.2 to about 106 during the past decade. During this same period, the index for medical care increased from 83.9 to 115.

The analysis of the medical care index reveals that physicians' fees were consistent with the overall increase, and prescriptions and drugs declined somewhat, but the hospital daily service charge component rose from 74.8 in 1953 to 131 in 1963. In dollars this means that hospital care now averages more than $35 a day.

This "dramatic increase" in the cost of medical care is fundamental to the problem of providing hospital care for the aged under the social security system. The high cost of providing medical care, and especially hospital care, for the elderly can only be met by building up the needed funds under an insurance system during the productive working years.

Forty Years After

FORTY YEARS AGO as the nation was emerging from the trials and strife of World War I the Amalgamated Clothing Workers under the leadership of the late Sidney Hillman established the Amalgamated Bank of New York.

Hillman expressed the philosophy of labor banking as "the desire of labor to participate more fully in the economic life of the community and the nation, to accept responsibilities, and to receive whatever benefits may come from accepting those responsibilities. . . ."

In its 40-year history, the Amalgamated Bank, one of the few that survived the flurry of labor banks in the 1920s, has fulfilled the role Hillman laid down for it. It is an efficiently-run, soundly-based, growing institution contributing to the establishment and maintenance of social consciousness in business affairs.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, April 20, 1963 No. 16

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

'It's Been a Tough Winter'

Federationist Asks:

How Is Your Library Doing? If It's Like Most, Not Very Well

Apr. 21-27 will be marked throughout the country as National Library Week. What's the state of the nation's repositories of learning? The following excerpt from the April 1963 Federationist article, "The Need for Modern Libraries," provides some answers.

TAKE A GOOD LOOK at your public library. If it is typical of those in many communities, it was built more than 50 years ago. Because of population shifts, it is located in an inconvenient part of town. It needs again as many librarians as are presently on its staff. Its annual budget is less than half of what would be needed to maintain minimum standards of acceptable service. It needs about 20,000 more books.

With facilities constructed before World War I, it is trying to meet the needs of an expanded population and increased demands from the community for its services. Its shelf space and reading rooms are crowded, badly designed and poorly lighted.

If this is what your community public library is like, then you may be surprised to know that you have better library services than are available to a majority of your fellow Americans!

There are 18 million Americans who have no libraries available to them at all. This is approximately equal to the total population of the 22 smallest states. It means one of every 10 Americans is completely without library service.

But there are also another 110 million Americans who are served by libraries which do not meet even minimum standards of adequacy.

Library construction has come to a near halt since the end of the Andrew Carnegie grants which made it possible to build libraries in many communities. Fewer than 4 percent of the public libraries presently in use have been built within the last 20 years. Eighty-five percent were built before 1920. At present rates of construction, our library buildings would be replaced only once every 500 years.

The U.S. Office of Education estimates that approximately $80 million a year is needed between now and 1970 for library construction.

It takes more than a building and a collection of books to make a library. The books are of little use unless there are librarians who can guide readers to the books that contain what they want to know. There are now about 59,000 professional librarians employed in the United States. To provide even minimum library service, there is a need, according to the American Library Association, of more than 100,000 additional professional librarians.

Clearly, one of the reasons there is a shortage of librarians is the low salary which generally prevails. A professionally trained librarian must have a degree in library science. This involves a five-year college program, equivalent to a master's degree. Yet surveys of the U.S. Office of Education indicate that few communities offer librarians a starting salary as high as $5,000. Median starting salaries range from $4,428 in communities with a population between 35,000 and 50,000 to $4,675 a year in those cities over 500,000 which spend more than $500,000 a year on their library budgets.

SCHOOL LIBRARIES ARE, if anything, in a more serious plight than the community public libraries. Ten million pupils—one-fourth of those enrolled—attend public schools having no school library. And, among those schools which do have libraries, there is an average of only one librarian for every 1,700 pupils, as opposed to the standard of the American Library Association which recommends a ratio of one librarian to 300 pupils.

University and college libraries, which one might expect to be among the best in the nation, also are in a deplorable condition. There are several excellent university libraries, including that at Harvard which has approximately 7 million volumes. But these are the exceptions. More than half the colleges and universities in America fail to meet the modest standard of 50,000 volumes in their collections.

In recognition of the serious need for better library services, Pres. Kennedy has included in his education proposals provisions to improve the nation's libraries. During the first year, a total of $45 million would be made available to community libraries and additional grants of $40 million would be provided to university and college libraries for construction and the purchase of books.

The American Library Association estimates it costs an average of $3 per capita to provide adequate library service. To establish libraries where none exist probably would be even more expensive. But even at the $3 figure it would cost $54 million just to provide libraries for the Americans who do not have them. This is more than the total proposed in the Administration bill.

Morgan Says:

Radical Right—Temporarily—Takes Over Wyoming Politics

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., EST.)

OUT IN WYOMING where the deer and the antelope play, the John Birch Society is becoming more and more at home on the range. In fact the political machinery of this supposedly sovereign state has been captured for all intents and purposes, temporarily at least, by the radical right and the bubbling Birchers are boasting that this triumph is only the beginning. Their reported strategy is to concentrate on the smaller states—Wyoming's total population is less than 350,000—and expand their power from there.

Morgan

They are not, of course, about to take over the republic. In fact, there are some indications they may already have overplayed their hand in Wyoming—with the bankroll for their infiltration efforts allegedly coming in part from disgruntled wealthy Texans and other out-of-state sources. However, they could wreak a certain amount of havoc among moderates of both parties in states where they managed to get a foothold. Obviously one of their prime targets in Wyoming is Sen. Gale McGee, a member of the Democrats' successful Senate class of 1958 who is up for reelection next year.

Under right-wing radical auspices this is what the Wyoming legislature has just done in solemn session:

- Called for the creation of a so-called "court of the union" consisting of the chief justices of the 50 states which would, in effect, supplant the U.S. Supreme Court.
- Memorialized Congress to repeal the arms control act under which the Disarmament Agency was established.
- Memorialized Congress to get the United States out of the United Nations and the United Nations out of the United States.
- Called for the abolition of foreign aid.
- Passed a so-called "right-to-work" law which, of course, does not give anybody the right to work but does, in effect, punish organized labor.
- Reapportioned the senate to increase the imbalance of rural representation—moving precisely in the opposite direction from one national trend started by last year's Supreme Court decision in protection of urban voters.

Two years ago, about the time the right-wing drive started, the legislature went on record for repeal of the federal income tax.

The emasculation of the powers of the Supreme Court is a favorite ploy of the radical right and some other legislatures, including South Carolina's, have similarly resolved. There have been other attempts by state legislative action to attack "federal" power and, in a kind of Balkanization process, increase "states' rights."

Some emotional efforts have been made too to hoist the isolationist flag of nationalism. For instance, the Texas Senate tentatively approved a bill to prohibit the flying of the United Nations flag on any state building. But no legislature so far has gone so whole-hog.

It seems obvious that money talks out where the buffalo and the political mavericks roam. According to information reaching McGee's office, more than a dozen Wyoming radio stations—roughly half of the total number of commercial stations in the state—are paid from $700 to $1,000 a month each to broadcast taped programs of such right-wing spokesmen as Dan Smoot, ex-Gen. Edwin Walker and an Oklahoma evangelist named Hargis.

THE BIRCHERS et al not only succeeded in influencing the Wyoming legislature. They have, with reportedly some success, gone after control of local school boards, parent-teacher associations and civic groups. They have been shrill in their denunication of proposals for fluoridation of city water supplies—one of the best known public health methods to cut down tooth decay in children—and they have also effectively opposed mental health clinics, on the wonderful brainwashing pretext that such operations are the basis of brainwashing.

That traditional rural haven for extreme conservatism, the Farm Bureau, is said to act as a kind of clearing house in Wyoming for the right-wing political drive. The bureau claims a membership of 9,000 families. It distributes, among other things, handsome leather-bound copies of tracts of an extremist outfit called Americans for Constitutional Action.

Things have gone to such ridiculous extremes that McGee has been denied permission—temporarily at least—to speak in the auditorium of the University of Wyoming, where for 12 years he taught history and political science. Ostensible reason: he is a "politically controversial" figure. One leading educator had his job threatened after he did permit the senator to speak on his campus.

The radical conservatives in the country at large have had a fatal tendency in the past to overreach themselves in their sad and absurd frustrations, but this is not an automatic guarantee that they will bury themselves on the lone prairie.

Washington Reports:

Mrs. Neuberger, Kuchel Urge Federal Action on Air Pollution

FURTHER FEDERAL ACTION to control and restrict air pollution was urged by the Republican whip, Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.), and a leading Democrat, Sen. Maurine Neuberger (Ore.), in interviews on the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports to the People, now heard on almost 700 radio stations.

Pres. Kennedy, in his recent health messages, reporting on the program, said:

"Economic damage from air pollution amounts to as much as $11 billion every year in the United States. In some 6,000 communities, various amounts of smoke, smog, grime or fumes have reduced property values and endangered life itself."

Mrs. Neuberger pointed out that air pollution causes agricultural losses as well. She cited the instance of fumes from aluminum plants on the bank of the Columbia River in Oregon—"a stone's throw from the state of Washington. Suppose Washington had air pollution control and Oregon didn't? You could see what would happen to the vast orchards, apple, cherry and pear, in the great Yakima Valley."

Kuchel explained that he had first introduced legislation for federal participation in the problem of air pollution 10 years ago, and in 1955 backed the first federal bill that was approved by both houses.

"The federal government today by law," said Kuchel, "has a responsibility in connection with air pollution problems through the Dept. of Health, Education & Welfare. The surgeon general must hold regional meetings on the subject . . . and have finances necessary to enter into contracts with private institutions for research."

BOTH SENATORS asserted that action is now needed regarding fumes from automobile exhausts.

Kuchel declared that within the next several years "no new automobile may be sold in the state of California unless it has an attachment to reduce fumes to a set tolerance."

Mrs. Neuberger reported that the automobile industry has been cooperative in planning for fume reducing appliances.

"They are faced with the inevitable in California where the tremendous density of cars is more than 2 per population," she said.

Mrs. Neuberger's bill would include enforcement provisions, while Kuchel's would leave implementation to the states and municipalities.

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

THE KERR-MILLS ACT, which the American Medical Association says provides a fine program of health protection for retired people, has been in effect in South Carolina for a while, and the operations of the program have been analyzed by the state's senior senator, Olin D. Johnston.

The state has about 150,000 people 65 years of age or older, and "two-thirds of them are indigent"—that is, they have less than $2,000 a year in income if married and less than $1,200 if living alone. "Others are merely poor," remarks Johnston.

How many of the state's aged retired people—indigent or merely poor—get help under the AMA-touted provisions of the Kerr-Mills Act when they are sick and need hospital care? As of last December, "only 587" of them, Johnston reported.

Under the Kerr-Mills program, "an aged person with life insurance worth $1,500 gets no help."

"A person with savings of $600 gets no help."

A person can make himself eligible by cashing in his insurance and spending all his savings to provide his own health care for a short period. But "how long will it be before he is knocking on the door for every type of welfare relief?" asked the senator. Once he has pauperized himself, he will have scarcely any other choice.

Along the line to achieving the exalted state of pauperdom, thus making himself eligible for Kerr-Mills assistance in meeting the heavy costs of sickness during old age, the citizen also had the privilege of being investigated "practically [as in] a police state, where bank accounts are checked, deposit boxes opened, life insurance examined, possibilities of employment looked into," Johnston commented.

* * *

JOHNSTON THEN TURNED his attention to the alternative Anderson-King bill, which he supports, and which would provide insurance protection earned by employe-employer social security contributions "over the 40 or so years of a working lifetime" and covering hospital and nursing-home expenses "during the fewer years of old age."

The Anderson-King program has been "maligned, attacked, distorted and misrepresented" as no other major domestic proposal of recent years, Johnston charged.

The distortions include a claim that it "would dictate to the patient what doctor he could use." They include a claim that its cost "would double social security taxes." These things are "not true," the senator said.

On the contrary, the Kerr-Mills program is the one that interferes with so-called free choice of physician. Its supporters "should admit that recipients cannot go to their own doctor but have to go to a clinic to get care," Johnston said.

"They should admit that no care at all is provided for a sick person at home, and that not over 40 days a year of hospital care or 90 days of nursing-home care is provided."

* * *

THERE ARE SOME PEOPLE "so shortsighted as to place our free enterprise system in jeopardy by refusing to meet the challenge of the time with sensible legislation," Johnston continued.

The Anderson-King bill "encourages people to build up their savings and pensions and attempt to work a little after retirement if they can," he observed.

Then when the older man or woman gets sick, he would "automatically be qualified" for hospital benefits "as with any insurance plan . . . even if he had some resources" saved up across the years.

"Working and saving is what our system depends upon," and the Anderson-King bill "works well with this system," said the senator. It pays the heavy hospital bills of elderly retired people "without making welfare cases out of them." It "asks people to contribute, to pay toward and to earn their benefits." And they get the benefits without having to endure humiliating investigative techniques; "the only examination a [person] will have to meet is the medical one when he enters the hospital."

The senator's report to his constituents made the issues clear.

AIR POLLUTION which threatens property, crops and health, and even causes death, must be the subject of new legislation in Congress this year, especially in regard to automobile fumes, Sen. Maurine Neuberger (R-Ore.), left, and Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel (D-Calif.) asserted in interviews on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

House Vote on Public Works Funds

Here is the rollcall vote by which the House restored $450 million for job-creating public works projects in areas of heaviest unemployment. The vote was 228-184. Democrats voted 208-33 to appropriate the funds; Republicans voted 151-20 against.

On labor's scoreboard, a vote for the motion was a right vote (R), while a vote against was a wrong vote (W). Other symbols: A—absent; PR—paired right; PW—paired wrong; NV—not voting. Numerals denote districts; AL—at large.

ALABAMA
AL Andrews (D) R
AL Elliott (D) R
AL Grant (D) A
AL Huddleston (D) R
AL Jones (D) R
AL Rains (D) R
AL Roberts (D) R
AL Selden (D) R

ALASKA
AL Rivers (D) R

ARIZONA
1. Rhodes (R) W
2. Udall (D) W
3. Senner (D) R

ARKANSAS
1. Gathings (D) R
2. Mills (D) R
3. Trimble (D) R
4. Harris (D) R

CALIFORNIA
1. Clausen (R) W
2. Johnson (D) R
3. Moss (D) R
4. Leggett (D) R
5. Shelley (D) R
6. Mailliard (R) PW
7. Cohelan (D) R
8. Miller (D) R
9. Edwards (D) R
10. Gubser (R) W
11. Younger (R) W
12. Talcott (R) W
13. Teague (R) W
14. Baldwin (R) W
15. McFall (D) R
16. Sisk (D) R
18. Hagen (D) R
33. Sheppard (D) R
34. Hanna (D) R
35. Utt (R) W
36. Wilson, Bob (R) W
37. Van Deerlin (D) R
38. Martin (R) W

Los Angeles County
17. King (D) R
19. Holifield (D) R
20. Smith (R) W
21. Hawkins (D) R
22. Corman (D) R
23. Vacancy
24. Lipscomb (R) W
25. Cameron (D) R
26. Roosevelt (D) R
27. Burkhalter (D) R
28. Bell (R) W
29. Brown, Jr. (D) R
30. Roybal (D) R
31. Wilson, Charles (D) R
32. Hosmer (R) W

COLORADO
1. Rogers (D) R
2. Brotzman (R) W
3. Chenoweth (R) W
4. Aspinall (D) R

CONNECTICUT
AL Grabowski (D) R
1. Daddario (D) A
2. St. Onge (D) R
3. Giaimo (D) R
4. Sibal (R) W
5. Monagan (D) R

DELAWARE
AL McDowell (D) R

FLORIDA
1. Sikes (D) PW
2. Bennett (D) W
3. Pepper (D) R
4. Fascell (D) R
5. Herlong (D) W
6. Rogers (D) R
7. Haley (D) W
8. Matthews (D) R
9. Fuqua (D) PW
10. Gibbons (D) W
11. Gurney (R) W
12. Cramer (R) W

GEORGIA
1. Hagan (D) R
2. Pilcher (D) R
3. Forrester (D) R
4. Flynt (D) R
5. Weltner (D) R
6. Vinson (D) R
7. Davis (D) R
8. Tuten (D) R
9. Landrum (D) R
10. Stephens (D) R

HAWAII
AL Gill (D) R
AL Matsunaga (D) R

IDAHO
1. White (D) R
2. Harding (D) R

ILLINOIS
12. McClory (R) W
14. Hoffman (R) W
15. Reid (R) W
16. Anderson (R) W
17. Arends (R) W
18. Michel (R) W
19. McLoskey (R) W
20. Findley (R) W
21. Gray (D) R
22. Springer (R) W
23. Shipley (D) R
24. Price (D) R

Chicago-Cook County
1. Dawson (D) R
2. O'Hara (D) R
3. Murphy (D) R
4. Derwinski (R) W
5. Kluczynski (D) R
6. O'Brien (D) R
7. Libonati (D) R
8. Rostenkowski (D) R
9. Finnegan (D) R
10. Collier (R) W
11. Pucinski (D) R
13. Rumsfeld (R) W

INDIANA
1. Madden (D) R
2. Halleck (R) W
3. Brademas (D) PR
4. Adair (R) W
5. Roush (D) R
6. Roudebush (R) W
7. Bray (R) PR
8. Denton (D) R
9. Wilson (R) W
10. Harvey (R) W
11. Bruce (R) W

IOWA
1. Schwengel (R) W
2. Bromwell (R) W
3. Gross (R) W
4. Kyl (R) W
5. Smith (D) R
6. Hoeven (R) W
7. Jensen (R) W

KANSAS
1. Dole (R) W
2. Avery (R) W
3. Ellsworth (R) W
4. Shriver (R) W
5. Skubitz (R) W

KENTUCKY
1. Stubblefield (D) R
2. Natcher (D) R
3. Snyder (R) W
4. Chelf (D) R
5. Siler (R) R
6. Watts (D) R
7. Perkins (D) R

LOUISIANA
1. Hebert (D) PW
2. Boggs (D) R
3. Willis (D) R
4. Waggonner (D) W
5. Passman (D) W
6. Morrison (D) R
7. Thompson (D) R
8. Long (D) R

MAINE
1. Tupper (R) R
2. McIntire (R) W

MARYLAND
AL Sickles (D) R
1. Morton (R) W
2. Long (D) R
3. Garmatz (D) R
4. Fallon (D) R
5. Lankford (D) R
6. Mathias (R) R
7. Friedel (D) R

MASSACHUSETTS
1. Conte (R) W
2. Boland (D) R
3. Philbin (D) R
4. Donohue (D) R
5. Morse (R) R
6. Bates (R) W
7. MacDonald (D) R
8. O'Neill (D) R
9. McCormack (D) (Speaker) NV
10. Martin (R) W
11. Burke (D) R
12. Keith (R) W

MICHIGAN
AL Staebler (D) R
2. Meader (R) W
3. Johansen (R) W
4. Hutchinson (R) W
5. Ford (R) W
6. Chamberlain (R) W
7. O'Hara (D) R
8. Harvey (R) W
9. Griffin (R) W
10. Cederberg (R) W
11. Knox (R) R
12. Bennett (R) R
18. Broomfield (R) W

Metropolitan Detroit
1. Nedzi (D) R
13. Diggs (D) R
14. Ryan (D) R
15. Dingell (D) R
16. Lesinski (D) A
17. Griffiths (D) R

MINNESOTA
1. Quie (R) W
2. Nelsen (R) W
3. MacGregor (R) W
4. Karth (D) R
5. Fraser (D) R
6. Olson (D) R
7. Langen (R) W
8. Blatnik (D) R

MISSISSIPPI
1. Abernethy (D) W
2. Whitten (D) W
3. Williams (D) W
4. Winstead (D) W
5. Colmer (D) W

MISSOURI
1. Karsten (D) R
2. Curtis (R) W
3. Sullivan (D) R
4. Randall (D) R
5. Bolling (D) R
6. Hull (D) W
7. Hall (R) W
8. Ichord (D) R
9. Cannon (D) W
10. Jones (D) A

MONTANA
1. Olsen (D) R
2. Battin (R) W

NEBRASKA
1. Beermann (R) W
2. Cunningham (R) W
3. Martin (R) W

NEVADA
AL Baring (D) R

NEW HAMPSHIRE
1. Wyman (R) W
2. Cleveland (R) W

NEW JERSEY
1. Cahill (R) R
2. Glenn (R) R
3. Auchincloss (R) W
4. Thompson (D) R
5. Frelinghuysen (R) W
6. Dwyer (R) W
7. Widnall (R) W
8. Joelson (D) R
9. Osmers (R) W
10. Rodino (D) R
11. Minish (D) R
12. Wallhauser (R) W
13. Gallagher (D) A
14. Daniels (D) R
15. Patten (D) R

NEW MEXICO
AL Montoya (D) R
AL Morris (D) R

NEW YORK
1. Pike (D) R
2. Grover (R) W
3. Derounian (R) W
4. Wydler (R) W
5. Becker (R) W
25. Barry (R) W
26. Reid (R) W
27. St. George (R) W
28. Wharton (R) R
29. O'Brien (D) R
30. King (R) W
31. Kilburn (R) PW
32. Pirnie (R) W
33. Robison (R) W
34. Riehlman (R) W
35. Stratton (D) R
36. Horton (R) W
37. Ostertag (R) W
38. Goodell (R) W
39. Pillion (R) W
40. Miller (R) W
41. Dulski (D) R

New York City
6. Halpern (R) W
7. Addabbo (D) R
8. Rosenthal (D) R
9. Delaney (D) R
10. Celler (D) R
11. Keogh (D) R
12. Kelly (D) R
13. Multer (D) R
14. Rooney (D) R
15. Carey (D) R
16. Murphy (D) R
17. Lindsay (R) W
18. Powell (D) A
19. Farbstein (D) PR
20. Ryan (D) R
21. Healey (D) A
22. Gilbert (D) R
23. Buckley (D) R
24. Fino (R) A

NORTH CAROLINA
1. Bonner (D) R
2. Fountain (D) R
3. Henderson (D) R
4. Cooley (D) R
5. Scott (D) R
6. Kornegay (D) R
7. Lennon (D) W
8. Jonas (R) W
9. Broyhill (R) W
10. Whitener (D) A
11. Taylor (D) R

NORTH DAKOTA
1. Nygaard (R) W
2. Short (R) W

OHIO
AL Taft (R) W
1. Rich (R) W
2. Clancy (R) W
3. Schenck (R) W
4. McCulloch (R) W
5. Latta (R) W
6. Harsha (R) W
7. Brown (R) W
8. Betts (R) W
9. Ashley (D) R
10. Abele (R) W
11. Bolton, Oliver (R) W
12. Devine (R) W
13. Mosher (R) W
14. Ayres (R) W
15. Secrest (D) R
16. Bow (R) W
17. Ashbrook (R) W
18. Hays (D) R
19. Kirwan (D) R
20. Feighan (D) R
21. Vanik (D) R
22. Bolton, Frances (R) W
23. Minshall (R) W

OKLAHOMA
1. Belcher (R) W
2. Edmondson (D) R
3. Albert (D) R
4. Steed (D) R
5. Jarman (D) W
6. Wickersham (D) R

OREGON
1. Norblad (R) W
2. Ullman (D) R
3. Green (D) R
4. Duncan (D) R

PENNSYLVANIA
6. Rhodes (D) R
7. Milliken (R) W
8. Curtin (R) R
9. Dague (R) W
10. McDade (R) R
11. Flood (D) R
12. Whalley (R) R
13. Schweiker (R) R
14. Moorhead (D) R
15. Walter (D) PR
16. Kunkel (R) W
17. Schneebeli (R) W
18. Corbett (R) PR
19. Goodling (R) W
20. Holland (D) R
21. Dent (D) R
22. Saylor (R) R
23. Gavin (R) R
24. Weaver (R) R
25. Clark (D) R
26. Morgan (D) R
27. Fulton (R) R

Philadelphia
1. Barrett (D) R
2. Nix (D) R
3. Byrne (D) R
4. Toll (D) R
5. Green (D) R

RHODE ISLAND
1. St. Germain (D) R
2. Fogarty (D) R

SOUTH CAROLINA
1. Rivers (D) R
2. Watson (D) W
3. Dorn (D) W
4. Ashmore (D) W
5. Hemphill (D) R
6. McMillan (D) A

SOUTH DAKOTA
1. Reifel (R) W
2. Berry (R) W

TENNESSEE
1. Quillen (R) W
2. Baker (R) R
3. Brock (R) W
4. Evins (D) R
5. Fulton (D) R
6. Bass (D) R
7. Murray (D) W
8. Everett (D) R
9. Davis (D) R

TEXAS
AL Pool (D) W
1. Patman (D) R
2. Brooks (D) R
3. Beckworth (D) R
4. Roberts (D) R
5. Alger (R) W
6. Teague (D) R
7. Dowdy (D) R
8. Thomas (D) R
9. Thompson (D) R
10. Thornberry (D) R
11. Poage (D) R
12. Wright (D) R
13. Purcell (D) R
14. Young (D) R
15. Kilgore (D) W
16. Foreman (R) W
17. Burleson (D) W
18. Rogers (D) R
19. Mahon (D) W
20. Gonzalez (D) R
21. Fisher (D) W
22. Casey (D) W

UTAH
1. Burton (R) A
2. Lloyd (R) W

VERMONT
AL Stafford (R) W

VIRGINIA
1. Downing (D) W
2. Hardy (D) W
3. Gary (D) W
4. Abbitt (D) W
5. Tuck (D) W
6. Poff (R) W
7. Marsh (D) W
8. Smith (D) W
9. Jennings (D) R
10. Broyhill (R) W

WASHINGTON
1. Pelly (R) W
2. Westland (R) W
3. Hansen (D) R
4. May (R) W
5. Horan (R) W
6. Tollefson (R) W
7. Stinson (R) W

WEST VIRGINIA
1. Moore (R) R
2. Staggers (D) R
3. Slack (D) R
4. Hechler (D) R
5. Kee (D) R

WISCONSIN
1. Schadeberg (R) W
2. Kastenmeier (D) R
3. Thomson (R) W
4. Zablocki (D) R
5. Reuss (D) R
6. Van Pelt (R) W
7. Laird (R) W
8. Byrnes (R) W
9. Johnson (D) R
10. O'Konski (R) R

WYOMING
AL Harrison (R) W

'62 'Year of Failure':

Labor Urges Speed On 'Peaceful Atom'

The AFL-CIO has told the congressional Joint Committee on Atomic Energy that labor is disturbed by the Kennedy Administration's "failure to move forward" in development of atomic energy for peaceful uses.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller expressed AFL-CIO dissatisfaction in a letter to Sen. John O. Pastore (D-R.I.), chairman of the House-Senate committee which is conducting its annual review of developments in the atomic energy field.

Except for the congressional authorization last year for production of electric power from waste steam from the Hanford, Wash., plutonium reactor, "we regard 1962 as another year of failure," Biemiller declared.

Despite a study by the AEC which concluded that the development of nuclear electric power "should be vigorously pursued," Biemiller said, "the AFL-CIO still finds a lack of will, a lack of determination to follow through. . . . We want to see the Administration and the commission start working and fighting for programs to achieve these objectives."

Expressing concern that "civilian nuclear power development is being downgraded by the Administration," Biemiller noted that the President's science adviser, Dr. Jerome Wiesner, had told the committee of plans for "still another Administration energy study." Biemiller commented:

"The AFL-CIO does not oppose the idea of having still another study of the nation's energy resources, but we believe such a study is perfectly compatible with concomitant action on a program to accelerate development of civilian nuclear power."

He said the AFL-CIO still stands by recommendations it made last year, including:

- Creation of a Division of Peaceful Nuclear Development within the Atomic Energy Commission.
- Unified program development, backed by "adequate" resources, to achieve national goals for use of atomic energy.
- Stronger emphasis on "advanced reactor concepts" by the AEC.
- Establishment of "a large-scale demonstration reactor program to be undertaken completely by the Atomic Energy Commission."

Bay State Broadens Ban on Housing Bias

Boston—Massachusetts has strengthened its fair housing law by extending coverage to include a ban on discrimination in the sale or lease of all homes and apartments, except two-family dwellings occupied in part by the owner.

The previous law applied only to multiple dwellings or housing developments. The strengthening amendment was strongly supported by the State AFL-CIO.

Youth Opportunities Bill Rollcall Vote in Senate

The Senate passed the Administration and labor-supported Youth Opportunities bill by a 50-34 vote, after defeating a series of crippling amendments. Following is the rollcall on final passage:

FOR PASSAGE

DEMOCRATS 43

Anderson (N. M.)	Gruening (Alaska)	McNamara (Mich.)
Bartlett (Alaska)	Hart (Mich.)	Metcalf (Mont.)
Bayh (Ind.)	Hartke (Ind.)	Morse (Ore.)
Bible (Nev.)	Humphrey (Minn.)	Moss (Utah)
Brewster (Md.)	Inouye (Hawaii)	Muskie (Me.)
Burdick (N. D.)	Jackson (Wash.)	Nelson (Wis.)
Byrd (W. Va.)	Johnston (S. C.)	Neuberger (Ore.)
Cannon (Nev.)	Kefauver (Tenn.)	Pastore (R. I.)
Church (Ida.)	Kennedy (Mass.)	Pell (R. I.)
Clark (Pa.)	Long (La.)	Proxmire (Wis.)
Dodd (Conn.)	Magnuson (Wash.)	Randolph (W. Va.)
Douglas (Ill.)	McCarthy (Minn.)	Ribicoff (Conn.)
Engle (Calif.)	McGee (Wyo.)	Symington (Mo.)
Gore (Tenn.)	McGovern (S. D.)	Williams (N. J.)
		Yarborough (Tex.)

REPUBLICANS 7

Case (N. J.)	Javits (N. Y.)	Kuchel (Calif.)
Cooper (Ky.)	Keating (N. Y.)	Smith (Me.)
Fong (Hawaii)

AGAINST PASSAGE

REPUBLICANS 20

Aiken (Vt.)	Dominick (Colo.)	Mundt (S. D.)
Beall (Md.)	Goldwater (Ariz.)	Pearson (Kans.)
Boggs (Del.)	Hickenlooper (Ia.)	Prouty (Vt.)
Carlson (Kans.)	Hruska (Neb.)	Saltonstall (Mass.)
Cotton (N. H.)	Jordan (Ida.)	Tower (Tex.)
Curtis (Neb.)	Mechem (N. M.)	Williams (Del.)
Dirksen (Ill.)	Miller (Ia.)

DEMOCRATS 14

Byrd (Va.)	Jordan (N. C.)	Russell (Ga.)
Eastland (Miss.)	Lausche (O.)	Stennis (Miss.)
Ervin (N. C.)	McClellan (Ark.)	Talmadge (Ga.)
Fulbright (Ark.)	Monroney (Okla.)	Thurmond (S. C.)
Hill (Ala.)	Robertson (Va.)

Paired for passage: Hayden (D-Ariz.) Long (D-Mo.), Mansfield (D-Mont.), McIntyre (D-N. H.), Scott (R-Pa.), Smathers (D-Fla.), Young (D-O.).

Paired against passage: Allott (R-Colo.), Bennett (R-Utah), Ellender (D-La.), Holland (D-Fla.), Simpson (R-Wyo.), Sparkman (D-Ala.), Young (R-N. D.)

AMALGAMATED BANK of New York, established 40 years ago by the Clothing Workers, was "rededicated" to continued social progress as AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler cut the symbolic ribbon. Left to right: Mrs. Bessie Hillman, widow of the late ACWA Pres. Sidney Hillman; Richard Gottlieb, whose mother had the bank's first account; ACWA Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky; Pres. Joseph Curran of the Maritime Union; Schnitzler; Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Maxwell Brandwen, managing director of the bank; Mrs. Della Gottlieb, the first depositor, and ACWA Vice Pres. Louis Hollander.

Potofsky Rededicates Bank on Anniversary

New York—Leaders of labor and high public officials helped "rededicate" the Amalgamated Bank of New York to "continued pioneering in the field of social progress" as New York's only labor bank marked its 40th anniversary.

At ribbon-cutting ceremonies Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky of the Clothing Workers noted that in four decades the union's bank had grown from a small establishment to a highly-regarded financial institution with resources of over $115 million.

The bank has rolled up an impressive list of "firsts"—low-interest "character" loans to working people; financial backing for low-rent housing projects; professional investment counsel for union accounts; and a determination to maintain the lowest interest rates on personal loans in New York.

In the past decade, its volume of consumer loans has risen to more than $10 million.

Potofsky and Maxwell Brandwen, the bank's long-time managing director, ascribe its success to a prudent investment policy and a determination to build business by serving the needs of working people.

Recognition of the bank's service to unions and their members, as well as to the general public, was voiced in tributes from Mayor Robert Wagner (D) and Gov. Nelson Rockefeller (R).

The AFL-CIO was represented at the bank's rededication by Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler. Pres. George Meany, in a message, said the ACWA should be "congratulated on the success of this unique achievement."

Also present for the ceremony were Pres. Joseph Curran of the National Maritime Union; Pres. James B. Carey of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers; Pres. Harry Van Arsdale, Jr., of the New York City AFL-CIO Council; city and state officials.

The bank was created by the ACWA at the urging of the late Sidney Hillman, first president of the union, who believed labor should "participate more fully in the economic life of the community."

Credit Union Assets Rise by 13.3 Percent

Assets of credit unions chartered by the federal government increased 13.3 percent during 1962 to a total of $3.43 billion, Dir. J. Dean Gannon of the Bureau of Federal Credit Unions announced.

The number of such credit unions rose by 3.5 percent, or 361, to a year-end total of 10,632, while members' shares or savings went up 13 percent to more than $3 billion and averaged $431 per member at the end of the year, Gannon said.

Loans to members increased 14.1 percent to $2.56 billion, with dividends paid rising 6.1 percent to $108.7 million.

Kerr-Mills Inadequate, House Told

(Continued from Page 1)

cipient ranged from $14.18 in Kentucky to $410.45 in Illinois, with an average of $215.62.

Another top HEW official took sharp issue with an AMA report which asserted that three-fifths of the over-65 population has hospital insurance and said there is "every evidence" that the remainder will soon be given "ample opportunity to obtain such coverage."

HEW Under-Sec. Ivan A. Nestingen retorted that "the simple fact is only about 10 or 15 percent of the health costs of older people are reimbursed by insurance." Furthermore, he said, most of the older people who need protection most—"those with the lowest incomes and those most likely to be ill"—do not have it. Only one-third of the aged with incomes under $2,000 or over age 75 are insured.

Nestingen labeled "completely false" the AMA claim that 93 percent of the elderly live in states that have Kerr-Mills programs. The actual figure, he said, is 57.8 percent and "barely one out of a hundred of the aged in these states" receives any benefits.

Hospital Progress, official journal of the Catholic Hospital Association of the United States, in a comprehensive report on Kerr-Mills, says that a survey of states with medical assistance for the aged laws shows "many changes and revisions are being made in an attempt to make the law work-

There is general agreement, says the magazine, that "the use of the law is limited" and more effective legislation is being sought.

The AMA has strongly supported the Kerr-Mills approach in its bitter opposition to programs for hospital care for the aged through the social security system.

The AFL-CIO has strongly supported the social security approach noting the inadequacies of Kerr-Mills in handling the problem of medical care for the elderly.

Ban on Wage-Lowering Asked in Equal Pay Bill

(Continued from Page 1)

paid fields and highly skilled occupations, "women have the short end of the stick." she added:

"I believe that the right to receive equal pay should be placed on our statute books along with other measures designed to free workers from want and injustice. Our democratic principles call for this action."

- A spokesman for the American Civil Liberties Union, Sonia Pressman, said the bill would be "a move in the right direction of equalizing women's rights." She stated:

"If an employer pays some of his employes less money for equal work because they belong to a union, he knows that he does so in violation of the laws of the United States. If an employer pays some of his employes less money because they are women, let him likewise know that he does so in violation of the law."

- James B. Carey, testifying both as secretary-treasurer of the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept. and president of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers, told the committee that most women work because of "necessity." He warned that "the age of automation could bring with it a low-wage economy geared to the rising female labor supply" unless federal legislation prohibits discriminatory wage practices.

- Sec.-Treas. J. Howard Hicks of the Office Employes cited a recent study by the National Office Management Association of 1,900 companies which disclosed a "widespread policy" of wage discrimination. One-third of the firms surveyed "reported a double-standard pay scale for male and female office employes," he said.

Schnitzler urged the subcommittee to strengthen the Administration bill by expanding coverage as well as spelling out protection against wage cuts.

The bill, he said, should be "made into a more fully effective instrument for eliminating pay discrimination on account of sex."

Congress, Schnitzler said, has "a responsibility to make sure that the high-sounding principle of equal pay is not turned into a hollow slogan" through weaknesses and exclusions in the bill.

Woodworkers Form Furniture Council

Toronto, Ont.—The Woodworkers have organized a new Furniture Council to link all locals in the industry in Eastern Canada, to plan for further organizing and to coordinate contract objectives. E. H. Griffith of Owen Sound, Ont., Local 20499 was elected chairman.

Douglas Sets Hearings:

Congress to Probe Rise in Steel Prices

The nation's steel industry has put into effect selective price increases ranging from $4 to $7 per ton on flat-rolled steel products —items currently in heavy demand.

The initial price increase move was touched off by Wheeling Steel Co. on Apr. 9. Two days later Pres. Kennedy issued a statement asking the steel industry to hold the price line on across-the-board increases but noting that there might be a necessity for "selective" price adjustments.

Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.) chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, announced that the committee would open hearings next week on steel prices, profits, production, unit labor costs, raw material costs and the effects of foreign competition.

Douglas said the committee's intention is to lay a groundwork of fact and detail on which all parties could agree so "that opinions, results and recommendations would so far as possible reflect an informed view of the problem."

He added that in view of the selective price increases he hoped the hearings could have a salutory effect in helping to inform Congress and the public of the actual facts concerning the price hikes.

Typical of the raises put into effect were those by the industry's leader, U.S. Steel, which announced boasts averaging $4.85 per ton on products representing 29 percent of its production. The company increased hot-rolled steel and strip prices by $4 a ton, cold-rolled sheet and strip prices $5 a ton and galvanized sheet steel $7 a ton.

General Pattern Set

Other companies fell into this general pattern, give or take $1 or so. The flat-rolled products are used in automobile and other manufactured products.

A year ago U.S. Steel and other major companies put into effect across-the-board increases after signing an agreement with the Steelworkers. Kennedy strongly opposed the rise and denounced it in strong terms, influencing the industry to rescind it three days later.

At that time Inland Steel Corp., Armco Steel and Kaiser Steel Corp. held out against the price hike. This past week they went along with the industry generally. Inland Steel, a key to the 1962 rollback, said that the increases "are well justified by market conditions and satisfactory profit margins."

The White House has not commented on the price increases since the President's statement of last week asking the companies to hold the price line on a general across-the-board hike.

BRAZILIAN TRADE UNIONISTS, participants in the training program of the American Institute for Free Labor Development, were addressed by AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany at a session held in the AFL-CIO headquarters building.

Experts Tell Co-op Story To Brazilians

Top experts on cooperatives and credit unions have shown 32 Brazilian trade union leaders how cooperative principles can help workers and their families.

The weeklong program was organized and sponsored by the Social Projects Dept. of the American Institute for Free Labor Development.

The course, a combination of lectures and discussion sessions, was designed to familiarize the students with cooperative principles and methods of implementing them. The guest lecturers were experts in their fields.

Fernando Chavez, chief of the cooperative department in the Organization of American States, discussed how the cooperative movement can benefit union members and their families.

Robert Bonham, regional cooperative adviser for the Agency for Intl. Development, discussed the relationship between United States government objectives and the development of cooperatives in Latin America.

Roger Wilcox, president of the Foundation for Cooperative Housing, Inc., talked about housing cooperatives and unions.

Dwight Townsend of the Cooperative League of the U.S.A. discussed methods of setting up housing cooperatives.

Carlos Matos, director of the international department of the CUNA Mutual Insurance Society, discussed credit union organization and administration.

Borrowing for Schools Seen at 'Danger Point'

Most communities throughout the United States are at the "danger point in terms of borrowing for their schools," an AFL-CIO spokesman revealed.

In a radio interview over the Mutual Broadcasting System, Jack Sessions of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education said a recent survey shows that "the states that most need federal aid are usually the states that are committing the greatest part of their incomes now to education."

The survey, based on figures supplied from government and private educational agencies, pinpoints the discrepancies of educational opportunity throughout the country.

"Because of the discrepancies in the per capita incomes of the states," Sessions continued, "some states are spending three times as much per pupil on their education as other states."

Southern and midwestern states, because of their low incomes, devote more of their state budgets to education than other areas of the country, the survey shows.

Using New York State's ranking educational expenditures as a guide, Sessions said it "would take an additional $8 billion a year" to place the other states on the same level. Salaries for teachers in New York are the highest in the country, averaging nearly $7,000, Sessions continued, due "in large part because New York City teachers have organized and won collective bargaining rights."

The answer to the educational needs of the country is twofold, the former member of Cornell University's faculty said—more effort by the states coupled with a "comprehensive" program of federal aid to education.

Citing present limited federal aid programs, Sessions called for a "more general" program in which states can meet the real needs in their school systems. Such a program, he continued, would get congressional approval if the public "will put some pressure behind it."

Questioned about a recent magazine article in which Commissioner of Education A. F. W. Ford of Arkansas maintained that the tendency toward equalized income reduces the need for federal aid, Sessions answered, "I don't think we can base our educational policy on tendencies . . . and Arkansas is a perfect example of this." Not only is Arkansas one of the bottom states in terms of income, he noted, but "its schools are in most regards far below the schools throughout the nation" and its teachers the "poorest paid" in the nation.

Joseph Gambatese, associate editor of Nation's Business, and G. K. Hodenfield, education writer for Associated Press, questioned Sessions.

4-20-63

Non-Farm Job Rise Gaining Momemtum

(Continued from Page 1)

ing jobs, after making adjustments for seasonal changes, were up by 132,000 since January but still were 159,000 below last June's level of 16.9 million.

Asked if non-farm employment had been lifted from the plateau on which it had been stalled since mid-1962, Goldstein replied:

"We have to be very careful not to let our hopes affect our thinking."

One government expert called the attention of reporters to the fact that non-farm jobs had shown gains last year through July and then leveled off the remainder of the year. He said it would not be surprising if this were repeated.

"There is just not enough spunk in the economy," he added.

Half the increases registered in the manufacturing sector were tied to the metal-producing and metal-using industries.

It was indicated that some of this job gain may be attributed to increased steel production caused by buyers hedging against then anticipated price increases or a possible strike this summer.

Workweek Up

The March job report also noted the factory workweek had edged up to 40.1 hours, virtually unchanged from November but a little lower than year-ago levels. Overtime hours were at 2.6 hours in March, the same as a year ago.

Average hourly earnings were $2.44 in March, up a penny from February.

Weekly earnings were up 64 cents to $97.84. Both totals were about 2 percent higher than a year ago.

AFL-CIO Staffer James Drury Dies

San Francisco — James Drury, AFL-CIO field representative in Reg. XXII, died Apr. 14 in Kaiser Hospital, Oakland, of cancer. He was 57, and lived in suburban San Bruno.

A native of Chicago, he was a member of the National Maritime Union and had been an NMU organizer and port agent in Mobile, Ala.; Baltimore and San Francisco prior to joining the staff of the former CIO in 1948. He assisted in the servicing of many unions and was active in political education and community affairs.

Funeral services were held in the Chapel of the Highlands, Millbrae, with burial in Colma. Surviving are his widow and three children.

NLRB Again Censures Largest Textile Chain

Burlington Industries, Inc., again has been cited by a National Labor Relations Board examiner for unlawful interference with a union organizing campaign and has been directed, subject to final board approval, to reinstate a union adherent fired after testifying in a previous unfair labor practice hearing.

Trial Examiner Charles A. Ricci upheld charges by the Textile Workers Union of America that Burlington supervisors at the Vinton Weaving Co. plant in Vinton, Va., suddenly had fired Charles Wright last year after six years of satisfactory service. Ricci recommended that he be recalled to work and be compensated for lost pay, plus interest at 6 percent.

The charge against Burlington, the nation's largest textile firm, was the third in a series growing out of a TWUA organizing campaign in 1962 at the Vinton plant.

The labor board set aside an election TWUA lost, 184-226, and another examiner found the firm had fired other employes for union activity and recommended they be ordered reinstated.

Last year the TWUA charged that Burlington has had until recently an "almost unbroken record" of breaking unions and avoiding contract relations with them.

In a recent case the NLRB ordered the company to give severance pay to workers stranded in Rossville, Ga., after TWUA won an election and the firm closed the plant.

18 More Members Get 25-Year Buttons

New York—Quarter-century buttons have been given by the Tile & Marble Setters Helpers Local 35 to 18 more members to bring the total so honored to 120.

The gold button program was started in 1945. The union also gives special recognition to 50-year members.

Specialty Worker Editor Dies

Nashville, Tenn.—Arthur C. Evans, editor of the Pressmen's publication, the Specialty Worker, died suddenly while attending the Southern Conference of Printing Specialties & Paper Products Unions here. He was 52, and lived at Pressmen's Home, Tenn.

A member of the union for 33 years, he was born in Sioux City, Ia., and worked on the Sioux City Journal for 30 years before becoming assistant editor of the Specialty Worker in 1958. He was named editor in 1961.

Surviving are his widow, three sons, two daughters, his mother, three brothers and two sisters.

Union Labor Life's Assets Up 3 Percent

Baltimore—Assets of the Union Labor Life Insurance Co. increased 3 percent in 1962 to $43.4 million, Pres. Edmund Tobin reported at the annual meeting.

Total insurance in force rose to $1.23 billion and claims payments to living policyholders reached a new high of $49.7 million, he said. The company is now licensed in 30 states and the District of Columbia.

Added to the board of directors at the annual meeting were Presidents Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers and William J. Hall of the Photo Engravers. Pres. E. C. Hallbeck of the Postal Clerks was named to the executive committee.

Speaking at the meeting, AFL-CIO Sec.-Treas. William F. Schnitzler, a member of the board, cited the recent deaths of three union members who left their families without adequate funds because the only protection they had was their group insurance.

"Personal life insurance is the fundamental means for protection," he said. "We won the fight for a living wage and a saving wage and it is necessary that all group insurance programs should merely supplement the personal insurance of trade union members."

AFL-CIO News

Issued weekly at 815 Sixteenth St., N. W Washington 6, D. C. $2 a year

Second Class Postage Paid at Washington, D. C.

Vol. VIII | Saturday, April 27, 1963 | No. 17

House Votes Kennedy Bill On Aid to Medical Schools

AFL-CIO PRES. GEORGE MEANY and Jay Lovestone, the federation Dept. of International Affairs publications director, discuss labor objectives and interests in an impromptu conference with students in Los Angeles. The students were brought together by the Coro Foundation, a private organization backed by labor, management and university sources, which makes it possible for young people to spend several weeks at a time as interns working with union officials, businessmen and teachers.

Wirtz Asks Newspaper Peace Talk

By John M. Barry

Union and management leaders in the newspaper industry, who frequently differ sharply, are in generally favorable agreement on a proposal by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz that they get together in an effort "to remobilize" one of the oldest traditions of collective bargaining in the country.

Wirtz, addressing the American Society of Newspaper Editors at its annual meeting in Washington, called for a sort of "summit" meeting of the presidents of international newspaper unions and "representative publishers of comparable stature."

Such a group could lay the groundwork for the future" and discuss problems of the type that led to the long newspaper shutdowns recently in New York and Cleveland, he said.

He observed that the subject of automation in the newspaper industry, as one example, "cries out today for constructive, cooperative consideration."

Elmer Brown, president of the Intl. Typographical Union, commented that the ITU is "in accord with any top-level meeting" of the kind proposed by Wirtz and that his only suggestion in a recent discussion with the secretary was that it should involve the "policy-making people" from both sides, not "office boys or labor relations managers."

Executive Vice Pres. William J. Farson of the Newspaper Guild said the ANG "is ready and willing to participate in any conference or council that will smooth the path to more effective bargaining."

Pres. Anthony J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen described Wirtz's proposal as "an excellent idea," adding that any such meeting "is not time wasted if it's with the top people." Automation, DeAndrade said, is one of the topics that should be discussed "both as to its introduction and as to its effects."

In New York, Bertram A. Powers, head of the ITU's "Big 6" local whose dispute with the city's major dailies led to the 114-day strike and lockout, had earlier advocated establishment of a joint labor-management board to consider problems confronting the city's newspapers and their workers, including the introduction of automation.

On the management side, F. M. Flynn, publisher of the New York Daily News — one of the struck newspapers—also had suggested a top-level conference of management and union leaders in the industry.

Wide support for the parallel proposals of Wirtz and Flynn was expressed among the 1,500 publishers and newspaper executives arriving in New York for the annual

(Continued on Page 2)

AMA Loses On Student Loan Issue

By David L. Perlman

House Democrats rallied behind the Administration and passed a $205 million aid to medical education bill, including a student loan provision which had been vigorously fought by the American Medical Association.

It was the first new Kennedy program to reach the House floor this year and the margin of House victory was the biggest the Administration has had on any controversial issue in the 88th Congress.

Final passage was by a one-sided 288-122. The key vote—on retaining low-cost long-term loans to medical and dental students—gave an impressive 239-171 victory for the President. On that roll call, Democrats voted 206-33 for the loans; Republicans 138-33 against.

Administration forces made one concession to pick up votes for the bill. They agreed to drop a provision "forgiving" up to half of the amount owed by a medical student who, after graduation, practiced in an area of "doctor shortages."

3-Year Program

As sent to the Senate, the bill authorizes a three-year program of matching grants for construction and expansion of medical, dental and other health profession schools. The student loan provision would allow students who would not otherwise be able to afford the heavy expense of a medical education to borrow up to $8,000 for a four-year course. Repayment would be over a 10-year period, beginning three years after graduation.

The AMA, which supported the construction funds, called on the House to defeat the loan provision of the bill.

The AMA operates its own program of loans to medical stu-

(Continued on Page 12)

Meany at Conference on Extremism:

Communists, Radical Right Denounced as Twin Evils

Los Angeles—AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany joined Gov. Edmund G. Brown and other California leaders in an attack on communism and ultra-right-wing organizations as dual enemies of democracy.

The men spoke at a unique two-day conference on extremism sponsored by the Los Angeles County Federation of Labor in cooperation with the AFL-CIO national Departments of Education and International Affairs.

The conference was designed to give an in-depth study of the dangers both to the labor movement and to democracy generally from communism and the ultra-right.

The participants agreed that communism is more of an external danger, while the ultra-right in this country presents the greater internal danger to the nation.

But, Meany said, this nation must be aware that it is the Communists here, though few in number, who are aiding the Communist governments of major world powers and hence represent the most serious threat to this country.

American democracy never can be fully secure at home nor can it defeat the totalitarian enemy from without as long as race discrimination, mass unemployment and poverty "plague millions of our citizens," Meany said.

Unions First Target

It is well known, he said, that dictators of the right—fascists, Nazis, and Falangists, and dictators of the so-called left—the Communists—always make the trade unions the first target for domination and destruction.

For this reason, he declared, "labor has a greater stake in the preservation and promotion of freedom than any other section of our national community.

"Without democratic institutions there can be no free trade unions: without free trade unions, democracy cannot last long," he continued.

Labor's role in the "struggle between democracy and despotism" is not new, he noted, pointing to an AFL convention resolution adopted in 1886 calling for national independence and democracy for the Cuban people.

Meany recounted labor's continuing fight against totalitarianism through the rise of Hitler, World War II and the postwar struggle to aid free trade unions in many nations of the world.

"American labor will continue to be in the forefront of the fight

(Continued on Page 5)

25-Cent Package Won In Rubber Settlements

Akron—The Rubber Workers have reached tentative agreement on new two-year contracts with three major tire companies in talks extended beyond the union's Apr. 20 strike deadline.

First breakthrough in this year's round of rubber industry negotiations came in a settlement at Columbus with the Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. on a wage and fringe benefit package the URW values at 24 to 25 cents an hour.

This was quickly followed by agreements with Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. and the B. F. Goodrich Co. Details of the two pacts, while comparable to those of the Firestone settlement, were withheld until they could be reduced to contract language.

A key provision of the Firestone agreement is establishment of a joint study committee of union and company representatives to discuss a variety of matters affecting the parties, including the URW's bargaining objectives and the problems posed by automation.

(Continued on Page 2)

Kennedy Stresses Need For Hospital Care Bill

Pres. Kennedy has reaffirmed the Administration's strong support for hospital care for the aged through social security and expressed his "strong conviction" that Congress should have an opportunity to vote on the program.

The President stressed the need for the legislation in accepting an award from the National Council of Senior Citizens at the White House at a ceremony at which he designated May as Senior Citizen Month.

He told a group of 175 representatives of senior citizen organizations and others working in the field of aging, "I think your support, your presence here, is a welcome reminder of this legislation, its necessity, and I hope from this meeting and from our work during the month of May that legislative results will come."

A hospital care for the aged bill has been introduced in the House and Senate and is awaiting hearings in the House Ways & Means Committee, which is currently engaged in executive sessions on a tax reduction measure. The com-

(Continued on Page 11)

Raises Won Up to $17 At Hospital

New York—A first-year wage increase of $8.75 to $17 a week, plus free meals and a 37.5-hour workweek, has been won by 400 employes of Doctors Hospital here in a first contract with Building Service Employes Local 144.

The three-year agreement provides additional increases of 10 cents an hour in the second and third years.

Other features of the agreement, Local 144 Pres. Peter Ottley said, include 9 paid holidays, including the worker's birthday; family hospitalization insurance; life insurance; overtime pay after 7.5 hours in a day, and a provision that all discharges are subject to arbitration.

The minimum wage over the contract period jumps from $1.15 to $1.60 an hour.

Local 144 won bargaining rights in an election early in January and Ottley said the agreement is the 141st negotiated by the union, covering 8,000 workers in New York hospitals and nursing homes.

High Court Upholds IBEW Charter Action

The U.S. Supreme Court has left in effect an appeals court decision that the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers had the power to revoke the charter of a local that had engaged in a strike without authorization of the IBEW president and to charter a new local in its place.

The court denied an appeal by former IBEW Local 28 of Baltimore from the decision of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals which had upheld the IBEW and reversed a lower court ruling ordering the local's charter restored. The international has chartered a new local in Baltimore, Local 24.

IBEW Pres. Gordon M. Freeman welcomed the high court's action. He commented that the international "had discharged its responsibilities in this case notwithstanding the legal difficulties created by the Landrum-Griffin Act and the psychology the act has engendered creating the mistaken belief that the international union's disciplinary powers had been completely disintegrated."

Ship Officers Join Automation Study

New York—The Masters, Mates & Pilots have asked all members to cooperate in a research study for use in evaluating proposals for shipboard automation.

First step in the study, Pres. Charles M. Crooks said, is for the 11,000 deck officers in the union to respond to a questionnaire covering their family status, education, their present maritime license and qualifications, past employment, and future job preferences.

The Maritime Cargo Transportation Conference of the National Academy of Sciences-National Research Council will cooperate with the union on the project. The conference said it will "examine the characteristics of the maritime work force, its utilization under current and proposed systems, and the relation between manpower and total systems costs."

Rear Adm. E. G. Fullinwider (Ret.), the conference executive director, said the study is "an effort to obtain information that will permit the government, and maritime labor and management, to approach the problems of automation in a constructive fashion."

STRESSING THE UNEMPLOYMENT that would result from drastic cuts in the budget, Pres. Kennedy drives home the point with a chart in his address to the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington. The chart is one of several the President used to defend and explain his economic policies.

Rubber Union Settles With 3 Major Firms

(Continued from Page 1)

A union spokesman said the study should enable the URW and Firestone management to arrive at future settlements "more easily."

Ratification Votes Set

The new two-year agreement is to be submitted for ratification to the 17,500 workers at Firestone plants in eight cities—Akron, Des Moines, Los Angeles, Memphis, Pottstown, Pa., New Castle and Noblesville, Ind., and Fall River, Mass.

URW Pres. George Burdon, who took part in the final phases of the bargaining, expressed satisfaction over the settlement, which he said would benefit Rubber Workers and the communities in which they live.

"This was uppermost in the minds of the committee members throughout the negotiations," Burdon said.

The agreement includes wage increases of 13 to 16 cents an hour over the two-year span, with a number of inequity adjustments accounting for variations among the eight plants. Initial boosts will become effective June 10.

The pact increases the amount and duration of supplemental unemployment benefits and adds a new provision for supplemental workmen's compensation benefits. Under the latter, the company will make added payments to an injured worker, beyond his state benefits, to assure him a total income of 80 percent of his average wage.

Other improvements include stronger provisions relating to outside contractors and to seniority rights, payment for grievance time, reductions in probationary periods, and a guarantee of reinstatement without loss of seniority for employes who enter the Peace Corps.

The union is continuing talks which started Apr. 8 with General Tire Co. Negotiations with U.S. Rubber, largest firm in the industry, are scheduled to open June 6.

Wirtz Proposal Backed For Newspaper Parley

(Continued from Page 1)

meeting of the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

ANPA Pres. Irwin Maier, publisher of the Milwaukee Journal, reported that Wirtz had accepted a telegraphed offer to meet with him to discuss new means of reaching labor-management agreements in the industry, but a date and place are still to be set.

'Alternative' Suggested

Maier suggested that one alternative to strikes might be a "no-strike, no-lockout agreement among publishers and union leaders, combined with a 'labor court' consisting of management, labor and a 'third force' representing the public."

In reply, however, Wirtz repeated his suggestion that labor and management "should themselves take the first steps toward exploring new approaches and procedures without government of public participation."

The interest of the publishers in automated equipment was evidenced by an afternoon-long, closed-door presentation in pictures and words of technological developments in the industry.

Thomas V. H. Vail, vice president of the Cleveland Plain Dealer, later predicted that "several big papers" would introduce computers in their operations within the next year. Computers already are in use on a few papers to set type, package and address bundles of papers, keep circulation and financial records and issue bills and receipts, even though they are in operation only a few hours a day.

Maier, addressing the first open session of the meeting, said that "certainly our employes have the right to humane consideration." He suggested that "few if any publishers would countenance the wholesale and abrupt dismissal of long-service employes because of the introduction of improved mechanical equipment."

He added, however, that the point had been reached where increased wage and fringe costs could be absorbed only if they are at least partially offset by more efficient production methods.

In his speech to the editors, Wirtz said he saw "clear signs" on both sides of the newspaper bargaining table "of the increasingly obvious axioms of automation."

These axioms, he said, are "that the improvement of production processes cannot be held back but must be pressed to the limit; that full consideration must be given the established job rights which the new processes affect adversely; and that the accommodation of the interests of operating efficiency and employe equity demands bilateral decision-making as part of any established collective bargaining relationship."

Kennedy Tells Editors:

1 Million Lost Jobs Price of Budget Cut

A $5 billion slash in the proposed federal budget "would cause 1 million fewer jobs by the end of the fiscal year," Pres. Kennedy has warned the nation's editors.

A cut of that scope would offset all benefits of the proposed tax cut, the President added in his address to the annual meeting of the American Society of Newspaper Editors in Washington. If that lower level of expenditures were maintained in the future, he emphasized, "it would eventually cause not only a recession, but an even greater budgetary loss which comes from a recession."

The President described the $5 billion budget cut proposal as one which "many have suggested," but without using names. It was understood he was replying to proposals of former Pres. Eisenhower and New York's Gov. Nelson Rockefeller, the possible GOP presidential candidate in 1964, who have called for budget cuts ranging up to $15 billion.

In a question-and-answer period after his prepared address, the President aimed his reply directly at Eisenhower. He said:

"I am strongly against the wholesale budget cuts of the kind that have been talked about, $5, $10 and $15 billion. I can think of nothing more ruinous to the security of this country and our economy, and I think that those who advocate it were in many cases architects of the fiscal and monetary policies which brought us into a recession in 1958, a $12.5 billion deficit in 1958, the largest outflow in the period of three years of gold and dollars amounting to nearly $12 billion, and a recession in 1960. We hope to do better."

The President's prepared address dealt with an explanation, and defense of his economic policies and tax cut proposal. The right way to achieve a balanced budget, he said, "is to seek first a balanced economy."

He stressed the need for tax reduction, adding again that "wholesale cuts" in the budget would have a "deflationary effect on the economy."

On current economic developments, the President said:

"I think we are fortunate not to have had a turndown this winter or spring, which would have meant that the program we recommended was inadequate."

Sullivan Appointed To Education Board

New York — Pres. David Sullivan of the Building Service Employes has been appointed to the New York City Board of Higher Education by Mayor Robert F. Wagner.

Sullivan succeeds Joseph Geist, who resigned, and will fill out a term that expires in 1968. The board, with 22 members, is the governing body for the city university system.

Unfair Labor Charges Filed at Record Rate

Unfair labor practice charges are being filed at a record-breaking rate with the National Labor Relations Board, but voluntary settlements in 79 percent of cases filed and backpay settlement agreements also are heading toward new records, Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman has reported.

Charges by unions, workers or employers that the labor law has been violated totaled 10,222 in the first nine months of fiscal 1963. That rate if continued will set a new record by June 30, an estimated 14,100 charges as against the all-time record of 13,479, made in fiscal 1962.

Rothman commended the NLRB regional staffs for their performance and cited these favoring factors despite the record high intake of new charges:

- Approximately four out of every five meritorious charges are settled by voluntary adjustments between the parties.
- Backpay restitution is running ahead of other years and seems likely to reach a new record of $2.5 million by June 30.
- Time required to process an unfair practice charge has been reduced by an average of more than three months—from a median of 143.5 days in calendar 1958 to 48 for the first three months of calendar 1963.
- Regional directors issue decisions in union representation cases in a median of 42 days from the filing of an election petition, compared to the 87 days required before the NLRB gave directors authority to proceed on their own in such cases.

Other details:

The unfair practice charges filed in nine months represented an increase of 4.2 percent over the 9,807 filed in the comparable period of fiscal 1962.

Complaints issued by the general counsel's office in the first nine months of fiscal 1963 totaled 1,150, compared with 1,470 in all of fiscal 1962 and 1,161 in fiscal 1961. Rothman estimated that 1,600 complaints will be issued in fiscal 1963.

With a steadily rising case load, voluntary settlements have increased since 1959 from about 48 percent of meritorious charges to the present 64 percent. Another 15 percent have been adjusted privately by the parties involved, subject to NLRB regional office approval.

Backpay settlements for the last nine months have exceeded $1.96 million, as against $1.75 million collected for employes during all of fiscal 1962. The totals have been rising steadily since 1958, when $761,000 was collected to reimburse workers for unfair practices.

Rothman pointed out that time required for formal NLRB hearings often "deeply hurts a person deprived of his legal right," but cautioned that a settlement that does not achieve a substantial remedy of illegal conduct is "a detriment rather than a benefit."

Shoe Union Vote Re-Elects Officials

Sec.-Treas. Angelo G. Georgian and five national directors of the United Shoe Workers have been reelected in a national referendum.

All the winners are incumbents and were chosen without opposition. More than 15,000 members cast ballots. The term of Pres. George Fecteau has another year to run.

In OCAW Ads:

Shell Oil Co. Hit on 'Refusal to Bargain'

Pasadena, Tex.—The Shell Oil Co. has "stubbornly refused" for more than 15 months to bargain with the Oil, Chemical & Atomic Workers on a new contract with 2,200 workers here, the union charged in advertisements scheduled to appear Apr. 24 in six key U.S. newspapers.

The OCAW pointed out that for seven months before the workers in OCAW Local 4-367 voted to strike, the union attempted to negotiate a contract and "even continued to work" after the contract had expired.

Since the strike began Aug. 19 last, the union said, it has continued to ask Shell to "sit down and talk with us" but "Shell has consistently refused to bargain."

"Shell has told us it proposes to operate this plant as it sees fit in its sole judgment . . . without consultation with the union" which has "successfully represented these employes" for more than 40 years, the OCAW asserted in ads prepared for the Washington Star, Chicago Daily News, St. Louis Post-Dispatch, Houston Post, Los Angeles Times and the San Francisco Chronicle.

Pointing out that Shell's parent firm is owned abroad and that the American subsidiary is the company's most profitable holding, the union said it does not "wish to raise a point against foreign invasion of American markets, believing as we do in free world trade," but does believe that Royal Dutch Shell "should engage in free collective bargaining, as provided by U.S. law," and concluded:

"We believe the public should think about this when buying gasoline and other petroleum products, and when evaluating American policy in dealing with foreign-owned enterprises."

The union ads related that the OCAW has not sought government intervention, has not sought abridgement of the free collective bargaining process in any way but has "simply sought to negotiate an agreement."

The Cyanamid strikers, on the picket line from Nov. 14 to Apr. 15, secured a new three-year contract with raises of 7 cents each year; the extension of recall rights after layoff from 18 months to 24 months; and agreement that labor and management shall request dismissal of contempt of court charges filed against seven pickets.

The Oil Workers and other unions won new contracts providing 5 percent wage increases at other Shell installations and those of the Socony-Mobil Oil Co. after strikes that lasted as long as eight months.

A common factor in each of the long-drawn-out struggles was a management drive to change contract language so as to give the companies unilateral control of working conditions, job assignments and premium pay.

The effect of such demands would have been to put marked emphasis on what the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, in a handbook stressing a drive for "management rights," called for—the right to shift workers from job to job, to cut the number of workers for economic reasons, and to remove significant protections from the area of arbitration.

The AFL-CIO Executive Council called attention last Nov. 18 to the drive and urged support of workers faced with the threat of heavy job cutbacks because of automation and economy layoffs.

Highly-automated refineries such as those in Pasadena can continue operating with the help of supervisors and strikebreakers, the OCAW and other unions have conceded.

OCAW Says Thanks For Strike Support

OCAW Pres. O. A. Knight has expressed thanks to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany for help given in recent strikes against the Mobil Oil Co. and the American Cyanamid Co. He asked union members who have turned in Mobil credit cards to reinstate them, and urged continued support of a strike against Shell at Pasadena, Tex.

The Cyanamid strike which saw 450 workers out from Nov. 15 to Apr. 15, secured raises of 7 cents each year for three years; a clause extending recall rights after layoff from 18 months to 24; and a joint agreement to request dismissal of contempt of court charges against 7 pickets.

UNITY ON THE PICKET LINE is demonstrated by members of the five unions whose 1,600 members have been on strike since Mar. 11 against Kingsport (Tenn.) Press, one of the biggest U.S. publishers of hard-bound books. The five unions and their representatives, using the slogan "We went out together, we'll go back together" are, from the left, Typographical Local 940, Electrotypers Local 175, Machinists Lodge 1694, Bookbinders Local 82, and Pressmen's Local 336.

Ordman New Counsel Of NLRB

Pres. Kennedy has appointed Arnold Ordman, a career attorney with the National Labor Relations Board, as the NLRB's next general counsel.

Ordman, 51, is currently chief legal aide to NLRB Chairman Frank W. McCulloch. He will succeed Stuart Rothman, an Eisenhower appointee whose four-year term expires May 13. The appointment is subject to Senate confirmation.

ARNOLD ORDMAN

Under the Taft-Hartley Act, the labor board's responsibility is divided, with the general counsel given direction of the NLRB's field staff and final authority to decide whether unfair labor practice complaints will be issued. The general counsel's office also represents the labor board in enforcement proceedings in federal courts. The board performs the judicial function of deciding the merits of complaints on the law and the facts.

Ordman has been on the NLRB staff since 1946 and served as a trial examiner from 1959 until he became McCulloch's legal adviser in 1961. He is a Democrat but has not been active in politics. The general counsel's salary is $20,000 a year, the same as NLRB members, although $500 less than the chairman.

A 1936 graduate of Harvard Law School, Ordman practiced law in Salem, Mass., and joined the NLRB staff after wartime service in the Navy.

Kingsport Strikers Call Areawide Rally

Kingsport, Tenn.—Members of five striking unions, on the picket line since Mar. 11 against the Kingsport Press here, have called a rally of all unions in East Tennessee to mobilize support in their struggle against the big publishing company's "take-it-or-leave-it" bargaining policy.

The rally, arranged by a committee representing the striking unions and others in the railroad, trucking and mining industries of Tennessee, has been called for Apr. 28 in the Johnson Memorial Stadium here.

Rally sponsors want to tell the story of the strike to everyone willing to listen. They have invited representatives of the national AFL-CIO, various international and local unions, and the Tennessee State AFL-CIO.

"We're striking against a company that practices Boulwarism," said a spokesman at the headquarters of the Allied Kingsport Press Unions. "We went out together and we'll go back together."

Union men use the term "Boulwarism" to describe a policy which a National Labor Relations Board examiner has found to be an unfair labor practice—making one "firm but fair" offer in bargaining, and refusing to change it in any substantial way. The technique is named after Lemuel R. Boulware, former General Electric Co. vice president whose "take-it-or-leave-it" policy was found to have been the unlawful cause of the 1960 strike of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers against GE.

The strikers say the company hasn't "budged" since it made an inadequate offer in negotiations Feb. 6. The Pressmen, Bookbinders, Machinists and Electrotypers walked out after several more weeks of trying vainly to get a more acceptable offer—and the Typographers joined them officially Apr. 10. Previously the printers had observed the picket lines and were represented at allied union meetings.

Pres. A. J. DeAndrade of the Pressmen has said the major issues include wages, vacations, workweek reduction on certain shifts, seniority and equipment manning. Management has offered wage boosts well below industry standards, he said.

Management has tried, without conspicuous success, to operate the plant with strikebreakers. Company products include the World Book, published by Field Enterprises, Chicago; the Book of Knowledge, and novels distributed to book dealers by Grosset & Dunlap. Before the strike the plant printed some 40 million books a year and had been dealing with employe unions for 40 years.

Poll Tax Ban Ratified by 2 More States

Florida and Iowa have ratified the proposed constitutional amendment banning poll taxes in federal elections, making 32 states which have done so.

Six more ratifications are needed in order to meet the constitutional requirement for three-fourths of the states to ratify an amendment.

Earlier this month, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany had urged state labor bodies in eight states where the amendment had not yet been ratified to make a "highest priority" effort to obtain ratification. Florida and Iowa were among the eight states.

Pres. Kennedy had wired governors of all states urging quick action on ratifications so that the poll tax ban can be effective in time for the 1964 elections. Five states — Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, Virginia and Texas—impose a poll tax as a voting requirement.

Ratification has been approved by one house of the legislature in Delaware, Missouri and Oklahoma.

Only one state — Mississippi — has rejected the proposed amendment, although the Arizona, South Dakota and Wyoming legislatures adjourned without acting on it. Florida and Tennessee are the only southern states which have approved the amendment, which was adopted by Congress last year.

Ohio COPE Leader Joins Staff of IUD

Columbus, O.—Mrs. Jane Adams, state director of the Women's Activities Division of the AFL-CIO Committee on Political Education, has resigned to become a field organizer for the AFL-CIO Industrial Union Dept.

NLRB Issues Ruling On Cold Type Process

A dispute between three unions on the Philadelphia Inquirer over use of a new "linofilm" machine has resulted in a split decision by the National Labor Relations Board awarding the work to employes who are represented by the Philadelphia Typographical Union.

The publisher installed new photocomposition equipment last year and decided that typographers should operate it. The Newspaper Guild filed a claim that the work, which includes darkroom development of film and sensitized paper, should be done by photographers. The Photo Engravers also claimed jurisdiction.

NLRB Chairman William M. McCulloch and member John H. Fanning agreed with the employer that the printers should do the work, for these reasons: photocomposition is a substitute for the "hot metal" process in which the printers operate a linotype machine; typographers would be displaced from jobs if they lost jurisdiction whereas the other unions would gain jobs. Member Philip Ray Rodgers voted to uphold the publisher, but for different reasons.

Member Boyd Leedom dissented, saying the majority decision is a venture into new territory without precedent in jurisdictional cases and opposing award of new work requiring new skills to employes who formerly did work requiring different skills. Member Gerald A. Brown agreed with Leedom's conclusions but cited other reasons.

In another dispute over jurisdiction, four board members ruled against the ITU and in favor of pressmen represented by Pressmen's Local 6 at the Bejal Printing Co., St. Louis. McCulloch did not participate.

AT A WARSAW GHETTO MEMORIAL RALLY in New York, more than 1,500 persons paid tribute to the Jews who rose against the Nazis in wartime 1943 and were slaughtered. Speakers included survivors of the massacre plus Executive Dir. Benjamin Tabachinsky of the Jewish Labor Committee, sponsor of the rally; Sen. Jacob K. Javits (R-N. Y.); Boris Shishkin, director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Civil Rights; James Farmer, director of the Congress of Racial Equality; and representatives of free world governments and trade union movements.

Liberty Key to Labor Progress, Meany Tells World's Workers

"The first requisite of labor's progress is labor's liberty," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said in a message to workers abroad who annually celebrate their "labor day" on the first of May.

The significance of May Day "has never been more apparent than in this era of global struggle between freedom and communism," he continued in a message prepared for broadcast to workers in other lands through the Voice of America radio network.

Acknowledging that May Day "traditionally has great significance for workers in most parts of the world," Meany pointed out that each time "we restate labor's goals, the more obvious it becomes that their fulfillment is possible only in a free, democratic society."

"Perhaps that is why the forces of totalitarianism, communist and fascist alike, have consistently sought to pervert May Day to their own ends," the federation president declared.

The totalitarians "make it an occasion for a parade of military might, rather than human betterment. They have tried—and are still trying—to draw attention from the concept of progress through independent collective action by offering in its place the concept of a 'pie in the sky' society in which the omnipotent state will bestow material blessing upon the needy," he said.

The most pressing need of workers in most of the world, Meany observed, is for "the necessities of life—food, clothing and shelter."

"Communism's first false promise is to provide those necessities, quickly and easily. That is the basis on which the Communists seek the support of the downtrodden.

"But the promise is indeed false, and the price is exorbitant," he declared.

"No dictatorship, communist or any other kind, dares to unleash the genius of its people for the improvement of their own lot," he warned.

"The whole purpose of a totalitarian state is to preserve and strengthen the regime; nothing else matters. A tyrant must have guns; bread and meat can wait, and the wait never ends."

Drawing a contrast between workers behind the Iron Curtain and the free workers of the West, Meany pointed out that in the communist satellites "shabbiness and despair give testimony to communism's failure."

Fidel Castro's regime in Cuba "has been an even greater disaster than the brutal dictatorship it replaced," he said.

The price exacted of workers, when communism "does not even fulfill its basic promise," is "silence," Meany said.

"Silence in the face of injustice; silence in the face of oppression; silence when the needs of the workers cry for action."

"Can anyone imagine a silent labor movement?" Meany asked in his broadcast message.

"But this is the Communist formula: A labor movement that cannot be independent of government policy; that cannot bargain collectively; that cannot strike."

'A Silent Citizenry'

"And there is a silent citizenry, too," he continued. "Vote for one slate of candidates—or be silent. Agree with the edicts of the state—or be silent."

"I do not claim that there are no shortcomings in free societies, including that of the United States," the federation president told the world's workers. "But in these free societies, through free and independent trade unions, workers can pursue the constant quest for a better life.

"Unhampered by rigid ideological concepts, unfettered by the tyranny of an all-powerful ruler, they can shape their nations in whatever way is best fitted to their circumstances.

"Thus it is evident, now as always, that the first requisite is labor's liberty. In that spirit I offer the May Day greeting of the AFL-CIO to workers everywhere."

'Portable' Pension Plan Considered in Ontario

Toronto, Ont.—A "portable" pension plan providing minimum benefits at the rate of $2 per month per year of work has been introduced in the provincial legislature by the government of Premier John P. Robarts.

The proposal has the general approval of organized labor, with criticism of some specific details. It came six months after the Ontario Federation of Labor had presented a brief outlining a pension plan to a legislative committee.

It provides benefits of $80 a month after 40 years of service and $70 a month after 35. It would apply to maximum wages of $4,800 annually to employes of all Ontario firms with 15 or more employes.

Payment into a trust fund would start at age 30 for each worker, so the minimum $80 pension would become due at age 70. The cost could be split between employer and employe, or the employer could pay all.

The plan would become effective under the proposal on Jan. 1, 1965. The weekly cost for a worker aged 30 to 45 and earning $4,800 a year would be $1.39; for an employe aged 45 to 55 it would be $1.84; and for one over 55 years it would be $2.75.

Money would be paid into the trust fund by the employe and could not be withdrawn; employer payments would be vested in the employe after 10 years of service.

The plan would be administered by an Ontario Pensions Commission. OFL Sec.-Treas. D. F. Hamilton said his main concern was about who would control the vested funds. He strongly advocated a public corporation rather than a private one.

Organized labor's criticism covered the basic $2 per month, which it feels is too low; the pensionable age, which it feels should be 65 rather than 70; the exclusion of workers in firms with fewer than 15 employes, and the requirement of the waiting period for full vesting.

AFL-CIO Asks Fund Hike:

New Concepts Urged In Vocation Training

The AFL-CIO has strongly endorsed legislation to expand and modernize vocational education, but has warned that the new program would have only an "inconsequential impact" unless Congress provides more money than the Administration has requested.

Legislative Dir. Andrew J. Biemiller told a House Labor subcommittee that the proposed $73 million ceiling on vocational training grants—of which only $16 million would be "new money"—is "completely inadequate."

Biemiller urged Congress to authorize a first-year appropriation of at least $150 million to launch the new vocational program, with the amount rising annually until it reaches $400 million in the fifth year—the figure recommended to Pres. Kennedy by an advisory board of consultants. The panel included AFL-CIO Vice Pres. Peter T. Schoemann, chairman of the federation's Standing Committee on Education.

"No one can seriously believe that for an additional amount of $16 million, vocational education throughout the United States can be expected to train substantially more people in more fields for more occupations, to construct modern and well-equipped area schools, to train more teachers and to build an effective guidance and counseling program," Biemiller declared.

He warned that "either Congress makes available enough money . . . or the proposed legislation will be just a piece of paper which will have an inconsequential impact on our classrooms and will train relatively few of our unemployed youths and adults."

Changes Seen Few

Biemiller, accompanied by AFL-CIO Education Dir. Lawrence Rogin and Assistant Dir. Otto Pragan, declared that existing federal vocational education programs have "changed very little in the first half of this century."

He noted that one half the students in federally-aided vocational classes are taking home economics, another one-fourth are learning agricultural occupations, and less than one-fourth are training for work in industry or business.

Only nine states had federally-aided programs to train office machine repairmen, only 11 states train electric appliance repairmen, and only six states train heating and air conditioning mechanics, Biemiller noted. Federal funds presently cannot be used at all for training in office occupations, he pointed out. He added:

"We do not have enough teachers who are adequately acquainted with new materials, new production techniques and new job requirements. Poor vocational guidance and counseling often fail to direct our young people to occupations for which they are best equipped and for which jobs are in demand."

The problem, Biemiller said, "is not merely the lack of funds itself but what it has done to vocational educators. The starvation of vocational education has affected the imagination of the people who are responsible for administering, planning and teaching vocational education programs."

Training for Need

The AFL-CIO, Biemiller said, supports the "flexible structure of vocational training" proposed by the Administration. Under it, he said, vocational training "would be built around people and their occupational needs in today's labor markets. Vocational education would be more available to high school students, high school graduates and dropouts, youths and adults at work or unemployed who need training or retraining . . . and slow learners who cannot successfully follow regular vocational education programs."

Biemiller urged the subcommittee to improve the Administration bill by clearly providing for advisory councils representing employers, labor, agriculture, education and the public at national, state and local levels.

He warned that the labor market cannot absorb all of the untrained people who are available only for unskilled jobs but more workers will be needed in jobs requiring training and education. "Our vocational education system must match the people who need jobs to the jobs which seek people," he emphasized.

8,300 Macy Employes Win Raise, Hours Cut

New York—Major gains have been won by more than 8,300 members of the Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union in five Macy's stores here in a new two-year contract ratified by the workers.

RWDSU Local 1-S Pres. Sam Kovenetsky headed a 24-man negotiating committee which won general wage increases of $5 a week in two steps; a reduction in hours effective next Feb. 1, and other benefits.

He listed these improvements:

- A work week of 37.5 hours at no loss in pay for a period excluding Oct. 15-Jan. 15 of each year, when the 40-hour week prevails.
- Additional wage boosts up to $17.50 a week over the term of the contract for 3,000 workers in a wage structure based on job groupings.
- Employer-paid health plan benefits for workers who have retired since March 1953, and pension benefit increases up to a level of $96.25 a month instead of the present maximum of $55, excluding social security benefits.

The existing union health plan was expanded to include hospital benefits covering infants, psychiatric care, full allowances for private rooms, and repeated hospitalization for the same ailment.

With job security improvements added to a contract considered among the best in the industry, employes with 15 years of service may draw their regular salaries for a year during reductions in force, and those with 5 to 15 years of service may draw 120 days' pay.

Other improvements were secured for major appliance salesmen, commission sales people, and "Saturday only" workers.

London Bus Drivers Ask Cut in Hours

London—A claim for a sizable wage increase and the 40-hour workweek has been made to employers by unions representing 70,000 busmen on municipal transport lines outside London. All now work 42 hours a week.

As Congress Probes Price Rise:

Steel's Unit Payroll Costs Reported 'Stable' Since '58

Payroll costs per unit of steel production have remained relatively stable since the industry last boosted its prices in 1958, the Joint Economic Committee of Congress was told as it opened an inquiry into the latest series of steel price increases on selected products.

Leon Greenberg, assistant commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, produced government statistics and charts showing that in the 1958-62 period employment costs per unit of steel output rose at an average annual rate of six-tenths of 1 percent.

A day later, Arnold E. Chase, chief BLS expert on prices, presented data showing that the price of raw materials used to produce steel had declined nearly 10 percent since 1957.

The stability of unit labor costs in steel over the past five years was one of two major points emphasized by Sen. Paul H. Douglas (D-Ill.), committee chairman, following Greenberg's presentation.

Douglas also stressed the need to draw a sharp distinction between total employment costs per output unit and wage costs per unit among production workers.

Most of Greenberg's material was presented in terms of total employment costs, and Douglas pointed out that wage earners "have no control" over the number of clerical, technical and executive personnel hired by management. The committee chairman made it clear that the total payroll figure included the salaries and expenses of all steel executives, including company presidents.

Two charts presented by Greenberg showed that steel labor productivity had risen substantially more among wage employes since 1940 than among all of the industry's employes, and that unit labor costs over the same period were about 11 percent higher if all employes are considered than if only wage-earning production workers are taken into account. On the index used by the BLS the wage cost per unit went up from 235.5 to only 236.5 over the entire 1958-62 period.

This led Rep. Henry S. Reuss (D-Wis.) to raise the question whether the steel industry is "loading up its overhead with drones" in the non-production work force.

Representatives of both the steel industry and the Steelworkers declined Douglas's offer to hear immediate comments on Greenberg's testimony. Meyer Bernstein of the USWA, however, said the union would reserve detailed comments for a written statement following the hearings, but that it "questioned the validity of much of the material" presented so far.

Comparison Questioned

Under questioning by Douglas, Greenberg acknowledged that in attempting to compare the productivity rise in steel with that of the entire non-farm economy, BLS had drawn on the Commerce Dept.'s estimates of gross national product in presenting the non-farm figures, and that these thus included services as well as commodity production.

As Douglas put it, if a doctor merely raises his fees, he is considered more productive in the GNP estimates.

The BLS figures showed that in the 1958-62 period the costs of all employment per man-hour rose on the average 3.9 percent a year in steel against 3.6 percent in the non-farm economy. But output per man-hour was up 3.3 percent a year against 2.4 percent elsewhere. The combination meant an average rise in unit labor costs of 0.6 percent in steel against 1.2 percent in the non-farm sector.

Greenberg agreed with Douglas that his charts indicated that "other things being equal" unit labor costs in steel should decline with greater utilization of the industry's production capacity. Steel was operating at less than 65 percent of capacity in 1962, the charts showed.

Greenberg reported that the number of production workers in steel had declined from 88 percent of total employment in the industry in 1940 to only 80 per cent in 1962.

The Steelworkers estimate that U.S. Steel—biggest in the industry—now employs only an estimated 192,000 production workers, the lowest number since depression-year 1934.

Morse Says ILO Faces New Era of Activity

Geneva—The Intl. Labor Organization is at "one of the critical points of its history" where it may be possible to swing into "a new and larger orbit of action," ILO Dir. Gen. David A. Morse declared in his report to the 47th session of the Intl. Labor Conference.

Morse's report, which will set the theme for next June's conference of worker, employer and government delegates from ILO member nations, calls for serious consideration of how best the ILO can adapt its structure and activities to rapidly changing world conditions while remaining committed to peace and freedom.

"The task of the ILO," he said, "its reason for existence as a world organization, is to work toward the fuller realization" of three basic principles of "universal value"—freedom of labor, in other words, respect for the worker as a person; freedom of association; and the primacy of social objectives.

The practical meaning of freedom of association is apparent to workers whose conditions are determined by collective bargaining, Morse observed. He added, however, in an apparent allusion to the Communist countries, that:

"It has now become important to consider how this principle can be given real specific content in a society where basic decisions affecting employment, incomes, and living and working conditions are taken through a central plan."

The same question is posed, he noted, "in an economically underdeveloped society in which trade unions are weak and such industry as exists is mainly owned and operated by the state."

Backs Faupl Suggestion

Morse endorsed as a "sound idea" the suggestion of U.S. Worker Delegate Rudy Faupl at last year's conference that the ILO establish a technical assistance program to promote human rights. Such a program, the director general said, should not be a "separate branch" of the ILO, but "an activity infusing all the ILO's work, and especially its operational work in the developing countries."

"The goal of fuller recognition of human rights is as important as the satisfaction of social needs," he declared.

In an effort to suggest priorities for ILO activity, Morse listed five problem areas currently challenging the organization and its member countries:

- Improvement of worker skills and fuller utilization of the labor force for economic development.
- The distribution of incomes and its relation to general economic and social objectives.
- The growth of trade unions and labor relations in developing countries.
- Current issues affecting the status of the worker and his employment conditions.
- The implications for labor in automation and other forms of advanced technology.

Morse said the coming conference would prove of "inestimable value" if it achieves but two objectives: "a clarification of the extent of common agreement upon the purposes of the ILO in the world today, not as to fundamental principles, but as to their meaning in action in present world conditions;" and secondly, "a clearer view of program priorities."

UAW Gives $25,000 To French Strikers

Detroit—The Auto Workers sent an additional contribution of $20,000 to the striking French coal miners shortly before their long walkout ended.

The money raised the total UAW gift to the strikers to $25,000 and was sent to the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions as a result of its appeal for funds. In a cable, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther asked ICFTU Gen. Sec. Omer Becu to extend to the strikers and supporting organizations "our pledge of continued solidarity."

Pact Rejected, IAM Resumes Boeing Talks

Negotiators for the Machinists continued meetings with the Boeing Co. in Seattle after union members employed by the huge aerospace firm voted 9,591 to 8,723 to reject a proposed contract settlement submitted for ratification.

As the AFL-CIO News went to press, IAM negotiators reported "no progress" and the company issued a statement that it had "no intention" of changing its previous offer which the workers turned down.

The vote of the Machinists at Wichita and three other smaller Boeing locations went heavily against the proposed settlement, which had been worked out after nine months of negotiations and an 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction. The employes continued work pending an acceptable settlement even after the T-H injunction expired Apr. 15.

Principal objection of the workers was to a so-called performance analysis system under which supervisors "rate" employes under their control every six months, an IAM spokesman said.

In the Philadelphia area, Auto Workers employed at Boeing's Vertol Div. walked off the job briefly, but then returned to work and ratified a proposed contract agreement.

A BARGAINING AGREEMENT between the Navy and the Marine Engineers now protects about 400 union engineers employed on 37 ships in the Atlantic operating area of the Military Sea Transportation Service. Shown at the signing in New York are MEBA Pres. Jesse M. Calhoon (left) and Rear Adm. Frank L. Johnson, area commander.

Reds, Far Right Scored By Meany, Gov. Brown against all enemies of freedom," he said, adding:

(Continued from Page 1)

"We will fight them because of our revulsion to what they stand for—and because we cherish the great values of democracy which they seek to destroy."

Gov. Brown said change can be brought about without extremism, and that "our democratic form of government is strong enough to resist the attack of misguided zealots."

Working with organized labor, the governor said, his administration has been able to achieve substantial progress on progressive programs which are the true answers to extremism of any nature.

Brown said that today the voice of the far left in America has faded to a whisper, while up and down the state "the voice of the far right sounds harsh and strident, and it is the right-wing radicals who dominate the extremist scene."

Like Meany, Brown compared the similarity of attitudes of extremists, citing as an example the denunciation of the United Nations by the far right as a "front for Russia" and by Communists as a "front organization for American imperialism."

The ultra rightists, Brown said, are full of hatred toward not just communism, but toward liberalism, the Supreme Court, Vice Pres. Johnson, income taxes, the nation's press, former Presidents Eisenhower and Truman and "labor bosses."

Jay Lovestone, AFL-CIO Dept. of International Affairs publications director, suggested the conference not call communism the "far left."

Says Reds "Reactionaries"

They are the "reactionaries," he declared, who may try to hide themselves in the left-wing movements of the nation.

He also declared that "peaceful coexistence is not an instrument of peace in the hands of the Soviets, but an instrument of total war designed to weaken the enemy and make him more ready to succumb."

California Atty. Gen. Stanley Mosk said that democracy has long been under attack from extremists, but "I would not have it any other way. We cannot silence them and we must not silence them if democracy itself is to survive."

Los Angeles Organizing 'Well Launched'—Meany

Los Angeles—The AFL-CIO organizing drive here has been "well launched, but it is too early to make any predictions about its ultimate success," AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany said here after a conference with participants in the campaign.

He met with Dir. John Livingston of the federation's Dept. of Organization; Franz Daniel, coordinator of the drive here and assistant to Livingston; W. J. Bassett, secretary-treasurer of the Los Angeles County Labor Federation, and nearly 300 other active workers in the drive.

The federation issued a formal report on the campaign at the close of the first quarter, saying that if it is successful it will be used as a pattern for organizing campaigns in other parts of the nation.

The report showed 66 factories and other business firms unionized either through National Labor Relations Board elections or a cross check of signed cards.

The report showed 14 elections were lost, four still undecided. The total of 66 plants employ some 3,000 workers in hotels, restaurant, and manufacturing industries while another 2,000 new members were reported for state, county municipal and federal employes.

The 56 participating unions have nearly doubled their full time organizing staffs. They had 89 on the payroll at the beginning of the year, and now have 175 it was reported.

The President as Educator

PRES. KENNEDY'S address to the American Society of Newspaper Editors, updating the editors' sadly neglected economic education, is what the country needs more of.

Simple exposure to the economic facts of life in the 1960s is the only antidote to the budget-cutting poison that has seeped into attempts to discuss rationally and intelligently the economic ills the nation faces.

Everyone can agree that waste and inefficiency cannot be tolerated in handling government funds. But there must be wider understanding of the government's role as the balance wheel in setting the course of the nation's economy.

The President told the editors, for example, that if federal expenditures had kept on a plateau last year—the policy adopted by the Eisenhower Administration in 1958—"a recession, in my opinion, would not have been avoided, just as it was not avoided in 1958."

The federal budget is the key to government programs and policies, but it is also an economic instrument that can determine whether the nation will enjoy a prosperous growth or stagnation and recession.

To engage in a budget-slashing spree and spread economic illiteracy is to sap the nation's strength and vitality. That most of the budget-cutting talk is based on hopes of political advantage compounds the crime.

While there is some hope that the President's educational talk to the editors will produce a greater understanding of our economic problems in the nation's press, he should not stop with the editors. He should carry the story of the relationship between the federal budget and jobs, economic growth and recessions, directly to the people.

The budget cutters cannot be dislodged from their cliche-held fortress without a concerted effort.

To Go to College

BY THE END of the current school year American unions will have distributed over a half-million dollars in scholarship aid, mostly to qualified students who lack the funds to secure college educations.

The annual award of AFL-CIO merit scholarships symbolizes this ever-increasing effort by organized labor to make higher education available to those qualified but because of their financial status denied the opportunity to develop their capabilities.

The trade union movement's scholarship aid role is an expanding one. But the scope of the problem is far beyond the means of the labor movement or any other organization. The problem is national and the solution must be national—the concept of federal aid to higher education.

The AFL-CIO has long fought for federal aid to education at all levels, including colleges and universities, as the only answer to the challenges of our complex society and the need of every American child to fulfill his possibilities to the utmost.

Federal aid to higher education without a properly financed and supported system of education at the elementary and secondary levels would solve only part of the problem and on a temporary basis.

As we near the end of another school year, the best gift the nation can give to the Class of 1963 at all school levels is a federal aid to education program—a gift that will insure a better education for the classes still to come.

AFL-CIO News

Official Weekly Publication of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations

GEORGE MEANY, President
WILLIAM F. SCHNITZLER, Secretary-Treasurer

Executive Council

Walter P. Reuther, Wm. C. Birthright, David J. McDonald, Joseph Curran, Joseph D. Keenan, Richard F. Walsh, James A. Suffridge, Paul L. Phillips, Paul Hall, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Emil Rieve, M. A. Hutcheson, Jacob S. Potofsky, Lee W. Minton, O. A. Knight, Peter T. Schoemann, Herman D. Kenin, Harry C. Bates, David Dubinsky, Wm. L. McFetridge, A. J. Hayes, A. Philip Randolph, Joseph A. Beirne, Karl F. Feller, L. M. Raftery

Executive Committee: George Meany, Walter P. Reuther, George M. Harrison, James B. Carey, Harry C. Bates, David J. McDonald, David Dubinsky, William F. Schnitzler

Director of Publications: Saul Miller
Managing Editor: Willard Shelton
Assistant Editors:
John M. Barry, Eugene A. Kelly, Gervase N. Love, David L. Perlman

AFL-CIO Headquarters: 815 Sixteenth St., N. W. Washington 6, D. C.
Telephone: NAtional 8-3870

Subscriptions: $2 a year; 10 or more, $1.50 a year

Vol. VIII Saturday, April 27, 1963 No. 17

The American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations does not accept paid advertising in any of its official publications. No one is authorized to solicit advertising for any publication in the name of the AFL-CIO.

To the Admitting Room

STAMP FOR AFL-CIO NEWS

Continental Paradox:

African Political Independence Curbs Trade Union Freedoms

The following is excerpted from an article appearing in the Christian Science Monitor April 12, 1963:

By Arnold Beichman

The iron hand crush'd the Tyrant's head
And became a Tyrant in his stead.
WILLIAM BLAKE

PROBABLY NO SINGLE major organization in the United States has been as undeviatingly anti-colonial in spirit and deed as has the American labor movement.

The American trade unions soon after World War II forged links with African independence movements much to the discomfiture of European governments with overseas possessions and even, on occasion, to the unconcealed irritation of some European labor organizations.

There were times when American labor leaders differed sharply with the U.S. government on colonialism. They were as critical of a Truman Administration for its erstwhile support of France in 1950 over Tunisia's independence as they were later during an Eisenhower Administration when the anti-colonial spotlight shifted to Algeria. An African independence leader who found the doors of the State Dept. closed to him could always be sure of a warm welcome at AFL-CIO headquarters in Washington, D. C.

This anti-colonial position created extraordinarily cordial relationships between American labor leaders and the budding trade unionists of Africa. The relationship prospered through the formation and growth of the Intl. Confederation of Free Trade Unions, which strongly supported African independence movements.

If only one achievement could be accorded this anti-colonialist tradition, it is that it thwarted the Soviet claim that communism alone was the true friend of colonial peoples. Africans themselves noted during the last decade that the French Communist Party, for example, muted its support of Algerian independence when Moscow's foreign policy considerations demanded a "soft line" towards France. Free labor, particularly the AFL-CIO, not being the captive of any particular foreign policy, could spurn opportunism and stick to its anti-colonial ideology.

With this as the historical background, one can understand the deepening anxiety of the AFL-CIO and the ICFTU that some of the newly independent countries of Africa are moving in a one-party direction. This has created a situation where African trade union organizations no longer have the same freedom which, paradoxically, most of them enjoyed under a colonial regime. It would seem that the strike which an African labor leader once endorsed enthusiastically as a blow for "uhuru" (the Swahili word for freedom) is now considered a threat to a country no longer administered by Whitehall or the Quai d'Orsay.

FREE LABOR'S CONCERN was recently expressed by Omer Becu, ICFTU general secretary, following the convention of the Algerian labor federation which he attended as an invited guest. There he saw—and later commented upon quite critically—how the regime of Premier Ben Bella took over the control of the hitherto independent federation.

A few weeks ago, the AFL-CIO Executive Council issued a statement entitled "There is no substitute for freedom." It characterized as "most distressing" what it called "the highhanded and repressive measures recently taken against trade unions in Algeria, Libya, and Tanganyika." In singling out these countries, it was only listing the most recent violators of what the western free labor movements regard as the right of trade unions to be independent of government dictation. The AFL-CIO could also have included in its criticisms Ghana, Guinea, Sudan, and Mali where worker groups are led by government-approved or selected officials.

Deploring the transformation of African unions into "mere vehicles of the government or of the only political organization which they allow to exist," the AFL-CIO insisted that:

1. Economic growth and political stability in the new countries can be facilitated "by encouraging free trade union organization."

2. Only free trade unions "can give the workers that feeling of participation in the economic growth of the nation."

"Freedom means much more than a multiple party system in politics and government," said the AFL-CIO declaration. "It means freedom of conscience, a free press, freedom of association, freedom to organize into genuine trade unions. With all their imperfections and the mistakes they may make, the free trade unions have everywhere proven to be the most effective and democratic instruments for overcoming poverty, ignorance and disease."

Morgan Says:

There Is No Quick, Cheap Way To Get Rid of the Cuban Problem

By Edward P. Morgan

(This column is excerpted from the nightly broadcasts of Edward P. Morgan, ABC commentator sponsored by the AFL-CIO. Listen to Morgan over the ABC network Monday through Friday at 7 p. m., DST.)

PRES. KENNEDY cleared the air slightly in the Cuban crisis but so brooding and beclouded has the atmosphere become that the issue drags on, distracting our attention and our energies from larger problems. There is nothing magnificent about our obsession with Castro. We seem at times to be so utterly hypnotized by the subject that nothing else matters. Unfortunately, as we should have sense enough to know, the end of communism in Cuba, when it comes, will still leave us with almost the same bulging bagful of worries that we had before.

Morgan

What we forget, or refuse to remember, is that there is no cheap, quick way to get rid of the Cuban problem. The President reminded the country of that in his question-and-answer session with the American Society of Newspaper Editors exactly two years minus one day after he had to report to the same group on the tragic fiasco at the Bay of Pigs, which is perhaps still the greatest and most painful mistake of his Administration.

The curious, cutting irony of the situation is that the country was, by all appearances, more solidly behind the President then in the anguish of the affair for which he shouldered the blame, than it is now in the wake of his October triumph of forcing Khrushchev to dismantle the Soviet offensive missile threat.

Why has Kennedy's success in his grave test of will with Moscow become so blurred in less than six months that it is almost forgotten in the angry allegations and swirling anxieties that remain? There are several ingredients to the answer. One is, I suspect, that we Americans have come to regard the Cuban problem not only as a threat to our security but an affront to our honor. Rather in the manner of a wronged husband we are demanding not only justice but vengeance for the deception. That attitude in turn has made us especially receptive to the dramatic and not always responsible criticisms of the Administration's Cuban policy.

But the Administration itself surely must share the glame for the befuddlement. For though government policy, as the President told the editors, does not embrace either invasion or blockade under present circumstances, some of the Administration's actions, or at least its gestures, have encouraged the conclusion that some time, somehow, we would stage some kind of repeat of the charge up San Juan Hill. Though the President declared that nobody in the government ever promised exile leaders or anybody else that the U.S. would launch another invasion of Cuba, the Administration apparently never made that crystal clear.

Indeed the tone if not the substance of Kennedy's ASNE speech two years ago was that of a man determined to see that wrongs were righted. And the President's appearance before the ransomed "freedom fighters" in Miami's Orange Bowl last Dec. 29 was so drenched with emotion, so choked with the gorge of militant patriotism that his embrace of the social revolutionary principles behind the Alliance for Progress and his implied warning that reactionaryism must not be returned to Cuba, these vital aspects of his speech went virtually unnoticed.

It was almost as if the Administration, committed to an undramatic course of increasing multiple pressures against Castro, couldn't bear to renounce completely the romantic course of a "war of liberation."

ADMITTEDLY the feuding factions among the Cuban exiles have been exceedingly hard to deal with. Exiles always are. It remains to be seen whether the withdrawal of Dr. Jose Miro Cardona from the leadership of the Cuban Revolutionary Council will make U.S. relations with the exiles any more realistic. Our embarrassing fact is that a large number of the exiles in Florida are not really interested in the social reforms called for under the Alliance for Progress and do not recognize the delay in democratizing Cuba gave a major assist to the Communist takeover.

One thing is clear. The Cuban issue, having been complicated by politics, will become an increasingly dangerous political issue in the 1964 presidential campaign unless the Administration can restore with the consistent and candid execution of its policy the public confidence it has lost since the triumph of last fall.

It is true that the President has said before that there is an issue here larger than Cuba, and it is the security and welfare of the hemisphere.

But he will have to say it again and he will have to explain again, to North Americans and South Americans alike, that the removal of a Communist regime in Cuba does not in itself guarantee the salvation of the hemisphere—that indeed one of the best ways to assure a short life for Castroism is to quicken the peaceful social revolution in the rest of Latin America which the Alliance for Progress stands for, and without which free societies in our Pan-American neighborhood will fall.

Washington Reports:

Moratorium on Rail Mergers Backed by Douglas and Cooper

PROPOSED RAILROAD MERGERS, like that of the Pennsylvania and the New York Central, should be held up pending congressional investigation of railroad finances and the effect of mergers on communities and rail employes, Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) and Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.) both have declared.

Interviewed on the AFL-CIO public service program, Washington Reports to the People, now heard on nearly 700 radio stations, Douglas said that while some mergers may be found justifiable, "it is not at all certain that the railroads are in the difficult situation that they say they are."

"I think we need to know," he said, "whether there is excess fat in railroad financing, whether excessively high salaries are being paid to too many vice presidents, to learn who really owns or controls the railroads."

Cooper, speaking on the same program, declared that when Congress passed the Transportation Act of 1958 to help the railroads, "we did so believing that some of the systems were on the verge of bankruptcy."

"But reports of the Interstate Commerce Commission indicate that railroads have had net profits in 1954, 1955 and 1958, which were higher than in other periods," he said. "We need the facts."

He said he was concerned about what mergers would mean to workers, communities "the economy of the country, the national security."

"WE HEAR THE WORD 'featherbedding' a lot, and it has a certain meaning to many people," he declared, "but I think we have to consider what it means to the safety of the railroads, to service to the people."

"People talk about excess operating crews, excess people in freight and passenger stations," remarked Douglas, but not about excess executives or "the big commissions the banking and issuing houses make out of the railroads."

He recalled that the railroads didn't always do well when they were financed by the Wall Street bankers, Morgan and Kuhn-Loeb, "but the two banking houses did."

He said he favored the resolutions offered by Senators Warren Magnuson (D-Wash.) and Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.) to delay railroad mergers until a congressional investigation is completed."

IT'S YOUR WASHINGTON

by Willard Shelton

ONE OF THE MYSTERIES in this country is the emphasis devoted by the daily press to such a speech as former Vice Pres. Nixon gave on the Cuba issue to the American Society of Newspaper Editors. The play was big and splashy.

Mr. Nixon was beaten for the presidency in 1960, although narrowly. He was beaten again, not so narrowly, when he ran for governor of his home state of California last year. He renounced future political races, in a welter of self-pity and despair, in a press conference ranting at the political reporters whom he accused of disliking him personally.

No realistic reporter took Nixon at his word and wrote him off as a Republican figure. He has long-established connections within the party, including its money givers; he might easily come to occupy a role such as that which former Gov. Dewey played in 1952 in floor-managing the bitter convention fight to take the Republican nomination away from Sen. Taft and name Gen. Eisenhower for the race.

But Nixon's Cuba speech was a type with the sloganeering of the early Eisenhower years, when there was talk of "unleashing" Chiang Kai-shek on Taiwan to invade mainland China.

Nixon favored a new "freedom doctrine." He favored some kind of "unleashing" of the Cuban exiles whose hit-and-run raids on Soviet shipping obviously might involve this country in a confrontation with the Soviet Union not at our choice of time and nature. He wanted to apply only the "minimum" force needed to uproot Castro's regime, but also "whatever action is necessary" to reduce the Soviet beachhead in Cuba.

This is mere verbalizing without content. So was Nixon's further comment that the Kennedy policy toward the Soviet Union is one of "containment." As a matter of strict fact, the Eisenhower policy for eight years was precisely that—containment—and it began with an armistice in Korea accepting division of the country because Mr. Eisenhower saw no other way to end the shooting.

Responsible Democrats recognized this and did not hamper Mr. Eisenhower with partisan and vain attacks. And it passes understanding that the daily press should treat a partisan Nixon speech as if it were the profound utterance of a rising party leader.

It must be acknowledged, parenthetically, that the editors tried first to get a fresh Republican voice—such as Gov. Rockefeller or Gov. Scranton of Pennsylvania or Gov. Romney of Michigan—as the chief GOP spokesman, and settled for Nixon when the others preferred not to expose themselves in April 1963 to a national editors' audience.

* * *

I. LEE POTTER, the Republican National Committee's director for southern state activities, professes optimism about southern party gains in the near future, and with some measure of reason.

Potter points out that the GOP scored substantial gains in Florida in winning state legislative seats in 1962; that it almost won two additional Virginia districts in the House; that it actually won five additional southern seats; that it almost defeated Sen. Lister Hill in Alabama; that conservative Democrats in Texas are increasingly breaking with the Democratic Party and enrolling openly as Republicans.

Potter can even point to new Republicans in Mississippi, where a former Democratic lawyer intends to run for governor on the GOP ticket and a state senator, elected as a Democrat, has switched to run for lieutenant governor.

The other side of the coin is the hopeful note of pleasure among liberal and moderate Democrats as the reactionaries depart. They see a chance, at last, to get more affirmative and forward-looking Democratic candidates.

The Virginia AFL-CIO newsletter observes with tentative optimism that ranking Democratic spokesmen are suggesting openly that "hybrid" party members, who either actively or passively already support the Republican ticket in national elections, should go all the way.

"If a genuine two-party system" emerges, it comments, "it is bound to be an improvement."

CONGRESS NEEDS THE FACTS on railroad finances and the effect on workers and communities before further mergers are permitted, Sen. John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.), left, and Sen. Paul Douglas (D-Ill.) agreed on the AFL-CIO public service radio program, Washington Reports to the People.

How to Buy:

Penny Saved in Supermarket Worth More Than Penny Earned

By Sidney Margolius

MANY FAMILIES still do not realize how useful consumer knowledge and effort can be in advancing their financial standing. Often you hear people say that it doesn't pay to spend too much time shopping, that you spend more on gas than you save. Nothing could be more wrong.

Actually the average woman spends money in a supermarket at the rate of $19 an hour. In contrast, her husband earns an average of $2.50 an hour—the average industrial pay.

If you can work more efficiently at your buying, and save perhaps 10 to 15 percent of your spending, you often can earn by knowledgeable shopping and planning, almost as much as on the job.

This is not to say that we should all quit our jobs and just shop. We need some capital to start with. But most families never will make much progress unless they work as carefully at their jobs as consumers as they do in their jobs as earners.

The plain fact is that we're all usually better trained as "earners" than as "buyers." Our young women are trained to be secretaries, airline hostesses, even machine operators, but not in how to compare installment fees or even, sometimes, in how to buy a chicken if it has not been cut up into parts. Our young men can build space ships but can't figure out how to buy insurance.

We live in a very complicated money world, with many pressures on us. The result, in many families, is a dribbling away of resources. We're surfeited with frozen TV dinners and roll-on deodorants but have great difficulty achieving our main aspirations of better education for our children, more adequate housing, security from unemployment and often even adequate medical care.

If you're in this situation, you need a program to help stop waste of family resources. The buck you earn leaves you only 70-80 cents after taxes. The buck you save is a whole one. In this department's experience, gained from many personal interviews and correspondence with families all over the country, the most-frequent money leaks are:

- Constant payment of high finance charges on installment purchases, often resulting in a habitual loss of 5 percent of a family's entire income.
- Overspending for food, with some families feeding themselves nutritiously for as little as $1 a day per person, and others in the same neighborhood and income bracket spending as much as $1.75.
- High housing and household operating costs, including surprisingly heavy outlays for utility bills, fuel and household supplies such as overpriced brand-name cleaning products.
- Burdensome car expenses, with many families spending noticeably more than 12 percent of after-tax income, which is a safer limit for all car expenses, including depreciation.
- Unnecessarily large expenditures for insurance because of expensive weekly payments instead of putting the money aside and paying annually, or buying the wrong type of insurance, or insuring wife, children and mother-in-law instead of concentrating on Papa.
- Heavy spending for commercial recreation, such as bowling.
- Overpayment of income taxes (about a third of the families interviewed pay more taxes than they need to, because they don't understand all the tax rules).

Granted that the income-tax laws are so complicated as to be rigged, in effect, in favor of higher-income taxpayers who can hire tax specialists. Still, taxes, installment fees, insurance and nutrition are no more difficult to master than some of the complicated tasks you have to do on your job.

MANAGING YOUR MONEY to avoid installment buying except when absolutely necessary is the first target for many families. It is a fact that the installment buyer helps subsidize the cash buyer.

The biggest day-to-day savings your family can make are in your supermarket shopping. The average supermarket shopper spends just a little over 20 minutes on each shopping trip. The money-saving technique is to take the weekend supermarket ads and plan your meals around each week's specials, and also, compare specials offered by different stores. People get into the habit of buying at a favorite supermarket. But supermarket managers themselves say they respect most the shopper who looks for the specials.

Copyright 1963 by Sidney Margolius

A COMMENDATION for labor's role in supporting the nation's 2,000 United Fund and Community Chest campaigns was presented to AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany by Ralph Henry Smith, left, executive director of the National Capital Area, United Givers Fund, and Robert V. Donahoe, associate executive director, right. A framed scroll recounts how the AFL-CIO membership, through local unions, local and state central bodies, state and national committees, and the labor press "contributed substantially to the health and welfare of millions of American families."

Brown Maps Program:

Consumer Protection Pushed in California

CALIFORNIA'S Gov. Edmund G. Brown has mapped a comprehensive program to aid and protect the consumer.

In a special message to the legislature, Brown dealt with four major fields—credit, packaging and labeling, consumer services and unfair selling practices—in announcing his "Consumer Policy for California."

"It will be controversial," the governor admitted. "It will be a target of special interests with powerful lobbies.

"But if the public interest is to be served, if our free enterprise system is to remain strong, and if we are to fulfill the expectations of our democratic society, the rights of our democratic society, the rights of the individual—as a consumer—must be maintained."

His program borders closely on some of the legislation being pushed by Democratic liberals in Washington. It calls for, among other things:

1. A "price of credit" law, similar to the "truth in lending" proposal, which would require full disclosure of the total simple annual interest contained in all credit contracts.
2. A reduction in charges of automobile financing.
3. A study of the feasibility of reducing the legal maximum rate in revolving charge accounts to 18 percent.
4. The elimination of referral selling.
5. Requiring statements of quantity on the principal display panel of all packages.
6. Elimination of odd-size loaves of bread in favor of half-pound, pound and pound and a half loaves.
7. Legislation "to crack down hard on cheating in both electronics (television, radio, phonograph) repairs and automobile parts."

Brown called on all "honorable businessmen" to "help combat dishonest competition and work out proposals to protect both the consumer and the conscientious businessman from the unscrupulous operator."

From Soup to Nonsense:

Unconscious, Subconscious (Conscious, too) Kicked in the Id

By Jane Goodsell

SOME PEOPLE are scared of thunder and lightning, and some shudder at mice and snakes and bats,
But me, I recoil from Freudy cats.
Freudy cats are people who can't carry on a casual, matter-of-fact conversation
Because every subject leads them into complicated, psychoanalytic dissertation.
No matter what topic you mention, be it the Common Market, the Dodgers or the four no-trump bid,
They've got a theory about it, involving traumas, guilt complexes, feelings of aggression, death wishes or the unconscious id.
They see Oedipal complexes underneath every bed,
And they're always probing for peepholes into the dark, secret recesses of your head.
If you mention that chocolate ice cream is a dish you really enjoy,
They pounce on your remark as an unconscious confession that you wish you'd been born a boy.
To these psychological Peeping Toms, nothing is as simple as it seems.
Everything is fraught with back-to-the-womb complexes, sado-masochistic impulses and Freudian dreams.
According to them, if you're nice to your mother, you unconsciously hate her,
And if you kick your mother in the shins, you're suppressing an Oedipal desire to date her.
They've rolled all human fears, hopes, fancies and foibles into one all-encompassing diagnosis:
NEUROSIS.
They're always giving you knowing looks and sharp penetrating glances which make you feel positively undressed,
But you don't dare blush because that would be an admission of secret guilt feelings which you've suppressed.
Now don't get the idea that I'm scornful of psychiatry in general because I'm not.
I think that Sigmund Freud was one of the greatest men who ever lived, and we all owe psychiatry a lot.
But I don't think that people ought to go around practicing psychiatry on the strength of a few scraps of knowledge
That they picked up from watching a TV program or reading a magazine article or taking a course in Elementary Psych in college.
I, personally, have deep-seated feelings of doubt
That they have the faintest idea what they're talking about.
And that's why instead of suppressing my feelings of hostility and aggression, I'm going to flip my lid,
And give the next Freudy cat I meet a good, swift kick in the id.

"In fact, if business gets any worse I'll have to let my wife go."

AFL-CIO Submits Recommendations:

Radiation Safety Standards Asked Under Walsh-Healey

The AFL-CIO has proposed sweeping revision of the safety and health standards governing employers under the Walsh-Healey Public Contracts Act, including a broad section setting forth standards of safety and health in industries handling radioactive materials.

In addition, the federation urged Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz to establish a labor-management advisory committee to undertake a continuing review of the Walsh-Healey standards for the purpose of periodic revision.

In submitting the proposals to Wirtz, AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany stressed that they represented "the official recommendations" of the federation to bring up to date the general safety sections published Dec. 28, 1960, and the radiation sections first issued by the Labor Dept. last Aug. 17.

Meany's letter said the AFL-CIO "urgently recommends" adoption of the proposed revision of both sections to become effective no later than Aug. 1, 1963.

In calling for establishment of the advisory panel, Meany noted that safety and health "is not a static matter."

Continued Review Needed

"With the constant change in national codes of the American Standards Association and other code-writing authorities," he said, "the Federal Safety and Health Standards should be revised at least every two years to keep up to date."

Such an advisory committee, he continued, would offer valuable technical assistance to the department's Wage & Hour and Public Contracts Divisions "in promulgating safety and health standards that will substantially reduce injury and death to the workers of the United States."

Copies of the 94 pages of AFL-CIO recommendations are being distributed to international union affiliates and state central bodies. They are available to others on request from John D. Connors, executive secretary of the AFL-CIO Committee on Safety & Occupational Health, at federation headquarters.

The proposed revisions are the product of several months effort by the safety committee, headed by Vice Pres. Richard F. Walsh. The group was aided by a subcommittee of its own under Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers and the Staff Subcommittee on Atomic Energy & Natural Resources.

The general safety sections deal with such areas as buildings, scaffolding, elevators, lighting, ventilation and industrial machinery. They incorporate current codes of the ASA and other authorities where these were available and up-to-date. Where such codes were unavailable, or were found to be inadequate themselves, the federation drew up detailed recommendations to bring Walsh-Healey safety standards into line with current needs and practices.

The radiation sections are derived largely from the Atomic Energy Commission's Standards for protection against Occupational Radiation which now cover an estimated 70,000 workers in plants using AEC-owned radioactive materials under license.

Inclusion of these standards in the Walsh-Healey regulations would extend their protection to some 95,000 additional workers employed by AEC prime contractors, plus up to 2 million others working for federal contractors in plants using radioactive materials not controlled by the AEC.

In the last category are such radiation sources as isotope radiation gauges, industrial x-ray machines, particle accelerators, high voltage electronic vacuum tubes and other materials and devices, which the AFL-CIO proposals assert "have long been in need of regulation under a comprehensive set of standards."

The federation's proposals set forth the general position that any kind of man-made radiation can produce harmful effects on human beings and that the proposed standards have therefore been prepared "with the purpose of affording the strongest possible safeguards to workers exposed to occupational radiation."

"Every effort shall be made to keep the exposure of workers to ionizing radiation at the lowest possible level, and unnecessary exposure to ionizing radiation shall be avoided," the proposed regulations declare.

"These standards will be subject to continual review with the goal in mind of reducing occupational radiation hazards to workers to the fullest extent possible."

The AFL-CIO recommendations thus reject the so-called threshold concept which holds that a minimum ascertainable dose of radiation exposure is required before harmful effects are produced in human beings.

At the same time, the proposals recognize that a requirement forbidding any radiation exposure at all would be impractical and harmful to the development of atomic energy for peaceful uses. They therefore set forth the same "maximum permissible dose" levels that the AEC requires of its own licensees.

Other Safeguards

In addition, the recommended revisions would extend to the Walsh-Healey Act these other safeguards, which the AFL-CIO after a two-year effort persuaded the AEC to include in its own standards:

- Precautionary measures, such as surveys of hazards, the use of personnel radiation monitoring equipment, the posting of caution signs and instruction of personnel.
- Procedures governing the storage of radioactive materials and the disposal of waste.
- Maintenance of exposure records and permanent preservation of such records, to be made available to employes and former employes on request.
- A requirement for the posting of a notice to employes setting forth their rights to obtain copies of their exposure records, reports of any overexposure and a final radiation history when separated, and their rights to inspect the employer's safety procedures and file complaints.
- Provision for prompt reporting of overexposure and incidents leading to breakdowns or overexposure.
- A prohibition against exemption of any contracting employer from the regulations unless he files a written request with the Wage & Hour and Public Contracts Divisions or with the AEC, whichever applies, and it is determined that such exemption will not result "in lessening necessary safeguards to workers and property."

TWO TRADE UNION SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS pay a visit to Associate Justice Arthur J. Goldberg of the Supreme Court. Shown, left to right, are Pres. Hunter P. Wharton of the Operating Engineers, which provided the scholarships; Judy K. Lash, Missoula, Mont.; Justice Goldberg; and A. Michael Collins, Overland Park, Kan. Miss Lash and Collins are the first to receive Operating Engineers scholarships established as a memorial to Joseph J. Delany, the union's late president. A third scholarship, to be announced later, will go to a Canadian. The scholarships, worth up to $1,500 a year for four years, go to sons and daughters of Operating Engineers' members.

FOUR-WEEK INSTITUTE for union staff members in the South was held on the University of North Carolina campus. These students and faculty members taking a break between classes are, from left: John Parker, a Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union representative in Alabama; George T. Guernsey, assistant director of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education; Lock J. Parker, a RWDSU representative in Virginia, and Joseph Mire of the National Institute of Labor Education which sponsored the program.

Unique Study Course Draws Union Staffers

Chapel Hill, N. C.—Eighteen full-time union staff members—all from the South—studied under experts in fields ranging from history and economics to organizing problems, and learned from each other, in a unique four-week course at the University of North Carolina.

The program was sponsored by the National Institute of Labor Education, aided by a grant from the New World Foundation. Prof. Ronald Donovan of the New York State School of Industrial & Labor Relations served as director, with George T. Guernsey of the AFL-CIO Dept. of Education as co-director.

In sessions which typically lasted from 8:45 a.m. to 9 p.m., with Saturday classes three out of four weeks, the union staffers studied the labor, political and economic history of the South, explored civil rights problems and delved into community relations.

They developed reading speed in a special workshop, sang and studied labor songs and folklore, studied labor law and organizing techniques.

A day was devoted to a presentation of labor's economic program by AFL-CIO Research Dir. Nathaniel Goldfinger. Another day saw the group participating in a Conference in World Affairs sponsored by the university. An unscheduled instructor was Assistant Sec. of State G. Mennen Williams, who addressed the group while on a visit to the university.

Guernsey described the four-week institute as "the most successful inter-union staff training program I have ever seen." He said it was "the first time anything like this has ever been done in the South."

The participants came from 12 unions, the Intl. Brotherhood of Electrical Workers; Machinists; Communications Workers; Papermakers & Paperworkers; Transport Service Employes; Chemical Workers; Textile Workers Union of America; Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union; State, County & Municipal Employes; Oil Workers; Auto Workers, and Clothing Workers.

Court Upholds Airline Pact Arbitration

The U.S. Supreme Court has ruled unanimously that contract arbitration awards in the airlines industry are enforceable in the federal courts under the Railway Labor Act.

The high court thus put such awards on the same level as those issued under contracts covered by the Taft-Hartley Act.

The decision, written by Justice Byron R. White, upholds the claim of the Machinists on behalf of six members fired by Central Airlines, Inc., in 1958 and reverses the U.S. District Court of Northern Texas and the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The case was remanded to the District Court for a hearing.

The union members were fired after refusing to attend disciplinary hearing without having an IAM representative present. The union carried a grievance to a board of adjustment, which split 2-2. A neutral referee then ruled in favor of the union position but the airline refused to comply, saying state courts had jurisdiction. The IAM then asked the federal court to enforce the referee's award.

NLRB Cites Teamsters in Assault Case

An unfair labor practice complaint has been issued by Gen. Counsel Stuart Rothman of the National Labor Relations Board against Local 777 of the expelled Teamsters for what was called a "brutal assault" on a witness called to testify at an NLRB hearing in Chicago.

Rothman said the complaint is based on a charge that Louis Lebron of the Crown Metal Co. was beaten by two agents of Local 777 after leaving the NLRB office in the Chicago Loop where he was to testify about challenges in an election conducted by the board.

The local, Rothman charged, has a record of "engaging in violence and otherwise coercing employes." Despite an NLRB order and a court decree in another case—Checker Cab Co., Chicago—the union has "persisted in the illegal conduct" enjoined by the decree and a contempt action is being considered, he said.

Rothman, asserting that no organization can remain free unless its membership is free, said "those who base their power and so-called leadership on brutality and intimidation pose a real and immediate danger" to society and free labor.

The Teamsters were expelled from the AFL-CIO in 1957 on findings of domination by corrupt interests.

PRESIDENTIAL EMERGENCY BOARD in the railroad work rules dispute brings together chief negotiators for railroad management and the Locomotive Firemen in an effort to end the long impasse in negotiations. Around the table, clockwise, are: Guy W. Knight and James E. Wolfe, rail management spokesmen; Prof. Nathan P. Feinsinger and Chairman Samuel I. Rosenman of the Emergency Board, and Pres. H. E. Gilbert and Assistant Pres. S. C. Phillips of the Locomotive Firemen & Enginemen.

More Jobs, Better Training Asked For 700,000 Out-of-Work Youth

A presidential committee has called for "immediate, bold and imaginative action" to improve job opportunities and training for the nation's youth.

In a report subscribed to by leaders in education, labor, business and public life, the President's Committee on Youth Employment warned that inaction will doom hundreds of thousands of youngsters to "failure and frustration."

AFL-CIO Pres. George Meany served on the 34-member committee, which was headed by Labor Sec. W. Willard Wirtz and included seven cabinet-level officials. Dr. James B. Conant, former president of Harvard University, was vice chairman.

Also on the committee were Pres. C. J. Haggerty of the AFL-CIO Building & Construction Trades Dept., Pres. Joseph A. Beirne of the Communications Workers, and Mrs. Mildred M. Jeffrey, community relations director of the Auto Workers.

Committee members painted a grim picture of some 700,000 out-of-school, out-of-work youth, competing for a dwindling number of unskilled jobs. If the current rate of youth unemployment persists as the work force rises, their number will grow to 1.5 million by 1970, the report warned.

To meet the "immediate needs" of unemployed youngsters, the committee called on employers and unions to re-examine hiring, training and promotion policies "to see how they can better employ young people." It urged expansion of apprenticeship opportunities and cooperation in "pre-apprentice training."

Non-Discrimination 'Vital'

In all employment programs, the committee emphasized, the elimination of discrimination against minority groups is "vital."

To make it possible for school dropouts lacking even basic education skills to obtain and keep jobs, the committee called on local school systems to develop "crash programs" in reading, writing, speaking and the use of numbers.

The committee urged prompt enactment by Congress of the two programs in the Administration's Youth Employment bill—a Youth Conservation Corps and a "hometown" job program in the cities.

This recommendation was protested by two commission members—Donald J. Hardenbrook, board chairman of the National Association of Manufacturers, and Richard Wagner, chairman of the executive committee of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. However, other employer representatives on the committee agreed with the committee recommendation.

Five committee members, including Beirne and Mrs. Jeffrey, said the endorsement should have been even more specific and opposed a committee recommendation that the immediate program be limited to a $100 million appropriation each year for three years.

The committee also recommended lifting the present 5 percent limitation on the use of Manpower Development & Training Act funds for youth training allowances.

State Studies Asked

"To develop public understanding of the problems of youth employment and the close relationship between employment and effective education and training," the committee urged governors and mayors to establish continuing commissions on the problems of youth.

The committee emphasized that "underlying all efforts to help youth is the need for expansion of the economy." Unless job opportunities are increased, "it is unrealistic to expect that jobs for youth will be substantially increased," the report noted.

